THE PREFACE.

THE Reader will expect perhaps, upon the Publication of These Papers, to find ſomewhat here by way of Preface, and Recommendation, as is uſual in ſuch Caſes; but the Work being long of It ſelf, I will not make It more tedious than needs muſt. And therefore, I ſhall paſs over all unneceſſary Nicеties; As the Time that has been ſpent upon It, The Books and Friends I have Conſulted upon the Text, The Difficulties that Frequent Troubles and Ill Health have Thrown in my Way, and ſeveral more of the ſame Kind: To ſay nothing finally of the Corruptions in the Original, The Bulk and Compaſs of It, and how Careful I have been in the Menage of My Commiſſion. For all Men will at laſt Judge for Themſelves.

But there is One Thing ſtill which in Honour and Juſtice I ought not to Omit; and that is, to Return my Hearty Acknowledgments to my Worthy Friend the Reverend Dr. Hudſon, Chief Keeper of the Bodleian Library, for his Kind and Generous Aſſiſtance in This Performance: And here I muſt profeſs my Self particularly Obliged to Him (as the Common Wealth of Letters is in Other Reſpects) for the Pains He has been pleaſed to take in Reviſing and Comparing the Tranſlation with the Greek, and for the Learned and Critical Remarks placed here and there, at the Bottom of the Page; and many Other Advantages of Uſe and Ornament, towards the Gracing of the Whole. I could wiſh His more Important Affairs had left Him at Liberty to take a ſtrict Review of all the Sheets, one after another, as they came from the Preſs: But I hope however, that Reaſonable Care hath been taken to prevent either Many or Groſs Errors. And of this, alſo, the Readers are at Liberty to Judge for Themſelves.

The PREFACE.

I think my ſelf likewiſe obliged upon this Occaſion to make a Grateful Mention of the late Worthy and Learned Dr. Willes, for his Two Excellent Diſcourſes prefixed to the Antiquities: And tho' they had not the good Fortune to have his laſt hand to them, are now however at length (I preſume) by the Care and Skill of Dr. Hudſon, Digeſted into a proper Method; with the Addition of ſuch Notes, &c. as highly tend to Illuſtrate, and Render them Compleat.

And I am now, Alſo, to Thank my Other Worthy Friends, in General, for the good Offices they have done Me towards the Gaining of my Point.

TWO DISCOURSES UPON JOSEPHUS.

DISCOURSE I.

By way of Enquiry into the Life and Religion of Josephus: wherein an account is given of that Famous Passage relating to our Blessed Lord and Saviour.

IN this Preliminary Discourse I shall principally enquire into the Life and Religion of Josephus: upon the right understanding whereof some obscuritys in him will be clear'd, and that remarkable passage about our Saviour freed from the Objections that have been made against it.

We have his [a] Life written by himself when he was 56 years old; in which he relates his being of the Stock and Lineage of [b] Aaron, and by his Mothers side descended from the Maccabees, and of the Course of Jojarib, the first of the twenty four Orders of the Priests. He saith that he was Born in the first year of Caligula (A. D. 37.) he made tryal of the three famous Sects that were then amongst the Jews; Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes: and leaving them at 16 years of Age, he spent 3 years in the Wilderness of Judæa with a famous Master call'd Bani. Serrarius took him for an Essene, Drusius and the Authour of Juchasin for a Pharisee: but they are all mistaken, since Josephus in that very place distinguisheth him from the 3 Sects he had before made tryal of. It's more probable that he was one of St. John Baptist's, or Christ's Disciples. The Talmud [c] mentions one of Christ's Disciples by the name of Bani or Buni. But whoever he he was, after 3 years Josephus left him also: and being now 19 years old return'd to Jerusalem; where having spent seven years, he went to Rome, being 26 years old: and there he became acquainted with [d] Nicanor (who was afterwards a Colonel in Vespasians Army) and with Aliturus one of Nero's Favourites, and by his Interest with Poppæa the Empress, from whom he receiv'd many Favours. After two years spent at Rome he return'd to Judæa, the War being now ready to break forth: in which War Josephus, being 30 years old and a Governour in Galilee, bravely resisted the Romans, till at last being overpower'd he Yielded (or as his Enemies say Revolted) to them. At this time he told Vespasian, that he should be Emperour of the Romans. And when Josephus saw his Prophesy fulfill'd, and the whole Nation of the Jews Conquer'd by him, he took him for the Messias and King of the Jews, whom the Prophets foretold. Upon these accounts he was much esteem'd by Vespasian and Titus, and from them took the Name of Flavius. And because this is so memorable a part of the Life of Josephus, it may not be improper to read it in his own Words. Nothing so much stir'd up the minds of the Jews to the present Wars, as an ambiguous Prophecy found in their Sacred Books; that about that time one of their Country should be Ruler of the whole World. -------- By this Oracle the Empire of Vespasian was foretold, which began in Judæa. Also ch. 14*th*, he saith, that God shew'd him in a Dream the Destruction of the Jews and their Conquest by the Romans, and what should happen to the Roman Emperours. For, being a Priest, he understood how to Explain the Sacred Books of the Prophets, and to Interpret Dreams. He often suggested to the Jews, that God had forsaken them, and was gone over to the Romans; that the Jews, in fighting, not onely Resisted the Romans but God also, and that from the writings of the Prophets it was evident that Jerusalem should be destroy'd about that time, and that God had long since decreed it. From the waters of Siloam being dry'd up, when the Jews could come at them, and flowing plentifully when in possession of the Romans, he concluded that God had left the Jews, and was gone over to the Romans. When the War was over, and all things had happen'd according to Josephus's Predictions, he resolv'd to make the History of it publick: which he did first in his own Language in Hebrew, for the use of the Eastern Nations (a Book long since lost;) and afterwards coming to Rome with Titus, he there publish'd these Books in Greek, which are now extant. But this was not done immediately upon his coming to Rome: for first the Triumph of Vespasian and Titus over the Jews was past, which Josephus in those Books describes: many also had publish'd [a] false accounts of that War, before he publish'd his. And it was after the 4th year of the Empire of Vespasian, which he expressly mentions in his 7th Book of the Wars of the Jews; and after the Building of the Temple of Peace at Rome, which he also mentions, and which, as appears from Dion, was dedicated A. D. 75. that is 5 years after the War was ended: and yet it was before the Death of Agrippa, who highly approv'd of it, and Commended it in several Letters written upon that occasion. Agrippa came to Rome and receiv'd new Honours from Vespasian, and that very year that the Temple of Peace was Dedicated (as appears from Dion) besides the Testimony of several Coins. Eusebius in his Chron. and the Authour of the Paschalion say, that he Reign'd 26 years, that is, till the 7th year of Vespasian. All which I the rather take notice of, because [b] two very Learned Men of this Age place his Death in the 3d year of Vespasian. From hence 'tis evident, that Josephus publish'd his Book of the Wars of the Jews betwixt the 5th year of Vespasian, when the [c] Temple of Peace was Dedicated, and the 7th year of Vespasian, when [d] Agrippa Dy'd.

He wrote these Books for the sake of the Romans, among whom he Liv'd, and from whom he had receiv'd many Honours; for he was made Free of Rome by Vespasian, dwelt in the Palace, and had a yearly Pension allow'd him by the Emperour; and having presented his Books of the Jewish War to Vespasian and Titus, the first took care to have a Statue erected to him at Rome, the [e] latter approv'd them with his own hand, and order'd them to be kept in all the Publick Libraries. As the Romans extol'd him, so he constantly magnifieth and flatters the Romans, and gives wicked Characters of the Jews: for which the Jews generally condemn his Books as false and partial. [f] Abarbanel saith, that he perverted the Truth to Magnify the Romans, whom he was afraid to displease; and wrote as they would have him. And tho these Censures of the Jews are very groundless; yet I cannot but observe, that he so far comply'd with the Rites and Customs of the Romans, that Minucius [g] Felix in the very next Age after took him for a [h] Roman: De Judæis scripta eorum relege; vel, si Romanis magis gaudes, Flavii Josephi, vel Antonii Juliani de Judæis require. i. e. Concerning the Jews, either read their own Writers, or, if you would rather Read Romans, inquire for Josephus or Antonius Julianus. This latter was undoubtedly the same Antonius Julianus that was Procuratour of Judæa in the very time of the War, and is mention'd by [i] Josephus. He was a Spaniard by Birth, a man of great Eloquence and Learning, and publickly taught Rhetorick at [k] Rome. When Josephus therefore wrote his Books of the Wars of the Jews, he was of Opinion, that God had forsaken their Nation, and was gone over to the Romans: he had seen his Country Ruin'd by a War that had destroy'd above 1100000, the Holy City layd Wast; and God's Temple so utterly destroy'd, as that there was scarcely one stone left upon another; the Sacred Books of Moses, and the Holy Vessels of God's house, first made part of the Roman Triumph, and afterwards furnish'd the Temples of Jupiter Capitolinus and that of Peace; and the very Shekels, which were formerly pay'd by the Jews all the world over to the Temple at Jerusalem, were now pay'd to Jupiter Capitolinus. By which and many other circumstances, Josephus was much confirm'd in his Opinion, that God had forsaken the Jews, and was become the God and Favourer of the Romans, and that Vespasian was the promis'd Messiah. His opinion about Government was, that no one could be advanc'd to a Throne but by God's special Favour, & he makes King Agrippa thus speak to the Jews. [l] It's evident that God is now gone over to the Romans: for it's impossible that so great an Empire should be Establish'd without God. For these reasons Josephus thought favourably of the Religion of the Romans, and was pleas'd that many of the [m] Jewish Opinions agreed with theirs. The Prodigies, that he saith happen'd before the destruction of Jerusalem, would agree better to Livy or Tacitus than to a Jewish Historian. And he could not tell whether he should ascribe his great deliverance at Jotapata to Chance or Providence. And when Judas an Essene foretold the Death of Antigonus at Strato's Tower, the Prophesie was not fulfill'd at Cæsarea, which was famously so call'd, but

This they were not aware of, but Dio seems plain, Agrippa therefore with his Sister Berenice came to Rome A. D. 75. Spanhemius mentions a Coyn with the XXXIX*th* year of Agrippa. this will end A. D. 78. In Photius therefore perhaps the better Reading will be ἐνάτῳ instead of τρίτῳ. The IX*th* of Vespatian ends in Jul. A. D. 78. H. D. c This Dedication of the Temple of Peace mention'd by Pliny, N. H. l. 12. c. 19. d *Harduinus de Num. at another [a] obſcure Place of that name: which ſeems Copy'd from the Fable of the Death of Alexander King of Epirus at Pandoſia, as it's Recorded by Livy and others. And what he relates of the [b] Apples of Sodom and the Sabbatical River is more like a Romance, to entertain his Reader, than any regard to Truth: and the Ridiculous ſtory of the root Baras [c] ſeems borrow'd from the Moly of Homer or Circea of Dioſcorides and Theophraſtus. The 4 Colours of the Veil of the Temple at Jeruſalem, he makes to be an imitation of the 4 Elements, and the 7 Candleſticks a Reſemblance of the 7 Planets. The flying open of the great Brazen Gate of the Temple, is the ſame as happpen'd at Thebes juſt before the great Battel of the Lacedæmonians at Leuctra, when the great Gates of the Temple of Hercules open'd of themſelves without any ones touching of them. [Cic. de Divinat.] I omitt many other things of the like nature, from whence it's evident that Joſephus endeavour'd to Greciſe and Shape the Hiſtory of the Jews as like as he could to thoſe of the Greeks and Romans.

And thus I have briefly given his Sentiments when he wrote the Wars of the Jews, but he did not write his Books of Antiquities till the 13*th* year of Domitian the Emperour, when he had loſt his 3 great Patrons, two Emperours and a King, and now betook himſelf to the Favour of Epaphroditus, to whom he Dedicates his 20 Books of Antiquities, his own Life, and two Books againſt Apion. He had now ſeen his Meſſiah dye without doing any thing for the Jews, or anſwering the Characters given him by the Prophets; by which means he ſeems now to have chang'd his Opinion, and to be grown very looſe in his Sentiments about the Myſteries of Religion, a great Latitudinarian, and chiefly addicted to the general Opinions of the excellency of Vertue and Goodneſs and the agreeableneſs of true Religion to the nature of God, and ſuch other Moral Sentiments: wherein the wiſeſt of the Jews, Heathens and Chriſtians were agreed, without any Religious eſteem of ſuch things as had been reveal'd to the Jews by Moſes and the Prophets. Aud of this it may be neceſſary to give ſome inſtances. Circumciſion was one of the moſt Sacred Rites of the Jews, which God gave Abraham, and by which they were known to be his Seed: and yet when Joſephus is ſpeaking of the Antiquity of it, he leaveth the matter doubtful betwixt Herodotus and Moſes, whether the Ægyptians borrow'd it from the Jews, or the Jews from the Ægyptians. [d] He expreſsly ſaith, that one might worſhip God without Circumciſion: ſo that he reſolv'd to obſerve the Jewiſh Laws, that this was far better than Circumciſion, and that God would eaſily pardon one that did omitt it for fear of Perſecution. [e] And in this it's evident that Joſephus comply'd with the bad Circumſtances the Jews were in under the Emperour Domitian, by reaſon of their Circumciſion; of which Suetonius hath theſe words: Judaicus fiſcus acerbiſſime actus eſt. Interfuiſſe me memini cum à Procuratore frequentiſſimo concilio inſpiceretur nonagenarius ſenex, an circumſectus eſſet. i. e. The Jewiſh Tribute was ſeverely collected. I remember that I was preſent when an Old Man of ninety years of Age was in a great Aſſembly inſpected by the Procurator, whether he was Circumciſed or not. When Joſephus relates the Miraculous Paſſage of the Iſraelites through the Red Sea, he adds very diffidently, that he relates every thing as it was in the Holy Books, and doubted whether the Sea went back of its own accord, or by God's ſpecial command; and ſeems inclin'd to think it nothing elſe than what happen'd to Alexanders Army at Pamphylia: in Concluſion he adds, [f] that every one might think of it as he pleas'd. When he gives an account of God's coming down to [g] Mount Sinai: he ſaith, let every one believe of it as he pleaſeth: but he related no more than he found in the Holy Books. When he ſaith, that God was the Authour of the Law of Moſes, he adds, but [h] let every one think of theſe things as he pleaſeth. And the like Reflections he makes upon Jonas's being ſwallow'd by a Whale, and Nebuchadnezzer being 7 years in the Wilderneſs with the Beaſts. In his ſecond Book againſt Apion, he ſaith, that Moſes from his Juſtice and Piety might very well judge that he had God for his Guide: and when he was once perſwaded of that himſelf, he did well to perſwade the People to think ſo too, juſt as the Greeks pretended to have their Laws from Apollo, whether they really thought ſo, or thought that the beſt way to make them receiv'd of the People. He ſaith, that the Jews keep their own Law and never cenſure others, and do not Laugh at or Speak againſt thoſe that are thought God's by others: of which place Grotius [i] obſerves, that he undoubtedly flatter'd the Romans: and long before him Philoſtorgius made the like Obſervation [k] that Joſephus was like one fearing to offend the Gentiles, and taking great care in his Books not to diſpleaſe them.

Now the diſeſteeming the Rites and Ceremonies of the Law of Moſes, and ſetting ſo great a value upon the Precepts of Morality, are two conſiderable ſteps that Joſephus made towards the Doctrine of Chriſtianity: and whereas of all the Sects of the Jews Joſephus gives the beſt Character of, and ſeems to have the greateſt eſteem for the Eſſenes, ſo it's obſervable, that of all the Sects of the Jews, they came neareſt to the Chriſti- ans. The Essenes were forbidden to keep any changes of Coats or Shoes, as Christ also forbad his Disciples, Matth. 10. 10. The Essenes were forbidden to Swear, as Christ also forbad the Christians. The Essenes excommunicated Persons that liv'd unworthy of their Profession; and of such it was observ'd by them that they usually came to some untimely end: just as St. Paul observes of those that prophan'd the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, in those purest times of Christianity, that it often happen'd, that they were deliver'd to Satan. The Essenes never troubled themselves with Sacrifices; but Fasted often, and readily became Martyrs for their Religion. All which things are very agreeable to the precepts of the Gospel. Of the Essenes, Josephus particularly observes that they had the gift of Prophesy, and could foretell things to come: and I will add in the last place of them, that tho Christ vehemently censures the Pharisees and Sadducees, yet he never spoke one word against the Essenes. And when Josephus, at the end of his second Book against Apion, makes the Jewish Religion to consist in Piety, Justice, Concord, and observing God and his Providence, he comes very near the description of Christianity.

And having thus far observ'd Josephus's sentiments of Religious matters, when he wrote his Antiquities; let us see, in the last place, whether there is any thing in that famous account he gives of our Saviour, that is not very agreeable to Josephus, and the time when he wrote. The place is Antiq. Book 18. ch. 4. There was about that time one Jesus a wise man, if yet it be lawful to call him a man: he was a worker of strange Miracles, a teacher of such Men as would readily embrace the truth, and had many followers both of Hebrews and Helenists: (i. e. Jews and Proselytes:) this was the famous Christ, who upon the accusation of the Principal Men of the Jews was Crucify'd by Pontius Pilate; and yet those that first lov'd him did not forsake him: for he appear'd to them the third day alive again. Their Holy Writers have declar'd these and many thousand other wonderful things of him. The Race of Christians, which are so call'd from him, remain to this day. In all which I see nothing but what may agree to a Jew, giving an Historical account of the Affairs of his own Nation to the Heathens; especially what may agree to Josephus, who [a] frequently tells his Reader, that he did not affirm the Truth of every thing he related, but faithfully Transcrib'd what he found in their Books; and so indifferently related the Opinions of the Pharisees, Sadducees, Essenes, and of the followers of Judas Galilæus, and gives a particular account of St. John Baptist, and St. James the Brother of Christ. So that it would have been very strange if Josephus should have past by Christ and the Christians, without taking any notice of them, especially at the 13*th* year of Domitian, when they were grown so very Numerous. At the end of Nero's Reign, Hermas, Clement, Tacitus, Lactantius, and Sulpitius Severus call them a great Multitude; but at the end of Domitian's Reign, most Countries were full of Christians. Orosius [b] calls the Christian Church at that time, Confirmatissimam toto Orbe Ecclesiam, a Church firmly Establish'd in all the World. Pliny not long after shows that Pontus and Bithynia were full of Christians; and even at Rome there were so many, that Domitian was afraid of them, and their setting up of Christ's Kingdom: and for that Reason rais'd a Persecution against them. But because so many Learned Men have employ'd their Pens to Censure this Paragraph in Josephus, as none of his; I will examine it yet more particularly.

There was about that time one Jesus (Ιησῦς τις.) This is the proper Language of the Jews us'd by Tryphon in [c] Justin Martyr, (where Christ is call'd Jesus, Ιησῦς τις) and by Josephus upon other occasions, as in his Wars of the Jews L. 7. c. 11. and 12. Ιησῦς τις: and even of Zenodorus a Tetrarch, Ant. l. 15. c. 13. Σηνόδωρός τις. He calls Banus, τινὰ Βανῆν; also Hyrcanus. l. 18. c. 8. Theudas l. 20. c. 4.

A wise Man (σοφὸς ἀνὴρ) the old Appellation of a Philosopher; and no more than what the same Josephus saith of St. John Baptist, who is call'd by him a good Man (ἀγαθὸς ἀνήρ.)

If he may be call'd a Man who was a worker of Miracles, (εἴγε ἄνδρα αὐτὸν λέγειν χρή.) Josephus means that he seem'd more than a Common Man. So when Pilate wrote to Tiberius, it was de Christo Deo. Tertullian and Pliny, that the Christians sang Christo quasi Deo. That he did Miracles, is what the Jews own'd, John 11. 47. They said, what do we? for this Man doth many Miracles. In Justin Martyrs [d] Dialogue with Tryphon the Jew, the Jews own that such Miracles seem'd to have been done, but imputed them to Magick; and both Celsus [e] and Porphyry, tho bitter Enemies to the Christians, confess'd that Christ did Miracles. Phlegon owns that Christ [f] foreknew future things. Pilate gave the Emperour Tiberius Nero an account of our Saviours Miracles: as we are assur'd by Tertullian and Eusebius. And from that account he understood, that he was a wise Man and [g] doer of Miracles (φιλόσοφος καὶ θαυμάτων ποιῶν.

Religious and Immortal: to which Porphyry adds [a] that Christ was Pious and carry'd to Heaven, and yet blames the Christians.

Trypho [b] a Jew commended the Holy Lives of Christians, and [c] Galen an Heathen saith of the Christians, that they were Chast, much addicted to Prayer and Fasting, abstain'd from injuries &c. Nor is it a less advantagious Character that Pliny gives of them in his Epistle to Trajan: and Josephus also in giving an account of the Martyrdom of St. James highly commends him, and those that took his part, as Men most just and accurate about the observance of the Law.

This was the Famous Christ (ὁ Χριστὸς ἔτος ἦν) viz. He that was the Author of Christianity: for Josephus wrote those Books to inform Epaphroditus and the Heathens, who [d] knew him best by the Name of Christ: for so he is call'd by Suetonius, Tacitus, and Pliny, and they say expresly that the Christians were so call'd from him. It's beyond the sense & design of Josephus to expound these words of true and saving Faith in Christ; for Josephus was (τῶν ἀπίστων Ἰησοῦ ὡς Χριστοῦ) among those that did not believe Jesus to be the true Messias, as we are told by [e] Origen: but Josephus design'd no more but to let us know, that this Jesus was the same that was usually [f] call'd Christ, and was the Author of Christianity: thus [g] elsewhere he tells us that St. James was Brother τοῦ λεγομένου Χριστοῦ, to him that is call'd Christ.

He was Crucify'd by Pontius Pilate. [h] This is a plain Historical Truth recorded also by Tacitus, and the Acts of Pilate: the truth is, that Tacitus's account of Christ is very agreeable to this of Josephus: Auctor nominis ejus Christus qui per Pontium Pilatum supplicio affectus erat. i. e. Christ was the Author of the Sect of the Christians, who was Crucify'd by Pontius Pilate. And since it's evident that Tacitus had read Josephus, (for in his History l. 5. he saith, Expansæ repente delubri fores, & audita major humana vox excedere Deos, which is taken from Josephus, l. 1. c. 6. μεταβαίνωμεν ἐντεῦθεν, &c.) it's more probable that he took his account from Josephus than from the Gospel, and so he will be an early Evidence of the Authenticknes and great Antiquity of this Paragraph in Josephus.

He appear'd to them the third day alive again. Josephus here doth not relate his own but the Christians faith: and this is what he might not only learn from their Gospels, but even from the Letter which Pilate sent to Tiberius, and is in part exstant in Justin, Tertullian, and Orosius: in which we have an expres Narrative of Christs Rising from the Dead the third day: besides Celsus witnesseth that Christ appear'd to his Followers after his Death.

Their Holy Writers have declar'd these and many thousand wonderful things of him (τῶν θείων προφητῶν ταῦτά τε καὶ ἄλλα μύρια περὶ αὐτοῦ θαυμάσια εἰρηκότων.) These words having reference to them, i. e. the Christians, in the former Sentence, ought properly to be Expounded of the Writings of the Prophets. Thus Josephus reckons the Books of Maccabees among the Jewish Prophets, and the Holy Books of the Essenes he calls (προφητῶν ἀποδέγματα) the Doctrine of their Prophets: and this Sence is here much confirm'd by the word εἰρηκότων, which hath no relation to the foretelling future things, but properly signifieth Historically declaring; thus Eustathius upon Homer explains εἰρῶ by ἀγγέλλω, from whence cometh the word Evangelist. And since the Books of the Gospels were now generally receiv'd in the Christian Churches, it may not seem strange that Josephus should have seen some of them. Tryphon the Jew tells Justin Martyr that he had read them, and so the modern Jews do now. It's plain that he useth the Language of the Christians, and the New Testament elsewhere, as when he calls St. John the Baptist, St. James the Brother of Christ.

So that I see nothing in all this account of Christ but what may well agree with Josephus. And indeed it would be more strange if such an accurate Historian, and one that gives so full an account of St. John Baptist and St. James, should say nothing at all of Christ himself: and when afterwards he calls James the Brother of Christ, it may very well be suppos'd, that he had given some account of Christ before. And lastly it may be probably gues'd, that, at the writing of his Antiquities, he began to think favourably of the Christians. He commends St. John Baptist and St. James as well as Christ, whom in his Wars of the Jews he never mention'd; and never saith one word of Vespasian, whom he had before magnify'd as the Messias. He thought formerly that the Murder of Ananus and Jesus were the true cause of God's anger against the Jews, and the destruction of Jerusalem. But in his Antiquities he makes the Murder of St. James the Apostle to have been the cause of it, if we may give Credit to [i] Origene and Eusebius. It cannot seeme strange that Josephus should say so of St. James, when [k] Maimonides himself declares that this Jesus, who was put to Death by the Sanhedrim, was the Cause of the Destruction of the Nation of the Jews and was Propheſy'd of by Daniel. Now, whereas Christ is call'd by the Christians, the Stone cut out without hands, from Dan. 2. 45. (a place which many [l] Jews, and particularly Tryphon in [m] Justin Martyr confess'd to belong to the Messiah) Josephus, when he comes to speak of the meaning of it, plainly saith [a] that it was such as he had no mind to publish, and so tacitly hints the owning of Jesus to be the Messiah, though he would not openly confess it. But be this as it will, its certain that tho Josephus often condemns the Sadduces, accuseth Theudus, Judas, and others, that set up for Prophets to draw People after them, yet never once accuseth Christ or the Christians.

Upon the whole I cannot see the least reason to think this passage suppositious, it's quoted in the very same words by Eusebius, St. Jerome, Isidorus Pelusiota, Sozomene, Rufinus, Sophronius, Cedrenus, Freculphus, Suidas, Joan. Sarish, Hegesippus, Cassiodorus, Nicephorus, and many other Antient Writers: it's extant in all Copies and MSS. of Josephus in the World, and in all Translations; particularly that made by St. Ambrose, and which goeth under the Name of Hegesippus, hath it at large twice, viz. in the second Book, and again in the Anacephalæosis. So that Tanaquil Faber, the great opposer of this passage of Josephus, seems very assuming, when he says of this Hegesippus, that Josephum eo accusat nomine quod Resurrectionis Domini nostri Jesu Christi non meminerit. i. e. Hegesippus accuseth Josephus, for not mentioning the Resurrection of Christ, [b] which is not only absurd upon the account that Hegesippus is nothing else but a Corruption of the word Josephus, and that Book a free Translation of it: but also that this Passage about our Saviour is twice read at large. Ludovicus Vives was the first I met with that Discover'd St. Ambrose to have been the true Author of the Translation that goes under the Name of Hegesippus. His words in his Book De Tradenda Disciplina are these: Hegesippus Latinus factus ab Ambrosio Mediolanensi Antistite, i. e. The Latin Hegesippus was made by St. Ambrose Bishop of Milane. The old Latin Version of his Antiquities made by the Care of Cassiodorus hath this place also. This Version hath been falsly Father'd upon Rufinus, and tho the Old Copy at Milane hath been by some [c] Learned Men thought as Old as Rufinus, if not the very same Copy: yet it's evident from [d] Cassodorus, that it was not at all Translated into Latin till 150 years after Rufinus by Epiphanius Scholasticus. And Lastly the Hebrew Version of some parts of Josephus usually Publish'd under the Name of Ben-Gorion hath this Passage of Josephus about our Saviour; for tho it be not in the imperfect Edition of Munster, which is but part of that Work, yet its certain that it was in the Compleat Copies of that Book. P. Fagius in his Edition of the Tisby of Elias Levita, at the word ושך puts down the whole Paragraph with this Preface to it. Ego Paulus Fagius interpres hujus Libelli, in honorem Christi & Redemptoris nostri, huc referam quæ Scripta inveniuntur in libro Josephi filii Gorion, cujus hæc sunt verba: Fuit iisdem temporibus Jesus, &c. i. e. I Paul Fagius Interpreter of this Book will relate here, for the Honour of Christ and our Redeemer, what is found written in a Book of Josephus the Son of Gorion in these words: There was at that time one Jesus, &c. and there inserts this whole Passage as it is in the Greek Josephus. Baronius mentions an Old Hebrew Copy of Josephus in which this Passage appear'd, but Erased: and even our Old English Translation of that Book by P. Morisyn hath this Paragraph at large: and moreover [e] Giraldus Cambrensis tels us, that Robertus Canutus (the Fryer of St. Frideswide, who Liv'd about the year 1171, and was well skill'd in Hebrew) declar'd that he found this Testimony concerning our Saviour in two Hebrew Copies of Josephus; and that it was Erased in others; as he made it appear to some Jews then Living in Oxford.

So that in fine, there seems as much Evidence for the truth and sincerity of this place in Josephus as of any other in all his works: and it would have been far more strange, if in his circumstances and time when he wrote, he should have said nothing of Christ than that he saith what he doth. Yet if any one desires to be more fully satisfy'd in this particular, let him consult Andreas Bosius's Exercitationes Histor. Critic: *Chr. DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE II.

By way of Enquiry into the Chronology of Joſephus in his ANTIQUITIES.

SINCE the Copies of Joſephus have been alter'd and corrupted, the beſt Method that I can propoſe for the diſcovery of his Chronology, is to make an exact Collection of ſuch Paſſages of Joſephus, as were antiently quoted from him within two or three hundred years after he wrote, and in thoſe Books remain unalter'd, together with a diligent peruſal of the other works of Joſephus, which, being written upon other Subjects, and not containing the Hiſtory of the Bible, are not ſo likely to be alter'd to comply with either Verſion. In purſuance of this method, the firſt place that I ſhall pitch upon is that of Euſebius in his Hiſtory l. 3. c. 10. where he quotes a large Paragraph out of Joſephus's 1*ſt* Book againſt Apion, which aſſerts that from the beginning of the World to the Death of Moſes was almoſt 3000 years, his words are ὅτος ὁ χρόνος ἀπολείπει χιλιλίων ὀλίγον ἐτῶν. which words Valeſius obſerves to be in all his old MSS. of Euſebius. Theſe ſame words are alſo quoted by Nicephorus (Hiſt. Eccl. l. 1. p. 162.) and are at this day to be read in all Prints, MSS. and Verſions of Joſephus, nor was this alter'd to comply with Greek and Hebrew Chronology; ſince it manifeſtly agrees with neither. Our preſent Latin Joſephus Tranſlates thoſe words thus, Hoc tempus de tribus millibus annorum paululum minus eſt. In the Verſion uſed by Bede [a] and Hermannus Contractus, and which was probably that made by Epiphanius, they are Tranſlated thus, qui paulo minus ad tria millia annorum continentiam gerunt. The word continentia is uſed after the ſame manner by Epiphanius in the Preface to the Antiquities. Theſe ſame words of Joſephus are twice quoted by Bede in his Book de Ratione Temporum, and his Apologetick Epiſtle, and alſo are in Hermannus Contractus A. M. 2493. From all which we have a great aſſurance that this was the genuine Text of Joſephus, and may receive farther confirmation from Joſephus in other parts of his works. In the Preface to his Antiquities he ſaith, that the Holy Books of the Jews contain'd the Hiſtory of 5000 years; and that he meant from the beginning of the world to his time, appears partly from the concluſion of his Antiquities, where he ſaith of his whole Hiſtory, that it was taken from the Sacred Writings: and more fully from the beginning of his firſt Book againſt Apion, where he ſaith, that his Books of Antiquities contain'd the Hiſtory of 5000 years. And to take away all doubt, Joſephus in [b] three ſeveral places, where all Copies agree, accounts 2000 years from Moſes to his time, as [c] Philo doth likewiſe. Now if we add theſe 2000 years from Moſes to his time to the almoſt 3000 years from Adam to Moſes, it makes up the Summ of almoſt 5000 years from Adam to the time of Joſephus. [d] Origene alſo ſaith, that from Adam to the 70*th year of Chriſts Oeconomy was* 4900 years, and tho he doth not there quote Joſephus, yet it's manifeſt that he took it from him. For 1*ſt*, that Number is widely different from the Hebrew and Septuagint, but agreeth with Joſephus. 2*dly*, in that ſame Homily he twice quotes the Hiſtory of the Jews, and the Wars of the Jews, and undoubtedly meant thoſe of Joſephus. 3*dly*, the 70*th* year of Chriſts Oeconomy is the very time where Joſephus's Books end. And, to ſhew that there is no miſtake in that Number of Origene, he adds in the ſame place, that it was 4830 years from Adam to Chriſt. From all which it ſeems evident that Joſephus accounted almoſt 3000 years from Adam to the Death of Moſes, and almoſt 5000 years from Adam to his own time.

The next place I come to conſider, is in the ſame Book of Origene, Hom. 10. f. 25. where he obſerves, that it was as long from Adam to Noah (i. e. the Flood) as from Moſes to Chriſt. Now if with Origene we aſſigne 4830 years from Adam to Chriſt. And if according to the [e] Hebrew we account 1656 years to the Flood, we ſhall find juſt ſo many years in Joſephus to Chriſt. And becauſe I would not yet make uſe of the preſent Copies of Joſephus, we may take this period out of Clem. Alex. Strom. 1. p. 250. where he quotes Joſephus from a yet Elder Author that Flouriſh'd under Antoninus Pius, and ſo near to Joſephus's Time, viz. that from Moſes (i. e. the coming out of Ægypt) to David was [f] 585 years, from David to the 2*d of Veſpaſian* 1179 years, both together 1764 years. Now if from that Summ we take 40 years that Moſes was in the Wilderneſs, and 70 years of Chriſts Oeconomy, there will remain 1657 years from Moſes's Death to Chriſts Birth:

a De Nat. rerum, fol. 76. b Viz. in the Preface and Concluſion of his Antiquities and in his 1*ſt* Book againſt Apion. c In Euſeb. de Præp. Evang. l 9. d Homil. on Math. 29. e In the Samaritane Chron. from Moſes's Exodus to the Æra vulg. are 1671 years, if the Æra Chriſti were 4 years ſooner then it was to that 1657 years juſt as Origene is. f In the firſt Summ is a ſmall miſtake of i for n, 5 for 8, and then both will be 1767.

which he thus takes from Joſephus, and which demonſtrates that in the time of Origene, Joſephus before the Flood agreed with the Hebrew. And if we ſubſtract twice 1656. i.e. 3312 out of 4830, there will remain for the ſpace betwixt the Flood and the Death of Moſes 1518 years, which is very near what we now read for that Period. And if we put all this together, the Chronology of Joſephus will ſtand thus:

From Adam to the Flood 1656 years, to the Death of Moſes 1518, to the Birth of Chriſt 1656, to the 12*th* of Nero 70 years, in all 4900 years, or according to Joſephus, almoſt 5000 years from Adam to his time at the 13*th* year of Domitian.

BEFORE I proceed to a more diſtinct conſideration of Particulars, it will be neceſſary to ſhew what evidence there is ſtill left in the preſent Copies and MSS. of Joſephus, that he follow'd the Hebrew before the Flood and the Greek after it.

The Period before the Flood agreeth with the Hebrew. 1*ſt*, in the Age of Lamech's begetting Noah, the Hebrew is 182, the Greek 188, the difference only in the laſt Figure. Now all Copies, Verſions, and MSS. of Joſephus have two in the laſt place according to the Hebrew, and not eight according to the Greek. 2*dly*, in the Age that Enoch Begat at, the Hebrew is 65, the Greek 165. Now the Copies and MSS. of Joſephus here agree with the Hebrew againſt the Greek. 3*dly*, the Hebrew accounts to the Flood 1656 years, the Greek 2242 years. Now there are no Copy's of Joſephus that agree with the Greek: but they have either 2656 or elſe 1--56, the number of hundreds being wanting: and either way there are manifeſt footſteps of agreement with the Hebrew. Laſtly, Joſephus ſaith of this Period, that he Tranſcrib'd the years from the Holy Books with great accuracy; where by Holy Books, he meant the Hebrew. And ſo in his Preface to his Antiquities, tho the 70 Tranſlated the Books of Moſes, yet there are many more things in the Holy Writings (that is the Hebrew) which he deſign'd to explain. And againſt Apion, l. 1. he ſaith, that he wrote his Hiſtory in Greek from the Holy Books, i.e. the Hebrew Books: and again he ſaith, that he Tranſlated his Antiquities from the Holy Books, as underſtanding thoſe Letters, i. e. the Hebrew Books and Letters.

The Period next after the Flood agreeth with the Greek. For 1*ſt*, moſt of the preſent Greek Copies here follow the 70. 2*dly*, the Old Greek Copie of Epiphanius here certainly follow'd the 70. for ſo Freculphus about A. D. 800, in Chron. T. 1. l. 1. cap. 35. De numero Annorum à Diluvio uſque ad nativitatem Abrahæ aliter Joſephus atque 70. interpretes & Euſebius ſentiunt quam in Hebraica veritate continetur, and afterwards adds, that the Hebrew has 292 years, the 70 and Euſebius 942 years, à quibus Joſephus non longe exorbitat. 3*dly*, Joſephus ſaith that Phaleg was Born at the Diviſion of Tongues: but thoſe that follow the Hebrew ſay, that it was at the Death of Phaleg, finding a 100 years too few for the Peopling of the World. 4*thly*, they that follow the Hebrew make Sem to be Melchiſedech, as being then alive in the days of Abraham according to their Chronology. But Joſephus[a] ſaith that he was a Chanaanitiſh King, and hath not the leaſt hint of ſo ſtrange a thing, that Abrahams great Grand-Fathers great Grand-Fathers Grand-Father Sem ſhould be then alive to bleſs him. 5*thly*, ſince Jocktan in Joſephus is Elder Brother of Phaleg, and had 13 Sons at the Building of Babel that gave Names to Countries, it's impoſſible that Phaleg ſhould be Born in the 30*th* year of Heber, but muſt be at leaſt Born according to the 70 in the 134*th* year of his Father. And laſtly, in this Period of time Joſephus hath no intimation that he took his years from the Hebrew, as he had of the Period before the Flood. From all which it is very probable that Joſephus follow'd the Hebrew before the Flood, and the 70 after it. Yet he ſeems to have differ'd both from the Hebrew and Greek in one inſtance before the Flood and one after it. In the Period before the Flood he differs from the Hebrew in the Age of Jared's begetting Enoch and inclin'd to the Samaritan, and had 62 inſtead of 162, and thereby made that Number more ſuitable to the reſt, as may appear by this Table.

	Samaritan	Hebrew	Septuagint
Adam	130	130	230
Seth	105	105	205
Enos	090	090	190
Kainaan	70	70	170
Maleleel	65	65	165
Jared	62	162	162
Enoch	65	65	165

In this Table the Samaritan and Hebrew agree in all but the Age of Jareds Begetting Enoch, the Septuagint exceed the Hebrew by an hundred years in every one but in that of Jared.

[a] Wars of the Jews l. 7. c. 18.

Jared. So that in the Hebrew Copies, which they used, it was 62. Josephus here made Jareds Begetting proportionable to that of his Son after him at 65, his Father at 65, his Grand-Father at 70, and his great Grand-Father at 90. And that this was really the mind of Josephus will appear: 1*st*, From the adjusting the Particulars to the General Summs I have laid down, and making them to the Death of Moses to be almost 3000 years. 2*dly*, From Jos. Antiq. l. 10. c. 10. where it is said that the Temple was Destroy'd 1957 years after the Flood, and 3513 years after Adam. Taking the first summ from the second we leave 1556 years betwixt Adam and the Flood, that is one hundred less than the Hebrew. And in these Numbers there is a great agreement of Greek and Latin Copies: so Zonaras read the Greek in his time, and so Freculphus read the Latine in his time; and the Numbers, though false, yet are proportionable, and have just 500 wanting in each of them. 3*dly*, All the Greek MSS. of Josephus, even those that follow the Septuagint, give but 65 years to the Age that Enoch Begat at. They have left out 100 years from Enoch, which should have been taken from his Father Jared, as in the Ages after the Flood in almost all MSS. of Josephus: and the years of Ragau and Saruch are interchang'd, who are the 6*th* and 7*th* Patriarchs after the Flood, as Jared and Enoch are the 6*th* and 7*th* before the Flood.

In the Period next after the Flood, there is no disagreement of Josephus from the 70. except only in the Age of Nachors Begetting Terah, and here is so great variety that it's hard to discover what to follow.

Some Editions of the 70, as that of Complutum and Rome, have	179
Other Editions of the 70 have only	79
Theophilus ad Autolycum	75
The Hebrew	29
The Samaritan	79
The Vulgar Latin and some Copies of Josephus have	28
The usual Greek Copies of Josephus	120
As Corrected by Vossius	129
Freculphus Lexov. read in Josephus some number above	79
Origene in the place above cited	109

For since Origene accounted 1518 years from the Flood to the Death of Moses, and exclusively of the year of the Death of Moses 1517 years, and the 70 leaving out Chanaan the 2*d* (as Josephus did) account only 1487 to that space, it's evident that in Origen's Copy of Josephus he read 40 years more than the 70, and instead of 79 read 109 ἔννατον καὶ ἑκατοστόν. Amidst this great variety and uncertainty, if we read in this one place instead of Origen's ἔννατον καὶ ἑκατοστὸν (with very small alteration) ἔννατον καὶ εἰκοστὸν, which is consonant to the Hebrew, Josephus will agree exactly with all the observations I have made: and from Adam to the Death of Moses will be 2993 years, i. e. almost 3000 years.

These things being consider'd, the Chronology of Josephus before and after the Flood will stand thus:

Adam	130	Sem	2	To the Promise made to Abraham	75
Seth	105	Arphaxad	135
Enos	90	Sala	130
Kainaan	70	Heber	134	To the Coming out of Ægypt.	430
Maleleel	65	Phaleg	130
Jared	62	Ragau	132
Enoch	65	Saruch	130	To the Death of Moses.	40
Mathuselah	187	Nachor	29
Lamech	182	Terah	70		545
Noah	600		892
	1556

All 3 Summs together 2993, and so according to Josephus ὅτος ὁ χρόνος ἀπολείπει τρισχιλίων ὀλίγον ἐτῶν, i. e. This space is but a little short of 3000 years. The Summs of the 4 first Books (usually Printed at the beginning of Josephus) have 3093. Now if we cast away one hundred from the Age of Jared, which seems to have crept into the Text even before Origen's time, we have this very Summ of 2993 years.

There are several things that might incline Josephus to follow the Hebrew before the Flood and the 70 after it: (which is a sort of Chronology affected by St. Austin, De Civ. Dei l. 15. c. 13. and which he most probably took from Josephus.)But the Principal are these:

1*st*. That he being well Skill'd in Hebrew and Greek, and having a great esteem for both Editions of the Bible, did indifferently make use of both, and sometimes follow'd one and sometimes the other.

2*dly*. Hebrew was his own Native Language: he wrote his Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Wars in Hebrew firſt, and made ſeveral Speeches to the Jews in Hebrew to perſwade them to Surrender, and in many places (where all Copy's agree) followeth the Hebrew Bible, where it differs from the Septuagint. As 1*ſt*, Joſephus and the Hebrew leave out the 2*d Chanaan* Son of Arphaxad, who is in the 70. 2*dly*, Gen. 46. 22. Joſephus and the Hebrew have 14, the Greek 18. 3*dly*, Gen. 47. 27. Joſephus and the Hebrew have 70, the Septuagint have 75, and ſo are quoted by St. Luke Acts 7. 14, 15. 4*thly*, Gen. 22. 2. Joſephus and the Hebrew have the Land of Moreah, the 70 have τὴν γὴν ὑψηλήν. 5*thly*, Numb. 4. 3. Joſephus and the Hebrew have 30 years Old, the Greek 25 years Old. 6*thly*, 2 Sam. 24. 13. Joſephus and the Hebrew have 7 years Famine, the Greek 3 years. 7*thly*, 1 Sam. 4. 18. Joſephus and the Hebrew have Eli Govern'd 40 years, the Greek has 20 years, obſerv'd formerly by Syncellus, p. 176. 8*thly*, 1 Kings 4. 32. Joſephus and the Hebrew have 1005. the Greek 5000. 9*thly*, 1 Kings 15. 2. Joſephus and the Hebrew have 3 years, the Greek 6 years. 10*thly*, Eſther 1. 5. Joſephus and the Hebrew have 7 days, the Greek 6 days. 11*thly*, Eſther 9. 16. Joſephus and the Hebrew have 76 Thouſand, the Greek 15 Thouſand.

3*dly*. He underſtood Greek alſo, had a great Veneration for the Verſion of the 70, and relates the whole Hiſtory of it from Ariſtæas, and frequently made uſe of it in his Antiquities. As 1*ſt*, Gen. 7. 11. Joſephus and the 70 have the 27*th* day, the Hebrew and Samaritan the 17*th* day. 2*dly*, Exod. 12. 40. Joſephus and the Greek have the Iſraelites in Chanaan and Ægypt 430 years, the Hebrew in Ægypt 430 years. 3*dly*, 1 Sam. 11. 8. Joſephus and the Greek have Judah 70000, the Hebrew Judah 30000. 4*thly*, 1 Sam. 15. 4. Joſephus and the Greek have Gilgal, the Hebrew Telaim. 5*thly*, 1 Sam. 15. 4. Joſephus and the Greek have Iſrael 400000, the Hebrew Iſrael 200000. 6*thly*, 1 Sam. 15. 4. Joſephus and the Greek have Juda 30000, the Hebrew Judah 10000. 7*thly*, 1 Sam. 22. 18. Joſephus and the Greek have 305 Prieſts, the Hebrew 85 Prieſts, obſerv'd by St. Hierom, Tom. 3. p. 71. 8*thly*, 2 Sam. 8. 13. Joſephus and the Greek have Idumæans, the Hebrew Syrians. 9*thly*, 2 Sam. 25. 15. Joſephus and the Greek have till Dinner time, the Hebrew till the Time appointed. 10*thly*, Eſther, 9. 26. Joſephus and the Greek have φρυραὶ, the Hebrew Purim. 11*thly*, Joſephus relates the Contention of the Jews before Darius about what is the ſtrongeſt, which is not at all in the Hebrew but Greek Eſdras.

4*thly*. Joſephus many times differ'd from them both: as 1*ſt*, Gen. 13. 18. the Hebrew has Plain of Mambre, the Greek the Oak of Mamre, but Joſephus the Oak of Ogyges. 2*dly*, Gen 35. 28. the Hebrew and Greek have Iſaac Dy'd 180 years Old, Joſephus ſaith Iſaac Dy'd 185 years Old. 3*dly*, Numbers 3. 39. the Hebrew and the Greek have 22000, Joſephus 22880. 4*thly*, 1 Sam. 18. 25. the Hebrew and the Greek have 100 Foreskins, Joſephus 600 not Foreskins but heads, κεφαλὰς. he thus alter'd it to make it more compliable to the way of the Romans. 5*thly*, 2 Sam. 3. 14. the Hebrew and the Greek have 100, Joſephus 600. 6*thly*, 2 Sam. 15. 7. the Hebrew and the Greek have 40 years, Joſephus 4 years. 7*thly*, 1 Kings 6. 1. the Hebrew and the Greek have 480 or 440, Joſephus 592. 8*thly*, 1 Kings 12. 33. the Hebrew and the Greek the 8*th* Month, Joſephus the 7*th*. 9*thly*, 1 Chron. 22. 14. the Hebrew and the Greek have 100000 Talents of Gold, Joſephus 10000 Talents of Gold. 10*thly* 1 Chron. 22. 14. the Hebrew and the Greek have 1000000 Talents of Silver, Joſephus 100000 Talents of Silver. 11*thly* Neh. 2. 1. the Hebrew and the Greek have the 20*th* of Artaxerxes, Joſephus the 25*th* year of Xerxes. 12*thly*, Neh. 13. 6. the Hebrew and Greek have the 32*d* year of Artaxerxes, Joſephus the 38*th* year of Xerxes. Not to mention his making Solomon Reign 80 years, and is therein follow'd by Theodoret on 1 Kings 9. 37. and Procopius on the ſame place &c.

5*thly*. To Reconcile Numbers that were different he took a middle Proportion. As 2 Sam. 8. 4. the Hebrew has 700 Horſemen, the Greek 7000 Horſemen, in Joſephus 5000 Horſemen. 2 Sam. 24. 9. the Hebrew and the Greek have Iſrael 800000, but 1 Chron. 21. 5. the Hebrew and the Greek have 1100000, Joſephus hath Iſrael 900000.

From all which it's evident that in Compiling of his Hiſtory he had both the Hebrew and Greek of the Old Teſtament before him; and ſometimes made uſe of one ſometimes the other: and when he thought there was reaſon did not ſcruple to recede from both.

The next conſiderable Period is, from the Death of Moſes to the laying the Foundation of Solomon's Temple in the 4*th* year of Solomon, 552 years: to which add the 40 years in the Wilderneſs, and it will be 592 years from the coming out of Ægypt: and ſo Joſephus hath it expreſsly in the 8*th* Book of his Antiquities and the 3*d chap.* Again from Joſhua to Davids taking Jeruſalem are 515 years, Antiq. l. 7. c. 3. add 33 of David and 4 of Solomon, and we have 552 years. Add the 40 in the Wilderneſs, and they make 592 as before. Again Antiq. l. 10. c. 11. Nebuchadnezzer Burnt the Temple in the year 470 after its Building by Solomon, and in the year 1962 after the coming out of Ægypt. Take the 1*ſt* number out of the 2*d*, and there will remain 592 from the coming out of Ægypt to Solomons Temple. Again, the Summ of the 5*th* Book is 476. of the 6*th* Book 32. of the 7*th* Book Book 40. and 4 years of Solomon. All which make 552. so that if we add 40 in the Wilderness, the whole will be 592. Clem. Alex. in Strom. 1. p. 250. quotes Josephus for saying that from Moses (i. e. the coming out of Ægypt) to David are 588 years. Add the 4 years of Solomon and you have again 592 years. Sulpicius Severus omitting the 4 years hath for that Period only 588 years.

Now to make all this more evident I will insert the particulars thus:

	y.		y.
Moses in the Wilderness	40	Samuel and Saul	32
Joshua	26	David	40
Othoniel	40	Solomon	03
Ahod	80	In all	480
Deborah and Barach	40	Servitudes under
Gedeon	40	Cushan	08
Abimelech	03	The Moabites	18
Thola	23	Jabin and Chanaanites	20
Jair	22	Madianites	07
Jephthe	06	Ammonites	18
Ibsan	07	Philistins	40
Elon	10	In all	111
Abdon	08	The 4*th* year of Solomon	1
Sampson	20	To which add	480
Eli	40	And the whole will be	592

The Greek Copy's of Josephus say that Saul Reign'd 22 years after Samuel, and so Zonaras read it, but Epiphanius and the Latin Versions have only 2. Clemens Alexandrinus (Strom. 1. p. 238.) saith that Saul dy'd two years after Samuel, and Theophilus ad Autol. giveth Samuel 12 and Saul 20, together 32 years according to Josephus. The Jews in Seder Olam and other Books give Saul only 2 years, that is, after the Death of Samuel. That Saul Reign'd in all but 20 years is expres'd in Josephus, Antiq. l. 10. c. 10.

Some few things may be objected against this Number of years for this Period which must be consider'd.

I. 'Tis objected that after the Death of Joshua they were 18 years without a Prince. Jos. Antiq. l. 6. c. 5.

It may be answer'd, that it ought to be read only 8 years, and is to be understood of their Servitude unde Cushan.

II. 'Tis objected that according to Josephus (Antiq. l. 20. c. 18.) from the coming out of Ægypt to Solomons Temple are 612 years, & just so it is read in Photius & Hegesippus l. 2. c. 13.

I answer, Josephus here gives an account of the time from the coming out of Ægypt to the Dedication of the Temple, and the first Priests that serv'd in it and left off the Tabernacle. Now that was just 20 years from the Foundation of it laid by Solomon. (Compare 1 Kings 9. 10. and 2 Chron. 8. 1. and the Septuagint 1 Kings 8. 1.) So that if to the 592 years to the laying the Foundation of Solomons Temple we add 20 we have this very Summ of 612 years. So also Sulp. Severus p. 187. Cœptum Templi opus vigesimo anno explicuit.

The next Period is from the Foundation of the Temple to its Destruction by Nebuchad. viz. 470 years 6 months and 10 days. Josephus is expres as to this Antiq. l. 10. c. 10. in which place also from the Children of Israels going out of Ægypt to the Destruction of the Temple are 1062 years. Take out thence the space to the Building of the Temple, 592 years; and there will remain for the duration of the Temple 470 years: and the reading of that place is confirm'd by Zonaras and Freculphus. Again Antiq. l. 10. c. 10. the Kings of the Race of David Reign'd 514 years 6 months and 10 days: from which number take away 40 of David and 4 of Solomon, and there will remain 470 years 6 months and 10 days. Again Antiq. l. 11. c. 4. the Kings Reign'd 533 years. take away for Saul 20, David 40, and Solomon 4, there will remain from the Foundation of the Temple to the Captivity, 470 years 6 months and 10 days. There is (I confess) a small difference in the Latin Edition, and in that of Freculphus and the Greek of Zonaras p. 126. who have but 532 years 6 months and 10 days.

The particulars of this Summ we may make up from several parts of Josephus most easily thus:

From Solomons laying the Foundation of the Temple to his Death. Jos. l. 8. c. 7.	77	years.
From Rehoboam to the Captivity of the ten Tribes. l. 9. c. 15.	260	years, as it should be read.
Fom thence to the Captivity by Nebuchadnezzer. l. 10. c. 11.	133	years, Corrected, so by Vossius.
In all	470	years.

In moſt of the preſent Copies of Joſephus, l. 9. c. 15. there is 240 inſtead of 260. and in l. 10. c. 11. we have 130 inſtead of 133.

Again the Summ of the 8th Book	163 years	}	So Voſſius, the Greek 182, the Latin 230.
of the 9th Book	177 years
of the 10th Book	203 years
	543
Take away three years of Solomon, and 70 years of the Captivity,		}	73
There remains from the Building to the Ruine of the Temple		}	470 years.

It may be objected, that Antiq. l. 20. c. 18. we have from Solomons Temple Built to its Deſtruction 466 years.

To which is anſwer'd, that the Tranſlation by Ambroſe had in this place of Joſephus 460 years 6 months and 10 days. It ſhould be 450 years 6 months and 10 days, and there are to be accounted from the Dedication of the Temple 612 years after the coming out of Ægypt.

It is obſervable that whenſoever Joſephus gives the time of the Burning of the Temple, whether from Solomons Building it, from the Flood, or from Adam, yet ſtill he adds to the Summ 6 months and 10 days: whereas it is certain that the Temple was Burnt the 10*th* day of the month Ab, which is the 5th month. Joſephus therefore is to be underſtood according to the order of the months among the Romans, for whoſe ſake he wrote, and ſo calls Adar March, Niſan April, Jiar May, Sivan June, Tamuz July, Ab. Auguſt, or Sextilis, the 6th month among the Romans; and therefore in his Wars of the Jews, l. 7. c. 9. he ſaith the Temple was Burnt Auguſt the 10*th*, and in his Wars with the Jews April is Niſan.

In Joſephns (l. 10. c. 11.) the Greek and Latin Copies ſay that from David 21 Kings Reign'd to the Captivity, 514 years 6 months and 10 days. Take away 44 for David and Solomon, and there are 470 years 6 months and 10 days.

Voſſius p. 129. ſaith that the old Paris MSS. of Joſephus hath from Adam to the Burning of the Temple by Nebbuchadnezzer 4000 years. According to my account it comes to 4015, and perhaps the odd 15 may be in the MSS. tho omitted by Voſſius.

From the Burning of the Temple to the firſt of Cyrus, Joſephus hath 70 years: for 1*ſt*, Antiq. l. 11. c. 1. The firſt of Cyrus is the 70*th* year from the beginning of the Captivity. Now the Captivity began at the Burning of the Temple. For (l. 10. c. 11.) the 23*d* year of Nebuchadnezzer is the 5th year of Iſraels Captivity.

2*dly*, Antiq. l. 17. c. 18. Seventy years after the Burning of the Temple they return'd from Babylon, and that undoubtedly was the firſt year of Cyrus.

3*dly*, Antiq. l. 11. c. 1. From Iſaiah to the Burning of the Temple by Nebuchadnezzer 140 years: from Iſaiah to the 1*ſt* of Cyrus 210 years: therefore from the Burning of the Temple to the 1*ſt* of Cyrus are 70 years.

4*thly*, Antiq. l. 20. c. ult. From the Burning of the Temple by Nebuchadnezzer to the firſt of Cyrus, when the Jews return'd from Captivity, are 70 years.

5*thly*, Antiq. l. 10. c. 11. The Temple lay Deſolate 70 years, and they ended the firſt of Cyrus.

6*thly*, Joſephus (Antiq. l. 10. c. 12.) hath the particulars thus:

Nebuchad. 43 years. Evilmerodoch 18 years. Niricolaſſar or Egreſſarius 40 years. Laboſadarchus 009 Months. Balthaſar or Nabonidus 17 years. Cyrus 1. In all 119 years and 9 months. So that if we take out 17 years of Nebuchadnezzer, there will be left for the Captivity 102 years 9 months, which is ceertainly [a] falſe and ſhould be thus: Nebuchadnezzer 43 years. Evilmerodoch 12 years. Niriglisſor 14 years. Laboſodarchus 009 months. Nabonidus 17 years. Cyrus 1 year. In all 87 years and 9 months. If we then take out 17 years of Nebuchadnezzer, there will remain 70 years and 9 months. So that the firſt year of Cyrus was the 70*th* of the Captivity: and this account, tho falſe, yet agreeth with Joſephus, and was taken thence by that Anonymous Author whom Sulpicius Severus l. 2. c. 31. hath Tranſcrib'd thus: Nebuchadnezzer 43. Evilmerodoch 12. [b] Belthazar 14. Darius Medus 18. Cyrus 01. In all 88.

From the firſt year of Cyrus to the time of Alexander's Conquering Darius (i. e. the whole Space of the Perſian Monarchy) Joſephus hath 246 years. So Antiq. l. 12. c. 10. from the Prophecy of Daniel in the firſt year of Darius (who with Cyrus took Babylon) to the Deſtruction of the Temple by Antiochus are 408 years, as 'tis quoted by Cedrenus p. 191.

a Joſephus enumerando Reges Bab. (ſi tamen ipſe ſic ſcripſit, & non codex fallit mendoſus) ſcribit Neb. 43. Evilm. 18. &c. ut habet Hermannus Contractus in Chron. ſic & Freculphus Lexov. & Beda de Nat. Rerum, fol. 76. b Cyprian in Comp. de Paſch. p. 68. differs only in giviug Balthaſar but 4 years, an Error of the Copies.

Now

Now that Prophanation by Antiochus was in the 145*th* year of Seleucus (Antiq. l. 12. c. 10.) which Æra began the 18*th* year after Alexanders Conqueſt of Darius. If we therefore take 144 and 18 (i. e. 162) from 408, there will remain 246 years for the Duration of the Perſian Monarchy.

2*dly*, Antiq. l. 20. c. 18. From the firſt of Cyrus to Antiochus Eupator are 414 years, which words are quoted from Joſephus by Photius and Hegeſippus. Now Joſephus ſaith of Antiochus Epiphanes, that he, dying in the 149*th* year of Seleucus, left the Kingdom to Eupator, Antiq. l. 12. c. 13. and Eupators firſt year was the 150*th* of Seleucus, to which add 18 from the Conqueſt of Alexander over Darius (i. e. in all 168) and take that out of 414, there will remain for the Perſian Monarchy 246 years.

3*dly*, The Summ of the 11*th* Book is 253 years and contains the Space from the firſt of Cyrus to the Death of Alexander. Now from Alexanders Conquering Darius, and putting an end to the Perſian Monarchy were 7 years. if therefore we take 7 from 253, there will remain for the Perſian Monarchy 246 years.

Now it is certain that the Duration of the Perſian Monarchy was not ſo long, but Joſephus, taking him to be Xerxes, in whoſe time Nehemiah came to Jeruſalem and Built the walls of it, (making Nehemiah Cup-bearer to Xerxes) it was neceſſary for him to make him Reign above 32 years: which we find mention'd Neh. 13. 6. Joſephus mentions the 9*th* month of the 38*th* year of his Reign, and added 20 years to his Reign, as he did 40 to Solomons. The Chronology of Joſephus as to thoſe Perſian Kings ſeems to have been thus:

Cyrus	30	Darius	19
Cambyſes	06	Artaxerxes	46
Magi	01	Ochus	21
Darius	36	Arſes	02
Xerxes	41	Darius	04
Artaxerxes	41	In all	247

All theſe are agreeable to the Canon Ptolomaïcus, except one year wanting to Cambyſes and the Magi and 20 added to Xerxes. So that if we caſt away the firſt of Cyrus, which was accounted to the 70 years Captivity, there were juſt 246 years.

Some Old Authors make the Empire of the Perſians to laſt 248 years, including the firſt of Cyrus, and ſo Euſeb. Dem. Ev. p. 393. but they were to be underſtood of the whole Space from the 1*ſt* of Cyrus to the 1*ſt* of Seleucus or the Æra Seleuci.

From Alexanders Conquering Darius to his own Death are 7 years: for if we take 246 (the Duration of the Perſian Monarchy) out of 253 (the number of years from Cyrus to the Death of Alexander, as in the Summ of the 11*th* Book) there will remain 7 for the number of years betwixt the end of the Perſian Monarchy and the Death of Alexander.

From Alexanders Death to the beginning of the Æra Seleuci are 11 years, as is evident thus. Joſephus gives from the firſt of Cyrus to Antiochus Eupator 414 years, and his firſt year was the 150*th* year of Seleucus. Now if we take the 150 and 253 (from the firſt of Cyrus to the Death of Alexander) out of 414, there will remain 11 years betwixt the Death of Alexander and the beginning of the Æra Seleuci.

From the Æra Seleuci to the Maccabees 146 years, for ſo we read in Antiq. l. 12. c. 7. and c. 8. that Mattathias and Judas Maccabæus began to prevail in the year of Seleucus 146.

From the Æra Maccab. in the year of Seleucus 146, to the Beginning of Herod are 126 years, as Antiq. l. 14. at the end: or if the Æra of the Maccabees began the next year after, i. e. in the year of Seleucus 147, then Joſephus aſſigns them but 125 years, as l. 18. c. 8. which therefore muſt end in the year of Seleucus 272, for Herod was made King at Rome in the year of Seleucus 273. and yet Joſephus makes theſe end at the Death of Antigonus (in the year of Seleucus 276.) and ſo accounts 3 or 4 years ſhort, as is evident to any one that ſhall add the particulars.

Ariſtobulus (Joſeph. l. 14. c. 18.) began to put on a Regal Diadem 471 years after the return from the Captivity, ſo likewiſe in his Wars of the Jews, l. 1. in Freculphus it is falſely read 475, in the preſent Greek and Latin Copies 480. But the 471 years are thus made out, viz.

From the firſt of Cyrus to the Æra Seleuci	264	years.
Thence to Jonathan's High Prieſthood	160	years.
To Simon's High Prieſthood	[a] 010	years.

Hyrcanus's	[c] 029	years.
In all	470
Ariſtobulus began in the year	471

Theſe laſt Summs put together ſtand thus:

From the firſt of Cyrus to the Æra Seleuci	264 years.
From the Æra Seleuci to the Maccabees	146 years.
The Duration of the Maccabees	126 years.

The Summs in the old Latin Joſephus are almoſt the ſame, and differ but in 3 years and 5 months.

The whole Chronology of Joſephus will be thus:

From Adam to the Death of Moſes	2993
To the Building of Solomons Temple	0552
To its Deſtruction by Nebuchadnezzer	0470
The Babyloniſh Captivity	0070
From the 1*ſt* of Cyrus to the 12*th* of Nero	0639
Summ total	4724
From the 12*th* of Nero to the 13*th* of Domitian	0028
In all	4752

And that Summ Joſephus accounted numero rotundo to be 5000 years. There are alſo in Joſephus many Summs of years which are certainly falſe, as Antiq. l. 7. c. ult. From David to Hyrcanus's opening of his Sepulchre, when Antiochus Beſieg'd Jeruſalem, are 1300 years: and ſo Freculphus alſo read it, T. 1. l. 3. c. 3. and yet this was but 884 years. Joſephus (againſt Apion, l. 2.) ſaith that the Jews had been a free People, under the Maccabees to Pompeys takeing Jeruſalem, for 120 years. Its plain that it ſhould be only 102 years: for it was in the year of Seleucus 230, which was 102 years after Judas's Defeating of Antiochus and Purging the Temple in the year of Seleucus 148.

AN

AN APPENDIX TO THE Two foregoing Diſcourſes.

BESIDES the reaſon already given, there are many other that make the Chronology of the Septuagint in the Ages after the Flood more probable than the Hebrew.

1*ſt*, It is not probable that the 7 firſt Patriarchs after the Flood, who liv'd 300 and 400 years, ſhould Begett at 30 or thereabouts, as the preſent Hebrew is: and yet the following Patriarchs, that did not live half ſo long, ſhould not Begett their firſt Born till double the Age: Terah at 70, Abraham at 87, Iſaac at 60, Jacob at 84, Levi, Chaath and Amram at about 60 each of them: for from the Birth of Levi to the Birth of Moſes the Son of Amram were about 180 years.

2*dly*, It is not probable that Noah, who liv'd 600 years before the Flood, ſhould ſee Ten Generations ſucceed each other after the Flood, and Live till the 58*th* year of Abraham: that Sem ſhould ſee Nine Generations after him ſucceſſively Dye, and Live many years after the Death of Abraham, the 9*th* Perſon Lineally deſcended from him; who yet Dy'd in a good old Age, an old Man, Gen 25, 8. that Sala ſhould outlive Phaleg, Ragau, Lamech, Nachor, Terah and Abraham for 6 Generations Lineally deſcended from him; and even the laſt of them Liv'd to be an old Man: that Heber ſhould outlive Phaleg, Ragau, Lamech, Nachor, Terah, Abraham and Iſaac 7 ſucceſſive Generations that deſcended from him, and yet Abraham and Iſaac ſhould both Live to be old Men, Gen. 25, 7. and 35, 29.

3*dly*, It is not poſſible that Joktan ſhould have 13 Sons when Phaleg was Born, at the Diviſion of Tongues, if Phaleg was Born at the 34*th* year of Heber, as it is in the Hebrew. And to fancy Phaleg firſt call'd ſo at the time of his Death is ridiculous, and expreſsly contrary to Joſephus. At the Diviſion of Tongues we are told that Mizraim, Chanaan, Sidon, Elam, Aſſur, Aram, &c. gave names to Countries, and yet they dy'd before Phaleg. Sem, Arphaxad, Salah, Heber, &c. according to the Hebrew, were alive when God inſtituted Circumciſion; and yet none of them order'd to be Circumcis'd, which was then the ſign of being in Covenant with God.

But however evident it may ſeem that the Septuagint are in this Period to be prefer'd to the Hebrew: yet I foreſee ſeveral things that may be objected, and which it may be neceſſary to conſider.

1*ſt*, 'Tis objected, that it is not probable that the Ante-diluvian Patriarchs, who Liv'd to be 900 years old, ſhould Begett their Firſt-born at 60 or 70 years old, as it is in the Hebrew and in Joſephus; and yet thoſe after the Flood, who did not Live half ſo long, ſhould not Begett their Firſt-born till about 130 years old.

It may be anſwer'd, that if we were ſure that theſe mention'd after the Flood were the Firſt-born, the Objection would be of great moment. But its much more probable that they were not. For Sem was younger than Japhet, Gen. 10, 27. and therefore Japhet takes the firſt place in the Genealogies, Gen. 10, 2. and 1 Chron. 1, 5. Arphaxad younger than Elam or Aſſur, 1 Chron. 1, 5. Gen. 10, 2, 6, 21. Phaleg younger than Joktan, who at Phalegs Birth had 13 Children, Gen. 10, 25, 26. &c. Abraham younger than Haran, Haran Born at the 7*th*, and Abraham at the 130*th* year of Terah, Gen. 11, 27, 28, 29, 32. Act. 7, 4. and Abraham Marryed Harans Daughter.

It's very probable that it was ſo alſo in the other Patriarchs (tho we cannot prove it from Scripture, (where the Hiſtory we have of them is very ſhort) becauſe God kept on this method afterwards. Iſaac was younger than Iſhmael, Jacob than Eſau, Judah than Reuben, of whom it is obſerv'd 1 Chron. 5, 1. Now the Sons of Reuben the Firſt-born of Iſrael. (for he was the Firſt-born, but becauſe he Defiled his Fathers Bed, his Birthright was given to the Sons of Joſeph, and the Genealogy is not to be reckon'd after the Birthright,) &c. St. Auſtin de Civ. Dei l. 15. c. 15. obſerves of the Patriarchs after the Flood, that magis credibile eſt non hic primogenitos commemoratos, ſed eos per quos ſucceſſionis ordo duceretur.

2*dly*, 'Tis objected, that the Jews were ſo exact in Tranſcribing the Law, that if ever the Hebrew had agreed with the Samaritan and Septuagint they would not have alter'd it.

I anſwer, that the words of Philo (in Euſeb. Præp. Ev. l. 8.) and of Tryphon (in Juſtin Mart.) are certainly to be underſtood of the Septuagint, and not of the Hebrew: and what Joſephus ſaith to the ſame purpoſe muſt either be underſtood of the Septuagint, or underſtood in ſo large a ſenſe, as that according to him the 70 Tranſlators were Prophets, and did not change or alter any thing. And indeed whatever is to be mett with in other Books to this purpoſe is taken from Deut. 4, 2. and 12, 32. and is to be underſtood of their not adding to or deminiſhing the precepts of the Law of Moſes: and it's evident that the [a] Verſion of the Septuagint, the [b] Targum of Onkelos, the Books of Irenæus, Euſebius's Chronicle and Rufinus had ſolemn adjurations added to them of not altering or changing any thing: and yet it's certain that they have been much corrupted. The Rabbies mention 13 places chang'd by the 70 Interpreters, and not one of them relates to the Chronology of the Patriarchs. The preſent Hebrew Bibles in 26 places leave a ſpace to ſhew that ſomething is wanting, which is ſupply'd by the 70. The Marginal readings differ from the Text in 848 places, and they are uſually accounted the trueſt. Ezra 7. wants one whole verſe which is in 1 Chron. 6. tho the Genealogy Neh. 7. is only a Tranſcript of that we find Eſra the 2*d*; yet it's very different from it. And in Pſ. 105. betwixt v. 13 and 14, is a whole verſe wanting, as appears by the Alphabet in that Pſalm, which was in the Text when the 70 Tranſlated it. So that its evident that there are Corruptions of the Hebrew Text of the Bible, and many of them ſince the time that the 70 Tranſlated it. And ſince it's evident that in the time of Origene, when he Compil'd his Hexapla, the Hebrew Text was the ſame as now, it's certain that theſe alterations were made in the Hebrew Text before that time, and as it ſeems moſt probable about the time of Adrian and Antoninus Pius. The Hebrew of the Bible was at and after the time of our Saviour a Learned Language, and not underſtood but by Scholars: the common Language of the Jews being at that time Syriack, intermixt with Chaldee: and the Jews admir'd how Chriſt underſtood Letters, having never Learn'd, John 7. 15. and, Luke the 10. 26, Chriſt ſaid to one of the Scribes (as being his peculiar skill) how readeſt thou? And there was no uſual reading of the Law in Hebrew in the Synagogues, without an Interpretation of it, which they read alſo. Now their Scholars and Bibles were generally deſtroy'd by the Perſecutions that came upon them in the Ages after the Apoſtles. Veſpaſian deſtroy'd 460 [c] Synogogues. And Trajan forbad the Jews the [d] reading of their Law. And in his time R. Ananias was Burnt and the [e] Book of the Law with him. R. Akiba had 2400 Scholars kill'd by Adrian, in the [f] Rebellion of Cochab: and R. Simeon the Son of Gamaliel had [g] 25000 Scholars kill'd, not one remaining. And the reading of the Law had been loſt had not R. Judah the Son of Baba with the expence of his own Life preſerv'd [h] five, by hiding of them. For Adrian made a Law by which it was Death to [i] Ordain Doctors and continue their Schools; and Learning was at the ſame time ſo much deſtroy'd at Babylon, that two of Juda's Scholars were ſent thither to inſtruct them: and the very reaſon why R. Juda collected the Traditions into the Book of the Miſna, was, that Learning was likely to be [k] loſt, and the Law made void. Moſt of the Moſaick rites ended with the Temple, and thereby the Book of the Law was leſs valu'd, and the Jewiſh Learning was become little elſe than a Multitude of idle Traditions. R. Judah took great care that, in all the Cities of the Land of Iſrael, there ſhould be ſuch as [l] taught Traditions. Alting. tells us that Tanta fuit Miſnæ auctoritas, etiam vivo Auctore, ut, ſepoſitis Codicibus propheticis, in hoc uno explicando & interpretando omnem operam collocaverint, So that here was a very fair opportunity for the few Scholars that were left to alter the Hebrew Text as they pleas'd, and for the few Hebrew Copies that were then exſtant to be corrupted. The Jews in their diſperſions generally acquainted themſelves with Greek, and in their Synagogues us'd Aquila's Verſion, and the Hebrew was in a great meaſure neglected. And to make all this plain I will give ſome inſtances of the Jews altering the Text and changing their Opinions, as to the matters I am ſpeaking of, after the Deſtruction of the Temple and before the Compoſing of the Miſna in the time of Antoninus Pius, or at leaſt before Origene Publiſh'd the Hebrew.

 or

1*ſt*, Gen. 2, 24. The Samaritan and Septuagint have the word Two, and Matth. 19, 5, 6. our Saviour preſſeth the force of that word upon the Phariſees: and they, tho they underſtood Hebrew, were not able to anſwer the force of the Argument; which ſheweth that it was then in the Hebrew, tho not now; and probably left out by R. Akiba, in the Age I am ſpeaking of, [m] who allow'd the Jews to *M*arry any Woman they ſaw fairer than their own Wife.

2*dly*, Pſalm. 22, 16. They pierc'd my Hands. So the Septuagint, Syriack, Arabick, Æthiopick and ſome few MSS. of the Hebrew. Aquila read it ſo alſo, for he Tranſlates it by a Verb: but the Rabbins, to avoid ſuch a plain Prophecy of our Saviours Crucifixion, alter the word of the Text and read as a Lyon.

3*dly*, Joſh. 15. v. 59. &c. There are two verſes in the 70 that ſhew Bethlehem to be in the Tribe of Juda, wanting in the Hebrew. St. Jerom, on Micah the 5th, thinks them Eraſed by the Jews, ſince the time of our Saviour, that it might not appear that Bethlehem was in the Tribe of Judah.

4*thly*, After the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and before the Seder Olam Rabbah was made by R. Joſe in the days of Adrian, the Jews ſo curtayl'd the Perſian Monarchy, as to make Daniels Weeks to begin with the Babyloniſh Captivity and end at the Deſtruction of the Temple. Joſephus knew of no ſuch Chronology in his time, and it could not be chance but a contrivance of the Jews after the 2*d* of Veſpaſian, that with the loſs of 200 years made Daniels 490 years exactly end at that time.

5*thly*, The great difference of the Opinions of the Jews before and after the Deſtruction of the Temple. Before that time the Verſion of the 70 highly eſteem'd by Philo and the Ægyptians (who kept a Feaſt yearly in memory of it) and by the Jews in all the Greek diſperſion, and at Nazareth, Luke 4. 16, 17, 18, 19. and by thoſe of Jeruſalem as appears by Joſephus, who magnifyeth it, and the account given by Ariſteas. In Adrians time the 70 were rail'd at [a] by the Jews, and the Jews kept a Faſt upon the day it was Tranſlated, viz. Tebeth the 8*th*, and made another Greek Verſion to oppoſe it, and deliver'd it as a Tradition that Darkneſs overſpread the World for 3 days after the Verſion of the 70 was made; and that it was as ill a day to the Jews as when the Golden Calfe was made.

6*thly*, Phaleg was Born at the Diviſion of Tongues ſaith Joſephus according to the Opinion of the Jews that then prevail'd; but the following Rabbins tell us, that he dyed at that time.

7*thly*, Melchiſedech was a *Chanaaniti*ſh King ſaith Joſephus, according to the Opinion of the Jews of that Age, and 'tis agreeable to St. Paul; but the following Jews fancy'd him to be Sem.

18*thly*, Daniel's Weeks according to Joſephus ended at the Deſolation of the Temple by Antiochus, which was accordiug to him 408 years from the firſt year of Darius: to which add the 70 years from the Burning of the Temple, and it comes very near to Daniels number: but the following Jews curtayl the Perſian Monarchy, and tho they begin the Weeks at the beginning of the Babyloniſh Captivity, yet they end them at the 2*d* of Veſpaſian.

Some will object, what end or deſign ſhould the Jews have in ſhortning the Period betwixt the Flood and the Birth of Abraham.

1*ſt*. It may be Anſwer'd, that it might be for the eaſier bringing down their pretended Traditions from Adam, Noah, &c. for ſo the Jews boaſt, in Seder Olam Rabbah, that ſeven Men meaſure the World, Adam, Methuſelah, Sem, Jacob, Amram, Ahaja, [b] Saloni-tes, and Elias who is ſtill alive: when as, according to the Chronology of the Samaritan, Septuagint and Joſephus, there muſt be added at leaſt Heber, Saruch, and Abraham, betwixt Sem and Jacob; and even ſo Saruch would be but 8 years old at the Death of Heber, and Jacob but 15 years old at the Death of Abraham: ſo that there would be need of two more Perſons to be inſerted for carrying on their Traditions, and ſo from Sem to Jacob would be as many Perſons as they made in all the World. 2*dly*, That it might be done to obviate the Prophecy of the Houſe of Elias, that Chriſt ſhould come at the beginning of the 4*th Millenary*. Now ſince the 4*th Millenary*, according to the Jews preſent account, ended A. D. 242. it's evident that this curtayling their Chronology was long before that time, in which they expected the Meſſiah. But when they found themſelves miſtaken alſo in the account, they took up that ſaying, [c] Curſed is he that numbreth the times. 3*dly*, That it might be done to anſwer the Argument that St. Paul preſs'd againſt the Hebrews, that Melchiſedechs Prieſthood was above Aarons: which we find urg'd alſo by Juſtin Martyr againſt Tryphon, by Tertullian and other early Chriſtians. For if Melchiſedech be Sem, then Aaron, who was Lineally deſcended from him, inherited his Prieſthood alſo, and ſo St. Paul's and the Chriſtian's Argument of a Superiour Prieſthood to the Aaronitical would be deſtroy'd. And here it's probable, that as the old Rabbies talk'd much of the Schools of Sem and Heber, and that Jacob Studyed in them: ſo at firſt they deſign'd Heber to be Melchiſedech, and cut off the years only of the Patriarchs after him; for the preſent Hebrew ſaith that he Liv'd after he Begat Phaleg 430 years, where the Samaritan and Septuagint agree in the number of 270 years: and, if after Heber we follow the preſent Hebrew, Heber Liv'd to the 105*th* year of Abraham. And to this agreeth what Epiphanius tells us in the Hereſy of the Melchiſedechians, that ſome Hebrew Copies, from the Birth of Sem to the time that Melchiſedech met Abraham in the 8*th* or 9*th* year of Abraham, have about 628 years, thus:

Sem	102	Ragau	32
Arphaxad	100	Saruch	30
Sala	100	Nachor	29
Heber	150	Terah	70
Phaleg	030	Abraham	85
		in all	628.

[a] Juſt. Mart. p. 294. 297. [b] Al. Silonites. [c] Lightfoot in Math. p. 25.

But

But this project not taking, they choſe rather yet to ſhorten this Period, and make Sem to be Melchiſedech. For ſince the Chaldee Paraphraſe ſaith that Rebecca conſulted the Schools of Sem, and the Rabbies added that Jacob Studyed in the Schools of Sem, they the eaſier concluded that Sem was alive in the time of Jacob. Now that this was contriv'd after the Deſtruction of the 2d Temple, appears in that, not only Joſephus tells us that he was a Chanaanitiſh King, but that it is impoſſible for the Samaritan or Septuagint, or ſuch as uſed either of thoſe Pentateuchs, to take him for Sem. Indeed all the early Fathers that mention him (Irenæus, Hippolytus, Theophilus, Euſebius, Hieronymus, Theodoret, &c.) agree with Joſephus in making him a Chanaanitiſh King; and St. Paul, when he wrote to the Hebrews, ſeems never to have heard of this fancy of making Melchiſedech to be Sem, but all along takes it as a thing agreed on, that he was not concern'd in the Genealogy of Aaron; and ſo according to the Laws of the Jews could have no right to the Prieſthood.

Some others of the Jews endeavour'd to avoid St. Paul's Argument, by making Melchiſedech an Angel: an Opinion that Origene and Didymus borrow'd from them, and which St. Ambroſe (de Fide l. 3. c. 5.) calls Judaicum Ludibriam.

But the ſubterfuge, which chiefly prevail'd among them, was the Curtayling the Period of the Poſt-diluvian Patriarchs, and making Sem to be Melchiſedech, and then Aaron Lineally deſcending from him to Inherit his Prieſthood alſo. And to make this probable, it may not be improper to obſerve what pains the Jews have taken to pervert the Hiſtory of Melchiſedech, and anſwer St. Pauls Argument taken from him.

1*ſt*, They tell us that Melchiſedech was a Baſtard; and, becauſe his Name was not inſerted in the Genealogies, therefore ſaid to be without Father &c. (See Epiphanius of the Hereſie of the Melchiſedechians §. 7.) But how this will agree with his being Sem, I do not underſtand.

2*dly*, They deny'd Melchiſedechs Prieſthood, and tranſlated כוהן Prince; contrary to the Opinions of the 70 Jews that Tranſlated it ἱερεὺς, to Eupolemus in Euſebius's Præp. Ev. l. 19. c. 17. to Philo the Jew in his Book of Abraham, to Joſephus in Antiq. l. 1. c. 18. to ſeveral Jews in Epiphan. T. 1. p. 473. and to St. Paul in his Epiſtle to them, c. 7.

3*dly*, They make Sem elder than Japhet, and to Inherit the Prieſthood by right of Primogeniture, contrary to the 70. Gen. 10, 21. and to Joſephus l. 1. c. 14. who calls Sem the 3*d* Son of Noah.

4*thly*, They expound the Text ſo as to make Melchiſedech pay Tithes to Abraham; contrary to the Septuagint, to Joſephus Antiq. l. 1. c. 18. to [a] Philo, and St. Paul, Hebr. 7. 2.

5*thly*, They corrupted the Text, Pſalm the 110, 4. where by adding a jod they apply it to David, contrary to the Septuagint, to St. Paul, Heb. 5, 6. and 7, 17. and to the Scribes and Phariſees who expounded that Pſalm of the Meſſiah, Matth. 22, 42, 43.

Upon all which accounts it may not ſeem improbable, that as Aquila made his Verſion of the Bible in the time of Adrian, to oppoſe Chriſtianity and depreciate the Verſion of the Septuagint, which was uſed by the Chriſtians: ſo the few Learned Jews that Liv'd about that time did agree to make ſome Alterations in the Hebrew alſo, in order to oppoſe the Chriſtians and magnifie their Traditions. And then the true Chronology of the Hebrew will be that preſerv'd by Joſephus in his Antiquities, which followeth the ſhorter Account before the Flood, and the longer after it.

Flavius Joſephus OF The Jewiſh Antiquities.

BOOK THE FIRST,

Containing the Hiſtory of 2230 Years from the Creation of the World.

CHAP. I.

The Introduction, ſetting forth the Summ and Scope of the whole Work.

THOSE People that take upon them the Office of Hiſtorians, do not all write, I perceive, with one and the ſame thought and deſign; but ſeveral Authors have their ſeveral Reaſons for the ſame Undertaking; and all thoſe Motives, at laſt, quite differing from one another. As there are ſome, for this purpoſe, that write out of an Affectation of Vain Glory and Popular Applauſe, and an Itch of Vanity to ſhew their Parts. There are ſome again, that make it their Buſineſs, to Cry up ſuch of the Actors in the Story they treat of, as they have a mind to Oblige; and ſpare for no Study and Pains to do them Honour and Juſtice. There are Others now, that having been actually Engaged in the Manage of the Tranſactions they Deliver, reckon themſelves bound in the very Nature of the thing it ſelf, to communicate what they know of the Matter before them. And there are yet others, in Fine, that enter upon this Province, out of a generous Impatience, to ſee Great and Glorious Atchievements buried in Silence, that ſo well deſerve to be made publick, for the common Benefit of Mankind.

Several Authors write out of ſeveral ends.

It is upon the two laſt of theſe four Conſiderations that I have now put Pen to Paper; for having been a Party my ſelf to the War betwixt Us and the Romans, a Witneſs to my Coſt, of what paſſed on both ſides in it, and conſequently Privy to the main Iſſue of that Conteſt; I look'd upon it as my duty to ſet forth the juſt matter of Fact, and vindicate the Truth from the Falſities and Corruptions, that had crept into the Story. And I had yet a further Encouragement to the Enterpriſe, in a confident Aſſurance that it would prove an Acceptable Work to the Greeks themſelves too; when they ſhould find the Antiquities of our Nation, and the Form of our Government, turn'd out of Hebrew into their own Tongue.

What mov'd Joſephus to the writing of this Hiſtory.

At my Firſt entrance upon the [a] Hiſtory of the War, I propoſed to ſpeak of the Original of the Jews; their various Fortunes; and their excellent Law-giver, that train'd them up to the Love and Practice of ſo much Piety and Virtue; to give an account of their Wars for ſo many Ages; and eſpecially that of the Laſt, which they were forced, how unwillingly ſoever, to maintain againſt the Romans. But upon ſecond thoughts, finding the Subject too large and copious for my preſent purpoſe, I choſe rather to make another diſpoſition of the matter, and to divide it.

After ſome ſhort time ſpent upon the Eſſay, it far'd with me in this, as it does commonly with other People that have great Deſigns in their Heads: the proſpect of ſo vaſt and voluminous a Tract of Hiſtory, and that in a Forreign Language too, made me ſo heavy and dead-hearted, that it almoſt repented me of my purpoſe. But betwixt the Importunities of Men, Curious to know the Particulars of that Famous Revolution, to go forward with what I had begun; and the encouragements of Epaphroditus above the reſt, who was a Paſſionate lover of all ſorts of Polite Learning, and of Hiſtory particularly, being a Perſon that had executed ſeveral eminent Commiſſions, and ſtood all Fortunes with an immoveable Firmneſs and Dignity of mind, and without the leaſt blemiſh to his virtue: betwixt the one and the other I was prevail'd upon, partly out of Obedience and Reſpect to the advice and authority of ſo Illuſtrious a Patron and Benefactor to all well-willers to the Publick; and partly out of meer ſhame rather to lye at my eaſe, Droning and Idle, than undergoe the pains of perfecting ſo Glorious a Work. Theſe circumſtances, I ſay, prevailed upon me to proſecute my firſt Project: And I did it the more chearfully, conſidering how freely our Anceſtors imparted ſuch matters to Strangers, and how affectionately inquiſitive ſeveral of the Greeks themſelves had been of our Affairs. We read of King Ptolemy the ſecond (a Prince that purchaſed and encouraged Books and Arts at any rate) how Solicitous he was to get our Laws, Cuſtoms, and wayes of Living Tranſlated into Greek: and Eleazar the High Prieſt (a Perſon not inferior to any other of the Holy Order) did not think fit to deny him that ſatisfaction; which undoubtedly he would have done, if we had not been taught and warranted by the example of our Forefathers, not to reſerve or conceal any thing that the World may be the better for. Now I thought it might very well become me to Conform to the Practice and Preſident of our High-Prieſt, not doubting, over and above, but that the ſame Virtuous inclinations to the love of Learning, that were then ſo Remarkable in Ptolemy, might at this time be found alſo in others. Let it not be underſtood that this Great King had all the Copies given him entire; but only ſuch of them as reſpect our Laws; and were delivered to him at Alexandria by the Interpreters that were ſent with them thither, to that purpoſe. For theſe Sacred Writings muſt needs contain an infinite diverſity of things; being effectually a Hiſtory of five Thouſand years; full of ſurprizing Accidents, various chances of War, mighty Atchievements of Famous Commanders, ſtrange turns of State, and publick Revolutions in abundance.

A Hiſtory of 5000 Years.

But upon the main, there is one thing that the Reader will take notice of in a more particular manner upon the peruſal of this Hiſtory; which is, that all things ſucceed happily (even beyond Belief) to thoſe that reſign themſelves to the good pleaſure of Allmighty God, and keep his Commandments; Beſide tranſcendent Bleſſings promiſed them for a Reward: whereas the Diſobedient, on the other hand, inſtead of proſpering in their ways, how fair and plauſible ſoever, fall into all ſorts of miſery and diſtreſs; and without end, or remedy. Wherefore I do moſt heartily Exhort and Adviſe the Reader of theſe Papers, to lead his Life in conformity to the will of God, and carefully to obſerve and attend to what Moſes our Law-giver ſays of the Divine Nature; the agreement of all his works, one with another; and how clear his whole Narration is from the Levity of thoſe fictions that we meet with in other Relations. Not but that, conſidering the circumſtances of Time and Antiquity, he might have impos'd upon us what he would, without danger of contradiction: for our ſtory begins above 2000 Years before the Fables of the Poets were ever heard of; and the Pagans Themſelves never had the Face to look ſo far backward, either for the Date of their Gods, the Actions of their Heroes, or the Ordinances of their Law-givers. I ſhall ſpeak of this in what follows, and (according to my Promiſe) of every thing in it's proper place, without Adding or Diminiſhing.

The Perfection of Moſes's Law.

The Antiquity of the Story.

But in regard however that the credit of the whole ſtory depends in a great meaſure upon the Authority of what Moſes in his wiſdom thought fit to deliver, ſomewhat ought to be ſaid Previouſly of Moſes himſelf, to prevent Exceptions and Cavils; for people will be apt to wonder at the ſight of a Book, that pretends only to Fact and Hiſtory in the Title, and Launches out into ſo many Digreſſions upon Natural Philoſophy in the Text. Be it known therefore that this excellent Perſon pronounces it as a thing abſolutely neceſſary for any man that would live Virtuouſly himſelf, or preſcribe Laws to others, to apply his mind in the firſt place to the knowledge of God; and then upon a due conſideration of his Works, ſo far as in him lies, to follow and imitate that perfect Model. Without this care and intention, 'tis impoſſible for a Law-giver to anſwer the Character of his Profeſſion, neither can he make other people the better for his Writings, without teaching them in the firſt place, that God is the Father and Lord of all things; that nothing is hid from his ſight; that he Bleſſeth thoſe that ſerve him, and Puniſheth thoſe that wander from the right way. This was Moſes's method of training up his People. He did not begin after the manner of other Rulers, with proviſion for Liberty and Property; Stipulations, Contracts, and the like; but with a Lecture upon the power of God in the Creation of the World, and the Excellency of Man above other earthly Creatures. And when he had once poſſeſſed them with a Reverence for Piety, they took all other laudable impreſſions in courſe. As for thoſe Lawgivers that have only Fabulous Traditions for their Pattern and their Guide, they take a freedom to Impute to their Gods the Lewdneſs of the moſt infamous of Men, and ſo to Authorize and Encourage others in all manner of Wickedneſs after their Example. But our Legiſlator, having firſt ſet forth that God is Virtue and Purity it ſelf; he tells us afterward that Men ſhould do all they can to make themſelves partakers of the Holineſs (in ſome degree at leaſt) of that Divine Original; concluding the Caution with a ſevere Sentence upon thoſe that will neither Believe nor Underſtand theſe Truths.

Whoever examines this Work according to theſe meaſures (as I wiſh every Reader may) will find nothing in it unreaſonable, nor I hope Derogatory to God's Majeſty and Goodneſs. He will ſee every thing proportion'd to the matters that are there handled by our Law-giver: ſome things only touch'd upon, or hinted, as by the by; others illuſtrated by proper Allegories; and for thoſe paſſages that we are moſt concern'd to have a perfect underſtanding of, they are as plain and clear as words can make them. It would require a deep ſpeculation now, to enter into the particular reaſons of theſe different ways of writing; but if God gives me Life to finiſh what I am now upon, I purpoſe to make that my next buſineſs: But for the preſent, I ſhall proceed to my Hiſtory, beginning with what Moſes tells us concerning the Creation of the World, as we find it in Holy Writ.

The Creation of the World in ſix Dayes, Geneſis Chap. 1.

IN the Beginning God Created the Heaven and the Earth; but the Earth was not as yet viſible, by reaſon of a thick darkneſs that cover'd it. After this the Spirit of God moving over it, God commanded that there ſhould be Light; which no ſooner appear'd, but upon the view of the Maſs he ſeparated the Light from the Darkneſs; and the Darkneſs he called Night, and the Light, Day. The beginning of the Day he called Morning, and the end of it (or the time of Reſt) Evening: And theſe two terms compleated the firſt Day. [a] Moſes renders it one day, or a day; and not the firſt day, which I could give a reaſon for at preſent; but having promiſed an Explanation of theſe Niceties in a Tract by it ſelf, I lye under ſome ſort of neceſſity to refer thoſe Notes to their proper time and place.

The firſt Day.

On the ſecond Day, God made the Heaven or the Firmament; gave it the higheſt place of the Univerſe; divided it from the reſt; encompaſs'd it, as it were with Chryſtal; and temper'd the Air with ſo gentle a mixture of Humidity, as might naturally reſolve into ſhowers, for the watering and refreſhing of the Earth, to make it fruitful.

The ſecond Day.

On the third Day God ſettled the Earth, ſurrounding it with the Sea; and the ſame day it brought forth Plants with their Seeds, after their reſpective kinds.

The third Day.

On the fourth Day, he placed the Sun, the Moon, and the other Stars for an Ornament in the Heavens; Regulating their Motions, and their Courſes, in ſuch a manner, as to mark out Times and Seaſons.

The fourth Day.

On the fifth Day, he Created the Fiſh that ſwim in the Water, and the Birds that fly in the Air, and ſent them fourth in Couples that they might Encreaſe and Multiply, every Creature according to its Kind.

The fifth Day.

On the ſixth Day, God Created all ſorts of Four-footed Beaſts, Male and Female; and the ſame day alſo he made Man: ſo that according to Moſes, in ſix Days God made the World, and all that is therein.

The ſixth Day.

God Reſted on the ſeventh Day, and ceaſed from his Labours. This is the reaſon that we do no Work upon that day; but give it the name of Sabbath, which, in the Hebrew, betokens Reſt.

The ſeventh Day or Sabbath: and why ſo call'd, Gen. 2.

Moſes, after the ſeventh Day, employ'd his thoughts upon the Works and Offices of Nature: Beginning with the Creation of Man, after this manner, God (ſays he) Formed Man of the Duſt of the Ground; and Breathed into him the Breath of Life: ſo that he became a Living Soul. He ſays further, that this Man was call'd Adam, which in Hebrew is [b] Red; becauſe the Earth that he was made of, in the Virginal perfection of it, is of that Colour.

The forming of Man: and why call'd Adam.

After this, God commanded all Living Creatures, Male and Female, to appear before Adam; who called them all by their Names: and the Names he gave them at that time they bear to this day.

Adam gives Names to all Living Creatures.

Adam was all this while alone, and uneaſy in that condition, for want of a ſuitable Companion; there being none as yet provided for him, when all the reſt of the Creatures enjoyed themſelves in Pairs: ſo that falling into a ſound ſleep, God took a Rib out of him and made a Woman of it: which he no ſooner ſaw afterward, but he knew, and acknowledged her to be part of himſelf. Now in the Hebrew they call a Woman, Iſſa; but this Woman was call'd [a] Eva; that is to ſay, the Mother of all Living.

The forming of Woman: and why call'd Eve.

Moſes ſays further alſo, that God Planted to the Eaſtward a moſt delicious Garden, and ſtor'd it with all ſorts of Fruit-Trees: and among the reſt, the Tree of Life, and the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil.

The Planting of Paradiſe.

In this Garden he placed Adam, and Eve, and he committed the keeping and dreſſing of it to their Care. It was watered, and encompaſſed by a Large River that divided it ſelf into four Branches. The name of the firſt is [b] Piſon, (which ſignifies Fullneſs or Inundation) the Greeks call it Ganges; and it takes its courſe into India, and ſo emptyes it ſelf into the Sea. The ſecond and the third, are Euphrates; the former in our Tongue, is Phora, (that is to ſay, Diſperſion, or a Flower) the other we call Diglath (which is as much as Narrow, and Rapid) and theſe two diſcharge themſelves into the Red Sea. The name of the fourth is [c] Gihon, which divides Ægypt. The Greeks call it Nile, and it ſignifies in our Language, Coming from the Eaſt.

Adam and Eve put into it.

The four Rivers of Paradiſe.

Now Adam and Eve had liberty to eat of all the Fruits of the Garden, ſave only that of the Tree of Knowledge; which God commanded them not to Taſt of, upon pain of Death. There was, as yet, a perfect agreement among all the Creatures; and the Serpent liv'd in a kind of Familiarity with Adam and Eve; but out of an Envy to the Bleſſed ſtate of their condition, in caſe of Obedience to Gods command; and knowing full well on the other hand, the miſery that would befall them in caſe of their diſobedience; he Tempted the Woman to a Taſt of the Forbidden Fruit; and, to enflame her curioſity, told her that it had a ſecret virtue, to endue her, upon the eating of it, with the Knowledge of Good and Evil, and to make her as happy as God himſelf. Thus the Serpent ſeduc'd the Woman into a violation of God's command; and the Woman was ſo well pleas'd with the Taſt of the Fruit, that ſhe did not only eat of it her ſelf, but recommended it to her Husband too, who yielded to her perſwaſion. By this time they perceived that they were both Naked; (the virtue of this Fruit having open'd their underſtanding) and looking about for a Covering, they Wove Fig-Leaves together to hide their Shame; accounting themſelves happier than before, by this New Diſcovery of what they wanted.

The Fall of Adam and Eve.

After this, God enter'd into the Garden, when Adam, who had free acceſs to him before his Tranſgreſſion, out of a Conſcience of his Sin, withdrew, and hid himſelf. So God call'd to Adam, and asked him, How it came to paſs, that He, that had taken ſo much delight but lately, to preſent himſelf before his Maker, ſhould now run away from him in ſuch a Confuſion? Adam's Guilt left him not one word to ſay for himſelf; and ſo God went on ſpeaking to him after this manner. 'There was not any thing that your Heart could 'deſire, to make your Life Free, Eaſy, Pleaſant, and Happy, that I had not provided 'for you ready to your hand; both for uſe and delight; and without any Care or La'bour on your part; or the inconveniencies of Old Age to interrupt your enjoyments. 'But ſince you have deſpiſed my Commands, and that your Conſcience leaves you no'thing to ſay for your ſelf, your Days ſhall be ſhortned. Adam Palliated the matter as well as he could; Begg'd Pardon; and lay'd the blame upon his Wife: it was ſhe that miſled him, he ſaid; and the Woman caſt it upon the Serpent. Whereupon, as a puniſhment for Adam's ſuffering his Wife to impoſe upon him, God Curſed the Ground, declaring, that from that time forward, it ſhould never bring forth Fruit more; but what Men ſhould extort from it by Labour, and the Sweat of their Brows: and that it ſhould not alwaies anſwer their expectations neither. As for Eve's being firſt Corrupted by the Serpent, and afterward drawing Adam into the ſame ſnare, Her ſentence was, in Sorrow to bring forth Children: and for the puniſhment of the Serpents malice, God took from him the Benefit of Speech; put Venom under his Tongue; Condemn'd him to the loſs of his Feet, and to Crawl upon his Belly; declared him the enemy of Man-kind: and commanded Eve alſo to tread upon his Head, both as the Fountain of all our Woes, and as the part where he moſt eaſily receives a mortal wound. After the Pronouncing of theſe Penalties, God turn'd Adam and Eve out of the Garden.

CHAP. III.

The Hiſtory of Cain and Abel. Cain Murders his Brother. God calls him to Account, ſets a mark upon him, and pronounces a Curſe againſt him for it. Cain was the Inventor of Weights and Meaſures. Enoch built the firſt City. Jubal was the Inventor of Muſick. Tubalcain, of Braſs and Iron-work. Adam liv'd 930 Years. Seth and his Sons give themſelves to Aſtronomy. Seth's Pillars.

ADAM and Eve had two Sons; the Name of the Elder was [a] Cain, which by Interpretation, is Poſſeſſion, or Acquiſition. The ſecond was Abel which ſignifies Affliction, or Mourning. They had Daughters alſo. The two Brothers were of quite different humours. Abel was a Righteous Man and a keeper of Sheep, he led a virtuous Life, and had God in his Eye, what ever he ſay'd or did: Cain, on the contrary, was a wicked, graceleſs Perſon; and the Inventor of Tillage. He governed himſelf wholly by his Intereſt; and finally, upon the following account, he Murder'd his own Brother. The two Brethren were agreed upon a Sacrifice to the Lord. Cain brought an Offering of the Fruits of the Ground; Abel's Offering was of the Milk and Firſtlings of his Flock. The [b] latter was the more acceptable to God of the two, being only the pure Bounty and Production of Nature, whereas the other looked liker an oblation extorted by Avarice, Induſtry, and Force, then a Homage of good will. Cain took it ſo heinouſly to have his younger Brother prefer'd before him, that he fell upon him, and ſlew him, and Buryed the Body in hopes of concealing the Murder. God, that knew what had paſſed, came upon this to Cain; enquired after his Brother, and what was become of him, for he had not been ſeen of ſeveral dayes laſt paſt, whereas they two uſed to be conſtantly together. This queſtion put Cain, at firſt to a little ſtand, till upon recollection, he gave for anſwer, that he had not ſeen his Brother for a long time himſelf neither, and could not imagine what ſhould be the reaſon of it. Upon this pretence, the matter was ſtill laid cloſer to him; to which he had the Inſolence to reply, that he was none of his Brother's Keeper, nor of his Council. Upon this Expoſtulation and Affront, God was pleaſed to charge him downright with his Brother's Murder; telling him how wonderful a thing it was, that he ſhould not be able to give any account of his Brother, when he himſelf had Killed him. The Fact was not to be denyed, but yet upon Cain's Sacrifice and Submiſſion, God was ſo far Pacified, as to remit the immediate Juſtice of Blood for Blood; but he was pleaſed however to Pronounce him and his Poſterity Accurſed to the Seventh Generation; and to Baniſh him and his Wife out of the Land into the wide world. Cain was not a little terrified at this Sentence, for fear of what Miſchief might befal him in his wandrings; but to ſecure him from any danger that way, either from Man or Beaſt, God ſet a Mark upon him to know him by, and ſo bid him be gon.

Cain Accurſed and Stigmatized.

Cain and his Wife departed accordingly, and after a tedious Travel through ſeveral Countries, they took up at length at Naïs, where they ſettled their Abode, and had divers Children; but ſo far was Cain from mending upon his Affliction, that he went rather from bad to worſe; abandoning himſelf to his Luſts and all manner of outrage, without any regard to common Juſtice. He enriched himſelf by Rapine and Violence; and made choice of the moſt profligate of Monſters for his Companions; inſtructing them in the very myſtery of their own profeſſion. He corrupted the ſimplicity and plain dealing of former times, with a Novel invention of Weights and Meaſures, and exchanged the Innocence of that Primitive Generoſity and Candour for the new Tricks of policy and craft. He was the firſt that invaded the common Liberties of Man-kind, by Bounds and Encloſures: The firſt that built a City, Fortified and Peopled it, which City was called [c] Enos, after the name of his eldeſt Son.

Jubal. ſelf with a Paſtoral Life and Buſineſs. Jubal, his Brother, gave up his mind to Muſick: inſomuch that the Pſaltery and Harp were of his Invention. By his Tubalcain. Wife Zillah, he had [a] Tubalcain, a valiant Captain, and a great Warriour, who by his Military Reputation was enabled to live both in Pleaſure and Plenty. He was the firſt that wrought in Braſs and Iron, and had a Daughter whoſe name was Naamah. As for Lamech, that ſaw as far as any man into the courſe and methods of Divine Juſtice, he could not but find himſelf concerned in the proſpect of that dreadful Judgment that threatned the whole Family for the Murder of Abel, and under that apprehenſion he brake the matter to his two Wives.

While Adam was yet living, the Curſed Race of Cain grew every day more wicked then other, and made it their glory, not only to imitate the fouleſt examples of paſt Times, but alſo to outdo them. Their delight was in War and Spoil, or where any of them happened to ſcape the guilt of Blood, they took it out in Pride, Avarice, or ſomething elſe as bad.

But to return to my Text: after the Murder of Abel and the Baniſhment of Cain, Adam, that was now two hundred and thirty years of Age, out of an earneſt deſire of Adam's Age 930 Years. Iſſue, applyed himſelf to the Peopling of the World. He lived ſeven Hundred years more after this, and ſo he Dy'd, leaving many Children behind him, and one among the reſt that he called Seth. It would be tedious to go through the Family, and nothing to my purpoſe, ſo that I ſhall only have occaſion to mention Seth. This Seth was brought up under the Tuition of his Father, and ſo ſoon as ever he was able to diſtinguiſh betwixt Good and Evil, he delivered himſelf up wholly to the ſtudy of Seth and his Sons. Virtue. He proved a wonderful Man, and his Children were the Lively Images of ſo excellent a Father: They were all of them well Bred, and well diſpoſed. They lived happily and peaceably, with a reſpect to the publick, and in a perfect agreement one with another. Theſe were the firſt that made their obſervations upon the motions of the Heavens, the courſes and influences of the Stars; and having been foretold Seth's Pillars. by Adam of an Univerſal Deluge, and Conflagration to come, they erected two Pillars, one of Brick and the other of Stone, which they were ſure would be Proof, one or the other of them, againſt either Fire or Water. Upon theſe Pillars they Engraved the Memorials of their Diſcoveries and Inventions, there to remain for the benefit of Ages to come; and leaſt the Tradition of the Science it ſelf ſhould be loſt for want of a Record. This they did, and their foreſight and providence was not in vain, for the ſtone Pillar is yet to be ſeen in [b] Syria to this very day.

Gen. 5. 6. FOR ſeven Generations, Men lived in the exerciſe of virtue, and in the Love and Fear of one God the Lord of all things; but from thence forward they Degenerated from the ways of their Fathers, leading their Lives without any reverence or regard either to Religious Dutys, or Humane Juſtice; and taking twice as much pains to out-ſtrip others in Wickedneſs, as they had formerly done to make themſelves eminent for Goodneſs. This abominable Impiety drew down the wrath of Heaven upon them, and the [c] Angels of God mixing with the Women begot an inſolent Race, not much unlike that of the Gyants in the Greek Fables, overbearing right with power. [d] Noah took theſe impious extravagancies ſo to heart, that after ſeveral tryals, both by his Councel and Authority, to bring them to a Reformation of their Lives and an amendment of their Manners, and no good to be done at laſt upon a Generation ſo incorrigibly obſtinate, and abandon'd to their Luſts, finding himſelf and Family in manifeſt danger of ſome mortal violence for his good will; he departed out of the Land himſelf and all his People. This good Man was highly in the favour of the Lord for his integrity; but the Corruption and Iniquity of the Age cry'd out ſo loud to Heaven for vengeance, that God reſolved within himſelf, utterly to deſtroy the preſent Generation of Mankind, and to ſupply another and a better Race of Men in their ſtead: but ſo as to [a] ſhorten the term of a Man's Life from what it was before, and to bring it within the compaſs of 120 Years. The Earth after this was covered with Water, and the dry Land turned effectually into a Sea, which ſwallowed up all fleſh Living, Noah alone excepted, who ſcap'd the Univerſal Deluge by making uſe of the means which God had expreſly directed and appointed him for his preſervation: that is to ſay, God having precaution'd him of this terrible Judgment to come, ordered him to build an [b] Ark of four Stories, the Length of it three hundred Cubits, the Breadth fifty, and the Height of it thirty; which he did accordingly, and ſo went into it with his Wife and Children, and their Wives; taking along with him of all Living Creatures by two and two, in pairs, Male and Female, and of ſome [c] ſeven Couples for the conſervation of the Kind; having firſt lay'd in all neceſſary Proviſions for himſelf and them. His order was to take care that the Roof, and the Sides of it might be made Tight and Firm againſt Wind and Weather: which was alſo done, and by this contrivance He and his Family were ſav'd. Now Noah was the tenth in Succeſſion by a direct line from Adam, being the Son of Lamech, Lamech of Methuſelah, Methuſelah of Enoch, Enoch of Jared, Jared of Mahalaleel (who had divers Brothers) Mahalaleel of Cain, Cain of Enos, Enos of Seth, and Seth the Son of Adam.

Noah's Ark.

Noah's Genealogy.

This Deluge happen'd in the ſecond Month, which the Macedonians call Dius, the Hebrews Marſuane, according to the Ægyptian diviſion of the Year. Moſes in his Computation makes Niſan, which is Xanthicus, the firſt Month, becauſe it was in this that he brought the Iſraelites out of Ægypt, and he obſerves the ſame account in the dating of all things that concern the Worſhip of God. But for the matter of Fairs and Markets, Trade and Civil Buſineſs, he left the account as he found it, without making any alteration. Noah was ſix Hundred Years of Age at the time of this Inundation. Moſes reckons that the firſt fall of Rain toward the Drowning of the World, began on the 27th day of the Month before ſaid, and in the Year of the World 2256. This is according to the Calculation of Holy Writ, which gives a very exact account of the Birth and Death of the famous Men of thoſe times.

The time of the Deluge.

Adam was 930 Years old when he Dy'd, and 230 when he begot Seth. Seth was 105 when he begot Enoch, and he departed this Life at the Age of 905. leaving all to the care of his Son Cainan, whom he had Begotten in the 90th year of his Age, and he Lived to the Age of 910. Cainan in the year of his Age 910, was ſucceeded by his Son Mahalaleel whom he begot at 170. This Mahalaleel dyed at 895, and he left his Son Jared to ſucceed him, whom he Begot at the Age of 162, and at 969 he Departed this Life. His Son Enoch came next, who was Born when his Father was 162 years old, and after 365 Years he went to God and was no more ſeen, which is the reaſon that there is no Record extant of what became of him. Methuſalem was Born to Enoch in the 165 Year of his Age, and at the Age of 187 he had a Son Born which he called Lamech, to whom he delivered up the Government that he had held for 969 Years. But when Lamech had been 707 Years in the exerciſe of that Power, he transfered his Commiſſion to his Son Noah who was Born to Lamech in the 182 Year of his Age; and was 950 Years in the Adminiſtration. So that putting all theſe together, computing upon Noah's Age of 600 Years at the time of the Deluge, it amounts to the juſt number of 2256. But we are not ſo much to conſider the end of theſe men, as the Birth of them; for they lived to ſee many Generations out of their own Loyns.

The Line of the Patriarchs.

The time being now come, and the ſignal given, God commanded the Clouds to pour forth their waters, which they did in a violent Rain of forty Days Continuance; till they were 15 Cubits deep above the higheſt parts of the Earth, and no place left for any poſſibility of Safety or Retreat. The waters after this began by little and little to abate, and in 150 dayes more, on the 27th day of the ſeventh Month, the Ark was left aground upon the top of a certain Mountain in Armenia. Noah perceiving this, open'd a Window, and ſeeing Land here and there about him, found his Heart a little more at eaſe, in hopes that the worſt was now paſt. The water ſtill ſhrinking more and more, Noah ſent out a Raven ſome few dayes after, to learn the ſtate of the Deluge in other places, and whether or no he might ſafely venture himſelf upon the Ground; but the Raven finding all in a Flood ſtill, returned to the Ark. Whereupon Noah reſpited his enquiry for ſeven days, and then ſent out a Dove for diſcovery what condition things were in abroad, which ſoon after came back to him again all dirty, and with an Olive-Branch in her mouth, giving to underſtand that the Danger was now over. So that at the end of ſeven days more, he turn'd out all the Creatures, went forth Himſelf with his Wife and Children; and after Sacrificing to the Lord, made Merry and Rejoyced with his Family. The [a] Armenians called this place [b] Apobaterion, or the place of Deſcent. We read of this Deluge and the Ark, in all the Writers of Barbarian Hiſtories, as in Beroſus the Chaldæan for one, who, ſpeaking of this Flood, writes to this effect. They ſay that there are ſome remainders of this Veſſel to be ſeen upon the Mountains of the Cordyæans in Armenia to this very Day, and that ſeveral People living upon the place ſcrape the Pitch off from the Planks as a Rarity, and carry it about them for an Amulett. Hieronymus the Ægyptian in his Phœnicean Antiquities, Mnaſeas and a great many others ſay ſomewhat of this matter too: But Nicolaus of Damaſcus in v. 96. of his Hiſtory, ſpeaks to this purpoſe. In the Province of [c] Minyas in Armenia, there is a High Mountain called [d] Baris, to which Place there fled a great many People, as the ſtory goes, in the time of a Deluge for Sanctuary. There is a Tradition alſo, of a certain Man in a Veſſel that ſtruck upon the top of this Mountain, and that ſeveral pieces of the Timber were to be ſeen there a long time after. This perhaps might be the Man that Moſes makes mention of.

Noah goes out himſelf, and Sacrifices.

See Beroſus, Nicolaus Damaſcenus &c. of this Ark and Deluge.

Now Noah in a perſuaſion that God had doom'd Mankind to Deſtruction, lay under a mortal dread, for fear of the ſame Judgment over again; and effectually that it would end in an Anniverſary Inundation: So that he preſented himſelf before the Lord with Sacrifices and Prayers, 'Humbly beſeeching God in Mercy, to preſerve the order 'of the World in its firſt Frame: to Puniſh the Guilty, and ſpare the Lives of the In-'nocent, and not to proceed with Rigour for the wickedneſs of ſome particulars, to 'the Deſtruction of the whole; for otherwiſe, the Survivors of this Calamity would 'be more wretched than thoſe that were waſhed away in a common Ruin: if after 'having ſuffer'd horror of thought, and the terror of ſo diſmal a Spectacle, they 'ſhould only be delivered from one Calamity to be Confounded by another. Where-'fore he earneſtly beſought God to receive his Prayers, and his Sacrifice; to turn away 'his wrath from the Earth, and the Inhabitants thereof, that they might Till it, and 'reap the Fruits of his Bounty as formerly; build Cities, and entertain themſelves 'with all the Comforts and Conveniences they enjoyed before the Flood. He Pray'd alſo for Length of Days to Himſelf and his Poſterity; and that the Children to come might live up to the Age of their Anceſtors.

Noahs Prayer.

The Piety and Righteouſneſs of the Man prevail'd ſo far with Allmighty God, that he hearkened to his requeſt, and told him that it was the wickedneſs of the World which drew that Judgment upon their own Heads, and that he himſelf was not in truth the Author of it, for he would never have given them Life at firſt, with a deſign, or deſire to take it away again; and it were much better not to give it at all, then to give only to take again: But ſays he, they have forced me upon a Vengeance by a violation of all the Holy Duties they owe me; and yet to ſhew you that I am not Inexorable, eſpecially upon your Mediation, I promiſe you that I will never deal with Sinners ſo ſeverely again for the future. And therefore what Storms and Tempeſts ſoever may be raiſed, ſet your Heart at reſt, for you are out of danger of another Deluge. One thing I poſitively require and command, [e] keep your hands clear of Human Blood, and puniſh Murder with the uttermoſt ſeverity wherever you find it. As for other Creatures, whether they Live upon the Earth, or Swim in the Water, or Fly in the Air, you are the Lords and Maſters of them, and may diſpoſe of them as you think fit, ſaving only as to the Blood, for in the Blood is the Life of the Creature; and for your Security now, that the Arrows of my diſpleaſure ſhall never ſtrike mankind again in the like dreadful manner, I will ſet my Bow in the Air for a Token of my Covenant. Now the Rainbow with them is taken for God's Bow. After theſe Commands and Promiſes God departed.

ordinary term of a Mans life before the Deluge, and the narrow ſcantling we find it reduced to at this day, be made uſe of as an Argument to bring the Credit of the Tradition in queſtion, as if becauſe we our ſelves are Short-Liv'd, our Anceſtors muſt needs have been ſo too. In the Infancy of the World, when Men liv'd in obedience to their Maker, it pleaſed Allmighty God to beſtow the Bleſſing of [a] long Life upon the work of his own hands: Beſide that the very way of Eating and Living did very much conduce to that end: over and above, that Providence found it neceſſary for the Study and Advancement of Virtue, and for the improvement of Geometry and Aſtronomy, which required at leaſt ſix hundred Years (according to the Computation of the Great Year) for the making and perfecting of Obſervations. I have for my Juſtification, all the great Antiquaries that ever meddled in Hiſtory, either Greek or Barbarian; as Manetho in his Ægyptian Chronicle; Beroſus in his Hiſtory of Chaldæa; [b] Mochus, Heſtiæus; Hieronymus the Ægyptian; that have given us the ſtory of Phœnicia: And ſo for Heſiod, Hecatæus, Hellanicus, Acuſilaus, Ephorus, and Nicolaus, they do all agree, that in the Primitive ſtate of the World, ſome men liv'd to the Age even of a Thouſand Years. NOAH had three Sons, Shem, Japheth, and Ham, who were Born about a hundred years before the Flood. Theſe were the firſt that came down from the Mountains to ſettle their Habitation in the Plains, and drew others after them by their Example, who till then had not the heart to quit the Hills for fear of a ſecond Deluge. They gave the Name of [c] Shinar to the firſt place they Planted in. But God in his Wiſdom ordered them to ſpread and divide themſelves into Colonies, as the more proper method both for Peopling the World, and preſerving Men in peace one with another: And to the end beſides, that they might take their Poſſeſſions at large, and enjoy more abundantly the Fruits of the Earth. Now theſe People being an Ignorant and a Stubborn Generation, they never heeded the Divine appointment, but continued ſtill in the ſame place, till they were overtaken by a Judgment from Heaven that gave them the ſight of their Fault in their Puniſhment. They came in Proceſs of time to be Numerous and ſtrong; and God once again Admoniſhed and directed them as before, to diſperſe themſelves into ſeveral Plantations, but they went on nevertheleſs in their Diſobedience, not only forgeting the Author of all the Bleſſings and good things they were made partakers of, but aſſuming to themſelves the Glory of their ſucceſſes in all the greatneſs they had acquired, and, which is worſt of all yet, interpreting the Advice of ſeparating themſelves to be rather a ſnare then a favour, and a meer trick of common Policy, firſt to diſunite and weaken them, and then to bring them under the Yoke of an Oppreſſion. Noah's three Sons, Gen. 10. and 11. They Plant in Senaar.

The chief Incendiary that animated the People to this inſolent contempt of God, was [d] Nimrod, the Nephew of Ham, who was the Son of Noah, a Man fierce and valiant, but of ſo extravagant a Vanity, that he would be often valuing himſelf upon it, that he had no obligation at all to the goodneſs of God for the dignity of his preſent ſtate and Reputation, but to the power of his own Courage and Virtue. This was his way of inſinuating himſelf into a Tyranny, not doubting but the People might be eaſily brought to Apoſtatize from God, if they could but firſt be prevailed upon to chooſe him for their Governour. And leaſt the dread of another Inundation ſhould deterr them from it, he had an expedient in his Head, he ſaid, that would ſecure them from any damage of that quality. His project was the erecting of a Tower to ſuch a height, that it ſhould be impoſſible for the waters ever to reach the top of it: Beſide the Revenge he meditated over and above, for the loſs of thoſe that periſhed in the Flood. The Multitude were ſo unanimouſly ſatisfied with this Huffe of Nimrod, that they be- Nimrod their Head and Ring-leader.

gan to look upon it as a matter of high indignity to think of living in ſubjection to God any longer. Upon this, they ſet themſelves immediately, might and main, and all hands at work, to the carrying on of the deſign. The height of it was to be prodigious, but the infinite number of Labourers advanced it, even beyond imagination. The Breadth and Thickneſs of it (being wonderfully firm and ſtrong) appeared ſo vaſt at hand, that it made the height ſeem the leſs for it. The materials were burnt Brick, Cemented in the joynts with a Pitchy matter to make it proof againſt the Waters. The madneſs of theſe People was highly provoking, eſpecially conſidering the warning they had in the example of their Forefathers, who were all ſwallowed up in an Univerſal Flood for their wickedneſs. But God was graciouſly pleaſed however, not to proceed to the extremity of extinguiſhing Mankind once again, for their contemptuous tranſgreſſions, but choſe rather to Puniſh them with ſuch a confuſion of Tongues, that they ſhould not be able to underſtand one another. The place where this Tower was erected, is at this day called Babylon, from the confuſion of Tongues as aforeſaid; Babel in Hebrew ſignifying as much as Confuſion. Now as to this Tower, and this Confuſion, the Sibyl makes the following mention of it. [a] 'At a certain time, '(ſays ſhe) when the whole world ſpake the ſame Language, the People of thoſe days 'gathered together, and raiſed a mighty Tower, which they carryed up to ſo extrava-'gant a height, that it looked as if they had propoſed the Scaling of Heaven from the 'top of it: But the Gods let the Winds looſe upon it, which with a violent blaſt beat 'it down to the Ground: the Builders being alſo judiciouſly ſtruck with an utter for-'getfulneſs of their Native Tongue, and a new unknown Language ſubſtituted inſtead 'of it, wherein not one man of them underſtood his Fellow. As to Sennaar it ſelf, Heſtiæus gives this Hint; The Prieſts that ſurvived the general Deſolation, preſerved the Holy things and Ornaments that were Dedicated to the Worſhip and Service of [b] Jupiter the Conquerour, and carryed them off to Shinar of Babylon.

The Peopling the World, Gen. 11.

UPON this Diverſity of Tongues, the People were forced to diſperſe themſelves up and down into Colonies, and ſo to Plant and Inhabit, ſome upon the Sea-Coaſts, others in the Mid-Land; ſome in one place, ſome in another, according to the Lot, that God in his Wiſdom and Providence had aſſigned them: But the whole World, in fine, was to be more or leſs Peopled. Men came by degrees to the uſe and knowlege of Navigation, ſo far at leaſt as to make Boats, and Tranſport themſelves into Iſlands. They gave Appellations to the Places where they Liv'd, many of them retaining to this very Day the names of their firſt Planters. Some 'tis true are altered, others only diſguiſed under Greek Derivations, to make them more familiar and intelligible to the People thereabouts. For the [c] Greeks being Poſſeſt of thoſe Countries, drew to themſelves in ſucceeding Ages, as the firſt Founders and Proprietors, the honour of that Primitive greatneſs, impoſing upon them as they thought fit, not only Names but Laws alſo, Cuſtoms, and Manners to their own liking.

Greeks at this day [a] Galatians, (or Gauls) [b] Magog was the head of the [c] Magogians (by the Greeks Scythians) [d] Javan and [e] Madeus were two other Sons of Japhet: from the latter came the Madæans, or the Medes; from the other the Jonians, and the whole Race of Greeks. [f] Thobel was the Founder of the Thobelians, (at this day the Iberians or Spaniards) from [g] Meſches the Meſchinians, called afterwards Cappadocians, but not without ſome footſteps yet of their Original in the Town of Mazaca, which comes near the Antient Name. [h] Thiras was the Head and Governour of the Thiræans, (which the Greeks changed afterwards for Thracians.) Theſe are the Nations that were firſt Planted by the ſeven Sons of Japhet.

Gomar again had three Sons: [i] Aſchanaxes, from whom came the Aſchanaxians. (The Greeks call them Rheginians.) [k] Rhiphates, the Head of the Rhiphatæans, (now Paphlagonians.) And [l] Thygrammes, from whom came the Thygrammæans, (which the Greeks call Phrygians.) Gomar.

Javan alſo the Son of Japhet had three Sons: [m] Aliſas the firſt of the Aliſæans, (now call'd Æolians.) As from [n] Tharſus, the Tharſians, (afterwards called Cilicians,) as appears by their Celebrating of the City Tarſus with a mark of Preference above all others, only turning the firſt Letter ⊙ into a T. The Iſland that we at this day call Cyprus, was at firſt called Chethima, from [o] Chethimos the firſt Poſſeſſor of it. From hence it is that not only all Iſlands, but all places bordering upon the Sea, are by the Hebrews called Chethim; and there is a Town in the Iſle of Cyprus, which at this day is called [p] Citium by thoſe that for the ſound ſake will make Greek of every thing; and it ſeems to have ſome Affinity with Chethim. All theſe Nations had the Deſcendents of Japhet for their Heads. But I have one thing yet to ſay before I go any further, which perhaps the Greeks take no notice of. That is to ſay, they have gotten a way of changing Names to tickle the Ear, and carry the word glibber off the Tongue; but for our People, they neither allow nor practice any ſuch thing. The Greeks have turned Noe into [q] Nochos; but we keep ſteady to the ſame Form and Syllables, without ſo much as varying the very Termination. Javan.

The Sons of Ham Settled themſelves in Syria and ſo to the foot of the Mountains of Amanus and Libanus; ſtretching the Terms of their Juriſdiction as far as the Sea-Coaſt, and calling all Places under their Dominions by what Names they pleaſed; but a great many of them are to us utterly loſt and forgotten; and others ſo corrupted and transformed, that they are no longer to be known. Only the Æthiopians have ſtood the ſtreſs of Time and Accidents, without any alteration. [r] Chus, one of the Sons of Ham was their Founder and Governour, and they bear the name of Chuſians to this inſtant; not only among themſelves, but all Aſia over. The [s] Meſræans alſo yet keep their old Name; for Ægypt quite through the Country, is called [t] Meſrim ſtill, and the Ægyptians, Meſræans. [u] Phutes Governed in Lybia, and gave the whole Nation the Name of Phutians. And we read in divers Greek Hiſtorians of a River in Mauritania of this Name, and of a Country bordering upon it which is called Phute; but the Name has been ſince changed upon the account of Libys, one of the Sons of [v] Meſraim. How it came to be called Africa we ſhall ſhew hereafter. Chanaan the fourth Son of Ham gave his name to the Country of the Chanaanites, (which is ſince called Judæa.) Ham.

They had all Children, but Chus the eldeſt Son of Ham had ſix Sons: [w] Sabas the Head of the Sabæans. [x] Evilas of the Evilæans (now called Gætulians.) [y] Sabathes of the Sabathenians, (with the Greeks Aſtabarians.) [z] Sabactas, of the Sabactenians. [a] Ramus was Prince of the Ramæans, and had two Sons, [b] Judadas and [c] Sabas. The former gave the Name and Original to the Judadæans in the Weſtern part of Æthiopia, the other tranſmitted his Name to the Sabæans. As for [d] Nimrod the ſixth Son of Chus he ſtayed behind with the Babylonians; Seized the Government by force, and moſt Tyrannically oppreſſed the People, as is allready ſet forth. Chus.

Meſraim was the Father of eight Sons, who made themſelves Maſters of the whole Tract of Land betwixt Gaza and Ægypt. Philiſtim was one of the Eight, and left his Name to his Country, that part of it at leaſt which the Greeks call Palæſtine. more of them then their Names: their Cities and Plantations having been destroyed in the Æthiopick War, of which in its proper place.

Chanaan. Chanaan was the Father of eleven Sons. Sidon Built a City in Phœnicia, which the Greeks call Sidon. Amath was the Founder of Amathe, a place yet in being, and by the Inhabitants called Amathine. Though the Macedonians have changed it for Epiphania, from one of their Kings. [a] Aradæus took possession of the Island Aradus. Arucæus had the Town of Arce upon Mount Libanus. As for the other Seven, Euæus, Chetæus, Jebusæus, [Eúdæus,] Sinæus, Samaræus and Gergesæus, we have nothing more of them in the Holy Scriptures then their Names; the Hebrews having Razed all their Cities for the reasons following.

Noah Plants a Vineyard. Gen. 9. So soon as the Earth began to come a little to it self again after the Flood, Noah fell to his work of Cultivating the Ground, Planting of Vines, Gathering and Pressing his Grapes in their due Season: and so brought wine into use again. But one day after an Oblation to God of the first Fruits of his Vineyard, he drank so liberally of the Liquor, that he layed himself down quite senseless, and fell fast asleep, with his Nakedness in a most beastly manner uncovered. His youngest Son seeing his Father thus shamefully exposed, call'd his Brothers in derision to make sport with the Spectacle: But they, out of a Pious Reverence to a Parent, cast a Covering over him. Noah came quickly to be sensible of what had pass'd, and Blessed his other Children for the good Office they had done him; but with a bitter imprecation upon the Posterity of Ham; and this malediction was followed upon them with a Divine vengeance, but of this hereafter; only observing, that Ham in his own Person scaped the Curse, out of Noah's tenderness to the nearness of his Blood.

Noah made Drunk.

His Nakedness expos'd.

The Posterity of Ham Accursed.

The Posterity of Shem. Shem, another of the three Sons of Noah, had five Sons, and the whole Tract of Asia was theirs, from Euphrates to the Indian Sea. from [c] Elam came the [d] Elamites, and from them the Persians. [e] Assur was the Founder of Nineve, and thence came the Assyrians; a Rich and a Powerful People. From Arphaxad, came the Arphaxadæans, or our Chaldæans. From Aram came the Aramæans (The Greeks call them Syrians.) And from Lud came the Luddians, or our Lydians.

Aram. Aram had four Sons: [f] Uz was the Founder of Trachonitis, and Damascus, which lies betwixt Palæstine and Cœle-Syria. [g] Hull had Armenia. [h] Gether was Prince of the Bactrians; and [i] Mesas of the Mesanæans, whose whole Country at present bears the Name of the Camp of Spasinus.

Salas. [k] Salas the Son of Arphaxad was the Father of Heber, according to whose Name the Jews were called Hebrews. Heber begot [l] Jucta and [m] Phalec: the latter was born at the time of dividing the Land, (Phalec in Hebrew signifying Partition.) Jucta the Son of Heber had Children; [n] Elmodad, [o] Saleph, [p] Azermoth, [q] Eiraes, [r] Edoram, [s] Uzal, [t] Declas, [v] Ebal, Abiamel, [w] Sabeus, Ophir, [x] Euilath, Jobab. These have their Habitation from the River Cophene in India, to the Neighboring part of [y] Syria.

The Genealogy of Abraham. Having spoken already of the Sons of Shem, I shall carry my Discourse forward to Treat of the Hebrews. Phalec was the Son of Heber, and [z] Ragaus the Son of Phalec. Ragaus begat Serug, Serug begat [a] Nachor, and Nachor begat [b] Thares the Father of Abraham, the tenth Generation from Noah. He was born about two Hundred Ninety two Years after the Flood. Thares was Seventy Years of Age when he had Abraham. Nachor a Hundred and Twenty when he had Thares, Serug about a Hundred Thirty Two when he had Nachor, Ragaus a Hundred and Thirty when he had Serug, and Phalec about the same Age when he had Ragaus, Heber a Hundred Thirty Four when he had Phalec, Salas a Hundred and Thirty when he had Heber, Arphaxad a Hundred Thirty Five when he had Salas. And this Arphaxad the Son of Shem, and the Grandson of Noah, was born [c] Two Years after the Flood.

Nachor and Aran Abraham's Brothers. Abraham had two Brothers, Nachor and [d] Haran, the latter dyed at [e] Ur in Chaldæa where there is to be seen at this day a Sepulchral Monument erected in Honour of his Memory. He left behind him his Son Lot, and two Daughters, Sarah and [f] Melcha: Nachor took the latter to Wife, and Abraham took Sarah.

Thares the Father of Abraham. Thares the Father of Abraham had contracted such an Aversion to Chaldæa, for the loss of his Son Haran, that he went away and all his Family with him to Charran in Mesopotamia, where Thares dyed and was Buryed in his Hundred and Fifth Year. The Life of Man was now ſhorten'd, and God ſoon after reduced it to the ſcantling of a Hundred and Twenty Years, which was the Preciſe Age of Moſes himſelf.

Nachor had by his Wife Melcha eight Sons, [a] Uz, [b] Baux, [c] Camuel, [d] Chazad, [e] Azaus, Pheldas, [f] Jadelphas, and Bathuel. Theſe were all the Legitimate Sons of Nachor; but Tabæus and Gaham, [g] Tavaus and Machas, he had by Ruma his Concubine. Bathuel had a Daughter and a Son, Rebecca and Laban. The Children of Nachor.

Abraham having no Children of his own, Adopts his Nephew Lot; Quits Chaldæa; and takes up his Abode in Chanaan.

ABRAHAM, having no Legitimate Iſſue of his own, Adopted Lot, the Son of his Brother Aram, and the Brother of his Wife Sarah. In the ſeventy fifth Year of his Age he left Chaldæa, and went away with his Family and all that belonged unto him into the Land of Chanaan, as God had commanded him, where he took up his Habitation, and in God's good time left it to his Poſterity. He was a Man equally Wiſe and Eloquent, of a Piercing Judgment, and an Univerſal Knowledge. He had the Reputation of an underſtanding beyond other men; and as he wanted no skill, ſo he had the Courage alſo to Attaque the moſt daring iniquities of the Times, and by Dint of Authority as well as of his Reaſon, to Tear up falſe Opinions in Religion by the Roots, and to terrify wicked men into the Love and Fear of that God they had deſpiſed. Abraham was the firſt that adventur'd to Preach up the Doctrine of One God, the Allmighty Maker, and Creator of all things in Heaven and Earth: and that for all the Comforts we enjoy in this world, it is to his infinite goodneſs, not to any power in our ſelves, that we ſtand indebted for them. This he Argued from the orderly courſe of things both at Sea and Land in their Times and Seaſons, and from his Obſervation upon the Motions and Influences of the Sun, Moon, and Stars; inſomuch that without an Over-ruling and an Adminiſtring Providence to keep the Wheel a going, the whole Frame of the Univerſe muſt drop into Confuſion, and conſequently that all we have to truſt to, for matters either of Pleaſure, Profit, or Neceſſity, depends ſingly upon the good will and bounty of the firſt mover: ſo that it is to him alone that we are to render all honour and thankſgiving, without aſſuming any thing to our ſelves. Abraham Adopts Lot. Gen. 12. Abraham's Piety, Reſolution, and Wiſdom.

The People of Chaldæa and Meſopotamia were ready to fly in the Face of him for this Doctrine: ſo that by God's order and aſſiſtance, he conveyed himſelf out of Chaldæa into the Land of Chanaan, where he eſtabliſhed his Abode, erected an Altar to God, worſhipped and offer'd Sacrifice. Beroſus hath a Paſſage concerning our Father Abraham, though without Naming him. 'In the tenth Generation (ſays he) after the 'Flood, there was among the Chaldæans a certain Great and Juſt Man, and one that 'was famous for his Celeſtial Obſervations. Hecatæus hath gone further yet, in an Hiſtorical Diſcourſe expreſsly upon his affairs. Nicolaus of Damaſcus in the fourth Book of his Hiſtory does alſo make mention of him. 'Abraham (ſays he) though a Stranger 'commanded in Damaſcus, to which place he came with a great Train from a Coun-'try beyond Babylon called Chaldæa; the People after a ſhort time Riſing againſt him: 'whereupon he and his Family went to Chananæa (now called Judæa) where he Plant-'ed himſelf, and had a very numerous Offspring, of whom I ſhall ſpeak further in ano-'ther Book. But at Damaſcus, the very Name of Abraham is to this day had in great veneration; and there is a Village too that yet bears the Name of Abraham's Habitation. Teſtified by Beroſus. Upon a Famine in Chanaan, Abraham removes into Ægypt; and takes Sarah along with him, where he ſtays a while, and then Returns.

THERE happen'd in thoſe days a miſerable Famine in Chanaan: and Abraham underſtanding that at the ſame time there was great Plenty in Ægypt, reſolved upon a Journy thither, partly to get a ſhare in their Abundance, and partly to Conſult A Famine in Chanaan, Gen. 12. and 13. their Prieſts in their Profeſſion about Divine matters; with an impartial deſire and diſpoſition to find out the Truth, and either to give or to receive ſatisfaction, according to the Right and Reaſon of the Subject in queſtion. Abraham taking Sarah along with him, who was a very Beautiful Woman, and being informed of the Unbridled Luſts of the Ægyptians, fell into an apprehenſion of what extremities the King perhaps might put him to upon the account of his Wife: wherefore he bethought himſelf of an evaſion in caſe of any difficulty, and to ſay ſhe was his Siſter. Upon Concerting the Point betwixt themſelves, and the preſent neceſſity conſidered, they concluded to agree in the ſame Tale. At his coming into Ægypt, it fell out as he foreboded: for the fame of his handſom Wife was preſently ſpread about, till it came to the Ear of Pharaoh the King of Ægypt; who was immediately enflamed with an impatience to See and to Enjoy thisMiracle of a Woman that he had heard ſuch wonders of, making no doubt of compaſſing his ſordid end upon her. But in the mean while God put a Check to the progreſs of his Lewd Appetite by viſiting this Laſcivious Prince with a Plague and a Sedition both at once. In this Diſtreſs Pharaoh had recourſe to his Prieſts for Councel and Direction; and to know what might be the Sin that brought this Judgment upon him, and what the Remedy. The Prieſts upon Sacrificing returned him Anſwer, that this Calamity was befallen him for the Violence and Abuſe he deſigned upon the Wife of a Stranger. This Sentence and Reſolution put the King in ſuch a fright, that he forthwith Diſcours'd Sarah upon it with all frankneſs and reſpect, what ſhe her ſelf was, and what was the man that brought her thither. She told him in ſhort the whole and the plain truth of the Story: whereupon Pharaoh excuſed himſelf to Abraham, that he took her for his Siſter, not for his Wife, and only deſired a fair Alliance without the leaſt thought of any ſcandalous indignity to her Perſon. He made Abraham a Preſent after this of a conſiderable Summe of Mony, and gave him a liberty of Aſſociating with the moſt Learned and Excellent Men in his Dominions, by which means he became better known, and conſequently more eſteemed for his excellent Qualities and Virtue. By the allowance of this freedom of Conference and Communication, Abraham had the means of obſerving all their Diviſions about Rites, Ceremonies, and Opinions; their Factions and Animoſities; and their Reciprocal Contempt and Hatred one of another; and their diſagreement about Religion: ſo that upon the whole matter, he made no difficulty of Pronouncing upon them, as Men that acted in contradiction to themſelves, as well as to one another, and without any foundation of Truth to bottom upon. By theſe Diſcourſes he gained himſelf infinite Credit, not only for the Solidity of his Judgment, and an Admirable felicity of Elocution; but for his inſtructive Talent alſo of informing and convincing his Auditory both at once. He likewiſe read them Lectures of Aſtronomy and Arithmetick, which Sciences the Ægyptians underſtood nothing of till Abraham brought them from Chaldæa into Ægypt, and from thence they paſſed to the Greeks.

But of this we ſhall give the Reaſons in their proper Place.

utterly Defeated them, hereupon the Kings of Sodom became their Tributaries, and for twelve years pay'd their Acknowledgements, but the year following they fail'd, and forfeited. The Assyrians upon this Advanced against them a second time with another Army as before, under the Command of Amraphel, Arioch, [a] Chodollomor, and [b] Thadal; Ravaged all Syria, Subdu'd the Race of the Gyants, and so enter'd the Land of Sodom; Encamping in the Valley among the Brimstone-Pits which in those days were frequent thereabouts; but since the Destruction of Sodom, that Valley is turned into a Lake called Asphaltitis, of which hereafter. This Engagement betwixt the Assyrians and the Sodomites was a Terrible Encounter. There fell of the Sodomites great numbers, beside the Prisoners taken, whereof Lot was one, who came to the Relief of the Place.

ABRAHAM had no sooner the News of the Sodomites Defeat, so many of his Neighbours and Friends Kill'd and Taken, and his Nephew Lot made a Prisoner, but he posted away immediately after the Assyrians, and the fifth night after his setting out, Surprized them in their Quarters near Dan, one of the Heads of the River Jordan, where he found them in all the Confusion imaginable, some without their Arms, others in Bed, without the least thought of an Enemy, some Drunk, some Drowsy, and most of them in such a condition that they could neither Fight nor Fly. In this Disorder, they put as many to the Sword as they could, and the next day pursued the rest as far as Choba of Damascus. This may serve for an instance, that it is not so much the Number as the Valour of the Combatants that gains the Victory; for Abraham had but barely three Hundred and eighteen of his own Domesticks, and three Auxiliary Friends, when he Routed this numerous Army: and those few of the Enemy that scap'd, were fain to hide their Heads with shame and confusion. Thus was Lot and the rest of the Prisoners set at Liberty, while Abraham was upon his return to his People again with Victory and Peace.

As Abraham was upon his way home again, the King of Sodom met him at a place call'd the Valley Royal to congratulate his success, and there he was received by Melchisedech the King of [c] Solyma, now called Jerusalem. Melchisedech is as much as to say a Righteous King, which certainly this Prince was, having been accounted Worthy by common consent to serve at the Altar as a Priest of the most high God. This Melchisedech Treated Abraham's Followers and Souldiers, with great Bounty, Hospitality, and all sorts of Refreshments; extolling Abraham himself at the Table up to the Skyes for so noble an Atchievement, and glorifying God's holy Name for the Blessing of so signal a Victory, in a way of Thanksgiving worthy of his Sacred Character. Abraham also on the other hand Presented Melchisedech with the Tenth of the Spoils he had taken, which he accepted of. Abraham made an offer of part of the Booty to the King of Sodom also, whose answer was, that he only desired to have his own People again that had been taken Prisoners by the Assyrians, and were now Rescu'd out of their hands; and for the rest, Abraham might do in the matter as he pleased. But Abraham excused himself from dealing upon those Conditions, declaring that he was absolutely resolved to make no advantage of the Booty to himself, more than to supply his Men with Provisions, and to Reward his three Friends, [d] Eschol, Enner, and Mambres, who had stood the shock of the Battle.

Upon the hearing of theſe words, Abraham offered up a Sacrifice according to the expreſs command and direction of Allmighty God. He took a Heifer, a Goat, and a Ram, of three years old each, a Turtle Dove, and a Pigeon: the Birds he kept whole, dividing the reſt into halves according to his order. While the Altar was making ready, and Birds of prey hovering up and down over the place waiting for the Blood of the Carkaſſes, a Voice was heard from Heaven, foretelling the Bondage that the Poſterity of Abraham ſhould ſuffer in Ægypt from malicious Enemies for the ſpace of four hundred years, at the end of which term they ſhould over-run the whole Territory of the Chanaanites from Ægypt as far as Sidon, and make themſelves Maſters of all their Citys and Dominions.

While things were at this paſs, Sarah by a particular direction from Heaven brought Hagar (an Ægyptian Servant in the Family) to Bed to her Husband, in hopes he might have Children by her. This Maid proving with Child, behaved her ſelf Inſolently to her Miſtreſs upon a vain preſumption, that the Child ſhe had in her Belly would in courſe be next Heir to the Government. Abraham was no ſooner aware of this Ingratitude, but he immediately put her into Sarah's hand to puniſh her as ſhe thought fit, which to the Wench was ſo inſupportable a Mortification, that ſhe reſolved to be gon upon't, calling upon God ſtill to pity her in that miſerable Condition. As ſhe was upon the way in her flight, and paſſing through a Deſert, an Angel from Heaven met her, and ordered her back again to the place whence ſhe came: adding that this affliction had befallen her, only as a Puniſhment for her arrogance and unthankfulneſs; and that upon her better behaviour for the future ſhe might find better uſage, charging her at the ſame time to obey the Admonition, and to return as ſhe loved her Life, without moving one ſtep further: and in caſe of her going back again, ſhe ſhould live to be the Mother of a Child that in time ſhould come to have the Dominion of that Country. She obeyed the voice of the Angel, went back to her Miſtreſs, begged her pardon and obtained it: and ſome while after this, ſhe was delivered of Iſhmaël, (which ſignifies prevail'd upon) God having heard and granted the Prayers of the Mother.

CHAP. XII.

The Deſtruction of Sodom by the juſt Judgment of God, for the execrable Wickedneſs of the People.

The wickedneſs of Sodom. Gen. 18. and 19. THE People of Sodom were by this time ſo puffed up in the Contemplation of their prodigeous Wealth and Plenty, that they had no longer any Reſpect or Reverence either for God or Man. They were ungrateful for Benefits received to the higheſt Degree, inhoſpitable to Strangers, and Burning in unnatural Luſts one toward another. By theſe provoking and abominable Sins, the wrath of God was ſo highly highly incenſed againſt them, that he took up a Determination to avenge himſelf upon them for their Arrogance and Pride, and to deſtroy their Cities, and lay their whole Country waſte, that for the time to come there ſhould be no more Graſs upon the Ground there, nor any Plant or Fruit for the uſe of Man.

This reſolution being taken, and the ſentence paſſed upon the Sodomites, as Abraham was ſiting one day at his Tent-Door under the Oke of Mambres, he ſaw three Angels, which to him ſeemed Travellers or Strangers coming towards him. He roſe up to meet them, and ſo after the firſt Salute and Embrace, he gave them a fair Invitation to the beſt Entertainment his Roof could afford. They accepted of his Civility, and ſo his People were preſently appointed to bake him a Cake, and a Calf was alſo killed and dreſſed: which being made ready, the Treat was ſet before the Angels under the Oke where they lay. They gave him thanks, and in appearance fed upon it. But while the meat was yet before them, they enquired of Abraham where his Wife Sarah was, who made anſwer that ſhe was within there in the Tent. Upon this they ſtood up as to go their way, telling Abraham that it would not be long before they ſhould come that way again, and that by that time they ſhould find Sarah a Mother. Upon theſe words Sarah was called in, and could not forbear Smiling to hear them ſpeak of her having a Child at that time of the day, for ſhe her ſelf was Ninety years of Age, and her Husband a Hundred. When they had proceeded thus far, the Angels caſt off their Diſguiſe, owned what they were, and gave an account of their Commiſſion. One of them they ſaid was ſent to bring Abraham the tydings of a Son that was to be Born, and the other two were employ'd for the deſtruction of Sodom. The latter ſtruck Abraham for the ſake of the Sodomites: inſomuch that he got up and begged of God that he would be pleaſed not to take away the Innocent together with the Guilty. God gave him for anſwer that they were all alike, and that if there were but ten Righteous Men in the whole City, he would ſpare all the reſt for that Ten's ſake. After this Declaration, Abraham had not one word more to ſay on their behalf.

Abraham entertains three Angels.

They promiſe him a Son.

And foretel the Deſtruction of Sodom.

The two Angels departed, and went into Sodom, and Lot obſerving them, invited them to a Lodging in his Houſe. Now Lot was naturally Human, and Courteous to Strangers, and the very Counterpart of Abraham for Piety and good Nature. But ſo it fell out, that ſome certain Ruffians of the Town, taking notice of two Beautiful Graceful Perſons that entered into Lot's Houſe, preſſed hard upon Lot to force their way into his Lodgings, with a deſign of attempting ſome violent act of Brutality upon their Perſons. Lot ſaid all that was poſſible upon the Subject of Continence and Hoſpitality to divert them, nay and rather than fail offered them his two Daughters in exchange for the two Strangers, but this would not do neither. Upon this Diabolical outrage, God ſtruck them upon the very place with ſo judicial a Blindneſs, that they could not find the way into the Houſe, the whole People of Sodom being at the ſame time doomed to an exemplary Perdition.

Two of the Angels are Lot's Gueſts.

Now Lot that had been forewarned of this Calamity to come, withdrew out of the City with his Wife and two Maiden, but Contracted Daughters. Their Husbands (Elect that is) were earneſtly invited out along with them too, but they turned all into Ridicule, and ſtaying behind took their part in the general Conflagration. Then it was that God diſcharged the fierce Arrows of his Wrath and Vengeance upon this impious Generation: Conſuming not only the City it ſelf, and every Living Soul in it, but deſtroying alſo the whole Country thereabouts with an Irreparable Deſolation; as I have ſaid allready in my Commentaries upon the Wars of the Jews. The Wife of Lot that went out with her Husband, whether out of Curioſity, or Tenderneſs, could not forbear looking behind her, though directly contrary to the command of God, and was turned into a Pillar of Salt. [a] I have ſeen it my ſelf, and it remains to this day.

Lot and his Daughters after this terrible Judgment, made a ſhift to ſave themſelves in a little corner of the Country call'd [b] Zoar; (in Hebrew, Small) the only place which this devouring Fire had ſpar'd. In this Retreat they led a Solitary uneaſy Life for want both of Converſation and Proviſion. The Daughters looked upon themſelves in that ſolitude, as in effect the only Survivors of Mankind, and therefore ſo far conſulted common convenience in this extremity, as to reckon any thing warrantable that they found neceſſary, eſpecially where the conſervation of the whole race of Mankind was the queſtion. On this conſideration they contrived the putting of a Trick upon their Father, by ſtealing to Bed to him at a time when he knew not what he did: Upon which Congreſs they both proved with Child. Of Abimelech, and likewiſe of Iſhmaël the Son of Abraham, and the Arabians his Poſterity.

Abraham withdraws with Sarah to Gerar. Gen. 20.

AS for Abraham, He withdrew himſelf to Gerar in Palæſtine, and Sarah along with him, ſtill under colour of his Siſter as before, for fear of Abimelech the King of the Place. Now this Abimelech did afterward fall in Love with her, and would have Corrupted her, or attempted it at leaſt, if the hand of God had not taken him off by a deſperate fit of Sickneſs in the heat of his Appetite and deſign. So ill he was, that the Phyſitians deſpaired of his Life; and while this Diſtemper was upon him, he had a Caution given him in a Dream not to offer any violence to Sarah, for ſhe was the Stranger's Wife, not his Siſter. Abimelech ſome ſhort time after, finding himſelf in a hopeful way of Recovery called his Friends about him, and told them of his Paſſion, and of his Dream, and every thing that had paſſed, with this inference upon the whole, that his preſent ſickneſs was a Judgment upon him for an Inordinate Love. Upon this, by the advice of the People about him, he ſent for Abraham, and gave him all aſſurance that his Wives Honour was ſafe, for God had ſupported and protected her, and he did now reſtore her to him as unſpotted as he found her, appealing to God and her own Conſcience for the truth of what he ſaid, and proteſting that if he had but known her to have been his Wife, he would never have attempted her, deſiring him likewiſe to paſs it all over, and to remember him in his Prayers to Allmighty God to forgive him. He told him further, that if he had a mind to ſtay, he ſhould be welcome, and abundantly provided for: Or if he had rather depart, he ſhould have Guides and Carriages to attend him, and all manner of Conveniences along with him which he might have any occaſion for when he came into that Country. Abraham, in return to what Abimelech had ſaid, did in ſome ſort juſtify the calling of Sarah his Siſter, being the Daughter of his Brother, and ſo of the Kindred: Beſide that he thought to Cover himſelf in his Travels under that appearance. Neither could he charge himſelf, he ſaid, as the cauſe of Abimelech's Sickneſs: But in Concluſion he wiſhed him well with all his heart, and ſhould be glad to continue with him. Upon this Accommodation, the King very Generouſly gave Abraham a Portion both of Lands and Mony, Contracted an Allyance with him upon Condition of a fair Correſpondence betwixt them, without Fraud or Guile, and the League was ſtruck, and Ratified at a Certain Well call'd [a] Berſabe, (or the Well of the Oath) which is the Name it beareth to this very day.

The Birth of Iſaac. Gen. 21.

Some little time after this, Sarah brought Abraham a Son (as God had foretold) and they named him Iſaac; (in Hebrew Laughter) alluding to Sarah's Smiling at the improbability of her having a Child at thoſe years, as the Angel had foretold: She her ſelf being Ninety years of Age, and her Husband a Hundred when Iſaac was Born. Upon the 8*th* day he was Circumciſed, and the Jews obſerve the ſame time and Solemnity of Circumciſion unto this day. The Arabians indeed are not Circumciſed till the Thirteenth year, as Iſhmaël was, the Son of Abraham by his Concubine, and the Perſon from whom they had their Original. But of him more particularly in what I am about to ſay.

Gen. 21.

Sarah had at firſt as tender an affection for Iſhmaël the Son of her Servant Hagar as if he had been her own Fleſh and Blood; beſides that he was alſo trained up and Educated with infinite Caution and Reſpect, as the Preſumptive Heir of the Government: but when Iſaac came to be Born, Sarah did not think it ſecure or reaſonable, to have the two Children brought up together, for Iſhmaël was ſo much the Elder, that in caſe of Abraham's Death, he might find himſelf under ſome Temptation perhaps to ſupplant the other: ſo that Sarah for fear of this, employed all the power ſhe had with Abraham, to have both Mother and Child ſent away and diſpoſed of in ſome Remote Country. Abraham at the firſt motion was utterly againſt it, as a Barbarous Cruelty to expoſe an Innocent helpleſs Child, and a ne-ceſſitous Mother to the wide world at that inhuman rate: But Abraham at length being over-ruled by God's command, hearkened to the voice of his Wife, and delivered the Boy (who was not yet big enough to ſhift for himſelf) into the Arms of his Mother, gave her a proportion of Water and Bread for a ſubſiſtence, and ſo turned them looſe to ſeek their Fortunes. They had not Travelled far before their Proviſions failed them. The water was all ſpent, the Child ready to periſh for want of Drink, and the Woman in ſhort at her wits end. In this diſtreſs, ſhe laid the Boy down at the foot of a Fir-Tree, and went off her ſelf to be out of diſtance of ſeeing ſo diſmal a Spectacle as that would have been of her poor Child in his laſt Agonies. While Hagar was in this Anxiety and Deſpair, there came an Angel to her, which ſhewed her a Fountain hard by, and bad her be ſure to look carefully to her Charge, for it was a matter of great moment, and her own happineſs depended in a high meaſure upon the ſafety of that Child. This Conſolation put the Woman ſomewhat in Heart again, ſo that ſhe went wandering on ſtill, till by Providence ſhe fell into the Company of Shepherds that contributed very much to her Relief.

CHAP. XIV.

God Commands Abraham to Sacrifice his Beloved Son Iſaac. Iſaac's Faith and Obedience, and the Bleſſing that attended it.

ISAAC was the only begotten Son of Abraham, the Child and the Bleſſing of his Age, and infinitely Dear to him out of both thoſe Reſpects. But in the mean time, this tender affection of the Parent's was both anſwered and juſtified by the early Piety, Virtue, and Reverence (toward God and Man) of a Child that deſerved it. When Abraham found himſelf ſecured in the Proſpect of ſo excellent a Succeſſor, he was no longer ſolicitous for his own Life, or the things of this World, but ſet up his whole Reſt upon the hope of his next Heir, with a cheerful diſpoſition to Reſign his Authority and Poſſeſſions to his beloved Son, and his very being to God and his good pleaſure. But it pleaſed the Lord ſtill after all this to put him to ſome further tryal of his Integrity, and ſo laying before him the great things he had allready done for him, the Victories, the Wealth, the Happyneſs, and the Child that he had given him: he demanded, in fine, his dear and only Son Iſaac for a Sacrifice, and to be Offered upon a Mountain of Moriah, upon an Altar there, as the uttermoſt Teſt of his Faith and Obedience. Now Abraham, that Lov'd and Honour'd God without any conditions or reſerve, made no difficulty of reſolving without the leaſt ſcruple to deliver up the Life of his Son to the Will of his Maker, and the Author of Life it ſelf: ſo that without one word ſpeaking to his Wife or any of his People, either of the Command, or of his Purpoſe, leaſt peradventure they might Oppoſe him in it, he took his Son Iſaac with two of his Servants, and an Aſs Laden with neceſſaries for the Sacrifice, and with them ſet forward two days Journy toward the Mountain. But on the third day coming within ſight of it, he left his Servants below in the Field, and took Iſaac alone with him up the Mountain, (upon this Mountain David afterward erected a Temple.) Iſaac was now twenty five Years of Age, and taking notice as he was preparing for the Altar, that all things were ready for the Sacrifice, but no Sacrifice to be ſeen, he asked his Father what Offering he intended, for he ſaw none. Abraham made anſwer that God would provide one, in whoſe power it was to give to thoſe that want, and to take away from thoſe that have abundance, and all for the beſt to them that put their truſt in God: wherefore he might might depend upon it, that God would find the Sacrifice, if he ſhould vouchſafe to accept of an Oblation.

Abraham's Diſcourſe to Iſaac before the Altar.

So ſoon as the wood was laid, and every thing ready. 'My Dear Son (ſays he) 'thou haſt been the Child of many Prayers to me, and ſince thy coming into the World 'I have ſpared for nothing in thy Nurture and Education. There is not any happy-'neſs I have more wiſhed for then to ſee thee ſettled in a Conſummated ſtate of Age 'and Reaſon, and when ever God ſhall take me to himſelf, to leave thee in poſſeſſion of 'my Authority and Dominions; but ſince it hath been the will of God, firſt to beſtow 'thee upon me, and now to call thee back again, My dear Son, acquit thy ſelf Gene-'rouſly under ſo Pious a neceſſity. It is to God that thou art dedicated and delivered 'up on this occaſion, and it is the ſame God that now requires thee of me in return 'for all the Bleſſings and Favours he hath ſhower'd down upon us both in War and 'Peace. It is but according to the Law of Nature, for all that are born, to dye; and 'a more glorious end thou canſt never have then to fall by the hand of thine own Fa-'ther, a Sacrifice to the God and Father of the Univerſe, who hath rather choſen to 'receive thy Soul into a Bleſſed Eternity upon the Wing of Prayers and Ardent Eja-'culations, then ſuffer thee to be taken away by Sickneſs, War, Paſſion, or any other 'of the common Chances of Man-kind. Conſider it well, and thou wilt find, that in 'that Heavenly ſtation to which thou art now called, thou mayſt make thy ſelf the 'true ſupport of thy Aged Father, and that inſtead of my Son Iſaac, I ſhall have God 'himſelf for my Guardian.

Iſaac's Reſignation.

Iſaac attended to all that had been ſaid with a Conſtancy and Reſignation becoming the Son of ſo great a Father; declaring, that if he ſhould not frankly deliver up that Life to God and his Father, which they themſelves had given him, he had better never have been Born: Nay, that it was at the devotion even of his Father alone, if he ſhould require it. With theſe words Iſaac advanced up to the Altar, and preſented himſelf to the Slaughter: but upon the very Point of doing the Execution, God Allmighty called aloud to Abraham and prevented it. 'He bad him hold his hand, 'and ſpare his Son; for (ſays he) I did not require it of you out of any delight I 'take in human Blood, or that I would make a Father the Aſſaſſin of that very 'Child which I my ſelf had given him, but to ſee how far you would ſubmit to your 'God, in a ſelf-denyal to your Inclination and Nature. But now ſince I find your 'Piety to be Proof againſt all Temptations, I do here Confirm over again to you all 'my former promiſes. I do accept of your Sacrifice; and for your Self and your Po-'ſterity, my Providence ſhall never forſake you. I will Bleſs your Son Iſaac with 'long Life, and make his Offspring Illuſtrious by a Numerous Succeſſion of Great 'and Virtuous Men. His Poſterity ſhall give Laws to many Nations: They ſhall 'Subdue the Land of Chanaan by the Sword, and their Wealth and Renown ſhall make 'them the Envy of the reſt of the World.

A Ram for a Sacrifice ſupplies the Place of Iſaac.

So ſoon as God had made an end of ſpeaking, there appeared moſt unexpectedly a Ram for a Sacrifice. Upon this Surprize the Father and the Son in a Tranſport of Joy exchanged all ſorts of Endearments; Bleſſing God for his gracious Promiſes and infinite goodneſs, and thereupon Offering up their Sacrifice. That Duty being over, they returned to Sarah, and lived happily after it; for God's Bleſſing went along with them in whatever they did.

There is a Report that this ſame Opher enter d Lybia with a ſtrong Army, and over-ran the Country. His Succeſſors held it after him, and gave it the Name of Aphrica. Alexander Polyhiſtor ſpeaks much to this purpoſe, when he ſays that Cleodemus the Prophet (otherwiſe called Malchus) in a Hiſtory of the Jews, that he has Written after the manner of Moſes their Law-giver, makes mention of ſeveral Children that Abraham had by Chetura, and three by Name. i. e. Apheran, Surim, and Japhran. Iſaac was at this time about forty Years of Age, when his Father had ſome thoughts of Marrying him to Rebecca the Daughter of Bathuel, who was the Son of his Brother Nachor. The Reſolution being taken to attempt that Match, he ſends the moſt Try'd and Truſty Servant he had on the Errand; but firſt gives him his Oath in Form, to be true to his Truſt, which was performed by putting his hand under his Thigh, according to the cuſtom of the Country. This being done, he gives him his Commiſſion and Inſtruction, with full Power and Authority to treat and conclude; furniſhes him with Choice and Rich Preſents, and Neceſſaries for his Journy, and ſo ſets him forward. His way lay through Meſopotamia, which betwixt dirt in the Winter, want of water in the Summer, and the inevitable danger of Robbers, if People be not very wary, is a Lewd and an Incommodious Paſſage for Travellers. But yet after all theſe difficulties, he came at laſt to Charran, where, upon entering the Suburbs, he ſaw a great many Maiden Creatures Trouping to the Wells for water: upon which ſight, he put up a Mental Prayer to God Allmighty, deſiring that if Heaven approved of the Match he came about, he might find Rebecca in that Company; and further, that he might know which was ſhe, by her giving him Water upon his deſiring it, and the reſt refuſing. This thought ran in his Head till he came to the Well, where the Virgins being gotten together, he begged of them One by One to beſtow the Charity of a ſup of water upon him. One ſaid, ſhe had taken a great deal of pains to get it, and could not part with it ſo eaſily; another, that ſhe drew water for her ſelf and not for other People; ſome had one excuſe, ſome another, but all upon the Negative, till at laſt, one ſingle Virgin took up her Companions for want of good Nature and Civility to a Stranger, and asked them whether they had been brought up among Reaſonable Creatures or Brutes; that could deny a Stranger the common Rights of Hoſpitality for ſo ſmall a matter: whereupon ſhe her ſelf, with great Courteſy and Fairneſs, gave the Stranger to drink. This was as Auſpicious an entrance upon his Buſineſs as he could have wiſh'd: but yet for ſureneſs ſake, after the Prologue of a decent Reſpect to the Perſon of the Virgin, and a declaration how much he was beholding to her for the pains ſhe took to Oblige a Stranger, he came by degrees to the more neceſſary point of enquiring into her Family and Extraction, bleſſing the happy Parents of ſo Gracious a Daughter, with a thouſand Prayers that they might live to beſtow her where ſhe ſhould enjoy all the Comforts of a Marryed Eſtate in the Love of a kind virtuous Husband, and in a Numerous ſtock of Obedient Abraham propounds a Match for his Son Iſaac with Rebecca the Daughter of Bathuel. 'My Father's Name (ſays ſhe) was Bathuel; but he Dy'd a long time ſince, and left 'my Mother and my Self, with the whole Family and Fortune, under the Care of a 'Brother of mine yet Living, whoſe Name is Laban, and mine Rebecca. The Man was overjoy'd at what he had heard and ſeen, being now fully aſſured that God would proſper his Journy. Upon this, he took out a Chain, and ſome other Ornamental Curioſities, that Women of Rebecca's Age are commonly well enough pleaſed with, and made the Virgin a Preſent of them; both as an inſtance of Eſteem for her ſingular Goodneſs, and as an acknowledgment of the particular Obligation ſhe had lay'd upon him. He made it his Requeſt then, that for that Night he might be permitted to Lodge with the Family of her Relations; for it grew late, and would be ill Travelling further; beſide that he had a Charge of Rich Jewels with him, which he could not think any where ſafer than in the hands of Perſons of ſo approv'd an Integrity: for he preſumed to make a Judgment of the Honour and Juſtice of the Mother and Son, by the Goodneſs that he had Experimented in her Self; adding further, that he hoped there would be no ſcruple made of Entertaining a Lodger, that would bear his own Charge, without any Expence or Burden to the Family. The Maid Reply'd that he was much in the Right to think well of the Humanity of her Relations; but ſhe deſir'd him however to have a better thought of their Generoſity; for it ſhould coſt him nothing: but ſhe would nevertheleſs, ſhe ſaid, ask her Brother's leave to Introduce him. Which was ſoon Granted, and done accordingly. He was no ſooner brought in, but Laban's Servants were order'd to look to his Camels, and himſelf taken in to Supper with the Maſter of the Houſe. The Gueſt, when that was over, addreſſed himſelf to the Son and the Mother of the Family after this manner. 'I am come hither, (ſays he) from Abraham, the Son of 'Thares, and your Kinſman; for Nachor (directing to the Woman) the Grandfather of 'your Children was Abraham's Brother by the ſame Father and Mother. This Abraham 'is my Maſter, and from him am I come now, with a Commiſſion to Propoſe a Mar-'riage betwixt this Virgin here, and his only Legitimate Son and Heir. He could 'have had his Choice of the moſt Conſiderable Matches in his own Country, but out 'of a Preference to thoſe of his own Blood, he has rather made this Election. Pray 'do not oppoſe it, for God himſelf hath appeared in favour of it; and it was a 'ſtrange direction from Heaven that brought me both to this Virgin and to your 'Houſe; over and above ſeveral Propicious Circumſtances in my Journy. As I was 'coming into this Town, I ſaw a great many Maidens going to fetch water, when I 'Pray'd in my Heart that I might find this very Virgin; and Providence brought me 'to her: ſo that this Marriage is as good as made in Heaven allready, and wants on-'ly your Authority to Confirm it. This Propoſal was ſo Advantageous, and deſireable in it ſelf, and ſo evidently agreeable to the Will of God, that Rebecca was deliver'd up to the Servant upon the Conditions of the Treaty, who carry'd her home with him to Iſaac, being now the Lord and Maſter of Abraham's Poſſeſſions; for the Children that Abraham had by Chetura were gone to Plant in other Provinces.

SOON after the Deceaſe of Abraham, Iſaac's Wife was found to be with Child: and her bigneſs ſo extraordinary, that Iſaac in great trouble beſought God to Reveal unto him the meaning of it. He received for Anſwer that ſhe ſhould bring forth forth Twins, and that from thoſe two Twins, two Nations ſhould Deſcend of their own Names; and that in Time, the Younger ſhould be the Greater of the Two. This fell out accordingly not long after; for Rebecca had Twins; the Elder of them all Hairy from Head to Foot, and the other catching him by the heel as he was coming into the World. The Elder was the Father's Darling and his Name Eſau or Seir, (the word in Hebrew ſignifies Hair) and the Younger, whoſe Name was Jacob, the Mother's.

There happened in thoſe days to be a Terrible Famine in the Land of Chanaan, and at the ſame time great Plenty of every thing in Ægypt; whither Iſaac would fain have gone; but God diverted him, and ſo he went to Gerar. King Abimelech Treated him there at firſt, with all appearance of Reſpect imaginable, even upon the ſcore of that Antient League of Friendſhip and Allyance that had formerly paſſed betwixt himſelf and Abraham. But this was too hot to hold, in a Man that Sacrificed all other Conſiderations to his Envy. He found that Iſaac was more in God's favour than himſelf, and ſo turn'd him off. Iſaac perceived that this change of Humour was only Envy at the bottom, and ſo withdrew to a place called the Valley, not far from Gerar. And as he was there Digging for Water, Abimelech's Shepherds brake in violently upon him, and ſtopt his proceeding. He had no mind to Contend: ſo that the Shepherds had the better of him. Upon this, he went a little further, and Digg'd once again, and was a ſecond time interrupted by Abimelech's Shepherds as before: whereupon he thought it good diſcretion to give off there too, and wait the Providence of a more favourable occaſion. After this he made a third attempt, and the King then gave him leave to dig, and he gave the place the Name of [a] Rooboth, (as much as to ſay, Large or Spacious.) And for the other places before-mentioned, the former he call'd [b] Eſcon (or Contention;) and the other [c] Sitenna, which ſignifies Enmity.

Theſe things premiſed, Abimelech went directly to Iſaac, with a motion to make a new friendſhip with him; taking one of his great Officers and Friends along for a Party to the Treaty. Iſaac was eaſily prevail'd upon to lay aſide all old grudges, out of a Reverence to the Memory of the former Friendſhips and good Offices that had paſſed betwixt Abimelech and his Father; and ſo all things were made up.

Abimelech renews a League with Iſaac.

Eſau, the beloved Son of his Father Iſaac at forty years of Age Marryed two Wives, Adah the Daughter of Elon, and [d] Alibama the Daughter of [e] Eſebion; Perſons of great Blood and Fame among the Chanaanites. Now this he did upon his own head and fancy, without ever conſulting his Father; or if he had, he would hardly have given his conſent; having taken up a firm Reſolution, never to enter into any ſort of Allyance with that People. But however, the thing being done, could not be undone; and Iſaac thought it his beſt Courſe rather to paſs it over in ſilence, without noiſe, than to put it to the Extremity of making him turn his Women away.

Eſau's Wives. Gen. 26. & 28. & 39.

Iſaac was now grown old, and very Dim-ſighted, if not quite Blind. In this condition he call'd his Son Eſau to him; and Prefacing what he had to ſay, with ſomewhat of Reflection upon his Age and Infirmity, he fell to bemoaning himſelf, that he was not able to ſerve God now as he had done formerly; and after this, he order'd his Son Eſau to go out a Hunting, and get him ſome good thing for his Supper, ſaying that he would afterwards give him his Prayers and his Bleſſing, and beſeech God to be his Comforter and Protector to his Lives end. My own end, ſays he, is not far off; the Time uncertain, and I cannot ſpend the little remainder of my Life better, than in Prayers for thy welfare. Eſau went preſently out to ſee what he could Catch, and in the mean while, Rebecca bethought her ſelf of a way to Transfer the Bleſſing to Jacob that was intended for Eſau, out of a Partiality of Affection to the one rather than the other. So ſhe bad Jacob (but without the Privity, and againſt the very deſign of Iſaac) go out and kill a Kid, and have it dreſſed ready for Supper. Jacob did what he was Commanded, as an Obedient Son to his Mother in all Caſes; and when Supper was ready, having put Kid's Skins over his Arms and Hands, that he might ſeem Hairy, (the Twins being otherwiſe ſo alike that there was no diſtinguiſhing betwixt them) he ſet it before his Father; but with a thouſand difficulties in his head for fear of being taken in the Impoſture, and drawing a Curſe upon himſelf inſtead of a Bleſſing. Iſaac it ſeems, taking notice of ſomewhat very particular in his Son's Voice, bad him come to him; and upon finding his Hands all Hairy, paſſed this Reflection upon it. The Voice (ſays he) is Jacob's Voice, but the Hands are the Hands of Eſau: and ſo without any further ſuſpicion, he went to Supper; and after that Offer'd up a Prayer ſuitable to the occaſion, in Words to this effect. 'Eternal God, 'the Creator of all things that are made! Thou that haſt been ſo Gracious and Boun-'tiful to my Father, to my Self, and to our Offspring; Promiſing and Poſſeſſing us 'of all good things, and giving us aſſurances of greater Bleſſings to come. Lord, make 'thy words good to us by Effects, and do not deſpiſe thy Servant for his preſent In-'firmities, which make him the more ſenſible of his Need of thy Support; Preſerve 'this Child from all Evil, in thy Mercy and Infinite Goodneſs; give him a Long 'and a Happy Life; Bleſs him with all Worldly enjoyments that may be for his 'good; make him a Terror to his Enemies, and an Honour and a Comfort to his 'Friends.

Jacob Defrauds Eſau of his Bleſſing.

Iſaac had no ſooner ended his Prayer for Eſau, as he thought, and meant it; but in comes Eſau himſelf from the Chace, which gave Iſaac to underſtand his miſtake: but he did not think fit to make any words of it. When Eſau came to be informed of what had paſſed, he beſought his Father only to beſtow the ſame Bleſſing upon himſelf over again, which he had Pronounced upon his Brother. But Iſaac excuſed himſelf, that he could not either Transfer, or take away the Benediction he had allready conferred. This diſappointment drew Tears from Eſau, and his Sorrow ſo far wrought upon the Tenderneſs of his Father, that all the Bleſſings he had left, he gave him: that is to ſay, he told him, that he ſhould be a Famous Hunter, and a Great Man at Arms; and that he himſelf and his Poſterity ſhould gain immortal Honour by their Exploits that way; but, for a Cloſe, that he muſt be ſubject to his Younger Brother.

Jacob withdraws for fear of his Brother.

Jacob was exceedingly afraid of a Revenge from his Brother, and Rebecca no leſs Conſcious of the Provoking Affront that was put upon him; ſo that ſhe bethought her ſelf of this way to divert the Danger of it. She prevail'd with Iſaac to Diſpatch Jacob away into Meſopotamia, to take a Wife out of her Allyance there. Eſau finding how he had diſobliged his Father by Matching with the Chanaanites (being his mortal Enemies) had now taken to Wife [a] Baſſemath the Daughter of Iſhmael, whom he Lov'd the beſt of all his Wives.

Jacob Treats about a Match with the Daughter of Laban. Gen. 28.

BY the Advice of Rebecca, and at her Inſtance, and with the conſent of Iſaac too, Jacob was ſent away into Meſopotamia to Treat about a Match there with the Daughter of Rebecca's Brother Laban. But the Feud being at that time ſo fierce and violent betwixt that Family and the Chanaanites, and Jacob's way lying through the Land of Chanaan, he durſt not venture himſelf in any of their Houſes upon his Journy, but took up his Lodging in the open Air; and a Stone, or ſome Hillock of Earth ſerv'd him for his Pillow. As he lay thus at Reſt, he had one Night in his Sleep this Viſion. He Dreamt that he ſaw a Ladder ſtanding upon the Earth, and the upper end of it reaching the Heavens, with certain glorious Figures, that to the view ſeemed more than Human, deſcending by the Rounds of it: and from the Top, God himſelf manifeſtly appearing and ſpeaking to Jacob by Name in theſe Words. 'It is not for you Jacob, that have in your Veins the Blood of your Fa-'ther and Grandfather Iſaac and Abraham, Men Famous for their Faith and Virtue, 'to deſpond under any diffidence of my Care for you in your preſent Troubles, but 'rather to ſupport your ſelf in hope of better things. Depend upon me for your 'Protector, and aſſure your ſelf, that your beſt days are yet to come. It was I that 'brought Abraham out of Meſopotamia hither, when he was forc'd away by his Re-'lations; It was I that Crown'd your Father with Bleſſings; and it is I again that 'reſolve to do as much for you: wherefore take Courage, and purſue your Journy 'under my conduct and direction. Jacob was Tranſported with joy at this Viſion and Prediction, and Anointed the Stone in honour of that bleſſed Revelation; making a Vow at the ſame time, to erect an Altar there, and offer Sacrifice upon it, if ever it ſhould pleaſe God to bring him home again: which Vow he performed at his coming back; Preſenting to God the Tenths of all his Goods for an Oblation. And further, for a Memorial in Reverence to the Place and what befel him there, he gave it the Name of Bethel, or the Houſe of God.

Jacob makes a Vow.

Bethel, or the Houſe of God,

Upon this, he went forward, and after a tedious paſſage, he came to Charran, where he found ſeveral Shepherds, young Men and Maidens, about a Well, and drawing water. He joyn'd the Company, deſired a little drink of them; and ſo by little and little fell to diſcourſe with them, whether they knew one Laban thereabouts or no; and if he were yet Living. They all ſaid they knew him, and ſo muſt every body, for he was a noted Man: His Daughter and they fed their ſheep together; and it was a wonder ſhe was not come yet. While they were talking thus, up comes the Daughter her ſelf, with her Shepherds about her. They told Jacob, that was ſhe, and then acquainted the Virgin how that Stranger there had been enquiring about her Father. The Maiden upon the ſight of Jacob, with the Gayety of an innocent young Creature, fell to asking him queſtions, who he was, whence he came, and what was his Buſineſs, and demanding of him in a very obliging way, if there were any thing they could ſerve him in. Jacob was mightily pleaſed, both with the Kinſwoman and the good Grace of her Civility, but ſo much more with the Charms of her incomparable Beauty, that at firſt ſight he fell directly in Love with her; and thus Accoſted her. 'There hath been (ſays he) a great Friendſhip betwixt our two 'Families, at leaſt (if you fair Virgin, are indeed the Daughter of Laban) of a date 'long before either you or I were born; for Abraham, Aran, and Nachor were the Sons 'of Thares; and Bathuel, your Grandfather was Nachor's Son: Iſaac is my Father, 'Begotten by Abraham upon Sarah the Daughter of Aran: and we are nearer yet ſtill; 'for Rebecca my Mother, is the Siſter of your Father Laban, by the ſame Father and 'Mother: ſo that in the degrees of Affinity, you and I are Couſin-Germans; and I 'am now come to Greet you with all the offices of a Friend and a Kinſman toward 'the renewing of that kind agreement of Ancient Date. This brought into the mind of the Virgin what ſhe had often heard her Father ſay of Rebecca; and taking for granted how glad her Parents would be to hear any tydings of that excellent Perſon, the Paſſion ſhe had for the pleaſing of her Father tranſported her to ſuch a degree, that ſhe burſt out into Tears; took Jacob about the Neck and Kiſs'd him, and then holding him in her Arms ſpake to him after this manner. 'Thou art (ſays ſhe) 'the bearer of the moſt agreeable News to my Father and the whole Family, that 'ever came under our Roof. Good man! He was hardly ever well but when he was 'ſpeaking of thy Mother; and I dare ſay, he would not exchange the Felicity thou 'haſt now brought him for any other Happineſs under the Sun, Wherefore (ſays 'ſhe) not to deprive him any longer of the joy thou art to carry him, follow me 'immediatly. With theſe words, ſhe brought him to Laban: where he was made known to his Uncle, ſafe in the hands of his Friends, and thoſe Friends of his overjoy'd at the Providence of ſo unexpected a ſurprize. They had not been many days together, when Laban made an open Profeſſion of the ſatisfaction he had in his Converſation, and that it was ſo great, he wanted words to expreſs it. After this Declaration, his Curioſity made him a little inquiſitive how he came to leave his Father and Mother in their extream Age; and when they could worſt ſpare him; but aſſuring him withal, that whatever he could do in the World for him was at his Service. Jacob upon this, to ſatisfy his enquiry, gave him in ſhort the whole Hiſtory of their Family. 'My Mother Rebecca (ſays he) had two Twin Sons, Eſau and my ſelf. Eſau 'being diſappointed of our Father's Bleſſing by an invention of my Mother's, 'to put Me in my Brother's place to receive it, (my Father being Blind) he looks upon 'me for this as a ſupplanter of him in his Right, as well to his Father's Vows and 'Prayers, as to a Kingdom and an Inheritance which God had Aſſign'd him; and 'for this Circumvention he reſolved to take away my Life. Now, to avoid this 'Danger and in Obedience to my Mother's Command, I am come hither for San-'ctuary, as to the neareſt Relation ſhe hath in the World; and next under God, 'I depend upon your ſelf for my Security. Laban promiſed him all ſorts of aſſiſtance and Reſpects; not only for his own ſake, but as the Son likewiſe of his Dear Sifter, whom he lov'd tenderly at what diſtance ſoever. Laban told him further, that he would at preſent ſet him over his Flocks, and give him Authority over all the Keepers of his Sheep; and that if any time hereafter he ſhould have a mind to go back again, he might aſſure himſelf of a Conſideration and Reward anſwerable to the merit of ſuch a Kinſman. Jacob was well enough content to undergo the Labour, provided he might Continue in the Family; and he told Laban as much, upon condition he might have Rachel in Marriage for his Service: a Perſon that he lov'd, not only for her ſingular worth and virtue, but as the Providential inſtrument of bringing him into the Family; Profeſſing that it was only his exceſs of Love that made him ſpeak what he did. Upon this proffer, Laban ſtruck the Bargain immediately, with joy in the very Face of him; and ſolemnly proteſting, that of all men Living he was the Son in Law he would have choſen. Only he muſt have patience to ſtay a while; for he ſhould be loth to ſend his Daughter ſo far as Chanaan; and truly he had allmoſt Repented ſometimes of ſending his Siſter thither too. Jacob ſubmitted to wait, and ſo bound himſelf to his Father in Law for Seven Years, to ſhew that he had no other ends in what he did, than of Love, Generoſity and Juſtice.

At the end of the Term, and upon the preciſe day, Laban prepares the Wedding-Feaſt, and late at Night in Drink and in the Dark put the Change upon Jacob, privately conveying the Blear-Ey'd Elder Siſter to his Bed inſtead of the Younger; and ſo they lay together. When Jacob came to find how he was impos'd upon, he fell to expoſtulating the matter with Laban, as a violation of Common Faith and Juſtice: Laban only excuſing himſelf under the pretence of a neceſſity without any Malice at all, it being the Cuſtom of the Country, he ſay'd, not to Marry the Younger Siſter before the Elder: but this, ſays he, ſhall be no obſtacle to your Marrying of Rachel; for after ſeven years more, you ſhall have her Barefac'd, and by daylight when you may ſee and know what you do. Jacob, that could do nothing but what his Paſſion gave him leave to do, bound himſelf over once again for the other ſeven Years, and that time being expir'd he had Rachel for his Wife.

Theſe two Siſters had two Maidens put to them by Laban: [a] Zilpah was with Leah, and [b] Bilhah with Rachel; not in the quality of Servants, but yet in ſubjection to them. Leah was in great affliction to ſee that her Siſter had a greater ſhare in Jacob's affection than her ſelf; but liv'd in hope ſtill that the bringing of him Children, which was her dayly Prayer, might gain him over to her: and in the end it did ſo; for being deliver'd of a Son, whom ſhe called [c] Reuben (or Divine Mercy) it wrought upon her Husband's Affections; and after this ſhe had three other Sons; Simeon (i. e. God is Favourable) Levi (i. e. the ſupport of Society) and Judah (that is to ſay, Thanksgiving.) Rachel was mightily in pain leſt the fruitfulneſs of her Siſter might take off ſomewhat of Jacob's kindneſs to her ſelf, and therefore contriv'd the putting of her Woman Bilhah in her place, which ſhe did, and Jacob had a Son by her, call'd Dan (i. e. the Judgment of God.) And a while after this, ſhe brought him Nephthalim (which ſignifies Artificial;) alluding to Rachel's contending with her Siſter for Children by Craft. Leah after this, encounter'd her Siſter in her own way, and put in Zilpah to Jacob, by whom he had two Sons; the firſt Gad (or by Chance) and afterwards Aſer (which ſignifies Beautifying) becauſe they got honour by it.

It was allready full twenty years that Jacob had ſerv'd his Father in Law, in the quality of an Overſeer of his Shepherds and Herdſmen: ſo that it was now high time, he thought, to conſider of looking homeward again, and to take his Wives along with him. But this was to be privately managed; for Laban he was ſure would be againſt it. He was not willing to come to any reſolution however, without conſulting his Wives firſt, to ſee how they ſtood affected to the Journy. But finding them willing, away they went together without any delay: the two Siſters and their Women, and all their Children, and all that belong'd to them, and Jacob alſo, with one half of the Flocks. Rachel took away with her the Images of the Gods of the So ſoon as Laban had the News next day of Jacob's departure by ſtealth, and the whole ſtory that went along with it, he called his People together in a fury, and with a ſtrong Body of Men immediately poſted after them. Upon the ſeventh day in the Evening, they overtook them ſitting upon a little Hillock to reſt themſelves: but being late, Laban and his People betook themſelves quietly to their Repoſe. That night God appeared to Laban in his Sleep, and bad him have a care not to offer any violence or indignity to his Fugitive Son in Law and Daughters, but rather diſpoſe himſelf to an amicable Agreement, and a better underſtanding with them: and do not you Deſpiſe them (ſays the Apparition) for the Smallneſs of their Number; for if you do, I my ſelf will Fight their Battles.

Laban the next day early ſent for Jacob, (who came to him in Confidence) and told him of the Dream he had; paſſing from that Diſcourſe to Reproaching and Upbraiding him. 'You cannot forget (ſays he) that I took you into my Houſe a Beg-'ger, and a Wretch Indigent to the laſt Degree: how Generouſly I Relieved and 'entertained you; marryed you to my Daughters as the higheſt Obligation to an 'inviolable Friendſhip and Reſpect that I could lay upon you: and pray how comes 'it now, that without any regard to your Mother and my Siſter, or to the Allyance of 'Blood betwixt us; the Wives you have Marryed out of my Family; and the Chil-'dren of thoſe Wives that call me Grandfather: how comes it (I ſay) after all this, 'that you ſhould treat me at laſt at the rate of a profeſt Enemy; Seiſe my Goods, 'force my Daughters away from their Parents; carry off the very Gods of my 'Country; which my Fore-fathers have ever had ſo great a veneration for, as 'things moſt Sacred! for you have lay'd your Sacrilegious hands even upon them too; 'a violence, which any honourable Enemy would have forborn: And who is it that 'has done all this now, but my Kinſman, my Nephew, my Son in Law, my Gueſt, and 'the Man that I have fed at my own Table!

Laban Reproaches Jacob.

Jacob made anſwer, that he was not the only Man that had a Natural affection for his Native Country; and that after ſo long an abſence, it was but reaſonable to bethink himſelf of looking home again. As to his Robbery and Injuſtice, he was willing to appeal to any other Judge than himſelf. Now, ſays he, I expected you ſhould have given me thanks rather, for Managing and Husbanding your Eſtate, than think much of the ſmall Pittance I have taken out of it. And pray do not call it a violence neither upon your Daughters; for as there is no Evil intention in the Caſe; ſo that which you miſtake for a force, is only a Conjugal duty, both in my taking them away, and in their following their Husband and their Children. This he ſaid in his own defence, and for the reſt, only turn'd Laban's reproaches upon himſelf: wondering and complaining, that an Uncle and a Father in Law, after the hardſhip of twenty years Service; beſide what he willingly ſuffered for the ſake of Rachel, and more afterwards; ſhould at laſt Treat his Son in Law and Kinſman at the rate of the worſt of Enemies. Jacob had great reaſon undoubtedly to complain of Laban's ill uſage; who obſerving that God Bleſſed Jacob in all he did, would be cajoling him with fine words, promiſing one while to give him all the white Cattle that ſhould be produc'd; another while all the Black; and ſtill as Jacob's part came to be the Greater, he went from his Word, and put it off to another year, in hope to find it leſs then; but in Caſe it ſhould prove otherwiſe, with a Reſolution before hand to depart from his Promiſe.

Jacob Clears himſelf. Gen. 31.

As to the Images, Laban having free liberty to ſearch, Rachel convey'd them away into the ſtuffing of the Saddle ſhe ſat upon, and pretending to have the Woman's Sickneſs at that time upon her, Laban paſſed her over unviſited, upon a preſumption, that in ſuch a condition ſhe would not come ſo near any thing that was Sacred. Upon this, Laban enter'd into a League with Jacob; granted an Act of Oblivion to his Daughters for all that was paſt, promiſing that for the Future they ſhould be as dear to him as ever they were, and all this was confirmed with an Oath. The ſolemnity paſſed upon a certain Mountain, where a Pillar was erected in the form of an Altar, and they called it [a] Galaad, as the Hill of Witneſs, which Name was likewiſe given to the whole Country thereabouts. Jacob's Viſions. Gen. 32.

JACOB went forward on his way toward Chanaan, and had ſeveral Propicious Viſions in his Paſſage, which gave him great hope of future ſucceſs, calling the Place where he ſaw them, the Field of God. But the old Grudge of Eſau would not yet out of Jacob's Head, which made him ſend every where up and down to learn how his Brother ſtood affected to him; beſide ſeveral Meſſengers expreſs to find him out, with a Commiſſion in the Name of Jacob to Addreſs to him to this effect. 'That 'Jacob finding himſelf under his Brother's Diſpleaſure, voluntarily Abandon'd his 'Country, and in Confidence, that after ſo long an Abſence, all paſt unkindneſſes 'are Bury'd and Forgotten, he is now returning with his Wives, Children, Goods, 'and Treaſure, to lay himſelf and all he has at his Brother's Feet; propoſing to 'himſelf no greater happineſs than to enjoy all the Bounties that God in his goodneſs 'hath been pleaſed to beſtow upon him, in Common with his Brother.

Jacob Complements, and Preſents Eſau. Gen. 33.

Upon the delivery of this Meſſage, Eſau in a Tranſport of ſatisfaction Advanced preſently with a Band of four hundred Men to meet his Brother. Jacob was not a little ſtartled at the Number; but put himſelf in a Poſture however, with God's Grace and Aſſiſtance, to defend himſelf and his People in caſe of the worſt. He diſpoſed his Body into two Diviſions; the one to Advance, and the other to Follow, within diſtance of either Receiving, or Seconding the Van, if it ſhould come to an Attaque. When he had ordered his People after this manner, he ſent his forerunners to his Brother with Preſents: ſome for Uſe, others for Curioſity; as Creatures of Burden, and ſeveral ſorts of Strange Beaſts that might be acceptable for their Rarity-ſake. Theſe were to March thin one after another, to make them appear more than they were; the Meſſengers having this eſpecially in Charge, to behave themſelves toward Eſau with all poſſible Smoothneſs and Reſpect; not doubting but by this Gentleneſs of proceeding to Rectify all Miſunderſtandings, if they were not allready Compoſed. It was a whole days work to put Jacob's Troups in order, and at Night they Marched. When they were got over the Torrent of Jabac, Jacob being a little behind, a Spectre laid hold of him, and Jacob wraſtling with this Apparition had the better of him; whereupon a Voice called out to him, and ſaid, 'Comfort thy ſelf in what thou haſt done, for it is not a common Adverſary that 'thou haſt Foyl'd, but an Angel of the Lord. Take it for a Preſage, that your Po-'ſterity ſhall never fail, and that you ſhall never be Overcome. Upon this, he gave him the Name of Iſraël (in Hebrew Strugling.) This was Revealed to Jacob at his own Requeſt, and when he found it was an Angel ſpake to him, he beſought him to ſay ſomewhat further what was to befal him, which the Spectre did, and ſo Diſappear'd. Jacob was ſo Tranſported with what he had heard, that he gave this Place the Name of Phanuel, (or the Face of God.) He had a [a] Sinew of his Thigh ſtrain'd in this Encounter, for which reaſon he would never afterward Eat that part of any Creature; and upon that account we do forbear it alſo to this day.

But when Jacob ſaw that Eſau came towards him with Peace and Chearfulneſs in his Countenance, he went and Threw himſelf at the Feet of his Brother. Eſau in the mean while embracing him, ask'd him ſeveral queſtions about the Women and the Children; and gave him afterwards an earneſt invitation to his Father's Houſe. Jacob excuſed himſelf, that his Horſes and Cattle were Tired out, and not in a Travelling condition: and then Eſau departed to his Habitation at Seir; ſo called from the Hairyneſs of Eſau.

to ſee fine Sights, and the Faſhions of the Place. [a] Sichem, the Son of King [b] Emmor fell in Love with her; took her away and Raviſh'd her, and liked her ſo well that he Begg'd his Father's leave to Marry her: who not only gave his Conſent, but went himſelf to Jacob with the ſame requeſt on his Son's behalf. Jacob was hard put to't what anſwer to give; for he could not in Conſcience marry his Daughter to a Stranger; neither could he refuſe any thing decently to the quality of a Royal Advocate. But upon ſecond Thoughts, he came to a Reſolution, to deſire time to conſider of it: ſo the King went away, little doubting of the ſucceſs. Upon this juncture, Jacob having acquainted his Sons with the indignity that had been put upon their Siſter, and the Requeſt of King Emmor; ſome of them were at their wits end what to Adviſe: others had not one word to ſay; only Simeon and Levi, the Brothers of Dinah by the ſame Mother, lay'd their Heads together, and agreed upon a deſign betwixt themſelves, without ſpeaking one word to their Father of it, which they executed as follows. Upon the next Feſtival at Sichem, late in the Night, they fell upon the Guards, and eaſily Maſter'd them, finding them drowſy and ſecure in their Drunken Revels. They took Poſſeſſion of the City; kill'd all the Males they could meet with, the King and his Son being in the Number, ſparing only the Women; and upon the Finiſhing of this Exploit fetch'd home their Siſter again to their Father. Jacob was Struck with Horror at the Barbarity of ſo Bloody an Action, and highly incenſed againſt his Sons for what they had done; but God comforted him in a Viſion, bad him have a good Heart, and Purge his Tents, and not forget the Sacrifice he Promiſed after his Dream in his Meſopotamian Progreſs. While Jacob was Executing this Command, he fell upon Laban's Gods, which Rachel had ſtollen and Bury'd under a certain Oak, and he knew nothing of it. From thence he went, and Sacrificed at Bethel, where he had that Divine Revelation upon his going into Meſopotamia. He went next to [c] Ephrata, where Rachel dy'd in Labour, and there he Bury'd her, the only Perſon of his Relations that Dying was not Interr'd at Hebron. This loſs went to the Heart of him; but the Child Liv'd, and he gave it the Name of Benjamin, [d] from the great grief it brought to the Mother.

Esau and Jacob divide their Possessions: Idumæa falls to the Former, and Chanaan to the Other.

AFTER the Death of Isaac, the two Brothers kept no longer to their Paternal Estates; but divided their Possessions; whereupon Esau yielded up the City of Hebron to his Brother, and went and Settled himself at [a] Seir. He was Lord and Master of Idumæa and gave it his own Name; that is to say, Edom, which was a kind of a By-name given him upon this following occasion. He had been out a Hunting one day in his Youth, and coming home miserably Tir'd and Hungry, he found his Brother ordering a Soup of Lentills for his Dinner. They looked Red, and the very Colour of them set him a longing, and a begging with great importunity, for a Mess of this Pottage: But Jacob would not part with so much as one drop of them to his Brother, upon any other Terms than the relinquishing of his Birthright, which Esau out of a pure Starving Hunger submitted to, formally Renouncing all the Privileges of his Seniority, with a Solemn Oath. His Youthful Companions made sport with him for what he had done, and Nick-named him Edom; from the Colour of the Soup; (for Edom in Hebrew is as much as Red.) This Name went also to the Country under his Jurisdiction, though the Greeks have Disguised and Softened it a little, by calling it Idumæa.

Jacob happy in Himself and Family.

JACOB was one of the happyest men upon the face of the Earth, and not another in the whole Country to come near him, either for Wealth and Command, or for Well-condition'd Virtuous Children; who wanted nothing to make them great Men, as well for Action as for Councel: for they were indefatigably Industrious, Valiant even to the strictest Puntillo's of Generosity and Honour, and to perfect the Character, endued with a talent of understanding that Crowned all the rest; nay, and so wonderful a Providence it was that attended them in all the Chances and Encounters of their Lives, that their very sufferings and afflictions turn'd to their Advantage, in being made the instruments of Allmighty God toward the bringing of our Forefathers out of the Bondage of Ægypt. Joſeph, the Son of Jacob by his Wife Rachel, was much the Deareſt Child to his Father of all the Offspring, in regard of the excellencies both of his Body and of his Mind; for, over and above the Gracefullneſs of his Perſon, he was no leſs Eminent for an extraordinary underſtanding. This exceeding tenderneſs of the Father drew upon the Son the envy and ill will of the reſt of the Brothers, and this Factious malevolence was much embittered by [a] certain Dreams Joſeph had, that look'd like preſages of his future Felicity and Greatneſs. This he communicated to his Brethren, and no wonder if it ſtirr'd up a dangerous emulation againſt him. The Viſions were theſe.

Joſeph his Father's Favourite. Gen. 37.

The Envy of his Brethren.

His Father ſent him out one day into the Field with his Brothers in Harveſt time to reap Corn; where he had a Dream quite of another nature than thoſe Phantaſtical Images of things that appear to us commonly in our ſleep. He told this to his Brothers upon waking, and put it to them to expound it. Now the Dream was this. 'Methought '(ſays he) I ſaw this laſt night my own Sheaf of Wheat ſtanding upright, and all my Bro- 'thers Sheaves come running towards it, and falling down before it, [b] as ſo many Servants 'would do to their Maſter. There went no great myſtery to the unriddling of this Dream; for they ſaw manifeſtly that it pointed at the Power and Authority which Joſeph in time to come was to have over them, even to the Degree of their becoming Subjects to him. But to their Brother they pretended ignorance, and could make nothing of it they ſay'd: Praying however within themſelves ſtill, that God would avert the Omen: their hatred encreaſing all this while to Joſeph, yet more and more. Soon after this he had another Viſion, much more remarkable than the former, which was ſent from God for the confounding of their Malice. He ſaw in his Sleep, he thought, the Sun, the Moon, and Eleven Stars coming down from the Heavens to the Earth, and doing him Reverence. Joſeph Communicated this Viſion alſo to his Father, in the hearing of his Brothers, (miſtruſting no miſchief from them all this while) telling him that he ſhould be very glad to underſtand what it meant. Jacob was highly delighted with the Dream, as a Preſage of happy and glorious days to his Son Joſeph; and that the time [c] by God's providence would come, when both Father and Brothers ſhould do him Reverence. By the Sun and Moon he underſtood the Father and Mother; under this Analogy, that the Office of the one was to Encreaſe and Nouriſh, and that of the other to give Form and Force: by the Eleven Stars were meant the Eleven Brothers that had their Light and Virtue from above too.

Joſeph's Dream of the Wheat Sheaves; and of the Sun, Moon, and 11 Stars.

Preſages of Power and Greatneſs.

This was no idle Interpretation of Jacob's; but it went to the very Heart of the Brothers of Joſeph, quite contrary to the Reaſon and Duty of the matter in queſtion; for they ſhould have joy'd in their Brother's Good as in their own, without envying thoſe Graces and Benefits to ſo near a Relation, that they would have been leſs troubled at in a Stranger. But their impious Malice was now come to that height, that without any more ado they reſolved to make him away, and this was the courſe they intended to Steer. So ſoon as Harveſt was over, they went with their Flocks to Sichem (an excellent feeding Ground) but without one word to their Father of their remove. When they had been gone a pretty while, and no News or Certainty of what was become of them, Jacob fell into a terrible apprehenſion, leſt ſome Miſchief might have befallen them, and ſo ſent Joſeph to enform himſelf punctually upon the whole matter.

CHAP. III.

Joſeph ſold by his Brethren into Ægypt, where he's highly Advanc'd.

JOSEPH ſet forward upon his Journy according to his Command and Commiſſion, and great joy there was among the Brethren at his Arrival, not as a Brother or a Meſſenger from their Father, but as an Enemy that God had delivered into their hands; and they were for diſpatching him immediately too, without ſlipping the preſent opportunity. Reuben, the Eldeſt of the Brothers, found the Conſpiracy ſo ſtrong and Deſperate, that he employ'd all his Art and Intereſt to prevent or at leaſt to divert it, ſetting before them the Heinouſneſs of the Sin, and the inſupportable Odium that they would draw upon themſelves by an Action ſo hateful in the ſight of God and Man. 'It were an abominable Wickedneſs (ſays he) to take away the Life, even of a Stran- 'ger; but to deſtroy a Kinſman, and a Brother, and in that Brother a Father and a 'Mother too, with the Grief for the loſs of ſo good and ſo hopeful a Son; ----- be- 'think your ſelves (ſays he) if any thing can be more Diabolical. 'is an All-ſeeing God, that will be the Avenger, as well as the Witneſs of this horrid 'Murder. Bethink your ſelves, I ſay, and repent of your Barbarous purpoſe, and 'conſult the meaſures of humanity and moderation; for you muſt never think to go 'through with this flagitious Villany, and Divine vengeance not overtake you; for 'God's Providence is every where, in the Wilderneſs as well as in the City, and where-'ſoever there is a Man there is a God; beſide the horror of a guilty Conſcience to pur-'ſue you wherever you go, and whether it be good or bad to bear you company for 'ever. Or put the caſe your Brother had done you wrong now, would you take away 'his Life for it? when it is our part to paſs over the ſlips of our Friends, even though 'they may have fail'd in their Duty. But what, in fine, has Joſeph done againſt you? 'or if he had, the ſimplicity of his Youth might plead his excuſe; and his Brothers, of all 'men living, ſhould be his Friends and Guardians rather than his Murderers: and then 'the very ground of your Cruelty will be a ſevere Aggravation, even of the Sin it ſelf. 'His Life is to be taken away at preſent, for fear he ſhould be great and happy hereaf-'ter; Nay, and to be taken away by them too that are to go ſharers with him. But 'the dreadful Judgment of all is yet behind, if you proceed to this execrable Aſſaſſinate, 'when God ſhall call you to an account for the Blood of an Innocent, that was ſpilt in a 'point blank defyance of the power and goodneſs of God himſelf; for the ground of 'your quarrel is only this, that God Loves your Brother, and that he Loves God. Reu-ben uſed all theſe Arguments and more, either to deterr or diſſuade them from this accurſed attempt; but when he found them ſo abſolutely inexorable, that neither Humanity, Reaſon, nor Religion could take place, and that the peremptory ſentence was pronounc'd, he bethought himſelf of a certain middle way of qualifying the matter. Well (ſays he) ſince the Death of this Young man is abſolutely Decreed; you have nothing elſe to do but to make the Sin, the Envy, and the Scandal of it is as eaſy as you can; and therefore my Advice is rather to caſt him into the next Pit, and there leave him to Periſh, without dipping your hands in his Blood. The motion was approv'd, and Reuben ty'd a Rope about Joſeph, by which he let him gently down into a dry well, and preſently went his way to look after his Sheep.

Joſeph's Brethren inexorable.

Joſeph caſt into a dry Well.

He had no ſooner turn'd his back, but they had in ſight a Troup of Arabian Merchants (Iſhmaëlites) that came from Galaad with Spices and Syrian Commodities that they were carrying into Ægypt. Judas, upon this occaſion, adviſed the taking of Joſeph out of the Well to Sell him to theſe Merchants, by which means they might be quit of him, and out of Danger of ever ſeeing him again; and at the ſame time waſh their hands of his Blood. This was agreed to; ſo that they took up Joſeph out of the Well, and Sold him to the Merchants, being ſeventeen years of Age, for Twenty pieces of Silver.

Taken out, and ſold to Arabian Merchants. Gen. 37. and 39.

Reuben was Caſting about all this while how he might ſave his poor Brother, and without a word ſpeaking to any of the reſt he went late at night to the Well, where he call'd ſeveral times to Joſeph; but hearing no Anſwer, he preſently concluded that his Brothers had Murder'd him, which afflicted him grievouſly. But when he came to know what had paſſed, he was very well ſatisfy'd with the Proceeding. The next thing now to be thought of was how to excuſe and palliate the matter to the Father, ſo that the Brothers might not be ſuſpected. They Debated this point a while among themſelves, and came in the end to this Concluſion, that they ſhould take Joſeph's Travelling Coat, which they ſtripp'd him of when they put him into the Well; Tear it and ſtain it with Goat's Blood, and ſo carry it to Jacob, that he might think his Son was devour'd by wild Beaſts. They went to the old Man with this pretence, (who had heard ſomewhat allready of his Son's misfortune) ſhew'd him the Coat all Torn and Bloody, (at leaſt, ſayd they, if that were the Coat Joſeph went out in) and ſo took it for granted that he was deſtroy'd by wild Beaſts; for neither had they ſeen him, nor could they imagine what was become of him, as they pretended. Jacob Comforted himſelf till now with the hope he might be taken Priſoner, or poſſibly that ſome gentler ill hap might have befallen him, but upon the ſight of the Blood and the Coat, (for it was Joſeph's Coat he ſay'd.) Jacob immediately Cloathed himſelf in Sack-Cloath, and fell into ſo Inconſolable a Paſſion of Sorrow and Lamentation, that he would not ſuffer either his Son's or his own Reaſon to Comfort him.

Joſeph Tempted to Lewdneſs by Potiphar's Wife. His Exemplary Continence.

Joſeph ſold to Potiphar. Gen. 39.

WHEN the Merchants that bought Joſeph came to Ægypt, they ſold him [a] to Potiphar, one of King Pharaoh's great Officers: who treated him not, in the matter either of Liberty or Dyet, like an ordinary Servant, but with the freedom of a Generous Education; Training him up to Letters, and in a ſhort time advancing him to be Over-ſeer of the Houſe. In this Change of Condition, his Mind and his Virtue were ſtill the ſame, and he gave to underſtand by the prudence of his Conduct, that a wiſe Man will ſtand his ground in all Fortunes. He was a ſtripling of ſo Gracious a Perſon and ſo agreeable an Addreſs, that Potiphar's Wife fell downright in Love with him; making no queſtion, but upon the firſt opening of her mind to him, the Vanity and Ambition of ſo great an Honour would bring him over to her. But ſhe made this Judgment upon Joſeph, more upon the Conſideration of the narrowneſs of his preſent Condition, than upon any reaſon ſhe had to ſuſpect the unchangeable Dignity of his Soul. However, in this Confidence and Opinion, ſhe gave him to underſtand by broad ſigns that ſhe had a mind to lye with him. He begg'd of her upon the very firſt motion, to go no further upon that ſubject; for he could not be ſo ungrateful as to betray ſo kind a Maſter, and to pay him with Treachery and Affront for all the Obligations he had lay'd upon him. He deſir'd her to ſmother that unruly Paſſion, and not ſo much as to wiſh for any thing that it was impoſſible to obtain. He ſhould account it a Glory, he ſay'd, to ſerve her in all Lawful Commands; but for any thing that was Diſhoneſt, he could never ſubmit to it. This refuſal did but ſet her more and more on Fire, for ſhe could not imagine that Joſeph would have rejected her offer. But when ſhe came to find that this would not do, ſhe ſet her wits to work upon another Project. There was a Great day of Merry-Meeting at hand, that commonly brought all the Women of Quality together. Potiphar's Wife made choice of this occaſion to feign her ſelf ſick in; took her Chamber, and lay'd hold of the opportunity of being alone with Joſeph. She got him, in ſhort, into her Apartment, and there Treated him with wonderful Tenderneſs and Reſpect, in words to this effect. 'It would have been much better for you, (ſays ſhe) to have Comply'd fairly with my former requeſt; though it had been but out of 'a regard to the Dignity of the Petitioner, or the exceſs of my Paſſion; and it would 'have ſav'd me the ſhame too of condeſcending to ſome words and expreſſions 'that I am yet out of Countenance to think of: but I hope you will now have the 'wit to Attone for your firſt Errour. If you waited for a ſecond Application, you ſhall 'have it now a little more Artificial than it was before; for I have Counterfeited my 'ſelf Sick on purpoſe to avoid the jollity of the Day; and to ſhew you that I can quit 'all other Converſation for the Love I bear you. Or perhaps you might make ſome 'doubt before, whether I was in Earneſt or not; but this is now to ſatisfy you that I 'meant you no Ill, by my perſiſting ſtill in the ſame mind: wherefore take your Choice 'now, whether you will improve this Opportunity of a preſent Satisfaction in the em-'braces of a Creature that Loves you, and from whom you may over and above ex-'pect yet greater things; or ſtand the ſhock of my Hatred and Revenge, if you ſhall 'preſume to value your ſelf more upon the vain conceit of your own Chaſtity, than 'upon my Favour: and if it comes to that once, do not you flatter your ſelf into a 'fooliſh confidence of ſcaping, with a dry oſtentation of your Virtue; for I will cer-'tainly accuſe you to my Husband of an Attempt upon my Honour; and when the 'word is out once, True or Falſe, you will find more heed given to my Charge, than 'to your Juſtification.

She makes a ſecond Attempt.

This Freak was accompany'd with Prayers, Menaces, and Tears: but neither the one nor the other, neither Compaſſion nor Terror had the power to make any Impreſſion upon his Virtue, for he ſtood firm againſt all her Threatnings, in an unalterable Determination, rather to abide the worſt of Extremities, than to yield to the Lewd importunity of a diſhoneſt Appetite: being in his own Conſcience ſatisfy'd, that no ſeverity could be too much for a Man, that ſhould do ſo baſe a thing to pleaſe a Woman. He was not wanting neither to put her in mind of her Duty, both to her Self and to her Husband, and of what ſhe ow'd to Piety, Honeſty, Cuſtom, and common Fame. 'What ſignifies (ſays he) a Momentary pleaſure attended with a certain Repentance 'upon the Heel of it? A heavineſs of Heart for a thing once done, and an utter impoſ-'ſibility of recalling and undoing it? Perpetual fears of diſcovery and diſgrace? 'what does all this ſignify, I ſay, in Ballance with the moſt ſubſtantial Comforts, and 'the moſt neceſſary Duties of human Life? whereas in a Conjugal ſtate, the ſelf ſame 'delights are all free, ſafe, innocent, and warrantable before God and Man. Conſider 'again, how it would leſſen your Authority, to make your Servant your equal, by a 'ſhameful Participation in one common Crime. And pray, is it not better to truſt to 'a good Conſcience that fears no Light, than to commit wickedneſs in the Dark, and 'ſpend all your days in a reſtleſs dread of being Detected? Joſeph ſayd this, and a great deal more, to try if it were poſſible to doe any good upon the Paſſion of an Impetuous Woman, and to reduce his Miſtreſs to Sobriety and Reaſon. But all this was only more Fuel to the Fire; ſo that what could not be done with Words, ſhe Attempted by Violence; catching hold of his Garment to force him to Lewdneſs with her. But

Joſeph ſtands firm;

and Reaſons the matter with her.

Joſeph's Miſtreſs lays hold of him to Force him.

He breaks looſe and leaves his Coat behind him.

Joſeph had ſuch an indignation for this ſhameleſs Woman, that he brake looſe from her, and ſo out of the door, and left his Coat in her hand. She was at firſt miſerably diſtracted, betwixt the ſting of the Repulſe and the fear of being diſcover'd; but coming in an inſtant to a Reſolution of outfacing the whole ſtory and turning it upon Joſeph, by which means ſhe conſulted her Security and her Revenge both in one, ſhe kept her ſelf cloſe to her Chamber, all in Tears and Trouble, imputing the Paſſion ſhe was in at the diſappointment of her Luſt to the ſcrupulous ſenſe of an indignity offer'd to her Honour. While ſhe was in this Diſorder and Confuſion, in comes her Husband; who, taking notice of ſomewhat very Extraordinary, enter'd preſently into a ſtrict enquiry what might be the matter. 'Alas! my Dear Husband (ſays ſhe) You will not 'deſerve to Live unleſs you make an example of this perfidious inſenſible wretch your 'Man. He has forgotten what he was when you took him into your Houſe; how 'kindly and reſpectfully he has been Treated here, to a degree beyond his very Hope 'as well as his Deſert; the Charge of your whole Family is committed to him; the 'Command of the reſt of your Servants, and the Truſt of all you have. What will 'you think of this Fellow now, that, in requital of all your Bountys and good Of-'fices, could have the impudence to offer at the Violation of your Bed; and to take 'the opportunity of this day of freedom, when you were out of the way, to break in 'upon my Privacy and preſs the enjoyment of his Beaſtly ends? this thankleſs Villain 'that was effectually the Maſter of all other things under your Roof! would nothing 'ſerve him but he muſt have your Wife too? what a Countenance of Modeſty did this 'Wretch put on for a blind to his Maſter, and not one grain of it in his Diſpoſition 'and Nature! Nay further, ſays ſhe, in Confirmation of all I have ſaid, here is his 'Garment too, that I layd hold of when he would have forc'd me, and he was fain to 'leave it behind him upon the ſtruggle.

She accuſes Joſeph to her Huſband.

This Plauſible courſe of Words, and the Tears that went along with them, wrought ſo effectually upon the eaſy credulity and affection of Potiphar, that being throughly ſatisfy'd with the Virtue of his Wife, and reckoning himſelf as good as a Witneſs of it too, there was no need or thought of enquiry or examination, but all taken for granted, and his Wife celebrated for a Woman of a moſt inviolable unſpotted Faith. This was enough to caſt Joſeph into the common Jayl among the moſt infamous of Malefactors.

Joſeph Committed to the common Jayl upon it.

CHAP. V.

Joſeph falſly Accuſed, and Committed to Priſon; and what befell him there. His Interpretation of ſeveral Dreams.

Joſeph's Patience, and Reſignation. Gen. 40.

JOSEPH, in this Condition, never troubled his Head either to make defences in his own vindication or remonſtrances of the truth of the Story; but committed his Innocence to the Protection of the Allmighty, and bearing his Chains with Patience ſupported himſelf with this Comfort, that the Power of God, who knew the Juſtice of his Cauſe, was above that of his Enemies, as it ſoon appear'd in this following Providence: for the Keeper was ſo charmed with his candour and careful diligence in all he did, together with the Comelineſs of his Perſon, that he diſcharged him of his Irons, and by this means of a conſiderable part of his Trouble; allowing him alſo a better entertainment otherwiſe than the reſt of his Companions. It was with Joſeph and his Fellow-Priſoners, as it is commonly with other People in their Conditions. They had their times of talking and ſorting themſelves together, and would be naturally enquiring of one another what this and t'other was in for. Upon this occaſion Joſeph contracted a familiarity with Pharaoh's Butler, a man much in the King's eſteem, though at that time upon ſome unlucky diſſatisfaction he was a Priſoner there. This Butler had a high opinion of Joſeph's Parts and Underſtanding, and ſo took liberty to tell him of a Dream he had, and to conſult Joſeph about the unriddling of it. He was very unhappy, he ſaid, to be not only fallen under his Maſter's diſpleaſure, but perplexed alſo with Dreams and Viſions of a more than ordinary quality. 'Methought I ſaw '(ſays he) Three Branches of a Vine, and a Bunch of Grapes upon every Branch, all 'Ripe and ready to be Gather'd. I preſſed them my ſelf methought into a Cup the King 'had in his hand; after which I preſented his Majeſty with the Wine, and he found 'it excellent. This was his Dream, and he deſired Joſeph, if he had any skill that way, to give him an explication of it. Joſeph ſpake a word of comfort to him, and bad him have a good Heart, for in three days time he ſhould be at Liberty. The King had occaſion for him, and he ſhould have his place again. 'The Fruit of the Vine, ſays Joſeph, is a gift of 'God, for the uſe and comfort of Mankind. God accepts it himſelf in his Sacrifices; 'it

His Keeper kind to him.

Pharaoh's Butler's Dream.

Joſeph expounds it.

'it creates Friendſhips, compoſes Differences, diſſolves Cares and Melancholy and 'turns Sadneſs into Joy. The King, you ſay, received the Cup and the Wine from your 'hand; this imports great Good to you, and intimates that within as many days as you 'ſaw Branches, you may aſſure your ſelf of your Deliverance. Now, ſays Joſeph, when 'you find this to be true, think of me, when you your ſelf ſhall be Free and in Proſperity, 'do not forget thoſe you have left behind you. I am not here a Criminal, but only Pu-'niſhed as for preferring the duty and honour of my Maſter before a Brutal Pleaſure. This interpretation could not but pleaſe the Butler, and he waited cheerfully for the Event.

Pharaoh's Chief Baker was at that time in the ſame Priſon: and finding ſo favourable an expoſition given of the Butler's Dream, he pleaſed himſelf in the hope of as fair an interpretation of a Dream of his own too; conſulting Joſeph, as the Butler had done before, for the unfolding of it. 'Laſt night (ſays he) methought I had upon my Head three 'Baskets, two of Bread, and a third of Fleſh, with other delicacies for a Royal Table. 'The Birds of the Air fell violently upon them, and devoured them notwithſtanding all 'I could do to fright them away. Now the Baker expected ſuch another conſtruction of this Viſion as the Butler had; but it proved the contrary. For Joſeph told him that he could not ſpeak ſo comfortable things to him as he wiſh'd to do. The two Baskets, ſays he, ſignify that you have only two days to Live; and that upon the third, your Body is to be Hanged up, and expoſed to the Fowls of the Air; and there's no poſſibility of avoiding it.

Joſeph's Interpretation of it.

Every thing came to paſs as Joſeph had foretold it; for upon the preciſe day according to his Prediction, the Feſtival of Pharaoh's Birth-day, the King order'd the Baker to be Hang'd up, and the Butler to be Reſtor'd to his Office. When Joſeph had been two years a Priſoner, and as a Man utterly forgotten by the ungrateful Butler, Providence made uſe of this means for his deliverance. Pharaoh had two Dreams in one Night, and the Viſion was expounded to him: he remember'd the Dreams; but forgot the Interpretation of them any further, than that in general they Boded him no good. This ran ſo much in Pharaoh's Head, that he ſummon'd a Convocation of the Learneſt Doctors of the Ægyptians to attend him early next morning, and to expound his Viſions. They met, and Conſulted; but finding themſelves at a Puzzle, Pharaoh grew more out of Humour than before. This occaſion brought the Butler to bethink himſelf once again of Joſeph, and of his skill in that way of conjecture. Upon this he went to the King, and told him of Joſeph, and a Viſion of his own that he had expounded to him, while they were together in the Priſon. And for the greater Authority of his Predictions, he himſelf was Reſtor'd to his Office, and the Baker Hang'd, upon the very day which he foretold. Joſeph he ſaid, was the Servant of Potiphar, and at that time a Priſoner upon his account. He paſſes for an Hebrew, and of no obſcure Family. You may be pleaſed, ſays the Butler, to ſend for him, without any exception to the meanneſs of his preſent Condition; for he will certainly inform your Majeſty in what you deſire to know. Let him be call'd immediately, ſays the King; and ſo the Servants went in all haſte, and brought him. Pharaoh treated the young man very reſpectfully, and taking him by the right hand, ſpake to him Courteouſly after this manner. 'There is a Servant of mine, ſays 'he, that hath given you the Character of a wiſe Man: he tells me that he hath found 'you ſo himſelf, and very Curious in one particular Faculty, wherein I have at this 'inſtant a ſpecial occaſion to imploy you. He tells me you have a ſingular Talent in 'expounding of Dreams, and that you unriddled one for him; pray do as much for 'me, and I ſhall take it very kindly; but beſure you make things neither more nor 'leſs than they are, either for Fear or Favour; but ſpeak the Truth freely, whether it 'makes for me or againſt me. I was walking, methought, along the River, and I ſaw 'ſeven large and well-fed Cattle come out of it, and go their ways toward a Pa-'ſture: after which I ſaw ſeven Lean ill-favour'd Beaſts coming from the Paſture to the 'River: they met, methought, and the ſeven Lean ones devour'd the Fat, and were never 'the fuller for it. After this Viſion I waked; and while my thoughts were at work upon the nature of Dreams, I dos'd upon it, and dropping a ſleep inſenſibly had a more wonderful Apparition than the former, which put me into a great trouble and affright. 'Methought I ſaw ſeven Ears of Corn ſprung from one Root. They were 'ripe and ready to Cut, and ſo heavy-Laden, that their heads bow'd under the bur-'den. Not far from this, I ſaw ſeven other Ears, thin and blaſted; and theſe ſtarv'd 'Ears to my Aſtoniſhment devour'd the other.

Pharaoh's Dream of Oxen.

Pharaoh's Dream of Ears of Corn.

'Joſeph upon this, told the King, that theſe two Dreams, how differing ſoever in ap-'pearance, had but one and the ſame Proſpect. The Ox, ſays he, is a Creature deſign'd 'by Providence for Labour and Tillage. By the ſeven Fat Oxen, and the ſeven Lean ones; 'and ſo by the ſeven Plump Ears of Corn, and the ſeven Blaſted ones, is intimated ſeven Years 'of Plenty to come in Ægypt; and after that ſeven more of Famine; and by the Lean Oxen 'devouring the Fat, and the Blaſted Ears of Corn the Full and Plump ones, is given to under-'ſtand that the firſt ſeven Years will not be ſufficient to ſupply the ſcarcity of ſeven others

Joſeph expounds Pharaoh's Dreams.

'to come: which I take to be demonſtrated in this, that when the Lean Oxen had devoured 'the Fat, they were not yet ſatisfy'd. So that moſt certainly the Extremity will be very 'great. Now God doth not Reveal his ſecret purpoſes to Mankind, only to terrify 'and afflict them; but for a timely warning to them, that they may either provide againſt Joſeph's Advice to provide againſt a Famine. 'or prevent the worſt. So that if your Majeſty ſhall be pleaſed to order the laying 'up of Stores out of your Abundance in the years of Plenty, for a Reſerve againſt a 'time of Need, the following Scarcity will be the leſs Grievous. The King ſtood in admiration at the Sagacity and Wiſdom of Joſeph, and ſo demanded of him, what courſe he would adviſe in the preſent Caſe for the obviating of thoſe Difficulties to come. Joſeph propoſed a Regulation of Expences; for Parſimony, and the Retrenching of ſuperfluities, would go a great way in the work. He was of opinion alſo, for laying up Magazines of Corn in Barnes and elſewhere, to be deliver'd out by allowance, and no more to be diſtributed than what was abſolutely neceſſary for Bread and Seed.

Joſeph highly Advanc'd by Pharaoh. Pharaoh was as much delighted with Joſeph's Oeconomicks, as with his Skill in Dreams; and ſo with great Honour to his Judgment and Councel, he gave him full Power and Authority, as Superviſor of all his Stores, to put his Project in execution, in ſuch ſort and manner as he himſelf ſhould judge meet for the ſervice of his Maſter, and the good of the Publick. Upon the conferring of this Commiſſion, the King deliver'd him his Signet, and granted him certain Privileges of wearing Purple, and riding in a Chariot through all his Dominions. Joſeph went now about his Buſineſs, ſtoring up the Corn wherever he came, and diſtributing among the Husbandmen only ſuch a proportion, as might be barely ſufficient for their ſuſtenance and to ſow their Grounds, without telling any Creature the reaſon of all this.

Joſeph highly in the Kings Favour. The Adventures of Himſelf and his Brethren upon their coming into Ægypt.

Pſonthomphanec. JOSEPH was now thirty years of age, and ſo remarkably great in the King's Favour for his admirable wiſdom, that he gave him the Name of [a] Pſonthomphanec, in the Ægyptian Tongue, the finder out of Hidden things.

Joſeph Marries Aſaneth'e. He took to Wife Aſaneth the Daughter of [b] Potiphera, [c] High-prieſt of Heliopolis, which was a Match of the King's making, and a very great Honour. He had two Children by her before the Famine. The Elder he called Manaſſes, or Oblivion, becauſe Joſeph's better Fortune made him forget the worſe: the Younger Ephraim, or Reſtitution, becauſe he was reinſtated in the Freedom of his Anceſtors.

Manaſſes and Ephraim.

Joſeph's ſeven Years of Plenty in Ægypt were now paſt, and in the Eighth began the Famine, according to his Prediction. The Calamity was a ſurprize, and brought huge Multitudes of People into Diſtreſs, flocking from all quarters about the King's Gates. Whereupon Joſeph was preſently call'd, who took ſuch care for their Relief, that with one Voice, they Celebrated him as the Saviour of the Nation. And the Stores were not open only to the People of the Country, but to Forreigners alſo: Joſeph reckoning upon it, that the Univerſality of Mankind are, in truth, all of a Blood, and that it is the Duty of Men in Proſperity to aſſiſt their Brethren in Diſtreſs.

A Famine in Ægypt.

Jacob's Sons all but Benjamin ſent into Ægypt for Corn. Gen. 42. Now this Miſery did not fall upon Ægypt alone, but ſeveral other Provinces ſuffered under the like Scarcity; and Chanaan in particular: ſo that Jacob being informed that Strangers were admitted to deal for Corn in Ægypt, ſent all his Sons thither to buy Proviſions; ſave only Benjamin the Son of Rachel, and of the Blood of Joſeph.

So ſoon as the Ten Brothers were come into Ægypt, they made their Application to Joſeph, only for leave that they might have Corn for their Mony. Now Joſeph was in ſo great Credit with the King, that there was nothing to be done at Court, but by his Influence. Joſeph knew his Brothers at firſt ſight, though they knew not him; for alaſs! he was taken away Young, and had now upon him the Air and Faſhion of quite another Perſon: beſide that no body could have expected Joſeph either in that Country, or in that Poſt of Authority. Finding himſelf not known, and not ſo much as any ſuſpicion of him, Joſeph reſolved within himſelf to make ſome tryal of his Brothers, to ſee how they ſtood inclin'd: and ſo for a Countenance, he not only deny'd them Corn, but Charged them as Spyes, and Criminals of State. 'My Friends, ſays he, You ſay you are Brothers, 'whereas you are in Truth, no better then a Cabal of Conſpirators, and of ſeveral Na-'tions too. How can any Body believe ſo many extraordinary Perſons, as you un-'doubtedly are, to be only the Sons of one private Man? when hardly any Prince can 'boaſt of ſuch an Iſſue. Joſeph put this upon them to try if he could pump out any thing concerning his Father, and how matters had gone in the Family ſince his time; and what was become of his Brother Benjamin; for he was heartily afraid that they might have ſerved him, as they would have done himſelf. This way of proceeding put them all into a Conſternation: they found themſelves in danger, and the end of a long Journey diſappointed: but ſomething muſt be ſaid however, and Reuben in the name of the Company was the Speaker. 'We are not come hither, ſays he, to pry into matters 'of State, or to attempt any thing upon the Perſon of the King or the Peace of his Go- 'vernment. It is pure want of Bread that hath driven us hither for Refuge, or I might 'ſay, that your Humanity hath effectually invited us, in granting the Freedom of your 'Markets for Corn to Strangers, as well as to your own People, as we are informed you 'have. That we are one man's Children, may in ſome meaſure be Collected from the 'very Reſemblance of our Faces, and it is True we are ſo. Our Father's name is Jacob, 'by Birth an Hebrew. There were Twelve Sons of us that he had by four Women, and 'ſo long as they all Liv'd, things went well enough with us; but one of the number, 'whoſe name was Joſeph, being taken away, we fell into Misfortunes. Our Father Lives 'ſtill a Mourner for that Loſs, and his Inconſolable ſorrows are no leſs an Affliction at 'this day to us, than was the untimely Death of our Deareſt Brother. We come hither, 'under your Favour, to buy Corn, and in our Abſence the Care of our good Father is 'committed to our Youngeſt Brother Benjamin. If it be doubted whether we ſpeak truth 'or not, it is but ſending a Meſſenger to our Father to learn the Certainty.

Reuben ſpeakes for himſelf and his Brethren.

This was Reuben's Speech, for the ſatisfaction of Joſeph, and on the behalf of himſelf and his Brothers. Now Joſeph, finding that his Father and Brothers were ſafe and well, Commanded the Brethren to be all taken into Cuſtody, upon pretence of calling them to a ſtricter account at better Leiſure. At three days end, they were brought to him again; and well! my Friends, ſays Joſeph; 'Here you affirm to me that you are come 'hither without any Malicious deſign upon the Government, and that you are all the 'Sons of the ſame Father Jacob. Now for the truth of all you ſay, you ſhall leave one 'of your Brethren with me as an Hoſtage, that when you ſhall have deliver'd the Corn 'you come for to your Father, you ſhall come back again, and bring a-long with you 'the other Brother that you ſay you have left behind. In the mean time your Hoſtage 'ſhall be well uſed. This, and nothing elſe will Convince me that you are Honeſt Men. Theſe words went to their Hearts; for they Fancy'd themſelves upon the very brink of Ruin; they deplored their ill hap, and were ſtill harping upon it one to another, that all this was only a Divine vengeance that purſued them for their Barbarity to their poor Brother. Reuben took them up ſhort, for the vanity and folly of a late and of an unprofitable Repentance; telling them frankly, that there was no Remedy but Patience, under the Judgment of a juſt God upon a wicked brood of Brothers. Theſe Diſcourſes paſſed among themſelves in Confidence that no body there underſtood Hebrew. Reuben, with this cutting Liberty wounded them to the Souls, Lamenting one to another, why they could not think of this in time, and their Conſciences ſtill minding them that the wrath of God was fallen juſtly upon them. Theſe reflections put the Brothers into ſuch a horror of Deſperation and Confuſion, that Joſeph was fain to withdraw for fear of diſcovering himſelf, being no longer able to forbear weeping. After a little ſtay, he came in again, took Simeon for a Pledge of their return, and gave them a Licenſe for their Corn; but a Servant was order'd under-hand to convey the Money they pay'd for it into their Baggage, which was accordingly done, and ſo they Departed.

Joſeph orders his Brethren to be taken into Cuſtody.

Troubled in Conſcience upon Joſeph's account.

Upon the Return of Jacob's Sons into Chanaan, they told their Father the whole Story of their Adventure in Ægypt; how they were clapt up for Spies, and could not be Believed, either that they were all Brethren, or had left another Brother behind them; ſo that they were forc'd to leave Simeon for a Pledge that they ſhould come back again, and bring Benjamin with them to vouch what they ſayd; begging earneſtly of their Father to let him go without any further Scruple. Jacob was not at all pleas'd with what they had done in leaving Simeon; but then it went to the Heart of him to think of parting with Benjamin, though Reuben offer'd to anſwer with the Lives of his own Children for the others Safety and Return. They were in a dreadful perplexity what to do; and nothing ſtumbled them more, than when they came to find their Money in their Sacks. But their Proviſions waſting all this while, and their wants encreaſing, Jacob was half in the mind ſometimes to venture his Son Benjamin with the reſt; for there was no thought of ever returning to Ægypt without keeping their Conditions. Their neceſſities preſſed harder and harder upon them, and the Brothers importunities were not wanting neither; but nothing could move Jacob yet, till in the Concluſion, Judas, a Man of a Bold and Free Spirit, took his Father to task after another manner. 'Methinks, ſays he to his Father, You are a little too ſollicitous for Benjamin. He muſt 'ſubmit to the will of God, whether he be Abroad or at Home: and we are all to be

'deliver'd to a certain Deſtruction in the loſs of Pharaoh's friendſhip, for fear of I know 'not what that may befall our little Brother: but what will you ſay now, if the Ægyp- 'tians ſhould deſtroy Simeon, when you are trifling and whiling away time about Benjamin. 'Truſt God upon the main, and reſt aſſured, that I will either Periſh my ſelf, or bring 'him ſafe home again. Jacob was at length prevail'd upon, and deliver'd up the Child; gave them double the price of the Corn with them, and Preſents of the Fruits of the Land of Chanaan for the Perſon they treated with: as Balm, Myrrhe, Turpentine, Hony, &c. and ſo with a flood of Tears on both ſides, they tenderly parted: the Father in a deſperate Anxiety for fear he ſhould never ſee his Sons again, and the Sons in as miſerable a Diſtreſs of Apprehenſion for fear this very ſeparation ſhould be the Death of the Father. They ſpent a whole day upon this mournful Subject, and in the end Jacob betook himſelf to his Solitude, and the Sons proſecuted their Journey, in hope of ſomewhat to come that might Ballance their preſent Affliction.

Jacob ſends Benjamin with Preſents. Gen. 43.

So ſoon as ever they came into Ægypt, they addreſs'd themſelves to Joſeph; not a little in pain for fear the Money they found in their Sacks ſhould be charg'd upon them as a Cheat. But upon laying the matter before Joſeph's Steward, and telling him, how that finding their Money in their Sacks without knowing how it came there, they had now brought it back again to reſtore it, the Steward anſwer'd them boldly that he knew nothing of the Buſineſs. Their Hearts upon this were a little more at eaſe; eſpecially when they ſaw their Brother Simeon at liberty. Joſeph, by this time, was come from waiting upon the King, and while they were making their Preſents, he fell to asking them queſtions; as how their Father did, and the like: they told him well. His fears for Benjamin were now over too; for he ſaw him in the Company, and asked them again, if that were the youngeſt of the Brothers, and they told him, yes: whereupon he ſayd no more than this, God's Providence is over all things, and ſo went out; for the Tears ſtanding in his Eyes, he was ſo full, he could not conceal it. That Evening he gave them an invitation to Supper with him, where he Ranged them in the ſame order they uſed in their Father's Houſe, treating them all with exceeding Courteſy, but Benjamin's Portion was double to any of the reſt.

Joſeph Treats his Brethren at Supper.

After Supper, when the Company was Retir'd; Joſeph order'd the meaſuring of their Corn, and bad his Steward put the Money into their Sacks as before, and to convey into Benjamin's Sack a certain Silver Cup that he himſelf had a particular fancy for. This he did to try whether they would ſtand by Benjamin, in caſe he ſhould be charged with the Theft; or leave him in the Lurch, and ſo return to their Father without him. This was all done, according to order. By Break of day the next Morning, they ſet forward for their Journey, not dreaming of any Trick to be put upon them, and mightily pleas'd at the thought that they had got Simeon ſafe, and Benjamin ſo far on his way back again, according to their engagement. As they were Travelling on, they found themſelves all on a ſudden ſurrounded with Troops of Horſe, and the Servant among them that put the Cup into the Sack. This ſurprize Tranſported them into Clamours and Exclamations againſt the inhumanity of ſuch a Practice from the ſame People that had but juſt now treated them with ſo much Hoſpitality and Honour. The Ægyptians, on the other ſide, called them a pack of Raſcals, for returning only Injuries, where they had received ſo many Civilities and Benefits; but they ſhould pay for their Thieving and Roguery in time Convenient. They might put ſhuffling tricks, they ſayd, upon the Butler; but there was an All-ſeeing Eye above that would certainly find them out. They had brought matters now to ſuch a Paſs that there was nothing to be expected but immediately to receive the juſt reward of their Treachery. At this inſolent rate, they Blutter'd and Swaggar'd; but the Servant above all the reſt: inſomuch that the poor wretches, that were ignorant of the Plot, took him to be no better than a Madman. They were likely men indeed to Pilfer, they cry'd, that, when ſome body had put the Corn-money into their Sacks again, had the honeſty to reſtore it; and nothing but their own Conſciences to witneſs againſt them: but ſearching, they ſayd, would do more than fending and proving, and ſo without any more words they Offer'd up themſelves, Bagg and Baggage, to the Scrutiny, and, if any one of them ſhould be found Guilty, they were all willing to ſuffer for it; ſo ſecure did they reckon themſelves in the Conſcience of their own Innocence. The Ægyptians took them at their words, and fell to Searching: but Heaven forbid, they cry'd, if any one of them ſhould be detected, the Innocent ſhould ſuffer for the Guilty. They took them in order, and ſo paſſed from one to another, till they came at laſt to Benjamin: all the reſt were now ſafe and clear, and they made no doubt of finding him ſo too; only they Grumbled at the Importunity of theſe impertinent People, that had been ſuch a hindrance to them in their Journey. Being now come to Benjamin's Sack, out came the Silver Cup; which they that put it there could have found out as well at firſt, if the method of the Contrivance would have born it. Upon this Diſcovery, they all brake out into Tears; extraya-extravagant Actions and paſſionate Lamentations; tearing their Garments, and crying out like men Diſtracted; their Brother was undone, what would become of that poor Brother of theirs! How ſhould they anſwer for him to his Father! and then to miſcarry now too, when they thought all was over! It was not for nothing, they cry'd, that the good Man was ſo unwilling to part with him, and we muſt be preſſing of him to let him go: ſo that our Father is Ruin'd, and the blame of all this muſt be layd at our Door.

Benjamin Seiz'd, and carry'd to Joſeph.

The Officers carry'd Benjamin away to Joſeph, and his Companions went along with him. Benjamin being now a Priſoner, and his Brethren in ſo ſorrowful a Plight, Joſeph looking upon them, Reproach'd them in words to this purpoſe: 'And is it ſo then, 'ſays he, You vileſt of Men; that without any regard either to the good Offices of 'Hoſpitality, or to the Diſpenſations of Divine Providence, you ſhould put ſo ungrateful 'an affront upon your Patron and Benefactor? The Brothers interpoſing their requeſts, that their Lives might be accepted of in exchange for that of their unfortunate Brother. And then they were up with Joſeph's Name over and over again, how happy it was for him that he was out of this miſerable Life; (at leaſt if ſo he was) or if yet Living, how much it was to his honour, that the ſevere vengeance of God ſhould be inflicted upon them for his ſake. They went on, taking the blame upon themſelves, as the Authors and Inſtruments of their Father's Afflictions, in Reviving his old Sorrows with this new one; Reuben, at every turn, reproaching them with the Execrable Murder of their Brother. Joſeph, as upon Conſideration, told them at length, that truely for the Innocent, as he did not think it fair to make one Man bear the Puniſhment of another Man's Tranſgreſſion, ſo neither did he find it reaſonable to diſcharge the offenders at the inſtance of the guiltleſs, or to Puniſh them all alike: wherefore (ſays Joſeph) you may return when you pleaſe, and it ſhall be my care to provide you a ſafe Paſſage; and for your Brother, I ſhall content my ſelf with him alone for an Example.

Theſe words ſtruck them all Dumb, ſave only Judas, who was a Man of Wit and Courage, and the only Perſon that brought over Jacob to part with his Son. This Judas took up a Generous Reſolution, upon this occaſion, of running any Riſque to ſave him, as he had promis'd his Father: and hereupon apply'd himſelf to Joſeph in theſe words.

Judas Expoſtulates on Benjamin's behalf. Gen. 44.

'We cannot but confeſs, moſt excellent Governour, that the Fact now in queſtion is a 'heinous Tranſgreſſion, and a Crime that deſerves Puniſhment. The Guilt, it is true, 'falls only upon one of us, and the youngeſt; but though we are not all in fault, we 'are all ready yet to ſuffer for it. As to the poor young Man, we ſhould give him for 'loſt, if it were not for the Confidence we have in your Clemency and Goodneſs. We 'muſt therefore appeal from the ſtrict Conſideration of the Fact to the benignity of 'your own Nature; and to your Native tenderneſs, from the Heat of your indigna'tion, anger being a paſſion only for narrow Souls: and therefore we make no doubt 'but your Virtue and Moderation will ſet bounds to your diſpleaſure. For, with ſub'miſſion, it would not be for your Honour to deſtroy a ſort of People that voluntarily 'deliver up themſelves to your Juſtice, and deſire only to become indebted for their 'Lives to your Mercy: which in effect would be but the Bounty of giving us the ſame 'Lives over again. For when we were in Diſtreſs for want of Corn, what was it, but the 'Diſpatch and Generoſity of your Relief, that preſerved us and our whole Family 'from Periſhing by Famine? Now to Relieve Men in extreme Neceſſity for want of 'Food, and to forgive an Offender that ſtands in need of a Pardon, is but an effect 'of the ſame tenderneſs, in another way of expreſſing it; the one Saves the Life, and 'the other Spares it. You are now but to Save whom you have Fed for the very 'end of Saving them: which end is loſt, if you do not preſerve the Lives you have 'given; and in ſo doing, we ſhall become your Debtors, not only for the Neceſſaries 'of Life, but for Life it ſelf. This occaſion looks, as if God himſelf, for your greater 'Glory, had furniſhed matter expreſs for your Virtue to work upon; and that the 'world may ſee you are as well Merciful as Liberal, and take more delight in doing 'good Offices to others than in Revenging injuries done to your ſelf. It is, I muſt 'confeſs, a Generous diſpoſition to be Human and Charitable: but there is no Orna'ment that becomes Greatneſs like Clemency; eſpecially when that clemency is exercis'd 'upon the forgiving of Affronts offered to the Forgiver himſelf. Now if it be Praiſe'worthy to paſs over, even the ſmalleſt faults, it is little leſs than Divine for a Man 'to moderate the reſentment of a Capital Crime, and in his own Caſe too. It is not for 'the ſake of our own ſafety that I am thus ſolicitous, but out of a ſenſe of the Anxi'ous tenderneſs of a Father for a Child, which I am the more ſenſible of, by the 'experience I have had of the violence of my own Father's Paſſion, upon the loſs of 'our dear Brother Joſeph. We ſhould not think our own Lives worth the ſtruggling 'for, were it not for the deplorable conſequences that our Ruine would have upon our 'Aged Father when we are gone; ſaving that we have ſome ſort of Ambition likewiſe,

'to become indebted to your Vertue, and to declare our ſelves the Monuments of your 'Fame and Goodneſs. We do not beg for our ſelves, though a company of young 'Creatures that have hardly taſted Life yet; but for an Ancient Father, a Perſon waſt-'ed with Time and Cares; and in his Name only we implore your Compaſſion upon 'his Children alſo, that have all forfeited their Lives by this day's miſs-doing. He 'himſelf is undoubtedly a good Man, and it is none of his fault if we are not ſo too. 'He has a thouſand Griefs and Terrors upon him at this day, for fear of us; and it 'were great pity ſo Worthy a Perſon ſhould ſuffer under ſo Mortal a Calamity. When 'he ſhall hear that we are Dead, and upon what account, he moſt infallibly dyes like-'wiſe. The ſingle thought of the Infamy; nay, the very Rumour of it will kill him. 'We cannot deny, after all this, the provocation to be great, and your diſpleaſure 'juſt; but we may yet Petition, that the Vengeance for it may not fall upon our inno-'cent Father, and that for his ſake you will be pitiful to us. Be pleaſed but to con-'ſider his Age, and his Condition; and you may conclude that when we are gone, he 'neither can nor will Live without us. Conſider but our Father, in your own; and 'then in ours, the common caſe of all Fathers. There is ſomething Sacred in the ve-'ry Name of Father; as being an Appellation, which God himſelf vouchſafes to Aſ-'ſume,: and God the Father of all will certainly Bleſs you and your Poſterity for all the 'good you ſhall do under the Honour of that common Name, and on the behalf of a 'Father that otherwiſe muſt be left Childleſs. Our Lives are in your hand, and it is 'at your Choice whether to give or take; the one you may do with Juſtice, and the 'other will be an Act of Grace; and having both indifferently in your Power, you may 'grant the latter in imitation of God himſelf, without putting the other to the ſtreſs; 'and imploy your Prerogative for the good and preſervation of Man-kind. Now the 'more Lives you ſave, the more Honourable will be your fame, and in preſerving our 'Brother, you preſerve us All; for upon his ſafety depends ours, and we are never to 'ſee our Father again without him: ſo that whatever he ſuffers, we muſt ſuffer too. 'Neither have we, Moſt Illuſtrious Governour, any thing more to Crave, if we cannot 'obtain this, than that we may all be joyn'd in the Puniſhment, as if we had been Com-'plices in the fact; which would be much eaſier to us, than to be forc'd by an inſup-'portable Deſpair to lay violent hands upon our ſelves. I might offer further on his 'behalf, that he is Young, and has not ſeen much of the World; and that under theſe 'circumſtances, it is a very rare thing to put People to extremities. But to come to 'a Concluſion, if we are Condemn'd for want of a Competent Defence, it muſt lye at 'my Door; if Acquitted, we ſhall aſcribe it wholly to your Generoſity and Goodneſs; 'adding this further to your Honour, that in the ſaving of us, you give us a New 'Life, and Conſult better for us than we could do for our Selves: but if it ſhall yet 'be found abſolutely neceſſary that ſomewhat be done for the ſatisfaction of a Rigo-'rous juſtice, I muſt affectionately beſeech you to accept of me in the place of my Brother, 'that I may abide his Puniſhment, and the young Man be ſent away to his Father. 'Or if the Sentence ſhould be Slavery; my Body may be able to do you the better ſer-'vice of the two; and I am ready, indifferently, to ſubmit either to the one or the 'other.

When Judas had ſay'd and offer'd all that was poſſible toward the pacifying of the Governour, and the eaſing of his Brother, he threw himſelf at Joſeph's feet, and all the reſt after him, in a joynt Mediation for Benjamin.

Gen. 45. Joſeph, by this time, found himſelf in ſuch a Confuſion, betwixt Tenderneſs and Natural affection, that he could no longer act the part of an Angry Judge, but order'd his People to withdraw, that he might make himſelf known to his Brethren, without any witneſſes to the Greeting: ſo that when he had them by themſelves, he made a Diſcourſe to them to this effect. 'I cannot, ſays he, but be exceedingly Delighted to 'find you ſo Friendly and Compaſſionate to your Brother: which, I muſt confeſs, I 'was a little doubtful of; conſidering ſome paſt Circumſtances in my own Caſe that 'were not ſo good Natur'd. It was my end, in what I have now done, to make ſome 'tryal of your Brotherly Love upon this occaſion; which I have now receiv'd ſo fair 'a proof of, that I cannot impute any thing you ever did againſt me to Gall or Malice; 'but the hand of God was in it, whoſe Providence hath now made uſe of that action as 'the means of a preſent Comfort to you, in giving us the hope of greater Bleſſings yet 'to come, by the continuance of God's favour and protection. But ſince I am now 'come to underſtand that my Father is in ſuch a State, as I could better wiſh than ex-'pect; and my Brothers the Tender Men that they ought to be: all paſt Injuries are as 'if they had never been; and I am rather to give you my thanks, as the Inſtruments 'of Divine Providence for our common Advantage, than to put you in mind of any 'thing of old Date, which at that time perhaps carry'd a Countenance of Evil: and 'pray let theſe things be forgotten on your Part too, and ſet your Hearts at reſt, Joſeph makes himſelf known to his Brethren.

'without diſcompoſing your ſelves for Errors not to be recall'd, and for Lewd pur-
'poſes long ſince gone and paſt that never took effect; ſince it hath pleaſed God to 'bring Good out of Evil. Go your way's back therefore to your Father, with all 'Joy and Comfort, and tell him the wonderful things that God hath done for you.
'Go, and diſpatch; for fear of any ill Accident his very Grief and Apprehenſion may 'bring upon him elſe before you ſee him, which would utterly blaſt all the hopes I 'have of happyneſs, both in the ſight of him, and in an enjoyment with him of all
'the Bleſſings that I am poſſeſs'd of. Wherefore be gone, and make haſte back again;
'and ſee you bring my Father, your Wives, Children, and all your Kindred, along 'with you; eſpecially at ſuch a time as this is, for I ſhould be loath to have my dear-
'eſt Friends at ſuch a diſtance from me, when there are five Years of Famine yet more
'to come. With theſe words, Joſeph embrac'd his Brothers, who could not but burſt out into Tears and Lamentations, reflecting upon their wicked Practices againſt him:
but nothing went nearer their Hearts, than to conſider how baſely they had dealt with ſo worthy a Brother. They went after this to Supper.

Joſeph ſends his Brothers for their Father, &c.

When the King came to underſtand that Joſeph's Brothers were come, the News was as welcome to him as if ſome great good Fortune had befall'n him, inſomuch that he order'd Wagons with Corn, Gold, and Silver to be ſent, and Preſents for their Father; beſide what Joſeph gave them, ſome for the Father, ſome for the Brothers themſelves; but the beſt of all for Benjamin, and ſo they return'd.

CHAP. VII.

Jacob hearing how Splendidly his Son Joſeph Liv'd in Ægypt, gives him a Viſit there with his whole Family.

UPON the Arrival of Jacob's Sons with their Father, they told him the whole Hiſtory of Joſeph's Adventures: how he was, not only Living, after ſo long and ſad a Mourning for him; but in great Power and Splendour: Pharaoh's firſt Miniſter; and next to the King himſelf, the moſt Eminent Perſon in his Dominions. Jacob made no difficulty of believing what was told him, but enter'd into a Contemplation of of God's infinite Grace and Favour to him, (the late dark Interval only excepted) and ſo without any delay, He and his People haſten'd away to Joſeph.

The Hiſtory of Joſeph's Adventures.

When Jacob came to the Well called the Well of the Oath, he Offer'd up a Sacrifice; but ſomewhat uneaſy within himſelf, for fear the Plenty of Ægypt ſhould Debauch his Sons, and tempt them to Plant there, and ſo divert his Poſterity from returning to Chanaan, and the Land which God had Promis'd him. He had ſome Scruple too, leſt God ſhould ſtrike him and his People with ſome Judicial Calamity, even for undertaking the preſent Journey, without Imploring Councel and Direction from above: or what if he himſelf ſhould Dye before he came to Joſeph? As he lay Drouzing with theſe thoughts in his Head, he fell faſt aſleep; and God appeared to him in a Viſion, calling him twice by his Name. Jacob asked who was there; and the Viſion made him this Anſwer.
'Haſt thou forgotten thy God then Jacob? the God of thy Forefathers that never failed, 'either them or their Poſterity, in a time of Need: that God that made you the 'Head of your Family, againſt your Father's likeing; and when you went ſingle into
'Meſopotamia, bleſſed you with an Advantageous Match, and brought you back again
'full of Wealth and Children: that God that hath ſtill been the Protector and Guar'dian of your Family, and advanced your Son Joſeph, whom you gave for Loſt, to a de'gree of Honour next to the King in Ægypt. I am now coming to be your Guide in 'your preſent Journey, and to foretell you, that you ſhall end your Days in the Arms
'of Joſeph; that your Poſterity ſhall be Powerful and Famous for many Ages, and come
'at laſt to the Land promis'd them.

Jacob Sacrifices at Beerſheba. Gen. 46.

God appears to Jacob in a Viſion.

Jacob, in the ſtrength of this Viſion, marched Chearfully on toward Ægypt, Himſelf, and his People, to the Number of Seventy Perſons. Their Names are a little Uncouth, and I ſhould have paſſed them over; but for the ſatisfaction of thoſe that will have us to be Ægyptians, not Meſopotamians.

Jacob Advances toward Ægypt.

Jacob had twelve Sons. Joſeph being gone away before, we ſhall only give an account now of the reſt ſeverally, and of their Iſſue.

The Children of Jacob.

Reuben had four Sons; Hanoch, Phallu, [a] Aſſaron, and [b] Charmi.
Simeon had ſix Sons; Jamuel, Jamin, [c] Ohad, Jachin, Zoar, and [d] Shaul.
Levi had three Sons; [e] Gerſhon, [f] Chaath, and [g] Merari.
Judas had three Sons; [h] Salah, Phares, and [i] Zarah.

Phares had two Sons; Esron, and [a] Amyr.

[b] Issachar had four Sons, [c] Thulas, Phuas, Jasob, and Samaron.

Zabulon had three Sons; [d] Sarad, Elon, and Jalel.

Jacob had these Children by Leah; who carry'd with her, her Daughter Dinah; and all these together amount to the Number of Thirty three Persons.

Jacob had over and above, by Rachel; Joseph and Benjamin.

Joseph had two Sons; Manasses and Ephraim.

Benjamin had ten Sons; [e] Bolau, [f] Baccharis, [g] Asabel, Gera, Naaman, [h] Ies, Ros, [i] Momphis, Opphis; and Arad: and these Fourteen Persons added to the other Thirty three, make the number of Forty seven. These were Jacob's Legitimate Sons, beside Dan and Nephthali, which he had by Bilhah.

Dan had but One Son; and he call'd him [i] Usis.

Nephthali had Four Sons: [k] Jesel, Guni, Issares, and Sellim; and these added to those above, make the Number up Fifty Four.

Jacob had also by Zilpah; Gad, and Asser.

Gad had Seven Sons; [l] Saphonias, Augis, Sunis, Azabon, Aerin, Eroëd, and Ariel.

Asser had One Daughter Sarah, and Six Sons; [m] Jomnes, Isus, Isuis, Baris, Abar, and Melchiel. Now these Fifteen added to the other Fifty Four, make the precise Number of Seventy, as is sayd before, without Comprizing Jacob.

The Greeting of Jacob and Joseph as Heros.

As they were advancing upon the way, Judas went before with the Intelligence to Joseph, that Jacob was coming, who presently set out to Receive him, and they met at a place call'd Heropolis. Jacob, with pure joy, fell into such a Rapture that they had much a-doe to keep Life in him; and Joseph's surprize was not much less: but his own danger did not hinder him from taking Care of his Father, being the weaker of the two. After this, he took five of his Brethren along with him, and Posted away to the King with the Tydings of their Arrival, ordering the rest to advance by easy Journeys. The King was very glad of the News, and enquir'd of Joseph what Business or Profession they chiefly apply'd themselves to. Joseph answer'd, that their employment was wholly Pastoral, and that they minded little else. He gave this Answer for two Reasons: first, to keep them together that they might be within distance of serving their Father. Secondly, to prevent Strife, and Emulation with the Ægyptians, by Interfering with any of their Commissions; for these People were not allow'd to concern themselves in Jacob Conducted to Pharaoh. Gen. 47.

Flocks and Pastures. Jacob, upon his Arrival, was carry'd to the King, who asking him his Age, he told him, a Hundred and Thirty: and he sayd further, (seeing Pharaoh in some wonder at it) that his Ancestors commonly liv'd a great while Longer; so the King appointed Jacob, and his Sons to go, and Live in Heliopolis, where the King had his Flocks and Shepherds.

Heliopolis assign'd Jacob for his Habitation.

The Famine encreases in Ægypt.

The Famine at this time encreased Grievously in Ægypt, and no Redress. The course of the Nile was stopt that uses to water the Country, and make it Fruitful; no Rain at all, and the Generality of the People for want of foresight utterly without Stores, and no Grain to be had but for ready Money; and when that fail'd, they dealt for Land, Cattle, and Slaves, in Exchange for Corn. By this means all came into the King's hands, while the Miserable Multitude went, some one way, and some another, submitting to any Misery rather than Starving. Only the Priests preserv'd their Freedom, and their Estates. This necessity in the Conclusion made the Peoples Minds as Servile as their Bodies; for they accounted nothing Mean or Scandalous, that would but put Bread in their Mouths, which way soever they came at it.

The Famine abates.

Upon the Return of the Nile to it's usual State, and the Clouds to their proper Office of Watering and Refreshing the Earth, the Famine began by degrees to abate, and every thing to return to the Condition it was in before. Joseph hereupon visited all the Great Towns and Cities; call'd the People together, and put them into Possession of their Lands again, which they had parted with to the King, reserving a fifth part of the profits of them as a Duty to the Royal Prerogative: Charging them to be as good Husbands for the King as they would for themselves, if the Grounds were entirely their own. The Men were so surpriz'd with joy at this unlook'd for Restitution, that they fell presently to work upon Tillage, and Improvement. This Magnanimous piece of Justice did mightily advance Joseph's Interest and Authority, both with King and People: and after this Concession, the aforesayd Fifth part was Settled by an Act of State upon the Crown for ever.

CHAP. VIII.

The Death of Jacob, and of Joſeph.

WHEN Jacob had been Seventeen Years in Ægypt, he Departed this Life in the Arms of his Children, wiſhing them Plenty and Proſperity, and foretelling them that their Iſſue ſhould in time to come poſſeſs part of the Land of Chanaan, which came afterward to paſs. He mightily recommended to them the Generoſity of Joſeph, for his goodneſs, in returning only Friendſhips and Benefits for the moſt provoking of Injuries; and expreſſing more tenderneſs for his Mortal Enemies, than was uſual with others to the beſt of Friends. Wherefore he layd his Command upon them to receive Ephraim and Manaſſes, Joſeph's Children, into their Number, when they ſhould come to ſhare the Land of Chanaan. (But of this hereafter.) Deſiring them at laſt, that his Body might be Bury'd in Hebron. He Dy'd at a Hundred forty ſeven Years of Age, not inferior for Piety and Vertue to any of his Predeceſſors, and by the goodneſs of God he was Crown'd with all ſorts of Bleſſings. Joſeph, with the King's leave, cauſed his Body to be Tranſported to Hebron, where it was Magnificently Bury'd. But the Solemnity being over, the Brothers made a great difficulty of going back again, for fear of a Revenge from Joſeph, now the Father was Dead, and no body left that could Interpoſe to hinder Miſchief; but Joſeph quieted that Scruple and ſo got them back with him again: beſtowing upon them Large Poſſeſſions, and upon all occaſions treating them with the moſt Generous Reſpect imaginable. After this, Joſeph alſo Dy'd, at the Age of a Hundred and ten Years; a Man of an exact and punctual Vertue; of a wonderful practical Prudence, and one that made ſo Modeſt a uſe of his Power, that no Calumny would ſtick to him; No, not ſo much as that of Potiphar's Wife. In fine, he Maſter'd all Difficulties, and was advanced to the Higheſt Station in the Government, and no man either to Envy or to Beſpatter him. The reſt of the Brethren Liv'd and Dy'd happyly in Ægypt too, and their Bodies afterward, by their Poſterity Tranſported to Hebron, and there Interr'd. The Bones of Joſeph were carry'd laſt of all out of Ægypt into Chanaan, according to his own appointment, at the time when the Hebrews went away out of the Country. As to the Hiſtory and Adventures of theſe People, and how they made their way into the Land of Chanaan, we ſhall have another place for't. But it would be firſt ſeen how they came to quit the Land of Ægypt.

CHAP. IX.

The Miſerable Slavery of the Hebrews in Ægypt, for 400 Years. The Birth of Moſes, and the Providence of his Preſervation, by the means of Pharaoh's Daughter.

THE Ægyptians are Naturally a Peeviſh, Lazy ſort of People; abandon'd to their Pleaſures, and their very Souls ſet upon their Profit, let it come which way it will. So that it was no wonder they ſhould caſt an envious Eye upon the Hebrews, whom they found (juſt in a Contradiction to their Humour) a Laborious, Induſtrious People; abounding in Men and Treaſure: a People, in ſhort, whoſe Happineſs they were not able to bear; beſide a Jealouſy they had that their encreaſe in Wealth and Number might make them Dangerous. Joſeph's old Services being now forgotten, and the Government of Ægypt tranſlated into other hands, the Iſraelites were no longer Treated as Friends, but as Slaves; for all Servile and Coarſe offices of Drudgery fell to their ſhare; even to the Degree of putting their Wits to work, to find out new ways of vexation and oppreſſion. They put them to the Dreining of Rivers into Channels; Walling of Towns; Caſting up of Dikes and Banks, to keep off Inundations: nay, the Erecting of Phantaſtical Pyramids; forcing them upon the Learning of ſeveral Painful Trades, and tying them up to a perpetual Reſtleſneſs of Labour. This was their Life for a matter of four Hundred Years. The Ægyptians, on the one hand, making it their deſign to work the Generality to Death, and totally to deſtroy them; while the Iſraelites, on the other, patiently made the beſt of their Misfortunes in all difficulties.

The Ægyptians a Luxurious, Envious People. Exodus. 1.

The Ægyptian Slavery.

While the Ægyptians were thus intent upon the deſtroying of them, there went a Diſcourſe about, that made their malice againſt them yet more implacable, even to the degree of reſolving to Root them out from off the Face of the Earth. There was a certain Scribe, as they call'd him, a Man in great Credit for his Predictions, who told the King that there was a Hebrew Child to be Born about that time, that would be a Scourge to the Ægyptians, and Advance the Glory of his own Nation, and if he Liv'd to grow up, he would be a Man eminent for Virtue and Courage, and make his Name Famous to Poſterity. This did ſo ſtartle the King, that by the Councel of the Scribe he order'd the Ægyptian Midwives carefully and ſtrictly to attend the Labours of all the Hebrew Women;

A Prophecy of a Hebrew Child that ſhould curb the Ægyptians.

An order to drown all the Hebrew Males.

Women; preſerving the Females, and Caſting the Males into the River. He Committed this Truſt to the Ægyptians, as the leaſt likely to be Partial, and upon pain of Death to them and their Family, who ſhould preſume to conceal any Child, or Act contrary to this Command.

The Barbarity of this Bloody Decree look'd ſeveral ways; firſt, as it Depriv'd ſo many Parents of their Children; ſecondly, as it made thoſe Parents themſelves acceſſary to the Murder of their own Iſſue: and then again, as they had in Proſpect an utter Extinction of the whole Race for want of Males to continue it. They were now brought to the laſt Extremity; but there is no oppoſing of Craft and Violence to God's Will and Providence; for this Child, that the Scribe had foretold of, was Born and brought up privately and ſafe, in deſpite of all Precautions, and Liv'd to make good the Scribe's Predictions. The matter was carry'd thus.

Amram's Prayer for the Hebrews. Ex. 2.

There was one [a] Amram, a Hebrew, a Man of eminent Quality and Credit, that found himſelf in a great ſtreight upon this Decree, both Publick and Private; one way, out of a reſpect to the whole Nation that was to be exterminated by it; the other, in regard to his own particular, for his Wife was then with Child. In this Diſtreſs of ſorrow he Offer'd up a Prayer to Allmighty God, that he would look down in pity upon a People that had never departed from his Worſhip; that he would Guide and Protect them, and in his good time put an end to a Calamity that ſtruck at no leſs than the Rooting out of the whole ſtock.

God Anſwers Amram in a Viſion.

His Prayer was heard, and God appear'd to him in a Dream, telling him that as he had not forgotten the Piety of his Predeceſſors, ſo neither would he fail to Reward them as he had done their Anceſtors; incouraging Amram to hope for better things. 'It was I (ſayd the Viſion) that made you ſo mighty a Nation from ſo ſmall a Beginning: that brought 'Abraham, in his own ſingle Perſon, out of Meſopotamia into Chanaan, and (beſide other 'Bleſſings) gave him Children by a Woman that according to the courſe of Nature, 'was paſt Child-bearing, and left vaſt Poſſeſſions to thoſe that came after him: to Iſhmaël 'the Country of Arabia; Troglodytis to the Children of Cheturah, and to Iſaac the Land 'of Chanaan. You cannot (without extreme Wickedneſs and Ingratitude) forget the 'Glory and Succeſſes of all your Exploits when I Fought your Battles: my Bleſſings 'upon Jacob and his Poſterity, who of Seventy Perſons only that came into Ægypt, are at 'preſent Multiply'd to ſix Hundred Thouſand. The Viſion alſo aſſur'd him, that he would provide for the Common good of them all, and for himſelf in particular; for the Child that 'the Ægyptians ſtood in ſuch dread of, and for whoſe ſake all the Hebrew Males were to 'be put to Death: that Child, the Viſion ſayd, ſhould be Born to him; come happyly 'into the World; ſcape all Spyes; have an Education provided for him, beyond what 'could be expected, and in good time deliver the Iſraelites from the Ægyptian Bondage, 'and make his name Glorious to Eternity Far and Near. This, and more, ſays the Viſion, 'will I do for You and Yours; and he ſhall have a Brother whom I will Honour with the 'High-Prieſthood, and it ſhall Deſcend from him to his Heirs for ever.

Amram, upon Waking, gave his Wife Jochabel the Hiſtory of this Viſion, and the Diſcourſe put them both in great perplexity what to think of it: for they were now not only ſollicitous for the Child, but to the higheſt degree Incredulous alſo of the wonderful good things that were to come to paſs: but after a while, Jochabel fell in Labour, and her Pains ſo ſhort and eaſy, that all was over before the Ægyptian Midwives could take notice of it; by which Providence they were brought to have more Faith in the Viſion. After the Child had been kept cloſe three Months, Amram at laſt, for fear of a Diſcovery that would deſtroy Father, Mother, Child and all at once, and likewiſe diſappoint the Prediction, determin'd to leave all to providence; reaſoning upon it after this manner. If the Child could be concealed, (as it was very Difficult to do it, and very hazardous to attempt it) they muſt lye in danger every moment; but as to the Power and Veracity of God, they made no doubt of it, or of his Ability to ſave them: ſo that whatever he had promiſed, he would certainly make good. Upon this Diſcourſe they came to a Reſolution, and framed a little kind of a Basket of Bull-ruſhes, large enough for their purpoſe; twiſted them together, pitched the joynts, and when they had made it Tight, and dreſſed it to hold water; they put in the Child, and ſo Committed them to the River, and to God's mercyful Protection. In this manner it was ſet a-float, and the Stream carry'd it along. [b] Mariam the Child's Siſter was ſent by her Mother's order to watch it on the other ſide of the River, and ſee what became on't. This may ſerve now to Convince the World, that it is not for human Wiſdom to think of defeating the Will and Pleaſure of the Allmighty; and to Inſtruct us, that they, who for their own Intereſt or Security, meditate Miſchief to other Men, though with never ſo much art and addreſs, ſhall probably meet with many diſappointments in the end: as they on the contrary, that Chearfully Reſign up themſelves to the good pleaſure of God, ſhall find Relief, even by Miracle, where ordinary means fail; as in the Caſe of this innocent Child.

Thermuthis,

Thermuthis, the King's Daughter, was at this time taking the Air upon the Bank of the Nile, and happening to ſee ſomewhat paſs floating along the Current, ſhe preſently ſent out ſome Swimmers to bring it a ſhore; and what ſhould it be, but a Fair goodly Child expos'd in a kind of Cradle or Basket, as aforeſaid, which the Princeſs was exceedingly delighted withal. Such was the Grace and Favour of God to Moſes, that he was Preſerv'd, Brought up, and Provided for, by thoſe very Perſons that were in the deſign of Cutting off the whole Race of the Hebrews for his ſake. So that Thermuthis order'd ſome Woman to be call'd to give it Suck: but ſeveral being brought, and try'd, one after another, the Child turn'd away with ſuch an Averſion, that they could not make it take the Breaſt. Mariam being there preſent, and ſeemingly more out of Curioſity or by Chance, than any thing of Concern or Buſineſs, ſhe told the Princeſs that this would never do; for, ſays ſhe, if this Child be of one Country, and the Nurſe of another, it is poſſible the Milk of a Stranger will not agree with it: but if there were ever a Hebrew Woman, the Child would perhaps allow that to Suckle it. That which Mariam ſayd ſeem'd ſo Reaſonable, that the Princeſs order'd her to try if ſhe could get ſuch a Nurſe her ſelf.

Thermuthis the King's Daughter gets the Child a ſhoar.

She went away preſently to look after one, and in a ſhort time brought the Mother her ſelf (whom no body there knew) to make the Experiment. She had no ſooner offer'd it the Pap, but the Child fell to guzling and drawing of it as greedily as could be: and the Princeſs obſerving it, deſir'd Jochabel to take Charge of the Infant; and ſhe accepted it. The Child had a Name given him according to the event of the Providence, and it was called Mo-Yſes: [a] Mo, in Ægyptian, ſignifying Water, and Yſes, as much as Preſerv'd: ſo that putting them together, Mo-Yſes is as much as Preſerv'd out of the Water. This Moſes, beyond all Controverſy, proved in time the Wiſeſt Man in the whole Nation, which was but according to what God had foretold of him. He was the ſixth Generation from Abraham: Amram his Father being the Son of Caath; the Son of Levi; the Son of Jacob; the Son of Iſaac; who was the Son of Abraham.

Jochabel the Mother nurſes it.

Why call'd Moſes.

Moſes the 6th from Abraham.

As he grew up, he ſhew'd a Pregnancy of underſtanding much above thoſe of his Years. Nay, the very Gayety of his little Plays and Sports was not without ſomewhat of Serious and Inſtructive in it: doing every thing with ſuch a Grace, that in his very Child-hood he gave the World to underſtand what might be expected from him in time to come. After three Years of Age, he came to be ſuch a Miracle of a Child, for Beauty and Comelyneſs of Stature, that People would ſtop and ſtand Gazing at it with delight and admiration wherever they ſaw him; and his way was ſo Charming that it wrought upon the moſt unſociable and moroſe of Men: nor did he ſo much as move any where, but all Eyes were upon him; and let People be never ſo buſy or ſo much in haſte, they could yet hardly leave him.

Moſes a Miracle of a Child.

So it was, in fine, that Thermuthis, out of a pure affection to the Child, and wanting Iſſue of her own, took a Reſolution to Adopt him for her Son; carry'd him to her Father, and told him that ſhe came to Preſent him with a Succeſſor, in caſe he ſhould want one. "This, ſays ſhe, is the Sweeteſt Towardly Child that ever was Born. I have "brought it up my ſelf, and it was the bounty of the River Nile that deliver'd it into my "Arms. This Child do I intend to Adopt, and make your ſelf a Preſent of it for Your "Succeſſor. With theſe words ſhe gave the Child into the hands of her Father. The King receiv'd him and with an Affectionate Tenderneſs, preſſing him toward his Heart: took off his Crown to Gratify his Daughter, and placed it upon the Childs Head; who wantonly turning it up and down, the Crown fell to the Ground, the Child, after that, Trampling upon it with his Feet. This Paſſage was look'd upon as an Ill Omen to the King and his Government: inſomuch that the Scribe (being then at hand) Bawl'd out to have the Boy kill'd; for that is the Child, ſays he to the King, that I foretold you would be the Deſtruction of Ægypt, and he has now Confirm'd the Prophecy by the Affront he has put upon your Government, in Treading your Crown under his Feet. This is He, in fine, by whoſe Death alone you can promiſe your ſelf to be ſecure: and take but him away once, the Hebrews have nothing more to hope for, nor the Ægyptians to fear. Thermuthis, upon this Outcry, took him inſtantly away without any oppoſition from the King; it being God's will for the good of Moſes, that he ſhould not heed it. The Princeſs gave him all the Advantages of a Generous and a Polite Education, which put the Hebrews in hope of ſome great good was to betyde them. The Ægyptians on the other ſide, were as Jealous of Miſchief; but having no proſpect of any Succeſſor to the Crown that they could hope to be much the better for, the Bloody deſign fell to the Ground.

CHAP. X.

The Warr of Moſes with the Æthiopians.

THUS was Moſes Born, and brought up; and ſtill, as he advanc'd further into the World, he gave every day more and more proofs of his Character and Courage, and of what Conſequence his Valour and Conduct might be, either to his Friends, or his Enemies. As for Example.

The Æthiopians break in upon the Ægyptians.

They put them to the Rout, and over-run their Country.

The Æthiopians made an Inroad upon the Borders of Ægypt, Rifling and Spoiling that part of the Country. The Ægyptians Stomach'd the Affront, and March'd out againſt them with an Army to take their Revenge, both for the Diſhonour and for the Injury. It came to a Battle, and the Ægyptians were Routed; ſome Kill'd in the Action, and others ſhamefully Beaten home again. The Æthiopians were ſufficiently Puffed up with this Succeſs, and follow'd the Blow ſo cloſe, that they were not without ſome hope of Overrunning even their whole Country. They Burnt and Ravag'd without Controul; took Booty in abundance, and Carry'd all before them without Reſiſtance: inſomuch that they March'd to Memphis it ſelf, and ſo to the Sea, and all without Oppoſition. The Ægyptians were hard Preſs'd, and in this Extremity had Recourſe to their Divines and Oracles, what they had beſt to do. The Anſwer was, that they ſhould call in a certain Hebrew to their Aſſiſtance. The King, forthwith upon this, tells his Daughter that he was reſolv'd to Levy an Army againſt the Æthiopians upon this occaſion, and that he ſhould be glad to have Moſes in the Head of it. The Princeſs promis'd to do her part toward the engaging of him, as a thing of great importance to her Father's Service; but Binding him under a Sacred Oath before hand, that no Malicious Practice ſhould be Attempted upon the Perſon of Moſes; caſting it in the teeth of the Prieſts, how great a ſhame it was, firſt to Contrive and Adviſe the Death of him, and then moſt wretchedly to implore his Friendſhip.

Moſes Marches againſt the Æthiopians in the Head of an Army.

Moſes was eaſily prevail'd upon, both by Thermuthis and the King, to undertake this Commiſſion, which was highly pleaſing to the Holy Men of both ſides too. The Ægyptians flatter'd themſelves, firſt with the hope of Victory under his Conduct, and then with the likelyhood of an opportunity, when their own work was done, to Deſtroy Moſes. The Hebrews, on the other ſide, delighted themſelves with the thought, that under the Command of ſo great a General, they might one day find themſelves in condition to ſhake off this Ægyptian Yoak. Moſes bethought himſelf upon this Expedition how he might come to Attack the Enemy at unawares. The Paſſage over Land was horribly infeſted with Serpents; many of them Fierce and Venemous, Terrible to the very ſight, and ſeveral ſorts among them that are not to be found any where elſe: ſome with Wings, that lye upon the Catch, and are as Mortal in the Air, as upon the Ground. This way was ſo deadly hazardous, that all People were againſt the venturing of an Army through it: ſo that for that very reaſon, he rather choſe the Inland Paſſage, than that by the Nile; and this he did upon a true Judgment of the Reaſon of the thing. Moſes was only in the firſt place to provide againſt the Perils of this deſperate Paſſage, which he did by this wonderful ſtratagem. The Bird Ibis is a Mortal enemy to all ſorts of Serpents: they fly from the purſuit of it as from Deer, till they are overtaken and devour'd. This Bird is only fierce to thoſe Inſects, and gentle to all other Creatures. I ſhall need ſay no more of it at preſent; for the Greeks are very well informed in this Hiſtory. Now Moſes's invention, to ſecure his Army againſt theſe Creatures, was to carry with him ſo many of theſe Birds in Cages of Bull-ruſhes to clear the way for him.

The Paſſage infeſted with Serpents.

Moſes deſtroys the Serpents with his Ibis.

Moſes was no ſooner Advanced to this Dangerous Quarter, but he let looſe his Birds upon the Serpents, as againſt ſo many Enemies, and under their Protection went forward without any harm or interruption. So that Puſhing hard to overtake the Æthiopians, he came up with them, before they were aware; Fought and Defeated them: and having Cut off their Retreat into Ægypt, he forc'd them back again to their own Home, deſtroying a great many of their Towns and Cities, and committing Terrible Slaughter upon their People.

Surprizes the Æthiopians, and Ravages the Country.

This Victory of Moſes put New Life and Mettle into the Ægyptians, while the Æthiopians, on the other hand, had nothing but Death, Deſtruction, and Slavery before their Eyes. They were at laſt driven into Saba, the Metropolis of Æthiopia, which Cambyſes afterward called by the name of Meroë, having a Siſter of that Name. Moſes ſat down before this Place, though in all appearance impregnable, being ſurrounded by the Nile, and two other Rivers, [a] Aſtapus and Aſtabora, falling in to ſtrengthen it; which made the Paſſage ſo much the more difficult: beſide that ſtanding in an Iſland, and being encompaſs'd with a ſtrong Wall, it is likewiſe Fortify'd with Ramparts, and other works of Defence, to ſecure it from any Attacks or Inundations from the River.

Moſes was not at all pleaſed with this Siege; for the Army lay Idle, and there was no Forcing the Enemy to Blows: but while this paſt, there happen'd a very Extraordinary Encounter. The King of Æthiopia had a Daughter he called Tharbis, who had the Fortune once to ſee and to obſerve Moſes with his Sword in his hand, behaving himſelf with great Honour and Bravery under the Walls of the Town. She was ſo Infinitely taken with the Courage and Action of the Man, looking upon him alſo as the Ballance of the two Kingdoms, having recover'd the Ægyptians when they were at the loweſt, and at the ſame time humbled the Æthiopians in the very Height of their Victories, that upon all this together the Princeſs fell violently in Love with him; and her Affection growing upon her ſtill more and more, ſhe brake her mind at laſt to ſome Particular Confidents ſhe had, and ſent them over to Moſes to offer her ſelf in Marriage to him. Moſes agreed to it, but upon this Condition, (which was Ratify'd with an Oath too) that upon delivering the City, the Marriage ſhould be Conſummated, and it was ſcarce ſooner ſayd than done: but there was a great ſlaughter made however of the Enemy: ſo that they had now only to give God thanks; and Celebrate the Nuptials and that being done, the Army of the Ægyptians went home again Victorious.

CHAP. XI.

The ungrateful Ægyptians Practice upon the Life of Moſes, who Flyes from Ægypt to Madian.

BUT ſo far were theſe ungrateful wretches from acknowledging the Benefits they had receiv'd from their Deliverer and Preſerver, that they returned him only a Mortal Jealouſy and Hatred; extending even to foul Practices upon his Perſon, in requital. They were afraid the Reputation and Intereſt he had acquir'd by his mighty Atchievements might perhaps put him in a Condition to ſet up for himſelf: and ſo to give a ſtop to his Carriere, they Exhibited an information of Murder againſt him, which the King himſelf was well enough content to entertain; partly out of Envy to the Fame of his Valour and Wiſdom, and partly for fear of that Deſtruction, which the Prieſts and Scribes were ſtill Buzzing in his Ears; for they never left ſpurring him on to Miſchief, till in Concluſion, they brought the King himſelf over into the Plot. Moſes, in fine, was certainly deſign'd for Death, and he ſcaped it ſo narrowly too, that if by Providence he had not got ſome Inkling of the Deſign, juſt when he did, and in that inſtant ſlipt out of the way, he had undoubtedly Periſh'd. He heard the ways were layd, and therefore he was forc'd to take his Flight through a Deſert, where he might reaſonably preſume no body would look after him. He went his way without finding any thing to Eat upon his Journey: ſo that there was no remedy for Hunger but Patience. In this Condition he paſs'd Travelling forward, till he came about Noon within a little of [a] Madian, a City upon the Coaſt of the Red Sea, that took it's Name from one of the Sons of Abraham by Chetura. He was now come within ſight of the Town, and down he ſat by a Fountain, there to Refreſh and Reſt himſelf. In this place there happen'd an Accident that took it's Riſe from ſomewhat of the Cuſtom of the Country; and it gave Moſes an occaſion not only of ſhewing his Reſolution and Juſtice; but, as it fell out, of making his fortune alſo. Water is ſo ſcarce in that Country, that happy is the Shepherd can get firſt in the Morning to the Fountain, before it be drawn dry and not enough left for his Cattle. At this time, there ſtood by the Fountain Seven Maiden Siſters, the Daughters of [b] Raguel, a Prieſt, and a perſon of great Reputation in that Quarter. Theſe Maids had their Father's Flocks under their Care (which is Commonly the Women's Buſineſs among the Troglodytes) and when they had taken their Proportion, they empty'd it into Troughs, the better to divide it among their Sheep; but ſome Shepherds coming up at the ſame time, they forced the Virgins away from their Station, and went to take the water to themſelves. This was ſo Brutal, and ſo unmanly an Indignity to be put upon Women, that Moſes had no patience either for the Men that offer'd the wrong, or for the injuſtice it ſelf. So he drove the Shepherds away, and help'd the Virgins, as it well became him to do. The Daughters had ſo Generous a Senſe of this Civility and Obligation, that upon returning to their Father, they gave him the whole Story at length, both of the Shepherds Rudeneſs and Violence, and of the Strangers Courteſy and Reſpect: joyning in a requeſt to their Father that he would be pleaſed to take ſome notice of the favour they had received. The good Nature and Gratitude of the Daughters was ſo highly approv'd by the Father, that he Commanded them to bring the Stranger to his Houſe, that he might make him ſome acknowledgment ſuitable to his Deſert. Moſes being brought accordingly, the Father told him what a Character his Daughters had given of him, and how much they were all indebted to him for his Aſſiſtance and Protection. He had a great admiration for his Virtue, he ſayd, and would give him very ſpeedily to underſtand that he had not caſt away a Reſpect upon an ungrateful Perſon; for he ſhould not be long in his Debt. Upon this Mountain there appeared a wonderful Prodigy: a Fire ſeen in a Buſh, the Buſh burning, the flame fierce and violent, and yet neither leaves, flowers, nor branches Blaſted or Conſum'd. The very Spectacle it ſelf and the Surprize of it ſtruck Moſes with Aſtoniſhment; but he was much more Amazed when he heard a Voyce out of the Fire calling him by his Name and ſpeaking to him; How durſt you preſume (ſays the Voyce) to ſet Foot upon this Ground, where never any man Living Trod before you, out of a Veneration to the very Holyneſs of the Place? Commanding Moſes to withdraw himſelf from the Fire, and to reſt content with what he had ſeen, and what he was thought worthy of, as the Righteous Offspring of ſo many Glorious Anceſtors; charging him over again to carry his Curioſity no further. The Voyce foretold him, that through God's Aſſiſtance his

But be ſure to remember, that ſo ſoon as ever you ſhall have brought the Hebrews out of Ægypt you offer up a Sacrifice of Thankſgiving in this very Place. Thus ſayd the Voyce that ſpake to Moſes out of the Fiery Buſh.

The Prodigy of the Viſion gave Moſes a frightful Amazement, but the Voyce much

Or otherwiſe, ſuppoſing that I had Intereſt enough to draw them after 'me, who ſhall Compell Pharaoh to let them go yet, when ſo great a part of the Ægyp-'tians happyneſs and revenue depends upon their Labour? The Voyce Commanded him again to reſt ſatisfy'd upon the whole matter, promiſing to be with him upon all occaſions: and that if there were need of words, the Faculty of perſwaſion ſhould be put into manded to take fair Water, and throw it upon the Ground, where it ſeem'd to be turn'd into Blood. Moſes ſtanding agaſt at theſe Miraculous operations, God Commanded him to caſt himſelf wholly upon him, and to depend upon the aſſiſtance of an Allmighty power, which ſhould enable him alſo to work the ſame Miracles, and give him the Credit of a Perſon acting by a Divine Commiſſion, and in Obedience to the will of God.

Upon this deliberation, God Commanded Moſes away immediately for Ægypt, and to clearer than the Certainty of the Grounds he went upon. He made it his Petition yet, that he might have the ſame power of working Miracles continu'd too in Ægypt, which he had exercis'd here: with this further ſupplication; that God would reveal unto him the Name of that Infinite Power which he had ſeen and heard, to the end that in his Sacrifices, and Invocations, he might know more explicitely under what appellation to offer up his Addreſs. God was pleaſed to grant him his Requeſt, but it is a Name that was never known, nor heard of before, and I dare not ſo much as mention it. Moſes had the Gift of working Miracles, not only for this particular time, but ſo often as there ſhould be occaſion for it: ſo that without any doubt at all of the Certainty of the Revelations and Predictions from the Buſh, or of the aſſurances of a Divine aſſiſtance to go along with him, he ſettled his thoughts in a Firm Confidence of Living to ſee the happy deliverance of the Hebrews, and the utter Cónfuſion of their Ægyptian Enemies.

CHAP. XIII.

Upon the News of Pharaoh's Death, Moſes and Aaron go into Ægypt, to the New King.

MOSES had News by this time of the Death of that Pharaoh that Hunted him out of the Country; ſo he pray'd Raguel's leave to return to his Friends and Relations in Ægypt, for their common good. His deſire being granted, he took his Wife [a] Zipporah, the Daughter of Raguel, and his Children by her, [b] Gerſhom and Eleazar, and diſpatch'd away with them into Ægypt. Now Gerſhom ſignifies a Foreigner, and the other, the Help of God; becauſe it was by the Aid of Divine Providence that Moſes ſcap'd the ſnare the Ægyptians had layd for him. By the time that he was gotten near the Borders, his Brother Aaron, by God's direction, came to him. Upon their meeting, Moſes gave him an account at large of the wonders upon the Mount, and of all the Commands, Inſtructions, and Revelations that he had received from God. He was met upon the way a little further, by great Numbers of the Principal Men among the Hebrews, that upon notice of his approach came out to bid him welcome. They had ſome Diſcourſe together, but Moſes finding that bare words would not do his work, he was fain to have Recourſe to his gift of Miracles, in proof of his Authority, Power, and Commiſſion; appealing alſo to their own Eyes and certain knowledge, upon the wonders that he wrought. This evidence did ſo abſolutely Confirm, as well as it Amazed them, that they made no longer any doubt but it was a Token of Aſſurance from Heaven, that God would provide for the Relief and Security of his People by ſome extraordinary means.

Moſes having brought the Hebrews over to him ſo far now, as to promiſe him all Reſpect and Obedience for the future, (beſide what the Love and Hope of gaining their Liberty might draw from them) he went after this directly to the New King; minded him of the Services he had done the Ægyptians againſt the Æthiopians, upon that Ravaging and Contemptuous Inroad they had made upon his Country; the Toils and Hazards he had undergone, and the Care he had taken to manage the War for the Advantage of the Ægyptians, as if they had been his own Country men; and ſo he paſs'd on to the unſuitable Returns they had made him for theſe good Offices. He told him likewiſe of the Viſion upon Mount Sinai, and very particularly what God had ſayd to him, and what ſigns he had given him by Miracles and Revelations, to fix him in a firm belief of all his Promiſes; beſeeching Pharaoh, not to oppoſe God's will by a fruitleſs Infidelity.

Moſes moves the New King on behalf of the Hebrews.

Pharaoh turn'd all theſe things to Ridicule. Moſes, for his better ſatisfaction, did all thoſe Miracles over again before him, that he had wrought upon Mount Sinai: which put Pharaoh into a violent outrage of Paſſion and ill Language. 'You, ſays Pharaoh; a 'Scandalous Runagate! Firſt you ſhew'd Ægypt a fair pair of Heels to ſave your ſelf; 'and you are now come back again to juggle the People out of their Wits with your ex-'ploits of Slight of hand and Magick. You take upon you (ſays Pharaoh) as if you a-'lone, forſooth, were Skill'd in this Divine Myſtery; and value your Reputation 'upon that idle Pretence, at ſuch a rate, as if the Multitude were to fall down and wor-'ſhip. But after all this Vanity and Oſtentation, my Prieſts, ſays Pharaoh, I would have 'you to know, can do all your feats after you. So the Prieſts were call'd, and bid to throw down their Rods, which was done, and they were immediately turned into Serpents. This does not move me at all (ſays Moſes) for I am neither a Stranger to the Addreſs of the Ægyptians, nor a Deſpiſer of them; but I may well affirm that the operations I perform are as much more Excellent than theirs, as the Power of God is above that of their Magick, or things Divine more Illuſtrious than Human; and I ſhall make it inſtantly appear that what I doe is not a Fancy of impoſing illuſions upon a Credulous Multitude, under the Reſemblance of Truth; but the very Power of an Omnipotent God; which will riſe in Judgment againſt thoſe Unbelievers, that ſhall ſhut their Eyes againſt ſo clear an evidence. With theſe words, he threw his Rod upon the Ground, and Commanded it to become a Serpent; it did ſo, and while the Magician's Serpents were winding themſelves upon the Earth, Moſes's Serpent devour'd their Serpents one after another; and then when it was return'd to it's former ſhape, Moſes took it up again.

Moſes's Rod devours the Enchanter's Rods. Ex. 7.

The King was ſo far from being the better for this Miracle, that inſtead of admiring the power by which it was wrought, he burſt out into Indignation at the Fact; Checkt Moſes, and ſtill went on ſiding with the Ægyptians; and at the ſame time, ordering the Officers and Overſeers, not only to keep the Hebrews to their work, but to encreaſe their Task: which was forthwith done by withdrawing their former allowance of Straw toward the making of Brick; ſo that they were fain to work all Day, and in the Night fetch Straw, which doubled their Labour.

Pharaoh doubles the Hebrews Task. Ex. 5.

Moſes was not one jot diſcourag'd at theſe hard Words and Oppreſſions, but ſtood firm both againſt the King's Diſpleaſure and the Grumblings of his own People, who would needs perſwade him to be quiet; for ſtirring, they ſaid, did but make things worſe. But the Heart of Moſes was ſet upon the Liberty of his Country Men. Wherefore he went again to the King, to beg leave for the Hebrews to go to Mount Sinai, and offer Sacrifice to God as he had Commanded them: telling Pharaoh alſo, 'that there 'was no oppoſing God's will; wherefore he ſhould do well not to ſeem to deſpiſe his 'Favour, but rather let the People go, for fear of drawing thoſe Judgments upon his 'own Head another day, which do certainly attend the Unbelievers and the Diſobedi-'ent. In ſuch a caſe, the very Earth and the Air, he ſaid, would Fight againſt him: his 'Women would be Barren, and all the Elements would Conſpire to avenge God's Cauſe 'upon him: all things would go Croſs with him, and no avoiding it, even though 'the Hebrews ſhould leave him, unleſs it were with Pharaoh's Licenſe and Friendſhip: 'and rather than fail, God himſelf would bring it about at laſt, if Pharaoh would not.

The Ten Plagues of Ægypt.

Pharaoh is hardened. Ex. 4.

THE King gave no heed at all to what Moſes ſayd, and upon this Hardneſs and Contempt, the Ægyptians fell into miſerable Calamities; wherein I ſhall be very Particular, both for the Novelty ſake, and to ſhew alſo that the Predictions of our Prophet were not Idle. Beſide, that finally, it is for the good of Mankind to know theſe things, both for their Caution and Inſtruction, that people may keep clear of Crying and Provoking Sins, that bring down dreadful Judgments upon Mankind.

The Plagues of Ægypt.

1. The River turn'd into Blood. Ex. 7.

In the firſt place, the Water of the River Nile was turn'd to Blood; which was the only Water they had to Drink: and it was not ſo in Colour only, but it took thoſe with Gripes immediately that were forced to make uſe of it. Thus it was only to the Ægyptians; but to the Hebrews, Sweet and Potable as at other times. This Miracle put the King to his wit's end; ſo that for fear of a total Deſtruction, he gave the Hebrews leave to be gone. So ſoon as the preſent Evil was over, he repented of what he had promis'd, and recall'd his word. God was ſo incenſed againſt him for his Falſeneſs and Ingratitude, after the Plague was removed from him, that he preſently viſited Ægypt with another Judgment; which was, ſuch Swarms or Shoals of Frogs amongſt them, that they Cover'd the Earth, Choak'd up the River, and ſo Corrupted the Water that it was almoſt Death to drink it; the dead Frogs being turn'd to Mud, and others produced out of that Putrefaction. They crawl'd into their Bed-Chambers, Cups, Diſhes, Meat, and Drink; nothing ſcap'd them, and wherever they came, a Poyſonous ſtink went along with them. This fell ſo heavy upon the Ægyptians, that Pharaoh ſent for Moſes a ſecond time, and told him that he might now take away his Hebrews; and be gone with them whither he pleaſed. The word was no ſooner paſs'd, but both Land and Water were all Clear'd of the Frogs, and every thing in it's former ſtate. This Viſitation was no ſooner taken off than forgotten; for Pharaoh detain'd the People ſtill, pretending that what he promis'd was out of Fear, and conſequently not Binding; for his Will never conſented to it: which looked as if he had done it on purpoſe to make a further Experiment. This Unkingly Breach of Faith was follow'd with a Judgment of Lice: The Bodies of the People bred them, and they were all Cover'd with them, Gnawing and Tearing intolerably, and no Remedy; for Baths and Oyntments did no good. Pharaoh was ſo Confounded at this New Plague, what with the Danger, the Scandal, and the Naſtyneſs of it, that he was half ſorry for what he had done; for for he gave the Hebrews permiſſion to go their way; but ſo ſoon as the Rod was off again, he demanded their Wives and Children as Hoſtages for their return. Pharaoh promiſes and fails again as before.

This was a Practice that exaſperated God more than the reſt; for it lookt as if they thought to have over-reach'd Providence, and as if Moſes, not God, had Puniſh'd the Ægyptians for oppreſſing the Hebrews. Wherefore God ſent numberleſs Swarms of Flyes and Inſects, and ſuch varieties of them as had never been ſeen before. They fill'd the whole Country, deſtroy'd the People, and cover'd the Ground ſo that there was no Tilling of it, and they that ſcap'd preſent deſtruction were in danger of being taken away by Diſeaſes that were bred out of a Poyſonous Corruption: but all this was not yet enough to bring him to a Senſe of his Sin, and a Complyance with the Will of God: but he was now for letting ſome of the Women and their Husbands go, but keeping back their Children. 4. The Plague of Flyes. Pharaoh falſifies again.

The Wiſdom of God did not want variety of Plagues in abundance, and worſe than the former, to inflict upon the whole Nation for the Wickedneſs of an Incorrigible Obſtinate Prince. So he Viſited the Ægyptians with a Plague of inward Ulcers, which Carry'd the People off in great Numbers. 5, 6. The Plagues of Murrain, and of Ulcers. Ex. 9.

When God ſaw that Pharaoh ſtill perſiſted in the defyance of a Divine power, he ſent upon the Ægyptians a Judgment of Hail, in the prime of the Spring, which utterly deſtroy'd all their Fruits and Plants that were in the Bud. This was not only a prodigy in Ægypt, where they had never ſeen Hail before, but beyond any other that ever had been heard of in the coldeſt Climates: and what the Hail left was devoured by a following Plague of Locuſts; ſo that the whole product of the Earth was loſt for that Year. Now, one would have thought, if this King had not been Beſotted as well as Abandon'd, theſe Judgments would have Convinc'd him of the vanity of Contending with Allmighty God, and have brought him to bethink himſelf of ſome way in time to prevent his Final Ruine: but Pharaoh was not ſo Mad all this while, as not to underſtand the true Cauſe of all his Afflictions; but he ſeemed to take a Vanity in the haughtyneſs of a Contumacious Malice, to try Maſteries with God Allmighty, which ſhould get the better of it; and in this height of Stomach he reſolv'd to Sacrifice himſelf and his People to his Preſumption. He came at length by degrees to yield, that the Hebrews ſhould have Licenſe to depart with their Wives and Children, only leaving their Goods behind them, for the Ægyptians, in conſideration for what they had loſt. Moſes did not think that Condition reaſonable; becauſe, if ſo, they ſhould not have any thing left for a Sacrifice. 7. The Plague of Hail. 8. The Plague of Locuſts. Ex. 10. Pharaoh ſhuffles ſtill.

This diſpute held ſo long that the Ægyptians were all wrapt up in a profound thick Darkneſs before it was over: ſeveral of them Periſh'd by ſeveral ways; ſome were afraid of one thing, ſome of another; and not a few, of being all ſwallow'd up in the ſame Abyſs together. After three Days and Nights, every thing came to it ſelf again, and Pharaoh ſtanding firm yet not to part with the Hebrews, Moſes went and ſpake to him in theſe words. 'How long, ſays he, will you ſet up your own will againſt the 'will of God! It is his Pleaſure and Command that you diſmiſs the Hebrews, and there 'is nothing elſe in Nature to ſave you but that. The King was ſo Enraged upon this Liberty, that he declared it ſhould coſt Moſes his Head, if ever he ſpake one word to him more upon that Subject. Moſes made Anſwer that he had now ſayd all he had to ſay. But that he was well aſſur'd it would not be long before the King himſelf, and the Chief of his Nobility ſhould of their own accords ſpeak to the Hebrews themſelves to make haſte to be gone: and with theſe words Moſes went his way. 9. The Plague of Darkneſs. Ex. 10. Pharaoh continues obſtinate.

The Impenitent Obſtinacy of Pharaoh was ſo provoking, that God kept yet one Plague more in ſtore for him, which would be ſure to bring down his Proud Heart, and make him diſcharge the Hebrews. He Commanded Moſes to give Notice to the People to prepare their Sacrifice on the [a] 13*th* day of the Month Xanthicus, to be Offer'd up on the 14*th*. (That which the Macedonians call Xanthicus, the Hebrews call Niſan, and the Ægyptians Pharmuthi.) Moſes was appointed to bring the Hebrews along with him, and all that belong'd to them: which he did accordingly, gathering them together, and then dividing them into Tribes and Companies, but all in the ſame Place. Early in the Morning on the 14*th*, (the day Aſſign'd) being all in readyneſs to depart, they Sacrific'd, Purifying their Houſes by ſprinkling Blood upon them with a Bunch of Hyſſop. After Supper they Burnt the Remainder of the Fleſh, as juſt entring upon a Journey; and this is our way of Sacrificing unto this day, upon the Feſtival of our Paſcha, which ſignifies Paſſing over, becauſe God paſs'd over the Hebrews without hurting them, when the Ægyptians were ſtruck with a Diſeaſe; for the Plague made ſuch Havock that night with the Ægyptians Firſt-Born, that People of all Conditions came thronging in Troops to the Palace with Clamours to have the Hebrews forthwith ſent away. Whereupon the King call'd for Moſes, and gave immediate order for them to depart, upon an Opi- The Inſtitution of the Paſſover. 10. The Plague of the Firſt-Born. nion that Ægypt could never be happy ſo long as they ſtay'd in the Country; and that the Liberty of the one would be the Deliverance of the other. Several of the Ægyptians Preſented them upon their going away; ſome for diſpatch, others for acquaintance ſake; and not without Tears at parting: many of them repenting of the Barbarous Cruelty they had formerly exercis'd over them.

CHAP. XV.

The March of the Hebrews out of Ægypt, under the Command of Moſes.

THE Iſraelites took their way by [a] Letopolis; a City at that time Deſerted: and Babylon was afterwards built in the Place of it by Cambyſes, when he layd Ægypt waſte. They made long Marches, and on the third day got to Beelzephon, by the Red Sea. There were no Proviſions to be had upon the way in the Wilderneſs; ſo that their Food was only Meal and Water, kneaded and bak'd into Cakes, and this was their entertainment for thirty days. They had now ſpent all they brought out of Ægypt, having manag'd it as ſparingly too as was poſſible, providing barely for their Neceſſities, without filling their Bellies. It is in Memory of this Scarcity that we Celebrate the Eight-Days-Feſtival, which we call that of Unleaven'd Bread: but the Multitude of the Travellers, with their Wives and Children was allmoſt Innumerable; for there were full ſix Hundred Thouſand Men that were able to bear Arms.

They March out of Ægypt. Ex. 12.

The Eight-days-Feſtival. Ex. 13.

The Hebrews went out of Ægypt on the 15*th* day of the Month of Xanthicus; Moſes being now Eighty Years of Age, and his Brother Aaron, Eighty three. It was two Hundred and Fifty Years from Jacob's coming into Ægypt, and four Hundred and Fifteen from the coming of our Father Abraham into Chanaan. They carry'd Joſeph's Bones along with them, being a Truſt that he had Committed to the Charge of his Sons.

They carry Joſeph's Bones along with them.

They had not been long gone, before the Ægyptians repented parting with them; the King eſpecially, who imputed all the Calamities that had befall'n Ægypt, to the Inchantments of Moſes, and look'd upon them to be no more than the works of his Practice and Contrivance. This phancy brought them quickly to a Reſolution of taking Arms and Purſuing them, making no doubt at all of Maſtering and bringing them back again, being Tir'd and Unarmed, if they could but overtake them; the Difficulties of the Paſſage being troubleſome, even to a ſingle Traveller, much more to a Marching Army. But Moſes had ſeveral Inducements to make Choice of this way: firſt in caſe the Ægyptians ſhould change their minds, and ſend after them, the very Fatigue of the Expedition would make them Repent both the Perfidy and the Undertaking: and then Moſes had no mind to have them go by Palæſtine; for the Philiſtins that were Enemies to the Hebrews upon the ſcore of an old Grudge, and Borderers upon Ægypt, would perhaps have broken in upon them, if they could have had any Intelligence of their March. He led them in fine, by the way of the Wilderneſs, though a great way about, and through many Inconveniences, with an intent to Sacrifice upon Mount Sinai, as God had Commanded him, and ſo away to Chanaan.

Moſes leads them away by the Wilderneſs.

By that time they were come to the Red Sea, they found themſelves overtaken, and encompaſs'd by the Ægyptians, with an Army of 600 Chariots, 50000 Horſe, and 200000 Foot; the main Body being drawn up in order of Battle. They had Clapt Guards upon all Paſſes, ſecur'd all Avenues, and ſhut the Hebrews up into ſo narrow a Compaſs, betwixt impaſſable Mountains and the Sea, that it was utterly impoſſible for them to make an eſcape. In this ſtreight, there was no thought of flying; and, if they had never ſo much a mind to't, there was no means of Fighting neither; for they had no Arms: and then if they continu'd where they were, they muſt inevitably ſtarve: ſo that they had no more to do, they ſayd, than Baſely to yield themſelves Slaves to ſave their Lives. In this pinch of danger and deſperation, the whole Blame was lay'd upon Moſes. They had forgotten the wonderful things that God had done for their Deliverance, and the Miracles he had wrought for the ſtrengthening of their Faith. They were ſo Exaſperated, in ſhort, with the outcryes of Women and Children that gave themſelves for loſt, that they were upon the very point of Stoneing their falſe Prophet, as they accounted him, and proſtituting themſelves once more yet to their former Slavery; for they had nothing in ſight but Rocks, Seas, and Armed Troops to Encounter.

The Ægyptians overtake them.

The People ready to Stone Moſes. Ex. 14.

The Outrages and Madneſs of this headſtrong Multitude had no effect at all upon the Providence and Courage of Moſes: his whole Truſt was in God, who he knew after ſo many Preſages of Liberty, would never fail him, or ſuffer his People to fall into the power of their Enemies, to Serve and Periſh. 'Pray put the Caſe (ſays Moſes, Addreſſing to the People) that you had Depoſited ſome great Truſt in the hand of a Perſon Moſes referrs them to God's Power and Providence.

'that had hitherto manag'd it well and wiſely for you; might not you reaſonably de-

'gain? what a Madneſs is it for you to deſpond then, where God himſelf hath taken
'you into his Protection; and of his own free Bounty made all good by me, that might 'contribute to your Freedom and Security! Nay, the very pinch and difficulty of the 'Caſe is an Argument to enflame your hope, rather than to diſcourage it. He hath 'brought you into this diſtreſs, on purpoſe to ſhew his power and kindneſs, in bringing 'you out again; even to the Surprize and Admiration of your Selves, and your very 'Enemies. It is not God's time to interpoſe with his Allmighty power in ſmall matters:
'but in Caſes of Judicial and unaccountable Calamities, when all hope of Human help
'fails us, that's the Seaſon for God to work out the deliverance of thoſe that caſt them-
'ſelves upon him: wherefore fear nothing ſo long as you have him for your Protector
'and Defender, that is able to raiſe the Lowly and the Oppreſſed, and to lay the Ho'nour of their Perſecutors in the Duſt. Be not afraid of the Ægyptians Armed Troops,

'God whom you ſerve is able to Level all theſe Mountains, and lay that Ocean dry.
'His will, in fine, be done.

CHAP. XVI.

The Iſraelites paſs through the Red Sea. The Ægyptians purſue them, and are Drown'd.

WITH theſe laſt words in his mouth, Moſes led the Hebrews toward the Sea, the Ægyptians looking on; who having them in view, and being extremely Harraſs'd out with the purſuit, thought it adviſeable to Refreſh themſelves, and put off Fighting till the day following. So ſoon as Moſes was come to the Sea-ſide, he took out his Rod (the Enſign of his Commiſſion for working of Miracles) and call'd upon God; Imploreing his Divine Aid and Aſſiſtance in a Prayer to this effect. 'Lord! (ſays he) thou 'ſeeſt thy Servants here reduc'd to ſo miſerable an extremity, that it is not in the Power 'of any Natural means, whether of Arms or Human Policy, to Deliver us; but it is the 'God alone whom we Serve and Truſt in, that is able to do it. Lord, be Merciful to 'theſe thy People that are now come out of Ægypt, in a pure ſimplicity of Obedience to 'thy Holy Will and Commandment, and repoſing themſelves entirely upon thy Graci-'ous Promiſes. It is to thee, Lord, that we fly for help, who alone canſt Reſcue us out 'of the hands of our unmerciful Enemies. Speak Comfort to thy Servants, and Exert 'thy Power; Let thy Relief be Speedy, and Inſpire them with a New Life and Confi-'dence, now in the depth of their Deſpairs. Lord, we are under great Difficulties: 'hemm'd in with the Sea and Mountains; but that Sea and thoſe Mountains are thine, 'and if thou doſt but ſay the word, the one ſhall be Levell'd and the other turn'd into 'dry Land: or otherwiſe, thy Providence may carry us off among the very Birds of the 'Air, if it ſhall be thy will to employ thy power that way to ſave us. Immediately upon this Prayer, Moſes ſtruck the Sea with his Rod; whereupon the Waters parted and recoil'd: by that means leaving a way open for the Hebrews Paſſage and Eſcape. The Sea being now divided, and a Lane clear'd, Moſes took the providence aright; and putting himſelf in the Head of his Men, (who with great Alacrity follow'd him) he bad them give God thanks for the Bleſſing of ſo unexpected and unaccountable a deliverance, and in the Name of God to follow him chearfully through the way which Allmighty God had provided for them. The Hebrews, in this Inſtant, Marched forward, and the Ægyptians look'd upon them as ſo many Sots and Mad Men, to throw themſelves headlong into ſo certain a Deſtruction. But when they ſaw them a great way in the Sea, and preſſing further ſtill, without any Inconvenience or Impediment; they poſted away after them, not making any doubt but the ſame Road would ſerve them both. [a] They ſent their Horſe before: but while they were Arming themſelves, and trifling away time, the Hebrews gave them the ſlip, and were gotten on the other ſide of the water; leaving their Enemies behind them. This happy ſucceſs of the Hebrews made the Ægyptians yet more eager upon the Chaſe, and more ſecure too; for they did not underſtand that this Miracle was not wrought for the opening of a Common way to them both; and that Divine Juſtice had made uſe of it at the ſame time for the preſervation of the People of God, and the Confuſion of their Oppreſſors. They follow'd the Purſuit however, and when the whole Army was Advanc'd within compaſs, the Sea return'd upon it, and drown'd them all. The Judgment of this Reflux was accompany'd with high and fierce Winds and Tempeſts, Storms of Hail and Rain, terrible Thun-d'rings and Light'nings, and nothing in ſhort wanting to make the Calamity more dreadfull, or to ſet forth the horrors of their Condition that fall under the diſpleaſure of an Angry God. They were alſo overtaken with a dark pitchy Night; ſo that the whole Army was deſtroy'd, and not ſo much as one Soul left alive to carry the tydings.

It is not in the power of words to expreſs the Tranſports of the Hebrews upon this deliverance: a Bleſſing ſo unlook'd for, and God himſelf the immediate and the profeſs'd Author of it; beſide the deſtruction of their Enemies before their Faces, to ſecure them in the poſſeſſion of their Liberty, and their Oppreſſors drown'd to a Man too. God's hand was ſo eminently Viſible in the whole proceſs of this affair, that never had Creatures ſuch cauſe of Rejoycing. And ſo they ſpent that whole Night in Hymns and Thanksgivings: Moſes in Particular Compoſing a Song in Hexameter Verſe, to the Honour of God upon this occaſion.

I have been the more particular in theſe Relations, becauſe I find them in Holy Writ, and let no man think this Story incredible of the Sea's dividing to ſave theſe People, for we find it in Ancient Records, that this hath been ſeen before, whether by God's extraordinary Will, or by the Courſe of Nature, it is Indifferent. The ſame thing happen'd one time to the [a] Macedonians, under the Command of Alexander, when for want of another Paſſage, the Pamphylian Sea divided to make them way: God's providence makeing uſe of Alexander at that time, as his Inſtrument for deſtroying the Perſian Empire. This is Atteſted by all the Hiſtorians that have pretended to Write the Life of that Prince. But People are at liberty to think what they pleaſe.

The next day after this memorable Judgment upon the Ægyptians, the winds and the waves forc'd their Arms a ſhore juſt at the Place where the Hebrews had Pitch'd their Tents: which Moſes underſtood to be another Providence, in furniſhing the People with Arms that they ſo much wanted. So they were gather'd together and diſtributed among the Hebrews, Man by Man. After this, and the Arming of the people, he led them to Mount Sinai, there to Offer Sacrifice, and preſent Oblations for the deliverance of the people, in Obedience to God's Command, as aforeſaid.

CHAP. I.

The Paſſage of the Iſraelites from Ægypt to Mount Sinai. Their Hardſhips by the way. Their Murmurings againſt Moſes. The Miſeries they endur'd by Hunger and Thirſt, till they were Reliev'd by Miracle.

THE Joy of the Hebrews, for ſo wonderful and unthought of a deliverance, was not a little damp'd by the Extreme Hardſhips they were put to in their way through the Wilderneſs to Mount Sinai. There was no Food to be got; the water Foul, Scant and Bad, and no Nouriſhment in it; inſomuch that the very Cattle could not drink it, much leſs the Men: but this was the way they were fain to take for want of another. By the Advice of their Guides, they brought a proviſion of water with them into the Deſart; and when that was ſpent, they digg'd Pits, but with very great difficulty: for the Ground was hard, and the water very bad and bitter when they came at it, and not enough of that neither. The Hebrews Hardſhips in the Wilderneſs.

In Travelling forward, they came about Evening to a place called [a] Marah, from the taſte of the water; for Marah in Hebrew is Bitterneſs. They were quite tir'd with the Journey: beſide that, their Proviſions falling ſhort, they began to be pinch'd with Hunger. But however, they agreed to make ſome little ſtay there; and the rather, becauſe of a Pit they had the Fortune to find there: which though it could not anſwer the Neceſſities of their vaſt Numbers, there was yet ſome ſort of Conſolation in it, the Country conſider'd, and that there was no more water to be expected from that Place forward. This was as Bitter as the other, and a Drink that agreed neither with Man nor Beaſt. The Waters of Marah Bitter.

Moſes found the Peoples Hearts beginning to ſink, and not one word of Comfort that he could give them; for the Enemies they had now to deal withal were not to be Encounter'd with Wiſdom and Valour: but Men, Women, and Children were equally in Danger, and it was a hard matter for him to adviſe others, that had the whole Burden of the common Calamity upon himſelf; for in their diſtreſs they all came flocking to him, Women begging for their Children, Husbands for their Wives, Men for themſelves; and all imploring Relief, when there was none to be had. Moſes betook himſelf to his Prayers again, that God would be pleaſed to correct the Bitterneſs of thoſe waters and make them Sweet. This was granted him at the firſt requeſt, and ſo he took a piece of Wood that lay there by chance, cleft it length-ways in the middle, and caſt it into the water; telling the Hebrews, that God had heard their Prayers, and promiſed them a ſupply of water to their liking, upon condition that they ſhould readily and chearfully do whatever he Commanded them. They ask'd him, what he would have them do to get better water. Why then, ſays Moſes, let the Well be drawn, and the Luſtieſt young Fellows among you ſet their hands to the work. You ſhall find upon emptying out the better half of it, that the remainder will be Potable, and for your turn. They did as they were directed, and the water was ſo Purg'd by the Continual Agitation of it, that it went down with the Multitude for no contemptible Drink. Bitter Waters made Sweet. Exd 15.

Upon Decamping from hence, they went to a place called Helim. The Proſpect of it was pleaſant enough at a diſtance, for there appear'd a Plantation of Palm-Trees; but coming nearer, they found themſelves much deceiv'd in their Expectation, for there were but Seventy of them in all, and thoſe but Dwarfs neither; for the Drougtyneſs of the place ſtarv'd whatſoever grew upon it. Nay, though there were twelve Springs The Iſraelites Encamp at Helim.

[a] Gr. Εἰς Μὰρ ὥτων.

there, the Plants were not one jot the better for them; for they never mounted ſo high as to diſtribute their waters into Rivulets for the refreſhment of the Earth. The Soyl was Sandy; no Veins of water in it; or if now and then a drop appear'd, it was ſo foul and dirty, there was no drinking of it. This ſcarcity of water ſpoil'd the Fruit-trees too. The multitude, upon theſe Melancholick thoughts, were ſo impatient under the ſenſe of this miſerable Calamity, that they fell into direct mutiny againſt their Leader, and lay'd the blame of all at his door. Their Thirty-Days-Store was ſpent; their wants encreas'd, and no ſupplyes to be got in the Wilderneſs. Theſe thoughts all together put the people into a downright Deſperation; and the ſenſe of their preſent neceſſities made them forget all former Providences and Bleſſings, whether immediately from God himſelf, or inſtrumentally by the hand of his Servant Moſes; proceeding in their Ingratitude to ſuch a degree of outrage, that they were within a very little of Stoning their Commander to Death, as the Man they ſaid that had been the Ruine of them all. While the People were as yet in the heat of their Malice and Rage, with Stones in their Hands and Clamours and Menaces in their Mouths, and nothing leſs than the Life of the Commander to pacify this Fury; Moſes, in the fear of God and with a good Conſcience, ſtood forth among them, and with a Grace of Language and Addreſs, peculiar to himſelf, oppoſed Argument to violence in words to the following Purpoſe. 'You muſt not think (ſays he) to cancel paſt Obligations with a pretence of 'preſent ſufferings: but the Difficulties, you now labour under, ſhould rather move you 'to a thankful Contemplation of God's Bounties and Mercies to you in times paſt, 'even beyond all hope and expectation. And why may not the ſame Providence attend 'you now again? why may not this Affliction be layd upon you for a Tryal, to ſee if 'you have Courage, Patience, and Senſe enough of Gratitude to ſtand the Teſt: and if 'you can diſtinguiſh betwixt the force and reaſon of paſt Benefits and preſent Troubles, 'as you ought to do? Have a care that you do not make your ſelves unworthy of God's 'Favour, by impatience under Croſſes, and by unthankfulneſs for good turns, and by 'oppoſing your preſent Paſſions to the Divine will and power; for it was God that 'brought you out of the Land of Ægypt, and it is with his order and good pleaſure 'that you now Contend. And ſo for your Quarrel to me now, ſays Moſes, my Fault 'is only the obeying of my Maſter's order. I have done nothing without a Commiſ-'ſion, and you cannot ſay I have ever deceiv'd you. When Moſes had lay'd before them the reaſon of the matter, he had then recourſe to Inſtances, and particularly what Judgments befell the Ægyptians for keeping the Hebrews in ſlavery, and detaining them contrary to the declar'd will of God: how the River was turned into Blood; and how the ſame Water, that became Poyſonous to the Ægyptians, was yet preſerv'd Salutary to the Hebrews. How the Sea open'd to make a Lane for the Hebrews in their Flight, and how the Waters clos'd again to drown the Ægyptians in the purſuit: the former at the ſame time being Spectators of the overthrow of their Enemies; and receiving a large ſupply of Arms by that Providence too, which they were wholly unprovided of before: and then, how many miraculous deliverances out of the very Jaws of deſtruction God had wrought for them, even beyond the force of human Imagination to conceive. 'Now God's Omnipotency (ſays Moſes) is everlaſting, and his Providence as 'gracious, and as extenſive at this day as ever it was: wherefore you are not to deſpair 'of the goodneſs of Heaven; but to beare all Turns and Chances with moderation, and 'to conſider that the Aſſiſtance that is deferr'd may come yet time enough, and in ſea-'ſon: for ſo long as there's Life there's Hope. You are not, ſays Moſes, to look upon 'your ſelves in this Caſe, as neglected or abandon'd; but it is God's pleaſure to put 'your greatneſs of Mind and love of Liberty to the Tryal, and to ſee whether you 'had rather ſubmit to a Pinching neceſſity for want of Meat and Drink, or lead 'the Life of Brutes in Slavery, that are only fed and fatten'd up for the benefit 'of their Maſter. It is not for my ſelf, ſays Moſes, that I fear any thing; for what 'am I the worſe for an unjuſt violence upon my Perſon. But for the ſake of your 'ſafety, I reckon my ſelf bound to take ſome care of my own; for every ſtone, you 'caſt at me in this Cauſe, imports a Condemnation of the Councels and the doings 'even of God himſelf.

The People threaten to Stone Moſes. Exod. 16.

Moſes reaſons the Caſe with them.

Moſes minds them of former Mercies.

The People pacify'd. Ex. 16.

Moſes calls upon God.

Moſes's Prayer is heard.

Theſe words brought the Maddeſt of the Company, in ſome meaſure, to their Wits again, and made them caſt away the Stones they had prepar'd for the Execution: Moſes having convinc'd them of the Lewdneſs of their intention, and modeſtly imputing that to their neceſſities which could not be juſtify'd in Reaſon; though the Temptation they lay under might ſeem in ſome ſort to extenuate the Offence. Upon this, Moſes had recourſe to Supplications and Prayers, and withdrawing up to a Rock he beſought God in Mercy to grant theſe miſerable People ſome Relief; for it was in his power only to ſave them; beſeeching him likewiſe to forgive them their intemperate Paſſions, and to caſt all the things, that they had ſayd and done amiſs, upon the account of human human frailty. God gave him this Anſwer, that he would take care of the People, and ſend them a ſpeedy Succour.

Upon this Promiſe and Conceſſion, Moſes went down again to the Multitude with joy in his Countenance: which the People preſently took notice of, and in the ſtrength of that good Omen, after all their Sadneſs, put on an Air of Chearfulneſs themſelves too. Moſes told them what had paſs'd, and that God would have Compaſſion on them very ſuddenly: and ſo it prov'd, for ſoon after this, came a wonderful Flight of Quails. There are a World of them by the Arabian Gulf, and theſe Birds were ſo tir'd with Croſſing it, that they dropt quite weary into the Camp of the Hebrews. They look'd upon this as a Relief from Heaven; all People putting in with earneſtneſs to have their ſhare of the Bounty. Moſes went now to his Prayers again, giving God thanks, both for what he had promiſed, and what he had done.

A flight of Quails drops into the Camp.

After this firſt Repaſt, God preſently ſent them another; for as Moſes was at his prayers, holding up his Hands, there dropt from Heaven a kind of Dew upon them, and as it fell it ſtuck and thicken'd. Moſes preſently fancy'd it to be a ſecond ſupply, and upon taſting it was overjoy'd to find it ſo. It was now Winter, and the Common ſort of People would needs have this Dew to be Snow. Moſes told them they were miſtaken, and that this was no Common Dew; but ſuch a Nouriſhment as they would find to be a Competent remedy againſt Famine: and ſo he firſt taſted of it himſelf, and then gave it them to try: who after his Example lik'd it exceedingly well; for it had the ſmack of Honey, and ſome Reſemblance alſo of [a] Bdellium, and about the bigneſs of a Coriander-ſeed. There was great ſtriving for it in the gathering, till the matter was order'd by an Edict, appointing that all People ſhould [b] gather every day alike, and the Meaſure of an Omer to be the proportion; being aſſured at the ſame time, that there ſhould be no want of that Food. This was order'd in favour of the weak, that they might not be run down, and to keep the ſtronger from taking more than came to their ſhare. Whoever ſhould exceed his meaſure, in contempt of this Edict, did only take ſo much the more pains to no manner of purpoſe; for whatever they kept till the next day was good for nothing; for it bred Worms, and turn'd Bitter. There was one Divine and incredible quality in this Food, that whoever taſted it deſir'd nothing elſe. They have in that Country to this very day certain Dews and Rains, that ſeem to have ſomewhat of Reſemblance to this that fell upon the interceſſion of Moſes. The Hebrews call it Manna, and [c] Man in our Tongue ſignifies an Interrogation, as if we ſhould ſay, what is this? They celebrated this Bleſſing with great joy, as coming from Heaven; and this was their Food for the forty years they continued in the Wilderneſs.

A fall of Manna.

Manna their Food for 40. Years. Ex. 16.

After their Removal from hence to [d] Rephidim, they found themſelves Parch'd up with an intolerable Thirſt, having met with very little water for ſome days before. Being now come into a Country where there was no water at all, they began to fall foul upon Moſes again; but he left them for a while by themſelves, and ſtept aſide once more to his Prayers, Beſeeching him, that gave them meat when they were ready to ſtarve, now to give them drink to it when they were ready to choak; for the one without the other would not do the work. God without any delay promis'd Moſes a Fountain and a Flood of water, where he leaſt expected it; commanding him to ſtrike a Rock near at hand there with his Rod, and that Rock ſhould ſupply them abundantly with what they deſir'd, beſide that it ſhould come without Labour too. Moſes having receiv'd this anſwer went back to the People, who were now waiting with great impatience for his return, for they ſaw him coming down from the Mountain, looking intently upon him, to ſee what tydings they could read in his Countenance. Upon his coming back to the People he told them that God would deliver them alſo from the Trouble of their Thirſt, by a way that they little dreamt of; that is to ſay, by a River that ſhould iſſue out of that Rock. They fancy'd that they themſelves were to cut up the Rock to make way for the paſſage; which would have been a hard piece of work, they thought, for People to undertake, that were ſpent and half Dead with Thirſt and Toyl allready. Moſes quickly unridled that miſtake, by ſtriking the Rock with his Rod; which in that very inſtant threw out a large ſtream of water as clear as Cryſtal. It was hard to ſay whether the Spectators were more amaz'd at the operation, or delighted in the drinking of it; for they found it ſweet and agreeable, and ſuch as became the dignity of the Preſenter and the Preſent. They extoll'd Moſes to the Skies, when they ſaw how much he was in God's Favour, and offer'd Sacrifices and Thanksgiving. We find it written in the Holy Scripture, that is depoſited in the Temple, that God had foretold to Moſes this Miracle of the water out of the Rock, in ſuch manner as we have heard.

CHAP. II.

A Confederacy of five Kings againſt the Hebrews. The Amalekites Routed by Joſhua. The Arrival of the Hebrews at Mount Sinai.

THE Fame of the Hebrews was by this time in every body's Mouth, and their Reputation ſo great, far and near, that the Provinces were all Alarum'd at it, and layd their heads together how they might keep them at a diſtance, or elſe utterly exterminate and deſtroy them: and to this purpoſe they ſent their Ambaſſadors up and down from one to another to manage the Councel of the League. The Chief Inſtigators of this Deſign were the Inhabitants of the [a] Country of Gobol, and the City of Petra, which paſs'd under the common appellation of Amalekites, the moſt Martial People of that Quarter. They had Five Kings at work upon this Plot of carrying on a War againſt the Hebrews; and not only Concerted it among themſelves, but drew in as many as they could of their Neighbours to joyn with them. 'Theſe People, they ſayd, were only a 'Vagabond Army of Fugitives that ran away out of Ægypt, becauſe they would be no 'longer Slaves there, to make War upon others. Now the way to deal with theſe Peo-'ple, they ſaid, would be, without making too ſlight of them, to take them to task in time, 'while their Men were raw and undiſciplin'd, their Army in want of all Neceſſaries, 'and never a plentiful Country to Friend that was able to ſupply them. In ſhort, the 'way would be to begin with them, and not ſtand looking on, till they ſhould have the 'Confidence to be the Aggreſſors. It would be but falling upon them in the Wilder-'neſs, before they could make themſelves Maſters of any places of ſtrength and impor-'tance, and the work would do it ſelf. They lay'd it down as a piece of neceſſary Prudence, to Nip the growing Power of an Enemy in the Bud, and not ſtand waiting till by Succeſs upon Succeſs he makes himſelf ſtronger, both in Power and Reputation: and that it was better to prevent the Danger, than to run the Riſque of overcoming it. Several Men ſeveral Minds; but upon the agitating of the whole matter in the Confederate Councel, it was reſolv'd by common conſent to carry on an Invaſive War againſt the Hebrews, and ſo to force them from their Borders.

Five Kings in a Confederacy againſt the Hebrews. Ex. 17.

An Invaſion reſolv'd upon.

Moſes was not a little ſurpris'd at this reſolution, and his People were alſo in the greateſt Confuſion imaginable, at the neceſſity of ſo unexpected a War with an Enemy that wanted nothing, and themſelves at all points ſo unprovided. He minded them of God's multiply'd Declarations in their favour; his bringing them out of the Land of Ægypt; what he had done for them allready, and what he would do further: and ſo encourag'd them, in confidence of his power and goodneſs, to think of nothing but Victory. 'Never reckon upon the Advantages (ſays Moſes) of Arms, Mony, and Proviſions; 'but conſider, to Ballance all this, that you have God on your ſide to Fight your Battles, 'and then no matter for the odds of Number and Stratagem. You have all that and 'more in him that is your Helper, who by his Allmighty power hath brought you out 'of greater difficulties allready. Have you not found that God a Friend ſtill to the He-'brews, and an Enemy to the Ægyptians? witneſs his Miraculous Preſervation of you in 'your Extremities of Hunger and Thirſt, and in making that a ſafe Retreat to you tho-'rough the Sea, which at the ſame time ſwallow'd up your Adverſaries. For a Con-'cluſion (ſays he) the gaining of this Victory will put you in poſſeſſion of all the good 'things of this World: wherefore behave your ſelves like Men.

Moſes and the People ſtartled at it.

Moſes keeps up their Hearts.

This Diſcourſe put new Life into the People, ſo that Moſes calling the Heads and Principals of the Tribes together, addreſs'd himſelf to them all, both in General and in Particular; Admoniſhing the Young Men to hearken to their Elders, and Inculcating to all the reſt their Obedience to their Commander. They were by this time ſo perfectly Cur'd of their former apprehenſions, that they look'd upon any thing of Danger with a Contempt, and under a kind of impatience to come to Action, in the ſtrong hope and expectation of ſuch a Victory as would put a final end to their miſery. Inſomuch that they preſs'd Moſes, with great earneſtneſs, to bring them immediately to the Enemy; and not to looſe ſo Critical an opportunity of Fighting by any unſeaſonable delay, when the Soldiers were in ſo good humour for it. Moſes upon this drew out a Detachment of the moſt likely Men he could find for ſervice in the whole Multitude, and ſet [b] Joſhuah the [c] Son of Nun, and of the Tribe of Ephraim, over them; a Man equally qualify'd both for Arms and Councel; eminent for Piety, a Diſciple of Moſes, and one that did not ſhame his Maſter, He ſent out ſeveral Troops of Guards; ſome to ſecure their Water, others their Tents; and ſome again to take care of the Women and Children. All things were now in readineſs for an Engagement: the Soldiery in Arms all Night, waiting only for the word of Command from Moſes; who was himſelf alſo the whole Night in Councel with Joſhuah, and giving order about the Battle. When it began to draw toward day, Moſes recommended it to Joſhuah to make good by his Actions what the world expected from him upon that occaſion, and by the Glory of that Day to Perpetuate his Name to Poſterity. He did the like to all the Chief of the Hebrews apart, and ſo in courſe to the whole Body of the Army.

Having thus enflam'd their Reſolutions into a generous Senſe of Piety and Honour, Moſes Commended them to God and to their General Joſhuah, himſelf going up to the Mountain. The Bodys joyn'd immediately, with all ſorts of encouragement from their Leaders, and it was hard Fought on both ſides. So long as Moſes held up his hands, the Hebrews prevail'd; but when he could hold them up no longer for wearyneſs, the Amalekites had the better of it. But Moſes obſerving this, ſpake to his Brother Aaron, and to [a] Hur, the Husband of his Siſter Mariam, to ſtand by him and hold up his hands for him, and to take care not to let them fall again. The Amalekites after this were totally Defeated, and had been all entirely cut off, if the Darkneſs of the Night had not cover'd the miſerable remainder of them in their Flight. The Amalekites utterly Defeated.

This was a Victory ſo Glorious and Seaſonable, that the whole Hiſtory of our Anceſtors cannot pretend to any thing beyond it; [b] for it was a total and an abſolute overthrow, gain'd upon an Invading Enemy, and an Action of ſo great a Reputation, that it ſtruck a Terrour into all the Neighbouring Provinces: beſide a prodigious booty over and above; the Pillage of the Amalekites Camp being of an ineſtimable value in Gold and Silver Plate, curious Braſs Veſſels of all ſorts, Minted Mony, Rich Arms, and Souldiers Equipage, Horſes, Baggage, &c. both to ſmall and great, and to thoſe, who themſelves were but in a ſtarving condition the day before. This ſucceſs, in fine, made the Hebrews more dareing, induſtrious, and forward for any virtuous exploit; and it was of a mighty advantage, even at preſent: but not comparable to what it was in the iſſue and in the conſequences of it: for this Battle brake the very Hearts, as well as the Bodies of the Enemy, and from that time forward, all the adjoyning Provinces ſtood in awe of the Hebrews. This was the event of the Battle; and on the day following, Moſes cauſed all the dead Bodies to be ſtript, and their ſcatter'd Arms to be gather'd up and employ'd for Service: Rewards alſo to be diſtributed to thoſe that had made themſelves eminently remarkable in the Battle. He did Right alſo to the General, in form, and with the Solemnity of a publick Declaration to the Honour of his Bravery and Conduct; the whole Army ſeconding that illuſtrious Character with Praiſes and Acclamations. The ſlaughter of the Amalekites was ſo great, that they could make no eſtimate of the number, and not ſo much as one Hebrew ſlain in the action. Moſes erected an Altar after this Victory, inſcrib'd to God the Conquerour: where he worſhip'd with Sacrifices and Thankſgivings, foretelling at the ſame time the utter Extirpation of the Amalekites, for the baſeneſs of the Attempt upon the Hebrews, when they were in diſtreſs and ready to periſh in the Wilderneſs. Moſes concluded the Solemnity with Feaſtings and Rejoycings, treating the General, the Officers, and the whole Camp with Soldierly entertainments ſuitable to the Occaſion. A vaſt Booty. Not one Hebrew ſlain. An Altar Inſcrib'd to God the Conquerour.

This was the firſt Battle the Hebrews fought after their coming out of Ægypt; to the utter Ruine and Confuſion of their Enemies. When they had ſpent ſome few days in Jollity and Refreſhment, they march'd forward with a better order'd Army than before, and a much greater too; for the Enemies Arms that were taken upon the Rout, had much encreas'd their number. Advancing at this rate by eaſy marches, they reach'd Mount Sinai, the place where Moſes ſaw the Viſion of the Burning Buſh, which we have ſpoken of allready. This was the Third Month after they left Ægypt. Moſes advanc'd to Mount Sinai.

Raguel repairs to his Son in Law Moſes, to joy him of his Succeſs.

RAGUEL had no ſooner heard of the wonderful Succeſs of Moſes, but away preſently he went to Congratulate his Son in Law, and to ſee how it fared with his Daughter Zipporah and their Children. Moſes was overjoy'd to ſee him, and ſo offer'd a Sacrifice, and Feaſted the whole Multitude, in the order of their Tribes and Families, not far from the Burning Buſh that the Fire could not Conſume. Aaron, in the mean while, with Raguel and the reſt, Chanted forth Hymns of Praiſe and Honour to the Author of their Safety, Freedom, and Deliverance: not forgetting their admirable Leader, and how all things proſper'd that he took in hand. Neither was Raguel behind hand in doing Right to the Army, and to the Dignity of their Preſerver, by whoſe authority and direction ſo many wiſe and brave Men were ſteer'd and govern'd. Raguel gives Moſes Advice about Religion and Government; and for the Ordering of his Army.

RAGUEL took notice one day, as his Son in Law was hearing of Cauſes, how intolerably he was oppreſs'd with the importunity of attending ſo much Buſineſs; but he could not well ſay any thing of it at preſent, without giving an interruption to the courſe of Publick Juſtice: beſide that the People had ſo great a Reverence for the Authority of Moſes, that they would have been better ſatisfy'd to be undone by the Juſtice of Moſes, than to carry the Cauſe by the corruption of any other Judge: but ſo ſoon as ever the hurry of the day was well over, Raguel took Moſes apart, and gave him his Opinion upon the matter. 'You have, ſays he, more work upon your hand than 'tis 'poſſible for one Man to diſpatch. As for the matter of Private, Perſonal Cauſes, they 'are ſo Numerous, you can never go through with them: wherefore you ſhould do well 'to employ other People, as you have Choice enough, for the diſcharge of that Functi-'on: but, ſays Raguel further, as to what concerns Religion and Government, that muſt 'be your particular Province; for there's no man ſo fit to be truſted with the care of 'ſo many thouſand Souls as you your ſelf. You cannot but be ſenſible of the excellent 'Faculties that God has given you; how inſtrumental you have been to the ſaving of 'the People under your Charge, and how neceſſary your Councel and Aſſiſtance will be 'yet to them for the future. Wherefore do you attend the Worſhip of God, wherein 'you ſhall highly contribute to the common wellfare of your ſelf, and of thoſe under 'you: and for the Tryal of Cauſes betwixt Man and Man, you may leave it to ſuch 'Miniſters as you think fit. Now to your Worldly Affairs, the thing I would Adviſe 'you is this. Take a Muſter of all your Troops, and divide them into ſo many Bodies 'of ten Thouſand Men a-piece, placing Officers over every one of theſe Bodies. You 'ſhall afterwards ſubdivide them into Thouſands, five Hundreds, Hundreds, and Fifties, 'with Officers over them too; and ſo divide them again into Thirties, Twenties, and Tens, 'with diſtinct Officers alſo belonging to them, to take their Names from the Number 'of Men they Command: and all theſe to have their proper Judges to determine 'Controverſies: thoſe Judges to have the Approbation of the People for Men of Pro-'bity and Virtue. Yet in caſes of great difficulty and importance, let them repair to you. 'By this means the People ſhall have Right done them, and you your ſelf be at Liber-'ty to attend God's worſhip for the good of the Army, without any interruption.

Raguel's Advice to Moſes.

Moſes was ſo well pleas'd with this Scheme of Raguel's, that he order'd the Project to be put in execution, not as any Contrivance of his own, but as the Advice of his Father in Law, to whom he aſcrib'd the ſole Honour of it before the People. Moſes has declar'd as much in his Writings alſo, ever accounting it more Laudable to give Worthy men their due, than for one man to uſurp to himſelf the Reputation of another man's merit. But this will be fitter for another place.

The Juſtice and Modeſty of Moſes.

CHAP. V.

Moſes goes up to the Mount, where he Receives the Law from God, and Communicates it to the People.

WHILE they continu'd in this place, Moſes call'd the People together, and told them that he was going up Mount Sinai to ſpeak with God, and not without hope of bringing them Comfortable News at his Return; commanding them in the mean time however to pitch their Tents at the foot of the Mountain, where they might be near at hand; and ſo Moſes went up.

Moſes goes up Mount Sinai. Ex. 19.

Mount Sinai is by much the higheſt eminence in all thoſe Countries, and betwixt the extreme height, and the craggyneſs of the Rocks, it ſeems not only inacceſſible, but wearyſome to the very Eye to look up at it. The Place is accounted Sacred, upon the Credit of an Ancient Tradition of God's having his Habitation there. The Hebrews poſted themſelves at the foot of the Mountain, as Moſes had commaned them; lifting up their hands to God, and muſing within themſelves what thoſe good tydings might be, that Moſes, when he went up, promis'd to bring them at his return. In his abſence, they kept their Feſtivals, purifying themſelves, and living in Continence for three days, even from their own Wives, as they were order'd; plying Allmighty God with hourly Prayers to be Gracious to Moſes, and grant them ſomewhat by him that might conduce to the Peace and Happyneſs of their Lives. They Feaſted upon this occaſion with great magnificence, and had their Wives and Children dreſs'd up with more Pomp and Ornament than uſual. Two days this laſted; but upon the third before Sun-riſe, in as clear a Sky as ever was ſeen, there appear'd a Cloud that cover'd and encompaſs'd the whole Camp of the Hebrews; the firſt Prodigy of that Kind ſince the Creation. This was afterwards follow'd with a terrible Tempeſt of Thunder and Lightning, Wind and Rain; giving to underſtand, that God was there. The Reader may take this as he pleaſes; but it will not become me to depart from the leaſt Tittle of what I find written in Holy Scriptures. The Hebrews were ſo terrify'd at what they had ſeen and heard, as well for the Novelty and Strangeneſs of the Thing, as for the common Rumour of God's dwelling upon this Mount, that they durſt not ſo much as put their Heads out of their Tents; but fell into a Conſternation, giving it for granted, that God in his Wrath had taken away Moſes, and that they themſelves were to expect the ſame Fate. As they lay ready to ſink under this dreadfull Apprehenſion, Moſes appear'd; but with ſo much Joy and Majeſty in his Countenance, that all their Fears vaniſh'd, and this Change made way for Hopes of better Things; the Air alſo recovering it's former Serenity.

A terrible Tempeſt of Thunder and Lightning.

The People thought Moſes had been loſt.

While this paſs'd, Moſes ſummon'd the People to attend, and hear what God had given him in Charge to deliver: whereupon they drew together, and Moſes betaking himſelf to a riſing Ground, where he might be beſt ſeen and heard, addreſs'd himſelf to the People in manner following.

'You Men and Brethren, Hebrews: As our moſt gracious God hath been allways hi-'therto propitious to your Prayers, ſo I am now to tell you, upon this preſent Occaſion, 'that He hath received your Meſſenger with infinite Grace and Goodneſs: and you are 'likewiſe to reſt aſſured, that He will take your Army into his Protection, and preſcribe 'to you ſuch Ways of living, that you your ſelves cannot ſo much as wiſh to be more 'happy, than a carefull Obſervance of thoſe Rules will make you. Wherefore as you 'have any Reverence for that God, and for all the mighty Things that he hath done in 'your Favour, do not make ſlight, I beſeech you, of what I am about to ſay. Do 'not think the worſe of the Matter for the Meanneſs of the Bearer of it; but know, 'that at this Inſtant, it is God that ſpeaks to you; tho' by the Tongue of a Man. You 'are only to conſider the Goodneſs, and the Advantage of the Commands I bring you; 'and to adore the Majeſty of that God, who for the promoting of your Happineſs, 'hath condeſcended to make uſe of me for the Reporter of his gracious Will and Pleaſure 'towards you. Do not any longer look upon me as Moſes, the Son of Amram and Jo-'chabel; but as the Inſtrument that for your Sake cauſed the Water of the Nile to be 'turned into Blood, and with Variety of Plagues brake the Hearts of the Ægyptians. 'He that pav'd you a Way through the Sea, and fetcht Food for you from Heaven, 'and Water out of the Rock, for you to drink: He that made Adam Lord of the World; 'ſav'd Noah from the Deluge; put Abraham, our Progenitor, in Poſſeſſion of the Land 'of Chanaan. He that made Sarah bring forth Iſaac in the old Age of his Parents, 'bleſs'd Jacob with twelve ſuch wonderfull Sons, and made Joſeph Governour of Ægypt; 'it is He, in fine, that by my Hand, honours you with theſe Precepts and Commands; 'and you are to value me only as the Interpreter of his holy Will. Keep theſe Com-'mands ſacred and inviolate, and let them be dearer to you than your Wives and Child-'ren: your Obedience ſhall make your Lives happy, the Sea calm, your Wives fruitfull, 'your Lands ſhall bring forth Encreaſe, and you ſhall be a Terror to your Enemies: for, 'ſays Moſes, I have ſpoken with God Face to Face; I have heard his divine Voice, 'and I am likewiſe to aſſure you, that he hath a fatherly Tenderneſs for you, and 'will take care of your Poſterity.

Moſes ſets forth God's Mercies to the Iſraelites.

At the End of this Diſcourſe he conducted the People with their Wives and Children to a Place where they might hear the Voice of God ſpeaking to them, and teaching them what they were to do. This he did for the Authority of the Promulgation; for it would not have made ſo deep an Impreſſion upon the Minds of the Hearers, from the Lips of any Mortal: ſo they all heard a Voice deſcending from above; and it was ſo diſtinct too, that they all underſtood it. But for the Commandments that Moſes left in Writing in the two Tables, we are not to publiſh the very Words; but the Minutes of them are as follow. We are taught;

The Voice of God ſpeaking to the People.

2. That no Image of any living Creature is to be ador'd.
3. That no Man is to ſwear raſhly.

9. That we are not to bear falſe Witneſs.
10. That we are not to Covet any thing that is our Neighbour's.

The People were abundantly ſatisfy'd to hear the ſame things over again from the Voice of God, which Moſes had told them of before hand, and ſo they went their way. But before many days were over, they fell to Solliciting of Moſes again and again, to procure them a Body of Laws for the ordering of Civil matters; who gratify'd them with a proviſion alſo of ſuch Laws; preſcribing what to do, and what not, and how to govern themſelves one with another. But I ſhall refer the greater part of thoſe Laws to a Tract by it ſelf.

The People ſollicit Moſes to provide them Laws for the Civil Government.

It was about this time that Moſes went up again to the Mount, having firſt told the People of his intent, that he might not want Witneſſes of his Aſcenſion. His ſtay being longer than they expected, (for he was forty days abſent) the People began to be in pain for fear ſome miſchief might have befall'n him; and in all their Troubles, nothing went nearer the Hearts of them than the apprehenſions of his being Deſtroy'd. But they diſcover'd the matter ſeveral ways: ſome, that had not much kindneſs for him, would have it that he was devour'd by wild Beaſts; others had the Charity to fancy that God had taken him to himſelf; but the wiſer ſort debated it both ways. If it ſhould prove, they ſayd, that he was indeed torn to pieces by wild Beaſts, what was there more in't, than a miſhap in one of the common Accidents of Life? And then for the ſuppoſition of his being taken up to God, it was in truth but a conjecture ſuitable to the Reverence they had for his Virtue. Betwixt theſe two ſurmiſes, they were not caſt down ſo much for his ſake, as for their own, in the loſs of ſuch a Governour and Patron, as was never to be repair'd. Their grief and deſperation left them no place to hope for any thing; and in this hopeleſsneſs they could not yet forbear Lamenting: Nay, they durſt not ſo much as move their Camp, becauſe of the order they had to wayt his coming back.

Ex. 24. Moſes goes up again to the Mount; where he continues 40 dayes.

At the end of Forty Days and Forty Nights, and without either Meat or Drink in that interval; Moſes returns and ſhews himſelf, to the unſpeakable joy of the whole Army. He told them how much they were the Care of Divine Providence; for in theſe days of his abſence, he had been inſtructed in the meaſures and conduct of a good and happy Life. He told them that it was God's command they ſhould Build him a Tabernacle for himſelf at any time to come down to, and be among them; but rather as to a viſit, than to a place of abode. After this, there would be no further need, he ſayd, of Travelling to Mount Sinai; for God would come down to them. This Tabernacle was ſtill to go along with the Army, where God would be allways at hand to receive their Prayers.

Moſes Faſts forty Days and forty Nights.

Ex. 26. He orders the Building of a Tabernacle.

As to the Meaſures and Model of it, Moſes told them that he had his inſtructions, and that there was nothing more for them to do, than preſently to enter upon the undertaking. With this, he produced the Two Tables of the Ten Commandments, five in each Column, and of God's own writing.

CHAP. VI.

Moſes Builds a Tabernacle according to God's Appointment for his Holy Worſhip.

THE People's affections were ſo elevated with the Diſcourſe and Preſence of Moſes (ſo lately given for loſt) that they made Collections in ſtrife who ſhould do moſt toward the advancing of this Structure. They preſented Gold, Silver, Copper, curious Wood that would not take the Worm; Goats Hair; Purple, and Scarlet Colour'd Sheep-skins; and ſome white, ſome blew; Wool of the ſame Tincture; fine Linnen; Precious ſtones for Ornament, Set in Gold; Perfumes of all ſorts. Some ſent in Cattle for Sacrifices: and all this toward the uſe and ſervice of the Tabernacle, which was, in effect, but a kind of an Ambulatory, Portable Temple. So ſoon as the Contribution was made, ſome giving to the uttermoſt of their Abilities, others even beyond them; Moſes ſets his Architects at work upon it without delay, as God had Commanded. And they were ſo great Maſters in their way too, that the People would have pitch'd upon the ſame Perſons, even if it had been left to their own choice. Their Names we have upon Record in the Holy Scriptures; as [a] Bezaleel of the Tribe of Judah the Son of Uri and Miriam the Siſter of Moſes, [b] Aholiab the Son of Aheſamach of the Tribe of Dan. Nay, the People were ſo free of their Money, Goods, and Pains, that Moſes was forc'd to Reſtrain them by a Proclamation, and bid them hold their hands; there being more than enough brought in allready. And the Maſter-Builders were of that opinion; ſo that they were now to go in hand with the Fabrick: Moſes directing the Magnitude, and the proportion of it, according to what God had appointed in the Large Contributions toward it.

Mount.

Mount. He gave particular order alſo for the Sacrificing veſſels, with the ſize and number of thoſe that were to be employ'd in the Divine worſhip. The zeal and bounty of the Women too was very remarkable, in the ſparkling magnificence and curioſity of the Sacerdotal Veſtments, and whatever elſe might ſerve to illuſtrate, either the Place or the Duty.

Things being thus prepar'd, and the Gold, Silver, Braſs, Loom-work, and other materials all in readyneſs; Moſes proclaym'd a Feſtival, where every man was to attend, and Sacrifice according to his Ability: and ſo ſoon as that Solemnity was over, he went immediately in hand with the erecting of a Tabernacle according to this following Model. Moſes erects a Tabernacle. The Model of it.

The outward Court was to be fifty Cubits in Breadth; a hundred in Length; twenty Braſen Pillars on each ſide long ways, ten a croſs, and every Pillar five Cubits in height, with Rings and Borders to it of Silver: the Baſes of Braſs, curiouſly wrought and guilded, and faſten'd into the ground with pins of a Cubit in length, pointed at the end like the foot of a pike: which with the help of Cords, that paſs'd through the Ringles, bound the whole frame together, from top to bottom, and kept it firm and ſteady againſt the ſtrongeſt Blaſts. It was alſo encompaſs'd with a Veil of curious fine Linnen, that hung from the Corniſhes down to the very Baſes; which ſerv'd for a wall to the encloſure. The outward Court.

Theſe were the Dimenſions of three ſides of the work; and it was alſo fifty Cubits in Front: twenty of them left open for a Door or Entrance, with two Planks or Quarters like Gate-poſts on each ſide of the Paſſage. They were cover'd all over with Silver work, only the Baſes were Braſs. There were likewiſe ſix other Planks, three on each hand, that for ſtrength's ſake were joynted one into another, and a curious Curtain drawn over them. The Gate ſpace being twenty Cubits wide, was five alſo in depth, and cover'd wth a delicate embroidery of Flowers and Figures (Living Creatures only excepted) in Violet Colours, Scarlet and Purple, upon a Veil of fine Linnen.

Within the Court Gate ſtood a Laver for water, being a large Veſſel of Braſs, with a foot of the ſame, for the Prieſts to waſh their Hands and their Feet in.

In the middle of this Court ſtood the Tabernacle, Fronting to the Eaſt for the advantage of receiving the Beams of the Riſing Sun. It was thirty Cubits in Length, and twelve in Breadth; and juſt as high as it was broad. One ſide of it look'd toward the South; another to the North; and the back part of it to the Weſt. The two ſides were made up of forty wooden Planks, twenty of a ſide, and the form of them Quadrangular; a Cubit and a half in Breadth, and four fingers thick: plated all over with Gold; two Tenons to every Plank, and two Silver Baſes, with Mortiſſes to receive thoſe Tenons. On the Weſt ſide there ſtood ſix other Boards, which were likewiſe over-layd with Gold, and ſo nicely put together that they ſeem'd to be all of a piece. Now theſe twenty Boards, being each of them a Cubit and a half over, make up the juſt Length of thirty Cubits. The ſix Boards on the Weſtern ſide only nine Cubits; but then there were two other Planks to joyn them, one at each Corner in the ſame Poſition, and of the ſame Length and Breadth with the other, but much thicker, to bind the ends and that ſide of the Tabernacle the faſter together. Every Plank had Golden Rings or Staples driven into't, and all ſo orderly diſpos'd, that they anſwer'd one another in a direct line. Through theſe Rings there went ſeveral Bars, of five Cubits in Length, and plated all over with Gold: which reaching from end to end, kept the whole quarter tight, by framing one piece into another. On the back part, or the lower end of this Structure, the Boards were all rang'd and order'd after the ſame manner, by paſſing a Guilt Bar through as many Rings as there were Plates, and accommodating one Bar to another. There were moreover Bolts and Staples at the corners to keep end and ſides together; which, with the help of Mortiſſes to bind one piece to the other, ſecur'd the Tabernacle againſt wind and weather. The Poſition of the Tabernacle.

The inſide of this Tabernacle was divided into thrice ten Cubits in Length. At ten Cubits from the bottom, there ſtood four Pillars a croſs; of the ſame workmanſhip and the ſame matter, and upon Baſes of the ſame make and metal allready ſpoken of; ſtanding at equal diſtances one from the other. Within theſe Pillars was the Moſt Holy Place which was inacceſſible even to the Prieſts themſelves: to whom the reſt of the Tabernacle was all open. This diviſion of it into three parts, ſeems to hold ſome Analogy with the conſideration of the Univerſe. The firſt part, where the very Prieſts were not permitted to enter, may be allow'd to have ſome Reſemblance to Heaven it ſelf, as the Throne of the Divine Majeſty: and for the other twenty Cubits, where only the Prieſts had admittance, it bare a Reſemblance, in ſome ſort, to the Earth and the Sea. At the entrance into this Tabernacle, there were five Guilded Columns planted upon Baſes of Braſs, and all cover'd with Curtains of fine Yarn, dy'd into Blew, Purple, and Scarlet, and woven together. The firſt of theſe Curtains was ten Cubits ſquare, The Diviſion of the Tabernacle, and the Myſtery of it. The Curtains.

and ſerv'd for a Covering to the Partition betwixt the Moſt Holy Place and the Holy, to keep the former out of ſight. The Temple it ſelf was call'd Holy; but the ſpace within the four Pillars, bears the Name of Sanctum Sanctorum. This Curtain, or Veil, was Beautify'd with all ſorts of Flowers and curious Figures; Living Creatures only excepted. There was yet another Veil that for Size, Colours, and Work, was not inferior to the former; and this overſpread the five Pillars at the coming in: it was faſten'd at the top with Hooks and Eyes, and ſo down to the middle of the five Colums; leaving the reſt open for the Prieſts to enter by. This Veil had another over it, of the ſame largeneſs and almoſt Contiguous to it; but the Ground Flaxen: and it had Rings tack'd to it, with a ſtring run through them, to draw at pleaſure, eſpecially upon Feſtival days, to give the People the ſight of the under Curtain, with all the Ornaments of it's Embroydery and Figures. At other times, and chiefly in foul weather, the upper Curtain ſerv'd for a Cover to preſerve the former, being of a ſtuff that was proof againſt Rain. This kind of Curtain has been made uſe of at the door of the Temple from the very Building of it to this day.

The Holy, and the Holy of Holies.

There were likewiſe ten pieces of Hanging, of eight and twenty Cubits compaſs each, and four Cubits deep; and ſo exactly coupled together with Golden Loops as if they had been all but one entire piece. Theſe Hangings cover'd the whole Tabernacle, top and ſides, within one foot of the Ground. There were likewiſe eleven pieces more, of the ſame depth, but ſomewhat longer: that is to ſay, they were thirty Cubits each, and made of Hair, as the other were of Wool, and the workmanſhip every jot as Artificial. Theſe Curtains were a Covering to the other ten; and as they hung down looſe and flowing upon the Ground, they carry'd ſome ſort of Reſemblance to the Canopy of a Bed. The eleventh Curtain was put up over the door of the Tabernacle; the odd number being ſpecially deſign'd for that Service. This covering of Goat's hair had yet another of Skins over that, for a ſhelter againſt Heats and Rains. The ſpectacle, in fine, was ſo great a ſurpriſe to People at a diſtance, by the Sky-colour appearance of it, that it ſeem'd to the Eye a perfect Repreſentation of the Heavens. Now theſe Curtains of hair-cloath and skins were, as that over the Gate, for a fence againſt the injuries of the Seaſons.

The Frame and Figure of the Ark. Ex. 37.

After the finiſhing of the Tabernacle as above, they went in hand with the Ark of God, which was made of a Wood that the Hebrews call Heron, the ſtrongeſt and firmeſt of all Plants, and the moſt ſecure againſt Rotting or taking the Worm. The figure of the Ark was this: it was two Cubits and a half in Length; one and a half Broad, and as much in Depth: cover'd all over with the pureſt Gold, and ſo order'd both within and without, that there was no Wood to be ſeen. The Cover was crampt together with Golden hooks; curious, and firm to admiration; and every where ſo ſmooth, that there was no danger of one part galling another. At the two ends were Riveted into the Frame four Golden Rings, one at every Corner: and through thoſe Rings two Guilded Bars lay'd a croſs, on each ſide one, to remove the Ark at any time from place to place upon occaſion; for they us'd no other way of Tranſporting it, than as the Prieſts and Levites carry'd it upon their ſhoulders. Upon this Cover were two Figures, which the Hebrews call Cherubims: a kind of wing'd Creature, anſwering the deſcription of what Moſes ſaw about the Throne of God; and what no Mortal had ever ſeen the like of before. In this Ark were depoſited the two Tables of the Decalogue: five of the Commandments in each Table, and two and a half in a Column. This Ark, in fine, was lay'd up in the Sanctuary.

The Cherubims.

The two Tables depoſited in the Ark.

The Table of Shew-Bread.

In this Tabernacle Moſes plac'd a Table, not unlike that at [a] Delphi: two Cubits in Length; one in Breadth; and the Height a Cubit and a half. The Feet of it from the middle downward were exactly like thoſe the Dorians make uſe of for their Beds, and made round; but from thence upwards ſquare; with a Border of four fingers thickneſs, jutting out, and a Crown of Gold over and under it on every ſide. Under this Border there were four Rings of Gold, faſten'd into the upper part of the four Feet; one at each Corner, and Guilt Bars of the firmeſt Wood that paſs'd through them, and ſerv'd for handles upon the removal of it from one place to another. This Table ſtood in the Temple toward the North, not far from the Sanctuary it ſelf. There were ſet upon it twelve Loaves of Unleavened Bread; ſix on each ſide of the Table, and pil'd in order, one over another. They were made of the fineſt Flower; two Aſſars in quantity, or ſeven Attick Cotyla's, after the Hebrew meaſure, each Cake containing two Omers. Over theſe Loaves were two Golden diſhes of Incenſe. At the end of ſeven days theſe Loaves were taken away, and others put in their places. Now the Seventh Day is that which we call our Sabbaoth: but we ſhall ſpeak further of this in another place.

The golden Candleſtick.

Juſt over againſt this Table, on the South-ſide, ſtood a golden Candleſtick; the Work of the Founder, and caſt hollow: the Weight of it a hundred [b] Mines, which the Hebrews call Cinchares, and the Greeks a Talent. This Candleſtick was ſet out with Bowls, Lillies, Pomgranates, and little Cups and Diſhes all of pure Gold, to the Number of ſeventy Pieces that ſhot up out of the ſhank into ſeven Branches, anſwering the Number of the Planets, and they were ranged in an Order of Uniformity one to another. On the Top of theſe ſeven Branches were as many Lamps; which, as the Candleſtick ſtood ſloping, fac'd toward the Eaſt and the South.

Betwixt the Candleſtick and the Table, as aforeſayd, there was a little Altar for Incenſe of the ſame ſtrong and incorruptible Wood with the Ark: one Cubit ſquare for Length and Breadth, and the Height of it double: a golden Fire hearth, and a Crown of the pureſt Gold round about it from Corner to Corner, with Rings and Staves through them, for the Eaſe of Carriage. The Altar of Incenſe.

There was alſo another Altar erected before the Tabernacle: the Frame of the ſame Wood with the Former; five Cubits ſquare, and three in Height, finiſht after the ſame Deſign with the former; ſave that it was plated all over with Braſs: and in the Middle of it, betwixt Top and Bottom, a brazen Grate of a Kind of Net-work, for the Aſhes to fall through. There were alſo Funnels, Vials, Cenſers, Cups and Pans, and other Neceſſaries for the Service of the Altar, all of Gold. This may ſerve for an Account of the Tabernacle, and of the Veſſels thereunto belonging. Ex. 38. Ex. 39

CHAP. VII.

Of the Prieſts, and High-Prieſt's Veſtments; Purifications, and Feſtivals.

To proceed now to the Veſtments appointed both for the ordinary Prieſts, and the High-Prieſt; as well thoſe that they call Chaanæans of the one; as for the [a] Anarabaches himſelf, which ſignifies the Prince of the Prieſts, of the other. We ſhall begin with the former. No Prieſt was to officiate without being firſt purify'd, according to the Order and Direction of the Law. His Under-Garment was of fine twiſted Linnen, and made up much after the Faſhion of our Trowſſes or Drawers: the Hebrews call it a [b] Manachaſe, or a Binder. The Feet were to be put through it, and ſo drawn up over the Thighs; open downward from the Top, and faſt girt about the Loyns. The Prieſts Veſtments. Manachaſe

Over this was a Coat of very fine Linnen, which the Hebrews call [c] Chethemene: that is to ſay, a linnen Cloth; as Chethon is taken for the Flax it is made of. It ſate cloſe to the whole Body, with ſtreight Sleeves, and reaching down to the Heels. This Coat was faſten'd with a Girdle about the Middle, of four Fingers broad, and ſo artificially ſet out with Needle-work, in divers Colours, that it had ſome Reſemblance to the Skin of a Snake. There were wrought into this Girdle ſeveral Flowers and Figures in Blew, Purple, and Scarlet; but the Ground was Linnen. It went twice about the Body of the Prieſt, and for the better Grace hung down from his Breaſt to his Feet; ſaving only when he was in the Exerciſe of his Function, and in that caſe he caſt it over his left Shoulder, to be the more at liberty for the Diſcharge of his Office. Moſes calls this Girdle Abaneth, and we at this Day call it Emian; a Word that we have learnt from the Babylonians. This Garment was made without either Plaits or Folds; wide in the Neck, and buckled together before and behind, the Hebrew Name for it is Maſſabazanes. Chethemene. Abaneth. Maſſabazanes.

The Prieſt had alſo a kind of Mitre or Bonnet, like a ſmall Helmet, that cover'd little more than one half of his Head: the Name of it is [d] Maſnaëmphthes. It was made of Linnen, and bound together with Filleting over and over to keep it ſteady. There was yet another Cap of curious fine Linnen, that ſerv'd for a Covering to the former, and came ſo low, that there was not ſo much as a Stitch or a Seam of the other to be ſeen: and every Part of it was ſo ſecur'd one to another, that there was no Danger of any thing looſening or falling, to diſturb the Prieſt in his Office. This is enough ſayd of the Prieſts Veſtments in common one with another. Maſnaëmphthes.

As to the High-Prieſt, over and above the Ornaments already exhibited, he had others peculiar to his Office: as a purple Robe that came down to his Ankles, which we call [e] Methir; with ſuch a Girdle for Colours and Figures, as that which we have formerly mention'd, ſaving only that this has alſo an Intermixture of Gold. The Skirt of this Veſt was trimm'd with a Fringe, and hung round with Pomgranates and golden Bells of a curious Workmanſhip, which were interchangeably plac'd, and at equal Diſtances one from another. This Garment was all of a Piece, and without ſeam, and had no Opening to it, but only length-ways, a little below the Shoulders behind, and ſo to the Middle of the Breaſt before, with a Border to it for Decency's ſake to The High-Prieſt's Methir.

keep the gaping out of ſight, with another Border likewiſe to that part of it that was left open for the Arms to paſs through the Sleeves.

The Ephod. Over this Veſtment there was yet a third; which was call'd the Ephod, and much the ſame with the Epomis of the Greeks, according to the Deſcription. It was a Cubit in Length, Embroyder'd all over with Gold and a Glorious variety of Colours, covering the whole Breaſt: and it had likewiſe Sleeves to it; ſo that it was no other in effect than a ſhort Coat.

The Eſſen, or Logion. Upon the fore part of this Robe, and in the middle of the Breaſt, there was left a void place of a ſpan ſquare for the [a] Eſſen, which the Greeks call Logion, as much as to ſay, in Latin, the Rationale, or the Oracle. This ſquare piece did juſt fill up that vacancy, which was in truth left on purpoſe for it. There were Golden Rings at every Corner, and Purple Ribbons run through them to faſten the Ephod and the Rationale, one to the other. And then to fill up all ſpaces, and cover the ſeams, the intervals were wrought over with ſtrings of the ſame Colour. The High-Prieſt had upon each ſhoulder a Sardonyx ſet in Gold, which two ſtones ſerv'd for Buckles to claſp one part of the Ephod to the other, with Golden Ringles to bind them and the Rationale together. Upon theſe ſtones were Engraven in Hebrew Characters the Names of Jacob's twelve Sons: the ſix Elder upon that on the Right ſhoulder, and the other ſix on the Left. There were ſet alſo in the Eſſen, or Rationale, twelve ſtones of ſuch a Size and Luſtre, that both for the Ornament and the Value they were ineſtimable. Theſe ſtones were diſpos'd of into four Rows, at three in a Row; and divided one from another by little partitions of Gold to ſecure them from falling out. In the firſt Row there was a Sardonyx, a Topaz, and an Emerald; in the ſecond, a Ruby, a Jaſper, and a Sapphire; in the third, a Ligyrius, an Amethyſt, and an Agat; and in the fourth, a Chryſolite, an Onyx, and a Beryl. In theſe twelve Precious Stones were ſet down ſeverally the Names of Jacob's twelve Sons, which we look upon as the Heads of our Tribes; and ſo their Names were there inſerted in the order of Seniority and Birth. Now whereas theſe Hooks or Faſtenings were not ſufficient of themſelves to ſupport the weight of ſo many Precious ſtones, there were two Larger and Stronger pieces tackt to the upper part of the Rationale toward the Neck that ſtood out above the work of the Garment: and to theſe were faſten'd two wreath'd Golden Chains that were convey'd by ſecret paſſages up to the ſhoulder piece. The upper end of theſe Chains was carry'd about to the Back, and ſo hookt with a Ring behind there upon the Border of the Ephod; and this was the Principal holdfaſt that kept all firm together. There was alſo ſtitcht to the Rationale a Girdle of the Colour before ſpoken of, but interwoven with Gold. It went twice about the Body, and being ty'd on a knot before, the two ends were let looſe to hang dangling down, and a curious Gold Fringe to each of them.

The High-Prieſt's Mitre. The High Prieſt's Tiara, or Mitre, was like that of other Prieſts, ſaving only that it had another of Purple or Violet Colour over it, and a Triple Crown of Gold about it: over which Crown was the Reſemblance in Gold of a kind of Cup, in form like the Bud of the Plant which the Hebrews call Saccharus, and the Greeks Hyoſcyamos. But for the ſake of thoſe that have neither ſeen this Plant, nor know any thing of it; or of others that perhaps may have heard of the Name, and yet ſtrangers to the nature of it, it will not be amiſs to give a ſhort Deſcription of it. This Plant riſes commonly to ſomewhat above three Spans in Height: the Root of it like that of a Turnip, and its Leaf like Mint. It branches out into a round knob, with a Coat over it, which ſheds as the Fruit ripens. The Cup as I told you, that was plac'd over the Golden Crown, was about the bigneſs of the joynt of ones little Finger, round and hollow like the inſide of a Goblet: but I ſhall explain my ſelf yet a little further for the Benefit of the Reader. The Figure of it was a kind of Hemiſphere; narrowing a little upwards, and then enlarging it ſelf toward the brims into the form of a Baſon, reſembling a Pomgranate cut in two; upon which there grew a round Cover, ſo curious by Nature as if it had been Turn'd on purpoſe for it: and it had ſharp points riſing out of it like the prickles of a Pomgranate. Within this Cup and Cover the Fruit was Nouriſh'd and Preſerv'd. The Seed of it is like that of the Plant Sideritis, or Wall-ſage; and a Flower like Plantane. This was the Ornament of the Mitre from the Neck round to the Temples; but the Fore-head had a Golden Plate lay'd over it, with an Inſcription upon it of the Holy Name of God. This is enough ſayd of the Dreſs and Veſtments of the High-Prieſt.

I cannot but wonder in this place, at the hard meaſure we meet with in the world among thoſe that hate and traduce us as Blaſphemers and Deriders of the Divinity that they Adore. Let but any Man conſider the Structure of the Tabernacle; the Sacerdotal Veſtments; and the Holy Veſſels that are Dedicated to the Service of the Altar; and he muſt of neceſſity be Convinc'd that our Law-giver was a Pious Man, and that all the Clamours againſt us and our Profeſſion, are only Calumny and Scandal. For what is all this but the Image of the whole world? as will appear to any Man that does but ſoberly and impartially examine the matter. The Tabernacle of thirty Cubits is divided into three parts; that is to ſay, two for the Prieſts in general, as a place in common to them all, and as free of acceſs as the Earth and the Sea. The third place, where no mortal muſt be admitted, is as the Heaven reſerv'd only for God himſelf. The twelve Loaves of Shew-bread upon the Table, ſignify the twelve Months of the Year. The Candleſtick is made up of ſeventy pieces, and refers to the twelve Signs of the Zodiack, through which the ſeven Planets take their courſe: and the ſeven Lamps on the top of the ſeven Branches bear an Analogy to the Planets themſelves. The Curtains with the four Colours, that are wrought into them, repreſent the four Elements. The fine Linnen ſignifies the Earth, as the Flax takes it's growth out of it. By the Purple, is to be underſtood the Sea, from the Blood of the Fiſh (or Murex) that gives it the Tincture. The Violet Colour is the Symbol of the Air; and the Scarlet, of the Fire. By the Linnen Garment of the High-Prieſt is deſign'd the whole Body of the Earth: by the Violet Colour, the Heavens. The Pomgranates anſwer the Lightning; the Noiſe of the Bells, the Thunder. The four Colour'd Ephod (ſince it pleas'd God to order it ſo to be) bears a Reſemblance to the very Nature of the Univerſe, and the interweaving of it with Gold ſeems to me to have a regard to the Rays that give us light. The Rationale in the middle of it intimates the Poſition of the Earth in the Centre of the world. The Girdle about the Body of the Prieſt, is as the Sea about the Globe of the Earth. The two Sardonyx-ſtones are a kind of Figure of the Sun and Moon: and the twelve other ſtones may be underſtood either of the twelve Months, or the twelve Signs in the Circle, which the Greeks call the Zodiack. The Violet Colour'd Tiara ſpeaks a Reſemblance of Heaven; and it would have been an irreverence to have written the Sacred Name of God upon any other colour. The Triple Crown and Plate of Gold give us to underſtand the Glory and the Majeſty of Allmighty God. This is as plain an illuſtration of theſe matters as I thought needful: and I would not looſe any opportunity, either upon this, or upon any other occaſion, of doing all poſſible right to the honour and wiſdom of our incomparable Law-giver.

The Tabernacle and the Prieſts Veſtments, a Figure of the Univerſe.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Prieſthood of Aaron.

WHEN the work of the Tabernacle was thus far advanc'd; and the next thing in order was to be the Dedication of it: God appear'd to Moſes, and gave him in Charge to ſettle his Brother Aaron in the Prieſthood, as a Perſon of all Men living that beſt deſerv'd the Dignity. So Moſes call'd the People together, and treated them with a moving Diſcourſe upon the Virtues of Aaron: ſetting forth the Zeal and Paſſion he had for the good of the Publick; even to the degree of hazarding his Life upon ſeveral occaſions for their ſake. Moſes found the whole Congregation ſo well ſatisfy'd with the reaſon of what he ſayd, and the Choice of the Perſon, that he proceeded to his Buſineſs in theſe words. Exod. 28. & 29.

'Good People of Iſrael, ſays he, we have now gone through the great work that God 'requir'd at our hands, to the uttermoſt of our Power. But in regard that God himſelf 'will vouchſafe to honour this Tabernacle with his Preſence, and that it is now to be 'Conſecrated, it will become us in the firſt place to make choice of a High-Prieſt that is 'every way qualify'd for the Exerciſe of the Holy Function, and to offer up Prayers and 'Sacrifices for us. I muſt confeſs indeed, if the Election were left to me, I ſhould make 'no difficulty of aſſuming the Honour to my ſelf, not only upon the ſcore of human frail-'ty, as all Men are naturally Lovers of themſelves; but I ſhould reckon my ſelf to have 'ſome ſort of Title to it upon the Merit of the Dangers and Hardſhips I have undergone 'for the common good. But ſo it is in the preſent Caſe, that God, whoſe Officer the 'High-Prieſt is, allready hath ſingled out and decree'd Aaron to the Dignity; as the 'moſt worthy of the Sacerdotal Robe. So that Aaron is deſign'd from this time forward 'to officiate at the Altar, and to offer up Vows and Supplications to the Allmighty on 'your behalf; which coming from an Interceſſor of God's own Appointment, will be 'the more graciouſly receiv'd. The People were all highly pleas'd with what Moſes had deliver'd, giving their Aſſent unanimouſly and chearfully to the Choice: for no Man had ſo fair a Pretence to the Sacred Character as Aaron had, either in reſpect of his Family, the gift of Prophecy which he had receiv'd, or the excellent Qualities of his Brother Moſes. Now Aaron had at that time four Sons; [a] Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar. Aaron declar'd High-Prieſt by Moſes.

As to the remainder of what had been given toward the Building of the Tabernacle, Moſes order'd the overplus to be layd out in Vails and Coverings for the Tabernacle it ſelf; the Golden Candleſtick; the Altar of Incenſe, and other Holy Veſſels, to ſecure them upon any occaſion of removal from either wet or duſt. After this Moſes gave the People a ſummons, and lay'd an impoſition upon them, of half a Shekel a head, toward the charge of the work in hand; reckoning an Hebrew Shekel at four Attick Drachma's. They ſubmitted to the Tax, in fine, with all the chearfulneſs in the world. The number of the Contributors was ſix hundred and five thouſand five hundred and fifty: Freemen all, and from twenty years of Age to fifty. Which Mony was all employ'd in the ſervice of the Tabernacle.

A Tax layd, and 605550. Contributors.

Moſes apply'd himſelf, in the next place, to the Purifying of the Tabernacle and the Prieſts; and the manner of it was this. He took of the choiceſt Myrrhe five hundred Shekels-worth; and of Iris the ſame quantity: Cinnamon, and Balſam, (which are wonderfully Fragrant) the one half. Theſe Ingredients he order'd to be beaten together and Macerated in a Hin of the beſt Oyl-Olive: (which Hin is a Veſſel that holds as much as two Attick Choa's.) This Compoſition being then ſet over the Fire, and prepar'd according to Art, produc'd an Oyntment of the moſt grateful Odor imaginable. With which Oyntment, Moſes Anointed the Prieſts and the Tabernacle, and this was the Ceremony of Purification; offering up ſeveral ſorts of Sacrifices alſo in the Tabernacle. As to the Golden Altar, and the precious Perfumes that were Dedicated upon it; I ſhall rather paſs over the particulars, than tire out the Reader with many words. But in general, there was Incenſe offer'd twice a day; that is to ſay, before Sun riſing, and about Sun ſetting, and Purifying Oyl preſerv'd for the Lamps of the Holy Candleſtick: three to burn all day, and the reſt to be lighted up in the Evening. The Fabrick was now finiſht, and the two Maſter-workmen concern'd in it were Bezaleel, and Aholiab, whoſe office it was to Superintend the reſt; improving other Men's Inventions, and ſupplying new ones of their own: but of the two, Bezaleel had the Preference. All this was done in ſeven Months time, and within the compaſs of a Year from their coming out of Ægypt.

The Purifying Oyle.

Bezaleel and Aholiab.

In the Year following, and on the New Moon of the Month of Xanthicus, according to the Macedonians, or Niſan, according to the Hebrews, the Tabernacle was Conſecrated, and ſo were all the Veſſels belonging to it. Upon this occaſion, God Allmighty gave the Hebrews to underſtand by a remarkable Providence, how Graciouſly he accepted of their Zeal for his Service, and that their Labour was not loſt in the erecting of that Glorious Structure: and this he manifeſted by deſcending to take up his Habitation there, and vouchſafeing them the Bleſſing of his Preſence. As for inſtance. It was ſo clear an Air that there was not one Cloud to be ſeen, but juſt over and about the Tabernacle. And this Cloud was not either ſo thick as to threaten foul weather, nor ſo thin as to be Tranſparent: but there iſſu'd from it ſo gentle a Dew, that all that ſaw it, and believ'd an Allmighty Power, took it for a Divine influence, and an evident token that their Prayers were heard, and that God himſelf honour'd them with his Preſence.

Exod. 40. The Tabernacle Conſecrated. Levit. 8.

When Moſes had gratify'd the Artificers, that Erected and Beautify'd this Structure, with Encouragements and Rewards anſwerable to their deſerts, he Sacrific'd in the Door of the Tabernacle, as God had commanded him, a Bullock, a Ram, and a Kid for the Sins of the People. As to the Ceremonies properly belonging to the Sacrifices, I ſhall handle that Point more particularly when I come to ſpeak of the Sacrifices themſelves; and I ſhall likewiſe ſhew what thoſe Burnt Offerings are, which the Law has appointed to be totally conſum'd, and thoſe again that the Law permits to be eaten. When the Beaſts, as aforeſaid, were now kill'd, Moſes took of the Blood, and ſprinkled it upon Aaron and his Sons, Purifying them with water of the Fountain, and Anointing Oyl, and ſo Hallowing them for Prieſts of the Lord. This form of Conſecration was repeated in all the parts of it for ſeven days one after another ſucceſſively, with the oblation of the ſame Sacrifices, one of a ſort every day. On the eighth day, Moſes appointed a Feſtival, and order'd the People to come in and Sacrifice according to their abilities: who were ſo ready and chearful in their complyance, that they did not only contend in a Pious emulation one with another who ſhould go furtheſt; but made it a point of Honour and Conſcience even to outdoe themſelves. The Sacrifices were no ſooner lay'd upon the Altar, but there broke out a Flame from them of it's own accord like a flaſh of Lightning, which conſum'd them all.

Levit. 9.

There was a dreadful Calamity after this that befel Aaron, and would have gone to the Heart of him both as a Man and as a Father, if he had not been Fortify'd againſt all events, and a Perſon abſolutely reſign'd to God's Holy will and pleaſure. Nadab and Abihu, the two eldeſt of Aaron's four Sons allready ſpoken of, as they were about to Sacrifice upon the Altar, not according to the Preſcription of Moſes, but after a manner formerly in practice, were all on a ſudden Blaſted and Conſum'd with a Judicial Fire, their Levit. 10. Nadab and Abihu Conſum'd by a Judicial Fire.

Bodies and their Faces ſhrivel'd up, and themſelves ſcorch'd to Death with a flame not to be quench'd. Moſes, upon this, order'd their Father and their Brothers to take up the Bodies, and carry them out of the Camp, and ſo to give them a Decent Buryal. The unexpected Death of theſe Brothers was ſo terrible a ſurprize to the Multitude, that their grief was in effect Inconſolable: but Moſes earneſtly exhorted the Father and the Brethren not to lay this Tribulation to Heart: and rather to conſider that it did not ſtand with the Dignity of the Prieſthood to prefer an impotent paſſion to the Honour and Glory of God: Aaron being at this time Inveſted with the Sacerdotal Stole.

Moſes, in fine, deliver'd himſelf up ſo entirely to the Service of God, that he never minded the Addreſſes and Acclamations of the People. He went no longer now to Mount Sinai for Councel; but into the Tabernacle, for inſtructions how to Govern himſelf; and in all reſpects like a private Man, ſave only in the exerciſe of his Charge and Function, for the good and well being of the Publick. He gave them alſo the Laws and Precepts in writing, for the leading of their Lives acceptably in the ſight of God, and for the preſerving of themſelves in Peace and Union: which Laws and Precepts were no other than the Dictates of God himſelf. Of theſe Laws I ſhall ſay ſomewhat further in another place.

But before I proceed, I muſt here ſupply one Remark about the Veſtments of the High-Prieſt which I have hitherto omitted. And it is this: that to prevent all poſſibility of putting any Impoſture upon the world, under the Countenance of the Holy Robe, or a pretext of the Gift of Prophecy, it is to be obſerv'd that whenever God vouchſaf'd to Honour theſe Sacrifices with his ſpecial Preſence, he never fail'd of accompanying that Gracious Deſcenſion with ſome ſignal viſible Circumſtance or other, to convince, not only his own People, but Strangers alſo, of the reality of that Divine appearance. To inſtance in the two Sardonyx's on the High-Prieſt's ſhoulders (which we have formerly ſpoken of, and every body knows the nature of them:) what a wonderful Light does the Stone on the Right ſhoulder of the High-Prieſt caſt at a great diſtance, beyond the natural Luſtre, upon the occaſion of God's ſhewing himſelf well pleas'd with the Sacrifices, and not otherwiſe! and this to the admiration and ſatisfaction of all men Living, ſave only ſuch as ſet up to gain the Reputation of wiſe Men by a profeſs'd contempt of our Religion. But there is another thing yet that is ſtill more amazing. I ſpeak of the twelve Precious Stones that the High-Prieſt wore upon his Eſſen, or Rationale, when God preſag'd a Victory: for there came out of them ſo Sparkling a Glory that all the People look'd upon it as a Divine influence, and as an earneſt of God's aſſiſtance. And hence it is that the Greeks that have any ſort of eſteem for our Rites and Solemnities, and are convinc'd of the Miracle by their very Eyes, call this Eſſen, Logion, which ſignifies an Oracle [as well as Rationale.] but it is now two hundred Years and upward that this Sardonyx and Eſſen have left ſhining, or at leaſt diſcontinu'd the manifeſtations of their Miraculous Light and Splendor; for God hath been offended with us for our Sins, as I ſhall ſhew elſewhere: and ſo return to my Narration.

The Sparkling of the High-Prieſt's Jewels a preſage of Victory.

The Tabernacle being now Conſecrated, and all things diſpatch'd that related to the Service of the Almighty, the People were ſo tranſported with joy, to conſider that God was come down to dwell among them, that they gave up themſelves wholly to Hymns and Sacrifices, and to the thought of living at eaſe, without ſo much as dreaming of any more difficulties to come: ſome of the Tribes, in General, and others in Particular, preſenting their reſpective Oblations. The Heads and Princes of the twelve Tribes brought ſix Wagons, and a pair of Oxen to each of them, for the Service of the Tabernacle, upon any occaſion of Removing: over and above a Silver Charger of a hundred and thirty Shekels-weight, and a Silver Bowl of ſeventy Shekels, both full of fine Flour mingled with Oyl, to be us'd in the Sacrifices; with an Incenſe-Cup alſo full of Perfumes, and valu'd at ten Daricks. They offer'd likewiſe a young Bullock, a Ram, and a Lamb of a year old for a Burnt-offering; with a He-Goat for a Sin-offering. They had likewiſe their Peace-offerings: that is to ſay, two Bullocks a day, five Rams, with as many yearling Lambs and He-Goats. Theſe Sacrifices continu'd for twelve days, at one every day.

The Oblations of the Tribes. Num. 7.

Moſes, as I have ſayd already, went no longer up to Mount Sinai, but into the Tabernacle, to receive God's directions about the Laws and Rules that were to be eſtabliſh'd: which being wholly of Divine appointment and inſtitution; and above the reach of human underſtanding, it was but reaſon that the Sacred authority and obligation of them ſhould be perpetual. I have ſayd enough elſewhere to prove theſe Laws the gift of God, and indiſpenſably binding to the Hebrews, as well in the Liberties of Peace as in the Neceſſities of War. But I ſhall have occaſion to handle this Point more at large in a Tract by it ſelf.

Moſes consults God in the Tabernacle.

CHAP. IX.

Of Sacrifices.

Sacrifices, Particular, and Publick.

BEING now to handle the Point of Sacrifices and Purifications, I ſhall only mind the Reader of ſome few Laws upon that Subject. There are two ſorts of Sacrifices: the one particular and private; the other popular and publick: and theſe two differ in the manner of the Celebration. One of them is call'd a Burnt-offering, or a Holocauſt; as who ſhall ſay, the whole Sacrifice is to be Burnt: the other is an Offering of Thanksgiving, and to be eaten by the Preſenters of it. To begin now with the former. When a private Man makes an Oblation of a Burnt-Offering, he brings a Bullock, a Lamb, and a Goat: the two latter not above a year old; but the firſt may be allow'd to be ſomewhat over: they muſt all be Males, and entirely conſum'd by the Fire. When they are kill'd, the Prieſt ſprinkles the Blood of them round about the Altar, and after they are well waſh'd, cuts them in pieces, ſtrows them with Salt, and lays them all together upon it; where the wood lyes ready kindled before hand. He waſhes the Feet and the Entrails, and then caſts them into the Fire with the reſt. The Skin belongs to the Prieſt. And this is the Ceremony of a Burnt-Offering.

Levit. 1. A Burnt-Offering.

Levit. 3. A Peace-Offering.

If the Oblation be a Peace-Offering, or an Offering of Thankſgiving, the Sacrifices are of the ſame ſort of Creatures, only they muſt be upward of Yearlings without Blemiſh; and Male and Female. The Prieſt, after the killing of them, ſprinkles the Blood upon the Altar, and lays alſo the Kidneys, the Kell, and the Fillets of the Liver, with all the Fat upon them, and the Rump of the Lamb. The Breaſt and the Right ſhoulder is the Prieſt's due, and for the overplus, they that Offer the Sacrifice may eat of it dureing two days; and the remainder afterwards to be Burnt.

Levit. 5. A Sin-Offering.

The ſame method is obſerv'd in the Sin-Offering; only thoſe that are not able to furniſh theſe Sacrifices, ſhall offer two young Pigeons, or two Turtles; the one for a Burnt-Offering, and the other for the Prieſts to Eat. But I ſhall explain my ſelf more at large, when I come to Treat further of Sacrifices.

Sins of Ignorance.

If any Man falls into the Sin of Ignorance, his Sacrifice ſhall be a Lamb, or a She-Goat of the ſame age as before, for a Sin-Offering, and the Prieſt, inſtead of ſmearing the Altar with the Blood all over, ſhall only ſprinkle it upon the Horns, or Corners of it: the Kidney with the Kell and the Fibres of the Liver to be layd upon the Altar. The Fleſh and the Skins are to be reſerv'd for the Prieſts, and the Fleſh to be ſpent that day in the Temple; it being againſt the Law to leave any part of it till the next day. If any Man commits a willful Sin, though ſo cloſe that it is impoſſible to produce any Legal proof againſt him, the Law appoints a Ram for his Offering; and the Prieſts to eat the Fleſh of it; provided it be in the Tabernacle and the ſame day. The Sin-Offering of the Heads of the Tribes is the very ſame with that of private Men, ſaving only that the Sacrifices are to be a Bull and a Goat, and the latter a Male.

Willful Sins.

Levit. 2. Laws for Feaſts, and Sacrifices.

According to the Law, in all Sacrifices, as well Private as Publick, there was to be a certain proportion of fine Flour: the [a] quantity of one Aſſar to a Lamb; two to a Ram; and three to a Bullock; and this was to be Conſecrated upon the Altar with a mixture of Oyl. It was part alſo of the Oblation; half a Hin of Oyl to a Bullock (an Antient Hebrew Meaſure of about two Attick Choa's) a third part of it to a Ram, and a fourth to a Lamb. They were oblig'd likewiſe to provide juſt as much Wine as Oyle, and to pour the Wine about the Altar. If any one ſhall make an Offering of fine Flour for the performance of a Vow, without Sacrificing, let him lay a handful of it upon the Altar, and the Prieſts to Eat the reſt either Boyl'd, (for it is kneaded with Oyl) or made into Cakes; the Sacrificer takeing out of it what he finds neceſſary for Burnt-Offerings. The Law forbids the Sacrificing of the Dam and the Young one at the ſame time, if the Young one be not at leaſt eight days old. There are likewiſe other Sacrifices for the recovery of Health, and divers ſuch like occaſions; where Cakes are eaten with the Fleſh of the Sacrifice, and the Prieſts to take their part; but nothing of it muſt be left till the next Morning.

CHAP. X.

Laws and Ordinances for the Regulation of Prieſts, Sacrifices, Feſtivals; and other matters Political and Civil.

Num. 28. & 29. THE Law hath alſo order'd and appointed a Yearling Lamb to be Sacrific'd every day, Morning and Evening, at the Publick Charge: and two upon the Seventh day or Sabbath, after the ſame manner. And ſo likewiſe at the beginning of the Month, over and above the ordinary Sacrifices, two ſeven Yearling Lambs, a Ram and a He-Goat for a Sin-Offering in caſe of any thing forgotten.

[a] Gr. Δεκατημόριον.

or

On the Seventh Month, which the Macedonians call Hyperberetæus, the Offering was a Bullock, a Ram, and ſeven Lambs, beſide thoſe already mention'd, and a He-Goat for a Sin-Offering.

On the tenth Day of the ſame Month, was a Faſt till Night; and the Sacrifices were a young Bullock, two Rams, ſeven Lambs, and a He-Goat for Sin; with two other Goats over and above. One of theſe Goats was preſented alive before the Lord, and ſo let go into the Wilderneſs as a Scape Goat to expiate for the People. The other was carry'd out into ſome ſweet, clean place near the Camp; and there burnt to Aſhes, Skin and all, without reſerving any part of it: and the Bullock was likewiſe burnt at the ſame time. Now this Bullock was not provided by the People, but by the High Prieſt: who, after the Killing of him, and the bringing of his Blood with that of the Goat into the Temple, dipt his Finger into the Blood and ſprinkl'd the Cover of the Tabernacle ſeven times, and ſo in like manner the Floor; the whole Temple; the Golden Altar; and the great Altar before the Door of the Tabernacle. After this, the Extreme parts of theſe Creatures, the Kidneys and the Fat, with part of the Liver, were lay'd upon the Altar, the High Prieſt furniſhing a Ram allſo upon his own account, and all preſented to the Lord for a Burnt-Offering.

Upon the fifteenth Day of the ſame Month, Winter drawing on, the People were commanded, with their Reſpective Tribes, to ſecure and fortify their Tents againſt the rigour of the Seaſon; and likewiſe that, whenever they ſhould come into the Land that God had promis'd them they ſhould repair to the Metropolis, as the Seat of the Holy Temple, and there Celebrate an Eight days Feſtival; with Burnt-Offerings, Sacrifices, and Peace-offerings: carrying Boughs in their hands of Myrtle, Willow, Palms, and little Sprouts of Peach. Levit. 23.

On the firſt Day of the Eight was to be preſented a Burnt-Offering, of thirteen young Bullocks, fourteen Lambs, two Rams, and a Goat, for an Offering of Attonement. The number of the Lambs and Rams, with the Goat, was to be the ſame for ſix Days; but one Bullock to be abated every day till the number was brought down to ſeven. The Eighth was to be a Day of Reſt, and there were Dedicated to God (as I have ſaid before) a Calf, a Ram, ſeven Lambs, and a Goat for a Sin-Offering. This was the Feaſt of Tabernacles, upon the Hebrews erecting their Tents; and it has been conſtantly obſerv'd with all Ceremony by our People. Ex. 12. 13. 23.

In the Month Xanthicus, which we call Niſan, and reckon upon as the beginning of the Year: on the fourteenth of the Moon, when the Sun is in Aries; and that being the Month when our Forefathers came out of Ægypt, the Law injoyns us to Offer the ſame Sacrifice every year over again, which our Predeceſſors did at their Deliverance from the Ægyptian Bondage, under the Title of the Feaſt of the Paſſover. This Feſtival we Celebrate through all our Tribes, without leaving any remainder of the Oblation till the next day. The Fifteenth is the feaſt of Unleavened Bread; which laſts ſeven days, and follows in order next to the Paſſover. The Sacrifices are two Bullocks, one Ram, and ſeven Lambs for a Burnt-Offering; to which is added a Goat every Day for a Sin-Offering, toward the entertainment of the Prieſts. On the ſecond day of the Feaſt of Unleavened Bread, and the ſixteenth of the Month, they make an Offering to God of the Firſt-Fruits of their Grain, before they taſte of it themſelves; judging it a reaſonable thing that the Authour of all the Bleſſings they enjoy ſhould be ſerv'd firſt. And the method of the Oblation is this. They take a quantity of Corn-Ears, and dry them before the Fire upon a clean Hearth. After this, they break and bruiſe them, and ſo Offer upon the Altar an Aſſar; one handful of it to be left there, and the reſt goes to the Prieſt. The People after this, are allow'd to reap at pleaſure: and the Offering in this Caſe is a Lamb for a Holocauſt. Levit. 23. Num. 9. Deut. 16. The Paſſover. Ex. 23. Lev. 23. The Feaſt of Unleavened Bread. The Firſt Fruits.

On the Fiftieth Day after the Feaſt of the Paſſover: that is to ſay, at the end of ſeven weeks or forty nine days, was celebrated the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, ſo call'd by the Greeks, as denoting the number of Fifty: the Hebrews call it [a] Aſſartha for the ſame reaſon. On this day they Offer'd to God a Wheaten Loaf of two Aſſars bak'd with Leaven, and two Lambs for a Sacrifice; which ſerv'd for the Prieſts Supper: but nothing was to be left of it till the next Morning. The Burnt-Offerings were three Calves, two Sheep, fourteen Lambs, and two Goats for a Sin-Offering. Now there are Burnt-Offerings and Reſt from Labour preſcrib'd in all their Feaſts, according to certain Rules and Limitations in both caſes: with directions allſo which of the Sacrifices are to be Eaten. Levit. 23. The Feaſt of Pentecoſt.

There was likewiſe a Proviſion order'd out of the Publick ſtock of 24 Aſſars of [a] Petavius Confutes this in his Notes upon Epiphanius, p. 63.

Fine Flour, to be made into Loaves of Bread with Leaven, two and two to a Loaf. Now this Bread was to be Bak'd on the Sabbath Eve, and ſet upon the Holy Table next Morning; ſix Loaves on each hand, and one directly againſt the other, with two Golden Cups of Incenſe over them; which were there to remain till the next Sabbath day, and then given to the Prieſts to eat, and others ſet in their places. The Frankincenſe being alſo burnt in the Holy Fire, which conſumes the Burnt-Offerings; there was freſh Incenſe immediately ſupply'd upon freſh Loaves. The High Prieſt moreover offer'd twice a day of the Fineſt Flour ſteept in Oyl, and a little Bak'd to the proportion of an Aſſar: one half of it to be caſt into the Fire in the Morning; the other in the Evening. But without more words at preſent, I ſhall have occaſion to be more Copious upon this Subject in another Place.

CHAP. XI.

The Tribe of Levi ſet apart for the Service of the Altar. Of Meats, and Perſons, Clean and Unclean. Laws for Women in Child-Bed; and in caſe of Adultery and Jealouſy.

Num. 3. The Tribe of Levi ſet apart for God's worſhip.

THE Tribe of Levi being now ſet apart from the reſt of the People for the peculiar Service of God, Moſes Purify'd them with water of the Fountain; and, Sacrificing according to Cuſtom, committed the Tabernacle, the Holy Veſſels, and all other things belonging to it, to their Care and Charge, under the orders and appointments of the Prieſts; inſomuch that they were now look'd upon as Conſecrated to God.

Levit. 7. 17. Meats, Clean and Unclean.

Moſes declar'd himſelf at the ſame time, upon the difference of Meats Clean and Unclean; what might be eaten, and what not: which we ſhall afterward give the Reaſon of, as it falls in our way. But for the Blood of any Creature whatſoever, it is abſolutely forbidden; upon an Opinion that the very Life and Spirit of that Creature is in it: neither is the Fleſh of any thing to be Eaten that Dy'd of it ſelf; and ſo for the Fat of a Goat, a Sheep, or an Ox, it is all prohibited.

Of Perſons, Clean and Unclean. Levit. 13. 14.

It was alſo order'd that all Lepers, and ſuch as Labour'd under a Gonorrhæa ſhould be turn'd out of the City; and ſo for Women, during the time of their Natural Purgations, to withdraw from the Converſation of Men for ſeven days, and then permitted to return as Purify'd. And ſo for one that has aſſiſted at the Burying of a Corps, he ſhall not be reputed clean till ſeven days after. But where the Pollution out-laſts the ſeven days, let the Patient Sacrifice two Lambs: one to be Dedicated, and the Prieſts to take the other. And the ſame Sacrifice ſerves in the caſe of Nocturnal Pollutions; only the Patient to dip himſelf ſtript in cold water, as Men uſually do upon a Congreſs with their Lawful Wives. But the Lepers are to all purpoſes Baniſh'd the City, and effectually human Converſation; as People little better than Dead. But if it ſhall pleaſe God to deliver any Man from this Affliction upon his humble ſupplications, and to reſtore him to a ſound habit again, there are ſeveral Sacrifices that he is oblig'd to Offer up to God in acknowledgment of the benefit he had receiv'd: but of this hereafter. This is enough to lay open the frivolous vanity of that Story, that will have Moſes driven out of Ægypt as a Leper, and none ſo fit as he to Conduct the Hebrews into the Land of Canaan, that were tainted with this Malady as well as himſelf. For if it had been true, he would never have eſtabliſh'd ſuch a Law for his own Honour; but on the contrary, he would rather have oppos'd it if it had been propounded: eſpecially conſidering that in ſeveral parts of the world, Lepers are ſo far from being ſubjected to Indignities and Contempt, that they are many times advanc'd to Commiſſions of Honour and Truſt, in Charges Military, Eccleſiaſtical, and Civil. Now if Moſes and the Multitude were in truth tainted with this Malady, how came it that he did not rather eſtabliſh Laws in favour of it? And is it not now as clear as Day, that this ſcandalous Report was only a Malicious Fiction, to make us and our profeſſion odious? But Moſes being clean himſelf, and converſing with thoſe that were ſo, he Ordain'd this Law for the Glory of God, and with a regard to thoſe that were infected. But every Man is at liberty to think of this matter as he pleaſes.

Moſes vindicated.

Levit. 12. Laws for Women in Child-Bed.

In the caſe of a Woman that is newly Deliver'd of a Child, if it be a Male, ſhe is not allow'd to enter the Temple, or to be preſent at Divine Service for forty days after; nor, if it be a Female, for twice as many. But at the end of the term aforeſaid, ſhe is bound to Offer Sacrifices; part to God, and the remainder to the Prieſts.

Num. 5. Laws in caſe of Adultery, or Jealouſy.

If a Man ſuſpects his Wife of Adultery, his Offering muſt be an Aſſar of Barly-Meal; laying a handful of it upon the Altar, and giving the reſt to the Prieſts to Eat. Some one of them ſets the Woman at the Gate that looks toward the Tabernacle; uncovers her head, and writing the Name of God upon a Parchment, commands her to declare upon her Oath, if ſhe had ever been falſe to her Husband's Bed: to which ſhe Anſwers with with this Imprecation: 'If I have, ſays ſhe, may my Thigh Rot, and my Belly Burſt, 'and let me die miſerable: but on the other hand, if it ſhall be found to be only a 'Fancy, and an extravagant Jealouſy of my Husband's, I beſeech God to grant me the 'Bleſſing of a Male-Child, within ten Months from this Day. After this Oath, the Prieſt took water, and waſh'd the Sacred Name of God clear out of the Parchment; and then ſtraining the water into an earthen Veſſel, caſt of the Duſt of the Floor and Walls of the Temple into it, and ſo gave it to the Woman to Drink. If ſhe was innocent, ſhe ſhould ſuddenly Conceive, and go happily through with her Burden: but if Guilty of Incontinence and a falſe Oath both in one, ſhe was ſure to Periſh with Horror and Infamy, as is ſayd before. Theſe are the Laws that Moſes gave to his Countreymen, concerning his Sacrifices and Purifications: beſide a Preſcription of other Laws and Proviſions, as follows.

CHAP. XII.

Laws againſt Adultery and Inceſt. Prieſts reſtrain'd in their Marriages. The Seventh Year's Sabbaoth; and the Hebrews Jubilee. Ordinances of War. The People number'd. Two Silver Trumpets, and the uſe of them.

ADULTERY was abſolutely and expreſsly forbidden; Moſes very well underſtanding that there could be no happyneſs in a Conjugal ſtate, but in a mutual Faith and Confidence betwixt Man and Wife: and likewiſe how much it concerns, as well Governments as Familys, that the Members both of the one and of the other ſhould be Lawfully Begotten. He Condemn'd Inceſt as a moſt Horrible wickedneſs; whether with the Mother; the Mother in Law; the Aunt, whether by Father or Mother; the Siſter, or the Daughter in Law. He Prohibited the Wife to Live ſo much as with her own Husband, in the time of her Purgations. He pronounc'd alſo a moſt Abominable Sin to have to do with Boys, or Beaſts; and all theſe Tranſgreſſions he made Capital. Levit. 18. 20. 21. Inceſt, a Horrible wickedneſs.

As to the Prieſts, Moſes layd them under a double Obligation: for over and above the tying of them up to the ſame Laws with other People, they were likewiſe under a Prohibition of Marrying with ſome ſorts of Women; as a Mercenary Proſtitute, a Maid-Servant, a Slave, a Publick Hoſteſs, or a Woman Divorc'd upon any account whatſoever. Now there were ſome certain allowances alſo permitted to the Prieſts in Ordinary, and yet deny'd to the High Prieſt; as the Marrying of a Widow, when the High-Prieſt was only to Marry a Virgin. He was allſo injoyn'd not to come near the Dead; whereas the other Prieſts were ſuffer'd to pay all cuſtomary reſpects to the Bodys of their Dead Fathers, Mothers, Brothers, or Children: Moſes commanding them to behave themſelves with all Candour and Simplicity both in word and deed. If a Prieſt happen'd to have upon him any Maim or Corporal defect; he had his part however of the Oblations among his Fellows; but Moſes would not ſuffer him to officiate at the Altar, or ſo much as to enter into the Temple: looking upon it as the Duty of a Prieſt to demean himſelf with Purity and Reverence; not only in the exerciſe of his Function, but in the Government allſo of his Life and Manners. Thoſe therefore that behave themſelves as they ought to do in the Sacerdotal Robe, are Sober and Spotleſs in all other Reſpects as well as in their Office: neither are they allow'd ſo much as to taſte of Wine in their Prieſt's Veſtments. Their Sacrifices are offer'd whole and without blemiſh. Prieſts not to Marry ſome ſorts of Women. Levit. 21. No Prieſt with a Blemiſh, to ſerve at the Altar. Levit. 10.

Theſe were the Laws that Moſes gave in the Deſert, and which he caus'd to be obſerv'd during his Life: preſcribing others allſo for the Government of the People when they ſhould come into the poſſeſſion of the Land of Chanaan. He order'd every ſeventh Year to be a Year of Reſt to the Earth, without either Planting or Plowing, anſwerable to what he had eſtabliſh'd in the caſe of the ſeventh Day. He appointed likewiſe that all the Fruits which the Earth ſhould produce in that ſeventh Year ſhould be in common to Strangers as well as Hebrews, without laying up any thing in ſtore. The like was to be done after Seven times Seven Years; the next Year being the Fiftyeth, or the Hebrews Jubilee, wherein Debters are Diſcharg'd, and Servants made Free: that is to ſay, ſuch as for ſome Tranſgreſſion of the Law had Commuted Death for Servitude. Upon the approach of this Jubilee, which ſignifies Liberty, there is a Reſtitution allſo of Lands to the Ancient Poſſeſſors; and it is done after this manner. The Buyer and Seller meet about it; and, upon Ballancing the Profits of the Eſtate with the Expences upon it, if the Profit be found greater than the other, the Seller takes his Ground again: but on the other ſide, if the Charge exceeds the Profit, the Purchaſer receives what falls ſhort, and ſo quits the Poſſeſſion: if the Profit and Charge ſhall fall out to be Levit. 25. The 7th Year's Sabbaoth. The Year of Jubilee.

equal, the Eſtate goes to the firſt owner. This was the Rule alſo upon the Sale of Houſes in open Villages; but for thoſe in wall'd Towns, there was another method; which was this. If the Seller lay'd down the Purchaſe Money before the Year was out, he had a Right to Re-enter; but the Year once elaps'd, the Purchaſer was Confirm'd in his Poſſeſſion. Moſes receiv'd this Body of Laws from God himſelf upon Mount Sinai, for the People which were then Encamp'd at the Foot of the Mountain; and caus'd a Copy of them to be Tranſcrib'd for the uſe of poſterity.

Num. 1. Ordinances of War. Moſes having now ſufficiently provided for the ſettling of Religion, and the Civil Government, his next Buſineſs was to Eſtabliſh certain Laws and Ordinances of War for the Regulation of the Militia. And the firſt thing he did towards it, was the Iſſuing out of Orders to the Heads of all the Tribes (Levi only excepted) to take an exact Liſt of the whole number of the people that were able to bear Arms. Now the Levites, being Dedicated to the Service of God, could not attend any other duty. There were found, in fine, upon the view, ſix hundred and three thouſand, ſix hundred and fifty Men, from twenty to fifty, that were able to draw the Sword. And in the place of Levi, Moſes made Choice of Manaſſeh, the Son of Joſeph, and of Ephraim for Joſeph himſelf: according to the requeſt of Jacob to Joſeph, when he Adopted Joſeph's two Sons to himſelf, as is ſaid above.

Gen. 48. 5.

The Iſraelites manner of Camping and Decamping. Upon their Pitching of their Tents, the Tabernacle was Erected in the middle of the Camp; with three Tribes on every ſide, and Large Streets and Paſſages betwixt them, and alſo with a Market place; where all neceſſaries were to be Sold, and ſeveral ſorts of Tradeſmen orderly diſpos'd of in Shops and Standings about it; inſomuch that it had the Reſemblance of a Regular and a well Contriv'd City. The Prieſts and Levites had the Quarter aſſign'd them that was next the Tabernacle: and an account of the Levites was taken apart; which upon the Review amounted to 23880 Males, reckoning them from the Age of thirty days upwards. So long as the Cloud before ſpoken of hover'd over the Tabernacle, they took it for an intimation of God's Preſence there, and the Army reſted and lay ſtill; but as the Cloud mov'd, the Army decamp'd.

Num. 9. A Review of the Levites. Ex. 40.

Num. 10. Moſes's Silver Trumpets. Moſes caus'd two Silver Trumpets to be made, according to this Deſcription. They were near a Cubit in Length; the Tube about the ſize of a Flute, ſomewhat larger than a Reed, and juſt wide enough in the Mouth to receive the Breath for the Toning of it; turning up at the end like the Lips of a Bell, or of an ordinary Trumpet. The Hebrews call this Inſtrument Aſophra. One of them was to call the People together: the other to ſummon a Councel of the Princes about Affairs of State. And the ſounding of both together was a ſummons for a General Aſſembly. Upon the moving of the Tabernacle, this was the method. The three Tribes to the Eaſtward of it were to decamp upon the firſt ſounding: thoſe to the Southward, upon the ſecond. The Tabernacle was then to be taken in pieces, and mounted upon Carriages, half and half, betwixt ſix Tribes marching before it, and the other ſix that were to follow it; the Levites, all this while, keeping cloſe to it and round about it. Upon the third ſounding, that part of the Camp mov'd that was toward the Weſt; and upon the fourth, that to the Northward. They made uſe of theſe Trumpets alſo in their Sacrifices, and upon their Sabbaths, and other occaſions. Moſes now Sacrific'd; and it was the firſt Paſchal Solemnity after that in the Deſert, upon the Iſraelites coming out of Ægypt.

CHAP. XIII.

A Muttering againſt Moſes for want of Food, and a Flight of Quails to ſupply it.

Num. 11. A ſecond Mutiny, for want of Food. THE Army was now Decamp'd from Mount Sinai; and paſſing from place to place, (of which hereafter) they came at laſt to Iſeremoth; where the Multitude fell into a direct Sedition againſt Moſes, telling him that it was at his perſuaſion, they were inveigl'd out of one of the beſt Countries in the world, to come thither into a ſtarving Neceſſity; where, inſtead of the Bleſſings he had promis'd them, they were already upon the point of Periſhing for want of water: and if their Manna ſhould now fail them, they were all loſt beyond Redemption. When they had gone on a while, at this and a more inſolent rate of outrage againſt the Good Man: one of the Company told them, they ſhould do well to call to mind the Difficulties, Labours, and Hazards, that Moſes had undergone for their ſakes, and wholly to caſt themſelves upon the goodneſs of God for their Relief; but this made the matter ſtill worſe and worſe, and ſerv'd only to enflame the Mutineers. When Moſes ſaw the Multitude abandon'd to this degree of Deſperation, he ſpake words of Kindneſs and Comfort to them; notwithſtanding all the provoking Affronts and Indignities that had been put upon himſelf: bidding them depend upon it that they ſhould ſuddainly have Fleſh ſufficient to ſupply them many days; days; but they gave no Credit to it, and breaking out into Exclamations, asking him in ſcorn, how he ſhould take upon him to feed ſo many thouſand Men! His anſwer was this, that God and his Servant Moſes would ſee them provided for, notwithſtanding all their Reproaches, and it ſhould be ſuddenly too. The word was no ſooner out, but the whole Camp was fill'd with Quails; and the People gather'd them up; but it was not long before God took Vengeance upon the Hebrews for the Offences they had Committed againſt Himſelf and Moſes: for they were viſited with a Plague that coſt them a great many Lives. The place where this Judgment befel them is call'd Cabrothaba, or the Graves of Luſt.

CHAP. XIV.

Spys ſent into Chanaan. The Delicacy, Plenty, and Strength of the Country tempts and affrights the Deputies. A Conſpiracy againſt Moſes. Joſhua and Caleb compoſe it. Moſes and Aaron obtain Mercy for the People.

WHEN Moſes had brought the People into a place call'd the Streights, upon the Borders of Chanaan, and an Incommodious Quarter to live in, he call'd them together, and ſpake to them after this manner. 'There are two Bleſſings that God has 'promis'd us; Liberty, and the enjoyment of a happy Land. By his Gracious Bounty 'at this inſtant we are in poſſeſſion of one of them, and it will not be long before you 'come to be Eſtabliſh'd in the other. We are already upon the Borders of Chanaan, 'and it is not in the power of any King, City, or Nation, to hinder our Progreſs into 'the other. Let us alſo in the firſt place provide an Army for the War; for there 'will be no gaining of this Country, but by Labour and danger, and we muſt cut our 'way to it by the Sword. Wherefore let us ſend Spys to take a View of the Condition 'of the Land, and the Strength of the People: but above all things, let us be Unani-'mous, and aſcribe all Honour to God; who will both Aſſiſt us and Fight for us. Num. 13. 14.

When Moſes had made an end of ſpeaking, the People highly approv'd of what he ſaid, and upon his motion made choice of twelve eminent Men, one out of every Tribe, to ſend before them for diſcovery. They made the Tour of the whole Land of Chanaan, from Ægypt and the parts thereabouts, and ſo to the City Amathe, and to Mount Libanus. When they had well examin'd the Nature of the Soyl, the State of the Country, and the manners of the Inhabitants, they came back again; with a particular account of what they had ſeen; finiſhing the whole work in forty days. The report they made, was ſo much to the Advantage of the place for a Delicious Fruitful Country; and the Samples of the Fruits themſelves that they brought along with them, were ſo Tempting and Lovely, that the People were one and all for a War to make themſelves Maſters of it. But then, on the other hand, when the Deputies came to reflect on the Difficulties of the Enterprize: the impaſſable Rivers, and unacceſſible Mountains and Precipices; the ſtrong Holds, and Fortify'd Cities that they were to encounter upon the way; beſide a Race of Giants in Hebron, of ſo Monſtrous a Bulk and Strength, that from their coming out of Ægypt to that inſtant they had never ſeen any thing comparable to them: their own Hearts fail'd them in the firſt place, and ſo they infected the Multitude with the ſame Apprehenſion. Moſes ſends Spys into the Land of Chanaan. The Deputys frighted at the Relation of the Country. Num. 13.

The People were ſo diſcourag'd upon this Diſcourſe at the Hazard of the undertakeing, that they brake up in a Confuſion, and ſpent that whole Night with their Wives and Children in Lamentations and Outcrys againſt God and Moſes. God promiſes Fair, they Cry'd; but He does nothing for us. They fell upon Moſes then again and again, and upon his Brother Aaron the High-Prieſt. When they had paſs'd away the Night in Outrage and Blaſphemy, they joyn'd early next Morning in a Conſpiracy to ſtone Moſes and Aaron out of hand, and ſo go their ways back again into Ægypt. Another Mutiny againſt Moſes.

Upon this deſperate diſorder, [a] Joſhua the Son of Nun, of the Tribe of Ephraim, and Caleb of the Tribe of Judah (being the two only Diſſenters of the Twelve that had been Employ'd in the Diſcovery) did all that was poſſible to keep the Peace, for fear of the dreadful Conſequences that might attend ſuch a Tumult, delivering themſelves to this effect. 'How is it poſſible for you, good People, to diſtruſt the Veracity and 'Goodneſs of God, and at the ſame time to give Credit to vain Stories and Amuſements 'about the Land of Chanaan, that are put abroad on purpoſe to abuſe you! why ſhould 'not you rather believe, and follow thoſe that have taken ſo much pains to put you into 'the Poſſeſſion and Enjoyment of thoſe Bleſſings? What's the Height of Mountains, or Joſhua and Caleb quiet the Sedition.

'the Depth of Rivers to Men of undaunted Spirits, and of Honourable Reſolutions! 'eſpecially when God is both their Protector and Defender. Wherefore let us advance 'and attack the Enemy, they Cry'd, without ſo much as the leaſt queſtion of the event. 'Only truſt God for your Guide, and follow us where we lead you. This was the Courſe they took to Pacify the People: but Moſes and Aaron threw themſelves proſtrate upon the Ground; and beſought God, not for their own Sakes, but to Compoſe the Troubled Minds of the Ignorant People, and to deliver them from the Diſtemper of their Impotent Paſſion. Their Prayers were heard; and there appear'd a Cloud over the Tabernacle, giving them to underſtand that God was Preſent.

Moſes and Aaron intercede for them, and their Prayers are heard.

A Cloud appears over the Tabernacle in Token of God's Favour.

CHAP. XV.

Moſes tells the People from God, that They themſelves ſhould never enter into the Land of Chanaan; but that their Children ſhall. They repent, and humble themſelves. Moſes, a Perſon of Great Credit and Authority. A miſerable Famine in the Reign of Claudius.

Moſes, in the Strength and Confidence of this Viſion, thruſts himſelf into the Croud, and there laid before the People the Judgments that God had denounc'd againſt them for their Inſolence and Diſobedience: not as a Puniſhment anſwerable to the degree of the Tranſgreſſion, but as a Fatherly Correction to his Children; 'for, ſays 'he, upon my Entering into the Tabernacle with ſupplications and Tears, to Implore 'the Almighty in his Infinite Goodneſs and Mercy, not utterly to deſtroy you from off 'the Face of the Earth, God was pleas'd to repreſent how ungrateful a Return you 'had made him for all his Benefits; and the Indignity you have now Offer'd him in 'giving more Credit to the Impoſtures of your Spys, than to the Promiſes of God 'Himſelf. I can yet aſſure you after this, that you ſhall not all Periſh; neither will 'God ever ſuffer the Race of his Choſen People to be wholly rooted out: but for the 'Land of Chanaan, you muſt never expect to Enjoy either the Poſſeſſion or the Com- 'forts of it; for you are Condemn'd to a Wandering Life for Forty Years in the Wil- 'derneſs, without either Houſe or Home; as a Puniſhment for your Iniquities. Now 'this will not hinder, but that in God's good time your Children ſhall yet come to be 'Lords of that Bleſſed Land, which their Fathers render'd themſelves Unworthy of, 'by their Stubbornneſs and Unbelief.

A Denouncing Prediction.

Upon this Denouncing Prediction of Moſes, the People went all Flocking to him, in a Paſſion of Aſtoniſhment and Dread, to beg his Mediation to Almighty God on their behalf for Pardon of their Sins, and a Deliverance out of the Wilderneſs. He told them that it was not with God as it is with Men in the Caſes of Human Frailty, to be wrought upon by unreaſonable Importunities; for the Proceedings of the Almighty are founded upon certain Knowledge, Wiſdom, and Juſtice: and it was upon this Ground that Sentence had now paſſed upon them. It may be wonder'd at, perhaps, that Moſes being but one Man, ſhould be able to encounter the Rage of ſo many Thouſands, and bring them at laſt within the Bounds of Moderation and Reaſon: But God aſſiſting him, the Minds of the Multitude were prepared to be overcome. They had found by Experience, upon ſeveral Mutinys and Eſſays of Sedition, that Struggling did them no good: and this is a Common Caſe in Other Calamitys.

The People Repent and Submit.

Moſes was a Wonderful Man alſo in divers Other Reſpects: That is to ſay, for his Piety and Reſolution: and ſo likewiſe for the Credit he had got in the World, to be believ'd in whatever he ſaid; and that not only in his Life time, but his Authority continues ſtill as Sacred to Poſterity. For the Hebrews ſtand in as much Awe of his Laws and Precepts, at this very day, as if He Himſelf were preſent to puniſh them for their Diſobedience; and their Conſciences accuſe them without need of any other Witneſſes. One might give ſeveral Inſtances in Proof of the Veneration all men had for him, as a Perſon of an Authority more than Human. And this for One among Others. There were ſome People that came once from beyond Euphrates, a Four-Months-Journey, and with great hazzard and expence, out of a reſpect to our way of Worſhip. They Offer'd Sacrifice, but were not allow'd any part of their Own Offering; the Laws of Moſes in ſome Caſes forbidding it: others were not permitted to Sacrifice at all; and ſome again were forced to give off at half way: others, in fine, were not ſo much as admitted into the Temple, and ſo quietly went their way; Chooſing rather to reſign to the Appointments of Moſes, than to Gratify their own Inclinations: [a] and this out of no Other Apprehenſion than from their own Conſcien-ces: but looking upon the Laws themſelves as of Divine Inſtitution, they had the greater Reverence for the Legiſlator. There happen'd not long ſince in the Reign of Claudius and in the Pontificate of Iſhmael, a little before the Jewiſh War, ſo Pinching a Famine in Judæa, that Flour was at four Drachma's an Aſſar. There was brought up at that time to the Feaſt of Unleaven'd Bread, Seventy Corus's; [a] that is to ſay, 31 Sicilian Medimni, and 41 Attick. The Prieſts were ready to Starve for want of Bread, and yet not ſo much as one man of them touch'd the leaſt Bit of this Proviſion: ſo tender were they of their duty to the Law, and of incurring God's diſpleaſure, even for their moſt ſecret Sins. Who ſhall any longer doubt now of the wonders Moſes wrought, when our very Enemies are forc'd to acknowledge the Divinity of the Writings he hath left behind him: and to confeſs that the Founder of our Commonwealth was no other than the immediate Inſtrument of God himſelf! But every man is left to the Liberty of his own Thoughts.

CHAP. I.

The Israelites make War upon the Chanaanites, contrary to the Advice of Moses, and are shamefully Overthrown.

Numbers 14. Deut. 1.

THE Hebrews had a hard time of it in the Wilderness; and it was yet the most sensible part of their Calamity, that God would not give them leave to make War upon the Chanaanites. Their Hearts, in short, were set upon't; but Moses, from time to time, advising them still against it; they told him plainly in the Conclusion, that they would e'en go their own way to work, and do their Business without him. He had a mind, they sayd, to keep them in Misery, and make himself Necessary to them, and that was all he look'd after. In this Freak, hand over head, they resolv'd upon the War, depending, as they said, upon God for his Assistance: not so much for Moses's sake, as for the Love he bare to their Nation, and to the Memory of their worthy Ancestors. They made no doubt, but, if they behav'd themselves like Men, he that had formerly given them Freedom, would now give them Victory: or at worst, they could deal well enough with the Chanaanites, even though Moses should do all he could to set God against them. 'We are to maintain our common Liberty, they Cry'd, without Leaping 'out of one Slavery into another. What matter is it to us, whether we serve Pharaoh, 'or Moses? We change our Master, 'tis true, but not our Condition; so long as we 'suffer our selves to be Seduc'd by the illusions of this Man's Vanity and Ambition. 'What a stir does he keep with Stories of his Divine Colloquies and Revelations! as if 'Moses were the only Confident to the Privacies of God's Secret Purposes and Councels! 'Are not all We here of the Race of Abraham, as well as He? How comes Moses then by 'the sole Privilege of a Divine Prescience, and a Gift by himself in the faculty of 'foretelling things to come? Is not this the Land that God has promis'd us? Why do 'we not Dispatch then, and take possession of it, without being fool'd any longer un-'der a Masque of seeking God and Subjecting our selves to the Arrogance of one single 'Person? Let us bethink our selves, as we ought to do, of our present Distress; the 'Inconveniencies of a Desert; our wants dayly growing upon us, &c. and what Reme-'dy at last, but Fighting the Chanaanites out of hand, taking God for our Leader, with-'out troubling our heads any longer for the Consent of our Legislator? This was the Sense of the Field, without Contradiction; and in that Heat the Hebrews march'd up Furiously to the Enemy: but neither the Fierceness of the Charge, nor the Odds of Number was able to put the Chanaanites off their Guard and Resolution; for they stood the Shock, and Routed the Hebrews; Kill'd a great many upon the place, and Pursu'd the rest; that ran away most shamefully, up to their very Camp. This unexpected Defeat went to the very Hearts of the Hebrews; for they were still in fear of worse to come, and so Conscious of an ill and a rash thing done, in striking a Battle without God's direction, that they look'd upon this overthrow as a just Judgment for their Fool-hardy wilfulness.

The Hebrews bent upon a War with the Chanaanites.

They fall foul upon Moses for opposing it.

A dangerous Mutiny.

The Hebrews Attack the Chanaanites; and are Beaten out of the Field.

The Overthrow a just Judgment.

The Spirits of the Multitude were so broken and sunk with this disaster, and the Chanaanites on the other hand so puffed up and elevated with the success, that Moses found no better expedient in this Extremity, than to March them back again into the Wilderness, for fear the Enemy should follow the Blow, and do them yet a greater mischief. The People were convinc'd by this Miscarriage, that nothing prosper'd with them, Moses leads them back again into the Desert.

them, but by the Advice of Moſes: ſo that upon the promiſe of an unconditional Obedience to him for the future, the Hebrews Decamp'd, and return'd into the Deſert: with a Reſolution never to Attempt any thing again upon the Chanaanites, without a direction from Heaven.

CHAP. II.

The Schiſm of Corah againſt Moſes and Aaron, about the High-Prieſthood.

The Levity, and Violence of a Multitude. Num. 16. 26. and 27.

BUT it far'd here, as it does commonly with other great Bodies, when things go Croſs; there will be fault-finding, Faction, Calumnies, and Diſobedience; and ſo it happen'd with the Jews. They were 600000 Men upon the Muſter, and a People not over tractable, at Beſt, to their Superiors; but upon any pinch of neceſſity or misfortune, altogether Intolerable; as well one to another as to their Governours. This malevolent humour of theirs gave a Riſe to the moſt formidable Sedition that ever was heard of, either amongſt Greeks or Barbarians; and it had deſtroy'd them to all manner of purpoſes, if Moſes had not interpos'd to the preſerving of them, generouſly forgetting and forgiving all paſt injuries, even from thoſe very People that were ſo lately within a little of ſtoning him to Death. But after all the Indignities they had put, not only upon God's Commandments, but effectually upon God himſelf, in the Perſon of his Legiſlator, Providence would not yet totally caſt them off, but Graciouſly deliver'd them from the imminent danger of the moſt deſperate defection that ever was contriv'd. We are now to ſhew what this Sedition was, and how Moſes manag'd affairs after it was Compos'd: but firſt of the Cauſe and Occaſion of it.

A Deſperate Sedition. Numb. c. 16. v. 41.

The Sedition of Corah. Num. 16.

There was one [a] Corah, a Man famous among the Hebrews, both for his Blood and his Poſſeſſions, and one that had the Art of Humouring the People; no man living more Popular. This Corah, ſeeing Moſes mounted above all his Fellows, and in the Exerciſe of Sovereign Power, took up an envious Pique againſt him. Now being both of a Tribe, and Kindred; Corah, the Wealthier of the two, and as well Born; he thought it hard that Moſes ſhould have the Preference, and not without ſome Grumbling too; which made a mighty Noiſe among the Levites, and his Relations, where ever he told his Tale. 'Why 'tis a Scandal, ſays he, and a thing not to be Endur'd, for Moſes to take upon 'him at this rate, and to carry on his Ambition thus under a Maſque of Holyneſs and 'Religion; and by that means to raiſe himſelf a Reputation to the wrong of other 'Men: as he gave lately the Prieſthood, and other Dignities to his Brother Aaron, 'without any Right or Colour for it; no Conſent of the People to't, nor any pretext 'of Authority, ſave only his own Arbitrary will and pleaſure. And that which makes 'it worſe yet, is the way he has of Screwing himſelf ſo inſenſibly into the Govern-'ment, that the People have loſt their Liberty before they know where they are. He 'that in his own Conſcience finds himſelf worthy to be a Ruler, will take the good 'Will and Approbation of the people along with him, without any Need of Violence 'for the gaining of his end. Nay, in many Caſes, where Fairneſs and Honeſty will 'not do the work, the very fame of probity and ſquare dealing keeps Men within 'ſome tolerable Compaſs. But then what cannot be effected by Force, may be ſup-'ply'd by Craft and Undermining: and that dark way of proceeding ought to be 'made Exemplary in time, before it breaks out into open practices upon the State. 'What has Moſes to ſay for himſelf, for the Conferring the High-Prieſthood upon Aaron, 'and his Sons after him? If God (ſays he) has annex'd the Honour to the Tribe of 'Levi, I my ſelf may pretend a Right to the preference, being of the ſame ſtock with 'Moſes, and his Superior, both for Riches and Years. Or if it be to paſs by Seniority, it 'belongs to the Tribe of Reuben; to Dathan, Abiram, and [b] Phala, who are the Seniors of 'that Tribe, and Men of eminent Credit every way among them.

A Faction ſet up againſt Moſes for taking ſo much upon him, and Advancing his Brother Aaron to the High-Prieſthood.

Corah's pretext all this while was the publick Good; but his Buſineſs, in Truth, was to inſinuate himſelf into the Dignity by the ſupplanting of Aaron. This Calumny was deliver'd in Terms plauſible enough, and ſo it paſs'd from one to another, gathering ſtill as it went, till in the end the whole Camp was full of it, and no leſs than two hundred and fifty of the Principal Men among them joyn'd with the Faction, in a Conſpiracy to take away the High-Prieſthood from the Brother of Moſes, and Transfer it to Corah. This ſet the Multitude all in an Uproar, Crouding up to the Tabernacle, and Roaring it out, 'Stone him, Stone him; take away this Tyrant; and ſet the People at Liberty from 'the unmercyful Oppreſſions that this Man lays upon us. If God had had a hand (they 'cry'd) in this Choice, he would never have Confer'd the Honour upon a Perſon ſo 'much below the Dignity of the Function; or if God had deſign'd it for Aaron, it ſhould 'have come to him by the Suffrage of the People, not by the Favour of his Brother.

Corah's Ambition cover'd under a Pretence of the Publick good.

The whole Camp in a Mutiny; and 250 Leading Men in the Party.

An Outcry to have Moſes Ston'd.

[a] Gr. Κορῆς. [b] Gr. Φαλεῦς.

Moſes knew very well what Corah was a doing, and what effect his Artificial way of Slander had upon the Enrag'd Multitude. But in the comfort and ſupport of a good Conſcience, and in the Certain knowledge that his Brother was promoted to the Prieſthood by God's appointment, and not upon any private account of his own, he made no difficulty (being well Skill'd in Popular Arts) of preſenting himſelf before the People: and ſo he Addreſſes to Corah in words to this purpoſe.

Moſes's Defence. 'I give it for granted, Corah, (ſays he) that you your ſelf, and your Noble Compani'ons here (Pointing at the two hundred and fifty of the Faction) are all worthy of Honour;
'in the mean time, not excluding the reſt of this Multitude of People, how Inferior
'ſoever to your ſelf, upon the Compariſon, both in Riches and other Faculties. Aaron
'was not made High-Prieſt for his Wealth; You your ſelf are worth two of him: nor
'for his Nobility; for we are all of a Family, and derive from the ſame Progenitor: nei'ther did I rob any Man of his Right in what I gave to my Brother: or if I had any 'thing in my Eye, but Honour and Juſtice, I ſhould have given it to my ſelf inſtead of 'him, for Charity begins at home: beſide that I muſt have been a Mad-man to expoſe my
'ſelf to danger, by doing an ill thing for another, and reaping no benefit by it my ſelf.
'But far be it from me to be Guilty of ſuch an Improbity. God Almighty would 'never have ſuffer'd, either himſelf to be Contemn'd, or you to be Ignorant of the 'moſt acceptable things you could do to pleaſe him. It was God himſelf that choſe the 'Prieſt; and it was God's Act that has diſcharg'd me of the Crime. But now ſuppoſing
'Aaron to be Poſſeſs'd of the Holy Character purely by a Divine Choice, and without 'any inclination of Partiality of mine to intervene: he ſhall make no difficulty of Caſt-
'ing the Cauſe upon your Suffrages yet over again, without inſiſting upon the Lega'lity of what has been done already, though with your own Approbation. This is to 'ſhew you that he hath no Ambition in him; and that he is ready to part with any 'thing, let it be never ſo much his Right, for the Purchaſing of your Peace. As to the 'acceptance of what God hath been pleas'd to offer us, there can be no offence in it;
'and ſo on the other hand, it would have been highly impious to have refus'd it. But 'nothing however can be more reaſonable than to allow the Benefactor a Right of 'Ratifying and making good his own bounty. Wherefore you cannot do better than to 'refer the matter once again even to God himſelf, and ſo to abide by the Perſon he
'ſhall be pleas'd to make choice of for the Sacred Function. Now it would be a ſtrange
'thing for you, Corah, by your Ambition, to bar God the Liberty of chooſing his own
'Prieſt. This is the very Caſe, and without any further Controverſy, one day more Moſes's Appeal. 'will bring this point to an Iſſue. Let all the Pretenders to this Dignity appear to 'morrow Morning with their Cenſers in their hands, and Fire and Incenſe in them.
'You muſt have Patience, Corah, and wait God's determination without preſuming to 'ſet up your own Authority above His: but do you appear alſo your ſelf, among the 'other Candidates for the Dignity; and I know not why Aaron may not come up too, as 'one of the Family, and a perſon that hath behav'd himſelf faultleſsly in the Function.
'When you are all together, Offer up your Incenſe in the ſight of the People, and let 'that Perſon whoſe Sacrifice ſhall be found moſt acceptable to God, be declar'd to be 'the High-Prieſt, and then in courſe Confirm'd by my Authority. This will ſet every 'thing Right upon the whole matter in diſpute, and likewiſe diſcharge me from the Ca-
'lumny of Partiality toward my Brother.

CHAP. III.

God's Judgment upon Corah, Dathan, and Abiram; and the Prieſthood ſettled upon Aaron and his Poſterity.

WITH this Diſcourſe Moſes both quieted the People, and ingratiated himſelf into their better opinion at the ſame time; inſomuch that they look'd upon all he ſayd as exceedingly to the purpoſe, and gave him in fine the Character of a very good and a wiſe Man; and here the Councel broke up.

Numb. 16. The People divided. The next Morning all the People gather'd together to attend the Sacrifice, and to ſee what would become of the Election then in queſtion. The Multitude was Tumultuous and Uneaſy; divided in their Inclinations, and not a little ſollicitous betwixt hope and fear, what might be the event of that Conteſt. Some were for having Moſes expos'd; but the Men of Senſe and Sobriety were for peace and quietneſs; for if the Rabble got a head once, they did not know but they might over-run the Government. For the Common People are Naturally fond of New things; querulous and envious againſt their Superiors; apt to receive and to ſpread Calumnies, and carry'd about with every Wind and Rumour. Moſes however ſent a Summons to Dathan and Abiram, to attend the

The Humour of the Common People.

Buſineſs

Buſineſs of the day, and put in their Claims as they pretended; but the Meſſengers brought word back, that they abſolutely Refus'd; ſaying that Moſes had gotten a power into his hands by indirect means, and that they were reſolv'd to ſubmit no longer to the Uſurpation. Upon this Anſwer and Return, Moſes call'd to ſuch and ſuch of the Elders, and bad them follow him, which they did, without any difficulty or delay; and ſo away went Moſes (how much below him ſoever otherwiſe) in Perſon to the Rebellious Faction. Dathan and his Companions hearing that Moſes and his Train were coming towards them, went out of their Tents with their Wives and Children, and there ſtood waiting to ſee what would become of this extraordinary Viſit; but with their Guards all at hand to repell Force by force, in caſe of any Violence. Moſes went peaceably forward, till he came to Dathan, and there he ſtopt, lifting up his Hands to Heaven, and calling upon God with a loud Voice, that the whole Field might hear him.

They diſclaim his Authority.

Moſes bids the Elders follow him, and they go to the Faction.

Dathan and his Companions advance toward them.

'Bleſſed God, ſays he, thou that art the Lord of the Heavens, the Earth and the Sea; 'the irrefragable witneſs of all my Actions, and that whatever I have hitherto done 'hath been perfectly in obedience to thy ſpecial direction: thou that in compaſſion to 'the Hebrews haſt ſo graciouſly provided for them in their Flight, and in their miſe'rable neceſſities; having been likewiſe upon all occaſions my conſtant ſupport! Lord 'hear my Prayer: thou that know'ſt all things, and ſearcheſt the very Secrets of our 'Hearts, vouchſafe to bring the Truth to light, and to lay open the ingratitude of my 'Unrighteous Accuſers. Thou that art privy to the whole Hiſtory of paſt Ages, and of 'my Life in particular, not by hearſay, but upon certain and infallible knowledge; 'Lord do thou bear Teſtimony to my Innocence, againſt the Malicious Calumniators 'of my Integrity and Conduct. Thou know'ſt, good God, that at ſuch time as I was 'ſettled in the comfortable ſtate of a quiet, eaſy Life, under thy Bleſſing upon my in'duſtry, and by the kindneſs of my Father in Law Raguel, I quitted all the Pleaſures and 'Conveniences of a Plentiful and a ſafe Privacy, in exchange for Troubleſom, and 'Dangerous Commiſſions on the behalf of theſe People; Expoſing my ſelf, firſt for 'their Liberty, and now for their Security, to all Labours and Hazards. But ſince ſo 'it is, after all this, that I am now fallen under the Jealouſy and Diſpleaſure of thoſe 'very People, who by my Care and Providence have been redeem'd out of ſo many ex'tremitys; Lord, ſays he, thou that did'ſt vouchſafe to appear to thy Servant out of the 'Fire upon Mount Sinai, to let him hear thy voice, and make him a witneſs of the 'Prodigies there wrought: thou that gav'ſt him the Honour of an Embaſſy into Ægypt, 'bringing down the Ægyptians Pride, and delivering the Hebrews out of their Bondage: 'thou, ſays Moſes, that layd'ſt the Power of Pharaoh at my Feet, turning the Sea into 'Dry Land, and that Dry Land into Sea again, for the ſafety of thy People, and the Con'fuſion of the Ægyptians; furniſhing thoſe with Arms that were Defenſleſs; Converting 'Corrupt water into Sweet; fetching Fountains out of Rocks, in the extremity of drought; 'Food out of the Sea, and Meat from Heaven to ſupply their wants: (a thing never 'heard of before) Lord, ſays he, thou that haſt layd the Foundations of our Government, 'and Modell'd our Laws; thou that art the Judge and Witneſs of all things, avenge 'my Cauſe, and bear this Teſtimony for me: that I never was corrupted into the favour 'of an unjuſt Cauſe, or of a Rich Man againſt a Poor: and yet, now Lord ſays he, I find 'Male-Adminiſtration layd to my Charge, as if I had elevated my Brother to the High'Prieſthood, not by Divine appointment, but by the impulſe of a private Affection, and 'without any Authority from above for what I did. Lord be pleas'd to make it ap'pear now, that all things are Govern'd by thy Providence, and brought to paſs by the 'Interpoſition of thy Holy Will, not by Chance; and out of thy wonted kindneſs 'to the Hebrews, vindicate thy ſelf and them, upon Dathan and Abiram, for the inſo'lence of ſuggeſting thee to be circumvented by my Impoſtures; which is all one with 'rendering thee paſſive and Inſenſible. Lord, ſays he, viſit theſe Blaſphemous Detra'ctors from thy Glory with an exemplary Vengeance: let them not die the common 'death of other Men; but as they are not worthy to Live upon the Earth, let the Earth 'ſwallow them up with their Families and Subſtance, for the Honour of thy Power, 'and for a document to Ages to come, that they may think more Reverently of thy Divine 'Majeſty: and if I my ſelf ſhall be found Guilty of the Charge exhibited againſt me, 'may all thoſe Curſes light upon my own Head, and my Oppoſers be happy and free. 'But when thou ſhalt pour out thy wrath upon the Diſobedient and the Troublers of 'thy People, Lord preſerve the reſt in Peace and Unity, Safe and Untouch'd, that live in 'a Dutiful Conformity to thy Commandments: neither will it ſtand with the methods 'of thy Juſtice, either to Confound the Innocent with the Offenders, or to puniſh the 'Guiltleſs for the faults of the Guilty.

Moſes's ſecond Appeal to God upon the Juſtice of his Cauſe.

Theſe words were interrupted with Tears, when all on a ſuddain the Earth fell a Trembling into an Agitation like the Rolling of an Angry Sea in a Storm, which ſtruck the whole Multitude with a profound Aſtoniſhment and Horror; and a diſmal outcry was heard upon it, that ran through all their Tents. In the Concluſion the Ground open'd under the feet of the Faction with a terrible noiſe, and ſwallow'd them all up, every Man of them, with all that was Dear to them; cloſing again immediately ſo exactly that the very mark of the Rupture was not to be perceiv'd.

who fall unpity'd by all their Friends and Relations.

This was the end of a Seditious, Schiſmatical Faction; and an illuſtrious inſtance it was of God's Providence and Power at once. And to make the caſe more Compaſſionable there was not ſo much as one of their Relations and Acquaintances that pity'd them. Nay, the whole Multitude had nothing in their Mouths but Joy and Acclamations, in contemplation of this effort of Divine Juſtice. They look'd no further back upon things paſt, than to raiſe in them a deteſtation for the Memory of thoſe People, as the Peſt of their Nation, and Men that did not deſerve ſo much as human tenderneſs. After the Extinction of Dathan and his Complices, Moſes Conven'd the Candidates for the Pontificate: committing the Choice to God once more, to be conferr'd upon him whoſe Sacrifice ſhould appear to be beſt accepted. There were gather'd together two Hundred and Fifty Perſons, that both for their Fathers ſakes and their own, had an eminent Reputation among the People; and with theſe Men came forth Aaron, and Corah; who ſtanding before the Tabernacle, offer'd ſuch Incenſe in their Cenſers as they brought with them. While they were thus employ'd, there appear'd, all in an inſtant, ſo fierce a fire, that the Flame of Burning Mountains, the Conflagration of whole Forreſts, with Winds and Bruſh-wood to aſſiſt it, was as nothing to it. It was Clear and Flagrant, and came undoubtedly from Heaven; for no natural Ingredients could have produc'd ſo Subtle a Flame: by the force of this Fire, Corah and his two Hundred and Fifty Companions were ſo totally Conſum'd, that there was not ſo much as any remainder of their Carcaſſes to be found: only Aaron ſurviv'd, untouch'd, as a moſt certain evidence that this was the ſupernatural work of an Almighty Power. Moſes, for the perpetual Memory of this Judgment, in the Tranſmitting of it to Poſterity, commanded Eleazar the Son of Aaron, to Faſten their Cenſers about a Braſen Altar for a warning to Generations to come, not to Trifle and play Tricks with God Almighty. By this time it was evident beyond all contradiction that Aaron was not Elevated to the Pontificate by Canvaſſing or Favour, but by God's appointment; and that he held it ever after by the ſame Title.

The Choice put to a ſecond Tryal.

CHAP. IV.

What befell the Iſraelites in the Deſert, during the Space of 38 Years.

Num. 16. 17.

BUT all this did not yet put a final end to the Rebellious Humour, for it was follow'd with another Sedition, if poſſible, worſe than the former; which took it's Riſe from ſuch Cauſes as in all likelyhood would not be eaſily Suppreſs'd: for when they had once taken up a perſuaſion that all things came to paſs by Providence and by the Will of God, they reckon'd every thing to be done for Moſes's ſake. So that all the ſeverities of Divine Juſtice were caſt upon his account, as if God would not have been ſo Rigorous againſt Sinners, if Moſes had not preſs'd him to it, and it was not ſo much for their Wickedneſs that they were puniſh'd, as to gratify Moſes. 'What was the Fault, 'they cry'd, of all thoſe Noble and Excellent Men that loſt their Lives upon Moſes's 'inſtigation; but the exceſſive Zeal and Affection they had for the worſhip of their 'God? and Moſes, they ſayd, made his Profit of theirs and of the Peoples Ruin, by 'Confirming his Brother in the Pontificial Dignity, and entailing it upon his Line: 'for after paying ſo dear for the Competition, no body elſe would ever pretend 'to it again for the Future. Now this was a time for the Relations of the Deceas'd to Manage with the Multitude, and to Dilate upon the abſolute neceſſity of putting ſome timely Check to the Pride and Exorbitant power of Moſes: which the People might eaſily do, they ſayd, and it concern'd them to take it into their Care. Moſes found a Storm a coming, and very prudently, to prevent the Mortal Conſequences that might probably follow upon ſuch a Tumultuary Practice and Diſpoſition, he order'd an Aſſembly to be call'd, where he heard their Grievances, and without one word of Anſwer, for fear of making matters worſe, appointed the Heads of the Tribes to bring their Rods, with the Names of their Tribes inſcrib'd upon them: and He to be preferr'd to the Dignity, upon whoſe Rod ſhould be found any particular Mark of God's Favour. This they all agreed to, and brought their Rods with Inſcriptions, as Directed; Aaron among the reſt: and his Rod bare the Inſcription of the Tribe of Levi. Moſes layd them up for the preſent in the Tabernacle of God, and the next day produc'd them, which were eaſily known again; for the Princes that brought them, and the reſt of the People, ſaw their own marks upon them.

The Iſraelites impute all their Calamities to Moſes.

Moſes appoints the Tribes to bring in their Rods. Num. 17.

They

They found all the reſt of the Rods juſt as they left them the day before, only Aaron's ſprouted out with Branches and Buds; and which was yet a greater wonder, bearing Ripe Almonds; the Rod being of that wood. The ſtrangeneſs of this ſpectacle put the People to their wit's end; but though they had ſome grudging ſtill to Moſes and Aaron, the Animoſity and Paſſion of the enmity was yet taken off, and they all ſtood in Admiration at the Judgment of God; reſign'd themſelves to his Holy Pleaſure, and yielded the Right of the Election to Aaron, who was now the third time Confirm'd by God himſelf in the Prieſthood, where it reſted without any following Contradiction. This, in fine, put a happy Period to the troubles of the Hebrews after a long courſe of Violence and Sedition.

Aaron's Rod Buds.

Aaron's Election further Confirm'd.

The Tribe of Levi being ſet apart for the Service of God in Holy Offices and Duties, Moſes exempted them from the Burden of all Military Charges; and for fear the Care of providing Neceſſaries for Life might divert them from attending the Duties of their Function, he order'd it, that ſo ſoon as ever the Land of Chanaan ſhould by God's Aſſiſtance come to be Conquer'd, there ſhould be Forty eight of the Beſt and Faireſt Cities allotted for the Entertainment of the Levites, with two Thouſand Cubits of Land round about, and Contiguous to the walls of the Place; beſide the Impoſition of a Tenth part of the yearly Profits ariſing from the Fruits of the Earth, to be pay'd as a Duty on the whole People, to the Prieſts and Levites: which hath been Religiouſly obſerv'd ever ſince. Let this ſuffice as to the Revenue of this Tribe upon the People, and we ſhall now come to what properly belongs to the Prieſts themſelves.

The Levites exempted from Military Offices.

The Prieſts Allowance.

Moſes provided that of the Eight and Forty Cities before ſpoken of, the Levites ſhould yield Thirteen of them to the Prieſts, and the Tenth part of the Tithes, beſide the Firſt-Fruits of all the Products of the Earth as an Offering to God: the Firſtling of all Four-footed Beaſts Offer'd in Sacrifice; if a Male, it is to be brought to the Prieſts to Sacrifice; to be Eaten in the City with their Family; but for thoſe which the Law of the Country will not permit to be Eaten, the Owner ſhall Preſent a Shekel and a half inſtead of a Firſtling, and for the firſt Born of a Man, Five Shekels: and there is a Duty alſo to be allow'd upon Wool and Corn, as a Cake upon thoſe that Bake Bread.

As for the Nazarenes that tye themſelves up by a Vow, neither to cut their Hair, nor to Drink Wine; when the time of their Vow is expir'd, and they preſent themſelves to have their Hair Conſecrated; whatever they Offer in Sacrifice belongs to the Prieſts: and ſo for thoſe that call themſelves Corban, that is by interpretation a Gift, when they deſire to be diſcharg'd of their Obligation and Voluntary Vow, there is a Duty belongs to the Prieſts, of Fifty Shekels for a Man, and Thirty for a Woman; and they that have not wherewithal, muſt Remit themſelves to the diſcretion of the Prieſt.

Of the Nazarenes. Num. 6.

They that kill Beaſts for private uſe, and not for Sacrifice, muſt allow the Prieſts the Breaſt of the Beaſt, and the Right Shoulder. This was the Allotment of Moſes for the Prieſts, beſide Sin-Offerings, which we have ſpoken of in the Laſt Book before this. He Ordain'd likewiſe that in all Contributions to the Order of Prieſts, their Wives, Children, and Servants ſhould have their ſhare; ſaving in Sin-Offerings, and thoſe are only to be eaten by the Prieſts that Officiate. It muſt be in the Temple too, and on the ſame day.

Matters being thus ſettled, and the Sedition cruſh'd, Moſes Decamp'd, and with his whole Army March'd to the Borders of Idumæa, ſending his Ambaſſadors before hand to the King there, to deſire a free Paſſage for his Troops through his Country; upon aſſurance that he would give him no manner of Trouble, and that whatever he had he would pay for. His Paſſage was however refus'd, and an Army drawn up to the Frontiers ready to oppoſe him if he ſhould offer to force his way. Moſes had recourſe to God for advice, whoſe anſwer was, that he would not have him the Aggreſſor, and ſo he withdrew to take his way by the Deſert.

The Sedition Cruſh'd, and Moſes Decamps.

Moſes deſires a Paſſage through Idumæa; and the King refuſes it.

At this time dy'd Mariam the Siſter of Moſes, at the beginning of the Month Xanthicus, and in the fortyeth year compleat after her coming out of Ægypt. She had a Publick, and a Splendid Burial upon a Mountain known by the Name of Sin: and after thirty days of Mourning, Moſes purify'd the People. The Prieſt took a Young Red Heifer that had never known the Yoak, brought it out a little way from the Army, and there in a very clean Place Kill'd it, dipping his Finger ſeven times in the Blood, and therewith ſprinkling the Tabernacle of God. After this, he put the Heifer whole into the Fire, Skin, Entrails and all, with a ſtick of Cedar, Hyſſop, and a little Scarlet Colour'd Wool. When all was Conſum'd, a young Man of an unſpotted Virgin Chaſtity, was employ'd to gather up the Aſhes, and lay them up in the cleaneſt place that could be found. Now whoever ſtood in need of being purify'd, either for touching a Dead Body, or for aſſiſting at a Funeral, he had no more to do, than to caſt of theſe Aſhes into Fountain-water; dip a Bunch of Hyſſop in it, and ſprinkle himſelf with it on the Third and the Seventh day: and this was the Ceremony of the Purification, which Moſes ſes commanded to be obſerv'd when ever the Hebrews ſhould come to be poſſeſs'd of the Land which God had promis'd them.

Moſes marches through the Deſert into Arabia.

After this Purification was over for the Death of his Siſter, Moſes led the Army through the Deſert into Arabia, and coming to their Capital City, formerly call'd Arce, at preſent Petra, where there was a very High Mountain, Aaron, being foretold by Moſes that he was near his end, went up this Mountain, took off his Pontifical Stole, and deliver'd it to his Son Eleazar, as the next Heir to the Dignity, and in the ſight of the whole Army ended his Days there, in the hundred twenty and third year of his Age, and in the firſt Moon of the Month, which the Athenians call Hecatombæon, the Macedonians, Lous, the Hebrews, [a] Sabba, and the Romans, Auguſtus. CHAP. V.

Sehon and Og Defeated by Moſes, and their Lands diſtributed by Lot to two Tribes and a half of the Hebrews.

Num. 21.

WHEN the Mourning for Aaron was paſt, (which laſted thirty days) Moſes March'd with the Army to the River Arnon, that falls from the Mountains of Arabia, and running through the whole Deſert, empties it ſelf into the Lake Aſphaltitis, dividing the Moabites from the Amorites. The Country is very Fruitful, and wants for nothing. The King's Name of the Latter was [b] Sehon, to whom Moſes ſent very reſpectfully for leave to paſs his Troops through his Country, offering any ſecurity to ſave him and his People harmleſs, to all manner of purpoſes. Sehon deny'd him Paſſage, and March'd his Troops preſently to prepoſſeſs the Fords of the River, and oppoſe his coming over.

When Moſes found that the Amorites were reſolv'd upon a War, he could hardly digeſt the affront, and ſo reckon'd it his beſt Courſe for himſelf to give the firſt Attack: for the Hebrews being a ſlippery People, he did not know but Want and Idleneſs might Debauch them into their old Freaks over again. But however, for fear of the worſt, he Conſulted God in the firſt place, whether he ſhould attempt the forcing of his way by the Sword, or not. This he did, and obtain'd not only a permiſſion to do it, but an aſſurance of Victory. Moſes, upon this encouragement, animated the Army into a confidence of ſucceſs; telling them, that now was the time to ſignalize their Valour, when they had both Divine Approbation and Human Authority to ſecond their Inclinations. Upon theſe words, without any heſitation or delay, they March'd up, and made a Furious Charge upon the Enemy. The King and his Army fell into a Panick Terror upon the very ſight of them, and after all their Big words and menaces at a diſtance, they had not the heart ſo much as to look the Hebrews in the Face. Their only hope was in their Heels, and in their Wall'd Towns if they could come at them: but they were ſo cloſe purſu'd, that their Flight little avail'd them. They fell into a direct Rout upon the very firſt Shock, and in that Confuſion they all ran ſeveral ways to ſave themſelves; the Hebrews, light Arm'd and ſwift of Foot, at the Heels of them, with their Slings, Darts and Arrows, reaching thoſe at a diſtance that they could not otherwiſe overtake. A world of them were Cut off at the River; Sehon their King among the reſt: where they ſtopt to quench their Thirſt, for it was an exceſſive heat. The Slaughter, in fine, was terrible, and never a more abſolute Victory. The Hebrews had the ſpoil of the Field, a Prodigious Booty, and that which they moſt wanted, Corn in abundance; for the Harveſt was yet upon the Ground: all was their own in ſhort; they went whither they would, did what they would, and took what they would, without either Reſiſtance or Controul; for there were hardly any left behind to oppoſe them; and, the work once over, they were at leiſure to make Merry.

This befell the Amorites, for want both of Conduct and Courage; for they had neither foreſight to prevent the Miſchief, nor Reſolution to encounter it. This place, which the Hebrews had now made themſelves Maſters of, is a kind of Peninſula, betwixt three Rivers; Arnon on the South; Jaboc (that drops into the River Jordan) on the North, and the River Jordan it ſelf on the Weſt.

While matters were in this Condition, the Iſraelites found they had yet another Enemy to cope with, which was [c] Og the King of Galadene, and of Gaulanitis, who was Marching with a Powerful Army to the Relief of Sehon his Friend and Ally. He was met with upon the way with the News of the Battle and a total defeat; but this was not enough yet to deterr him from putting the main Cauſe to the Iſſue of another tryal. He did ſo, and his Confidence deceiv'd him; for He and his whole Army were Cut off, to a Man. After this Victory, Moſes paſs'd the River Jaboc, and made an Inroad into Og's Dominions, deſtroying all the Cities wherever he came, and putting the Inhabitants to the Sword; which were a very Rich, and a Powerful People. The King Himſelf was Brave, and Daring to the higheſt Degree, and to his Courage, a Goodly Man of Strength and Stature, as appeared by the Dimenſions of a Bed of his, that was found in his Palace at Rabatha. The Frame of it was of Iron; the Breadth of it Four Cubits, and the Length Nine. The Fall of this Man did not only ſettle the Iſraelites in a preſent State of Security and Quiet; but laid the Foundation of great Advantages to come: for they poſſeſt themſelves of no leſs than Sixty of his Strong Holds, and well fortify'd Cities, and the whole Army to a Man all this while moſt prodigiouſly enrich'd with the Booty.

CHAP. VI.

Moſes makes War upon the Madianites. The Hiſtory of Balaam and Balaak. Zimri oppoſes Moſes. Phineas kills Zimri and Cosbi.

SOON after this, Moſes remov'd his Camp to a great Plain over againſt Jericho, an Opulent City, and famous for Palm-Trees and Balſam. The Iſraelites were now ſo fluſh'd with Victories, that nothing would down with them but more War; and Moſes thought it pity This Martial Humour ſhould lie Idle: So that after Sacrificing and Feaſting, he ſent away a Detachment from his Army to lay waſt the Country of the Madianites, and to Deſtroy their Cities. The Ground of the War was This. Moſes Makes War upon the Madianites.

Balaak, the King of the Moabites, and an Ancient Allie of the Madianites, finding the Iſraelites grow ſo faſt, began to have ſome Apprehenſion for himſelf, and of his Own Safety. He did not know, it ſeems, that God had forbidden the Hebrews to attempt any Other Conqueſt than that of Canaan; ſo that he was either not well Inform'd, or not well Advis'd upon This Matter. As to the Point of making War upon a People Elevated, and Puffed up with ſuch a Courſe of Succeſſes, it was a thing he durſt not ſo much as think of; but he was willing enough yet to put ſome Stop to their further Progreſs, and ſo ſent his Ambaſſadors to the Madianites, to Conſult what might be done for the Common Security of them Both. The Madianites ſent away preſently Balaak's Ambaſſadors, and ſome Men of Honour with them, to one Balaam that liv'd beyond the Euphrates; a famous Prophet in Thoſe Parts, and their Particular Friend; deſiring him only to come over to them, and Curſe the Iſraelites. He Treated the Ambaſſadors with Great Generoſity and Reſpect, asking Counſel of God after Supper, what Return he ſhould make them. His Order was, That he ſhould not Comply with them, and ſo with That Anſwer he went back, telling them that he had the Greateſt mind in the World to Gratify their Deſires, but that God was againſt it, to whoſe Goodneſs he ſtood Indebted for the Reputation he had gotten of a True Prophet; Declaring further to them, that the Army which they would have him to Curſe was Highly in God's Favour. And therefore it was His Advice, that they ſhould rather Addreſs themſelves to the Iſraelites, and Secure a Fair Underſtanding with Thoſe People upon what Terms ſoever. With this Reſolution he Diſcharg'd the Ambaſſadors: But the Madianites, upon the Violent Importunity of Balaak (who was much unſatisfy'd with the Anſwer) ſent the ſame Meſſengers a Second time, upon the ſame Errand; and Balaam, out of a Deſire to keep Fair with the World, went and Conſulted God a Second time upon the ſame Queſtion. Why then you may go along with the Ambaſſadors, ſays the Oracle; And Balaam, not conſidering with what Air it was ſpoken, went Simply along with them. As they were upon the way, an Angel met them in a Narrow place betwixt two Walls, and not room enough for two to paſs. Balaam was Mounted upon an Aſs, which, at the ſight of This Viſion, ſtopt, and upon his Striking, and Preſſing to make her go forward, ſhe Cruſh'd him up againſt the Wall; the Angel keeping the Way ſtill, and the Prophet ſtill Correcting his Aſs; but it pleaſed God at length to Open the Aſs's Mouth, in a Complaint of the Injuſtice of her Maſter, to Beat her at that time for not going forward, when the Angel of the Lord ſtood there in the Paſſage, to divert him from doing what he was about to do. The Aſs Urging alſo, that This was the Firſt time ſhe had ever Diſobey'd him. Balaam was Supriz'd, and Affrighted to hear the Aſs Talk like a Man; and the Angel Rebuked Balaam for what he had done, telling him, That it was not the Fault of the Beaſt, but the Fault of the Prophet, in preſuming to take a Journey, contrary to the Declared Will of God. The Prophet would have gone back, but God bad him go forward, upon condition, that he ſhould ſay Nothing but what He Himſelf put in his Mouth. Numb. 22, 23, 24. Balaak conſults the Madianites how to ſecure himſelf againſt the Hebrews. Balaak would have Balaam to Curſe the Iſraelites. But God forbids it. Balaam Importun'd a Second time. Balaam goes along with the Ambaſſadors. An Angel ſtops him in a Narrow Paſſage. Balaam preſſes forward, and the Aſs reproves the Prophet.

Upon the Condition aforeſaid, Balaam went to Balaak, and, after a very Gracious Reception, Balaam goes to Balaak.

Reception, deſir'd the King he might be Conducted to ſome of the High Mountains thereabouts, where he might take a View of the Camp of the Hebrews. So Balaak himſelf took Balaam along with him, with his Royal Train, up to the Top of a Mountain, a matter of 60 Furlong from the Army: and when the Prophet had made his Remarks, he directed Seven Altars to be Rais'd, and Seven Bulls, and as many Rams to be prepared for Sacrifices; which was done out of hand, and the Victims preſently Offer'd up in order to the forming of a Judgment upon the Matter in queſtion betwixt the Two Armies. So ſoon as he had well Digeſted his Obſervations, he deliver'd the Reſult of his Preſages with his Face toward the Army of the Iſraelites in Theſe Words.

" You are the Happy People, (ſays he) that by the Bleſſing and Bounty of God ſhall " enjoy Plenty of all Good Things in abundance; You ſhall have Providence for your " Guide, your Protector, and Support, and a Reputation beyond all other Mortals, for " the Innocence of your Lives, the Probity of your Manners, and your Love and " Practice of Virtue; and the Fame of your Poſterity ſhall yet exceed That of your " Forefathers; for God will take you into his Peculiar Care and Protection, and make " You, of all Nations under the Sun, the moſt Bleſſed. You ſhall enter into Poſſeſſi- " on of the Land of Promiſe, whither God hath ſent you, and it ſhall be to you and " your Poſterity for ever. The whole Earth and Sea ſhall be full of your Glory; and " you ſhall have ſo Numerous an Iſſue, that in all Parts of the World there ſhall be " found of your Stock and Family. Oh thou Wonderful and Bleſſed Army! to grow " to ſuch a Bulk out of the Loyns of one ſingle Man. The Land of Canaan muſt at " preſent Content you, though a Spot of Ground not Anſwerable either to your Dig- " nity or Number; but know that the Time is a coming, when you ſhall have the " whole World for your Habitation. Your Children ſhall People the Iſlands as well " as the Continent, and be as the Stars in the Heavens for Number. And yet in That " Infinite Multitude, you ſhall feel no Want of any thing: But God ſhall give you " Plenty in Peace; Courage and Victory in War, and the Children of your Enemies " ſhall be your Servants; wherefore may our Adverſaries be yours too, for it ſhall be " ruine to them to riſe againſt you, and the Wives and Children of your Adverſaries " ſhall have little reaſon to thank their Husbands, and their Fathers, for any News " they ſhall bring them from ſuch an Encounter. You are to Bleſs the Providence of " God, in fine, for all theſe Gifts and Graces: That God, I ſay, who Alone can Exalt " or bring down, as the Caſe requires it.

Theſe were the Words of God, not of Balaam, for he was out of himſelf, and under the Power of a Supernatural and Prophetical Spirit. Balaak all this while in a Rage, and ſtorming at him, that he had not kept Covenants, Being brought over with Great Rewards; he ſaid, to Curſe the Iſraelites, and when it came to the Point, he had nothing but Prayers and Bleſſings for them. To which Balaam made This Reply.

Balaak highly offended at Balaam.

" And does King Balaak think, ſays he, that where Prophets are upon the Subject " of Fatalities, and things to come, they are left to their Own Liberty what to ſay and " what not; and to make their Own Speeches? We are only the Paſſive Inſtruments of " the Oracle; the Words are put in our Mouths, and we neither Think, nor Know, " what we ſay. I remember very well, ſays he, that I was Invited hither with Great " Earneſtneſs, both by your ſelf, and by the Madianites, and that it was at your Re- " queſt I came; and with a deſire to do all that in me lay for your Service. But what " am I able to do againſt the Will and Power of God? Nay, I had Thoughts and " Wiſhes of doing what I found afterwards I was not at Liberty to do. When once a " Superiour Power takes Poſſeſſion of us, we are no longer under the Government of " our ſelves. I had not the leaſt thought of ſpeaking One Good Word of the Iſraelites " Army, or of the Bleſſings that God hath in ſtore for them: but ſince God hath De- " creed to make them Great and Happy, I have been forced to ſpeak as you have heard, " inſtead of what I had otherwiſe deſign'd to ſay. But now to Anſwer the very Wiſh- " es, both of Your ſelf, and the Madianites, with all poſſible Decency and Reſpect, let " us Erect Other Altars, and provide New Sacrifices, and try once again yet, if God will " give me leave to Curſe Theſe People. Balaak approv'd the Motion, and the Sacri- fices were Renew'd; but God would not yet be prevail'd upon for leave to Curſe the Iſ- raelites. Nay, on the contrary, he fell upon his Face and foretold the Fate of ſeveral Great Kings, and Famous Cities; ſome not as yet in Being, Others now Extant, that in our Memory have Anſwer'd the Predictions, in ſeveral Actions both at Sea and Land, from whence may be reaſonably Inferr'd, a Probability alſo, that the Other Parts of the Prophecy are not Idle.

Balaam excuſes himſelf to Balaak.

Balaam propoſes New Altars and Sacrifices, and to Conſult God a Second time.

The Credit of Balaam's Predictions.

Balaak was ſo Nettl'd at This Diſappointment of his Hope and Expectation, that he diſmiſs'd the Prophet without either Honour or Reward, and ſo took his leave; but coming to Euphrates, he bethought himſelf, and ſent to ſpeak with Balaak, and the the Princes of the Madianites yet once more; and That which he had to ſay was to This purpoſe.

"To the end, ſays he, that King Balaak, and You the Princes of Madian, may "know the Great Deſire I have to pleaſe you, though in ſome ſort againſt the Will "of God, I have bethought my ſelf of an Expedient that may perhaps be for your "Service. Do not Flatter your ſelves, that the Hebrews are ever to be Deſtroy'd by "War, Peſtilence, Famine, or any Other of Thoſe Common Caſual Calamities: For "they are ſo ſecure under God's Special Providence, that they are never to be totally "Extinguiſhed by any of Thoſe Depopulating Judgments. Some Temporary Afflicti-"ons they may ſuffer, and Inevitably they will; but in a little time they'll Recover, "and be the Better for them. Now if the gaining of ſome ſmall and ſhort-liv'd Ad-"vantage over them may give you any Satisfaction, hearken to my Advice. Send "into their Camp a Proceſſion of the Loveliеſt Virgins you can Pick out; Dreſs them "up with all the Ornaments of Art to Aſſiſt Nature. Give them their Leſſons, how to "behave themſelves upon all Occaſions of Courtſhip and Amour. If the Young Men "ſhall make Love, and proceed to any Wanton Importunities, let them Threaten "Immediately and Peremptorily to be gone, unleſs they will actually Renounce their "Countries Laws, and the Honour of That God that Preſcrib'd them; and finally "Engage themſelves to Worſhip after the manner of the Madianites and the Moa-"bites. This, ſays he, will Provoke God, and draw a Vengeance upon their Heads; and ſo he Departed Balaam offers Balaak an Expedient inſtead of Curſing.

The Madianites ſent their Daughters with Inſtructions according Balaam's Advice, and the Young Men were preſently Charm'd with their Converſation and Beauty, ſtill preſſing more and more upon them for further Endearments and Reſpects. The Girls gave them the Hearing, and Allow'd them Liberties, even to the degree of Tenderneſſes and Embrace. This went on, till they found they had them ſure in the Toil; and when they were once Warm'd and Hamper'd, the Laſſes made a Countenance all on a ſudden, as if they were That Inſtant to be gone; but upon Affectionate Supplications, with Sighs and Tears, on the other hand, not to forſake them, and Solemn Oaths and Vows over and above, of Love and Honour, with Life and Fortune, all at their Feet; they were prevail'd upon to ſtay and Treat a little longer. They found by This time they could do what they would with them, and the Courſe they took was This; One ſpeaking in the Name of the reſt.

The Madianites follow Balaam's Counſel. Num. 25.

And Gain their Point.

"It is not for want, ſays ſhe, either of Fortune, or of Credit; the Love of our Pa-"rents, or the Kindneſs of our Friends and Relations, nor for the Proſtituting of "our Beauties (ſuch as they are) that we are now come, Moſt Illuſtrious Young "Men, into your Quarters; but out of Pure Hoſpitality and Good Nature to you, "as you are Strangers, and may perhaps have Need of us. For Theſe Reaſons, and "upon an Opinion alſo that you are Good Men, we have made no Scruple of Treat-"ing you with an Innocent, and a Generous Freedom. You ſay you Love us, and "ſhould be very loath to part with us: If ſo, we are not at all Averſe to the Grati-"fying of your Deſires; but you muſt firſt ſecure us of a Conjugal Faith; (for No-"thing elſe will do) and that the Love we have for your Converſe, may be warran-"ted by the Reputation of becoming your Wives; for we ſhould be loth to be "turn'd off for Variety, and ſent back again to our Relations, with Scandal and Re-"proach. You will not Blame us, we hope, for being a little Sollicitous in ſo Ten-"der a Point. The Young Men ſtuck at Nothing that might Advance the Ends of their Love, and ſo the Virgin went on. "Since, ſays ſhe, we are thus far agreed, it "will become us to mind you of ſome Other little Differences that remain yet to be "Adjuſted. You have certain ways of Life and Cuſtom, that are altogether Peculiar "to your ſelves; even to Particular Meats and Drinks. Now if we live together, "you muſt reſolve to do as we do, and to Worſhip as we Worſhip; for by the Re-"verence you pay to Our Gods, we ſhall be able to Judge of the Affection you have "for our ſelves. No body will Blame you for Adoring the Gods of the Country "where you are; and the Gods in truth, of almoſt All other Countries too; where-"as yours is a ſingular God, that's only to your ſelves. She left them in Concluſion, to This Choice, either to live There, and do as Other People did, or to be gone ſome whither Elſe, where they might do what they thought fit.

The Iſraelites fall from Luſt to Idolatry.

The Young Men were ſo Blinded with Paſſion, and Abandon'd to their Pleaſures, that whatever the Women Propounded, they ſwallow'd it, though to the Renouncing of the Religion of their Forefathers, and the Laws of their Country, without ever Examining the Conditions: ſo that they Join'd with them Immediately in the Opinion of a Plurality of Gods; in the manner of their Worſhip; the Common Uſe of all Meats Indifferently; and for the Women's ſakes, in ſhort, they ſtuck at Nothing though never ſo Unwarrantable. This Infection ſpread it ſelf Inſenſibly over the Whole Camp, and it was followed with a more Dangerous Sedition than the Former; inſomuch, that there was hardly any face left of the Order, Piety, and Devotion of Former times. For when the Youth came once to have a Hankering after the Novelty of ſtrange Cuſtoms and Manners, there was No ſtopping of them in That Career: but Great and Small, one with Another, were all Corrupted and Confounded in This Apoſtacy.

Zimri, an Hebrew, Marries Cosbi, a Madianite.

(a) Zimri, one of the Principals of the Tribe of Simeon, Married Cosbi, a Madianite, the Daughter of one Zur, a Perſon of Eminent Quality in That Country. This ſame Zimri, at the Inſtance of his Wife, and in contempt of the Moſaical Rites and Conſtitutions, made Open Profeſſion, both of a ſtrange Worſhip, and a ſtrange Marriage. While Matters were in This Diſorder, Moſes, for fear of Worſe Conſequences, called the People together, and there fell upon a Diſcourſe, how Unworthy a thing it was, and how great a ſcandal to the Memory of their Anceſtors, for them to Value the Gratifying of their Luſts and Appetites above the Reverence they ow'd to their God, and their Religion; how much it behoved them to repent in time, and to ſhew themſelves Brave Men; not in the Violation of Laws, but in the Maſtery of Unruly affections. He Minded them how Incongruous a thing it was too, for Men that had been Virtuous and Modeſt in a Deſert, to lead ſuch Profligate Lives in a Good Country, and Squander away that in Luxury, which they had Honeſtly gotten together in the time of their Diſtreſs. He did this to Try, whether either ſhame, Reaſon, or Conſcience would Work upon them: but without Naming any Creature all this while: for a Perſonal, Particular Reproof, he thought, might have made them Deſperate; and it was his Buſineſs to Reclaim, not to Expoſe them. This Oblique Diſcourſe of Moſes gave Zimri an Occaſion to Riſe and ſpeak.

A ſtrange Marriage leads to a ſtrange Worſhip.

Moſes falls ſeverely upon the Scandal of the Apoſtacy.

Zimri breaks out into Inſolent Reflections upon Moſes.

" Moſes, ſays he, you are at Liberty to uſe your Own Laws. They have been " a Long time in Exerciſe, and That Cuſtom is all that is to be ſaid for their Strength, " and Credit. If it had not been for This, you would have found long ſince to " your Coſt that the Hebrews are not to be Impoſed upon; and I my ſelf am one of the " Number that will never truckle to your Tyrannical Oppreſſion. For what's your " buſineſs all this while, but under a bare Pretext, and Talk of Laws, and God, " to bar us, not only the Exerciſe, but the very Deſire of Liberty? To Eſtabliſh " your own Greatneſs upon our Miſery and Ruine; Depr.ving us of That Free- " dom, which all People have a Right to that are not under a Maſter? What " are We the Better for coming out of Ægypt, if it be only in Exchange for a " more Grievous Bondage under Moſes? You are to make here what Laws you " pleaſe, and We to abide the Penalties of them, at Your Will and Pleaſure, " when at the ſame 'tis only you your ſelf that deſerve to be Puniſhed; for Abro- " gating ſuch Cuſtoms and Privileges as are Authorized and Eſtabliſhed by the " Common Conſent of Nations, and ſetting up Your Own Will and Phancy, a- " gainſt General Practice and Reaſon. What I have done, I take to be well " done, and ſhall make no Difficulty to Confeſs and Juſtifie it. I have, as you " ſay, Married a ſtrange Woman. I ſpeak This with the Liberty of an Honeſt " Man, and I care not who knows it. I never meant to make a ſecret of it, and " you ſhall never need to look further for an Informer. I do Acknowledge, that " I have changed my Way of Worſhip too; and I reckon it very Reaſonable for " a Man to Examine All things that would find out the Truth, without being " Tyed up, as if it were in a Deſpotique Government, to the Opinion and Hu- " mour of one ſingle Perſon: Beſide that I ſhall not thank any Man that takes upon " him to Over-rule Me in my own Affairs. Zimri was in This ſpeech the Mouth of the Faction, and the People when it was over, ſtood Waiting quietly to ſee what would be the Iſſue of ſo Audacious an Affront; for they were much affraid that Miſchief would follow upon it; Eſpecially Obſerving that Moſes gave not One ſyllable in return to ſo Inſolent a Provocation; for One word, he thought, might beget Another, till it came to Blows, eſpecially in a Multitude diſpoſed already to take Fire. Upon This Conſideration, he immediately Diſcharged the Aſſembly; but This Outrage, in all likelyhood, would not have ſtopt there yet, if Zimri had not been ſoon after cut-off, in ſuch manner as will now appear.

Zimri the Mouth of the Faction.

Moſes, Diſcharges the Aſſembly.

The Zeal of Phinees.

There was one Phinees that reſented This Contumacy of Zimri to the Higheſt Degree of Indignation. He was one of the Braveſt Youths of his Time, and as Eminent for the Honour of his Extraction, as he was for his Perſonal Virtue. Eleazar the High-Prieſt was his Father, and Moſes his Great Uncle. This Phinees, was ſo ſenſible of the Danger of letting ſuch an Indignity paſs Unpuniſhed, and of ſuffering the Laws to be Trampled upon, and Deſpiſed, that he took up a Reſolution of a Revenge upon the Ringleader of This Indignity; being very well aware, that in all ſuch Caſes, the Greater the Man is, the Greater is the Neceſſity of making him an Example. Now as Phinees was a perſon both of Body and Mind, fit for the Execution of ſuch an Exploit; ſo without any more ado, he went directly to the Tent of Zimri, and with his drawn Sword Killed Him, and Cosbi, both at a Thruſt. This Glorious Action created ſuch an Emulation among thoſe of his Cotemporaries who had but any ſpark of Honour in them, that they fell Immediately upon the Remainder of the Faction; and they that Scaped the Sword, died by the Judgment of a Peſtilence that followed ſoon after, which took away, not only Thoſe that had been Actors in the Sedition, but Thoſe of their Kindred alſo, that by their Intereſt or Authority might have Interpoſed to prevent it. This Plague ſwept away to the Number of Fourteen Thouſand Souls.

Phinees Kills Zimri and Cosbi in their Tent.

The Whole Faction deſtroyed betwixt the Sword and the Plague.

Moſes was ſo Irritated by Theſe Practices of the Madianites, that he ſent out an Army againſt them utterly to Extirpate the Nation. But we ſhall give an Account hereafter of That Branch of the ſtory, and in the mean time take up again where we left off. It would be but Juſt and Reaſonable, in This Place to Extol the Candor, and Clear the Generoſity of Moſes upon the Matter. As to This Balaam that was Invited by the Madianites to Curſe the Hebrews; though he could not prevail for leave from God to do it, he yet gave the Enemy ſuch Counſel, as the Hebrews were almoſt Ruined by it; in the Miſleading, and Corrupting of them in their Religion. Of This Balaam, Moſes, I ſay, makes Honorable Mention in his Writings, Inſerting his very Reſolutions and Predictions. If Moſes had not been very Sincere, he might have aſſumed the Credit of them to Himſelf, and not one Witneſs upon the Face of the Earth to diſprove him; but he Choſe rather to do Right to his Memory. People may think of This as they pleaſe. But to purſue my Relation.

The Hebrews Obtain a Notable Victory over the Madianites.

Moſes, as I was ſaying, ſent Twelve Thouſand Men againſt the Madianites; a Thouſand out of every Tribe, and Phinehas to Command them; by whoſe means the Laws were Vindicated; and Zimri, the Violator of them, Juſtly Puniſhed.

Upon Intelligence given to the Madianites that the Enemy was already upon the Borders, and drawing toward them, they got their Troops together; Fortified ſeveral Paſſes as far as their time would give them leave, and ſo put themſelves in poſture to ſtand a Battle. The Madianites were utterly Broken upon the Firſt Encounter, and the Number of the ſlain was Incredible. Five Kings among the reſt, as (a) Ochus, Sures, Robeas, Ures, and Recem, the Fifth. The Capital City of Arabia is known by his Name to This Day, in Memory of the King that Built it. They call it Rekem, and the Grecians, Petra. Upon This Rout, the Hebrews laid Waſt the Country, putting all to the Sword, ſaving only the Girls, according to Moſes's Order to Phineas, who brought back the Army ſafe and ſound, with a Memorable Booty, as Fifty Two Thouſand and Sixty Seven Oxen; ſixty Thouſand Aſſes; houſehold Plate and Veſſels of Gold and Silver, to an Immenſe Value: for the Pomp and Magnificence they lived in was beyond Imagination. They brought away alſo a matter of Thirty two Thouſand Virgins.

Upon Theſe Terms, they Obtain'd what they deſir'd, and were put in poſſeſſion of Strong Cities, where their Wives, Children, Baggage, and Fortunes might be in Safety.

They clear themſelves to Moſes.

Moſes grants them the Requeſt upon Conditions.

There were Ten Cities built in That Country by Moſes; part of the Forty Eight heretofore mention'd: He made Three of them Sanctuaries, or Places of Refuge for thoſe that fled thither, in the caſe of Killing a Man by Chance-Medley, and without Malice Prepenſe. The Refugee was to continue in Baniſhment during the Life of the High-Prieſt, under whoſe Juriſdiction the Homicide happened, and upon his Deceaſe he was permitted to Return. During This Baniſhment it was lawful for any of the Kindred of the Man that was ſlain, to Kill the Homicide, if he found him without the Walls of the City of Refuge; but it was not permitted to any Other. The Names of Theſe Cities of Refuge were Bozor, on the Borders of Arabia; Ariman, in the Country of Galadene; and Gaulanan, in the Land of (a) Batanæa. Moſes provided alſo, that upon the Taking of Canaan, there ſhould be Three Places of Refuge Erected There alſo among the Cities of the Levites, with the ſame Privileges as the Former.

About This time there died an Eminent Perſon of the Tribe of Manaſſes, called Solophades, leaving no Male Children, but only Daughters. Some of the Chief Men of the Tribe Conſulted Moſes, whether or no Theſe Daughters were to Inherit. The Reſolution was given, that they were to Inherit if they Marry'd into the Tribe, but not if they Marry'd out of it; upon which Occaſion he paſs'd an Ordinance, That Every Tribe ſhould keep its Own Inheritance, without Alienating, or Transferring it.

Daughters allow'd to Inherit if they marry into their Own Tribe.

CHAP. VIII.

The Life, and Laws of Moſes.

Gel. 7. fol. 118.

IT was now Forty Years within Thirty Days, ſince the Hebrews came out of Ægypt, when Moſes call'd the People together at a Place known at preſent by the Name of Abila, by the ſide of the River Jordan, near a Field of Palm-Trees, and when the Multitude were met, he deliver'd himſelf in a Speech to them to This Effect.

Moſes calls the People together to Abila.

"Since it is the Will of God now in the Hundred and Twentieth Year of a Waſted, "Troubleſome Life, to take me out of This World, (the Courſe of Nature alſo re-"quiring it) and ſo to Order, that I can be no longer Uſeful to you, either with my "Arms, or Counſels, in your further Progreſs beyond Jordan, toward the Land of "Canaan; it will be yet a Great Comfort to Me at my laſt Hour, to leave my Valiant "Fellow-Soldiers, Labourers, and Sufferers, in ſo Hopeful a Proſpect of All the Good "their Own Hearts can Wiſh. I muſt not be wanting to my Duty however, (even "in This Critical Extremity) of conſulting your Happineſs, and ſo far as in Me lies, "of promoting it alſo, by telling you what That Happineſs is, and directing you to "the Means of Attaining it: and in ſo doing I ſhall Entitle my ſelf to an Everlaſting E-"ſteem in your Memory. I make no Doubt but I ſhall find Credit with you, and I "may take upon me to ſay, that I Deſerve it too, if it were but for the Indefatigable "Conſtancy of my Endeavours to Advance your Welfare; wherein I never Diſap-"pointed, or Deceiv'd you: beſide, that the Words of a Dying Man are Sacred and "Sincere.

Moſes's Dying Speech.

"As to the Subject of Humane Felicity, you may aſſure your ſelves, that no Man can "be Happy, but in the Favour of God, and that it belongs to Him Alone to conferr "Bleſſings upon the Righteous, and to take away from the Wicked. Do but behave "your ſelves anſwerably to what God requires at your Hands, or according to the "Precepts and Inſtructions that you have receiv'd from Me by his Commiſſion, and "you ſhall be Celebrated for your Virtue, and Envy'd for your Proſperity: and not

(a) Or Batanitis.

"only

" only ſo neither; but the Bleſſings that you are Poſſeſs'd of ſhall be Continu'd to " you, and thoſe you want ſhall be ſuperadded. Only Reſign your ſelves to God's " Will, and Obey his Commandments, and all This ſhall be made good to you. But " have a care how you give a Preference to any Other Laws, comparatively with " thoſe which God ſent You by Me; or how you Allow your ſelves in any Innovati" ons in Matters of Worſhip and Religion. Follow My Advice, and you ſhall be Vi" ctorious and Invincible; for when you have God on your ſide, what matters it who " is againſt you? The Rewards of Virtue are Glorious and Certain; over and above " that Virtue it ſelf is the Greateſt, and that All Other Advantages are caſt in by way
" Acceſſion. Practice it One with Another, and you ſhall be both Happy your ſelves,
" and likewiſe make Others ſo, to the Comfort of your Preſent State, and to your " Immortal Honour in times to come. All This you may promiſe your ſelves, if you
" neither Violate, nor ſuffer to be violated, the Written Laws I brought you by God's " Special Direction; and if you make the Wiſdom and the Righteouſneſs of Thoſe Laws " your Daily Meditation and Study. This will ſecure your Eſtabliſhment; and if I " may but ſee you now in a ſtate of Settlement before I leave the World, I ſhall depart
" in Peace. All I can do towards it will be to Recommend you to the Obſervance of " Thoſe Precepts of Piety and Prudence that are given you for your Inſtruction and " Practice, and to an Obedient Compliance with the Orders of your Superiours that " ſhall be appointed and provided for your Well-Being and Safety. That God, under " whoſe Government you have Acted hitherto, and to whoſe Goodneſs you ſtand In" debted for all the Benefits you have receiv'd from Me: That God, I ſay, will ne" ver forſake you; but Watch over you and Protect you ſo long as you Worſhip " him as you ought to do. You ſhall not want Excellent Monitors neither, as Elea" zar the High-Prieſt; Joſhua; the Senate; and the Principals of the Tribes. Treat " them with all Reverence and without any thing of Cavil or Croſſneſs as ever you " hope to be Happy; for He that cannot Obey well can never Govern well, when " it comes to his Turn. Have a care how you take Mutiny for Liberty, as you have " done formerly, and how you ſet up for a Privilege of Thwarting the Commands of " your Governours, under That Notion. You have been too much given to This " Miſtake in times paſt; Pray mend it for the Future, and your Affairs will thrive
" the Better for it. God forbid you ſhould ever be ſo Impetuous and Intemperate to" ward any of My Succeſſors, as you have, but too often, been to Me; inſomuch
" that (as you know very well) my Life hath been more in danger from You ſome-
" times, than from the Enemy. I do not ſpeak This to Reproach You; for I was not " Tranſported, you ſaw, at the Doing of the Thing, neither would I afflict you with " the Memory of an Ill thing done, at a time when I am upon the very point of ta" king my Eternal Leave of you; only be Wiſer for the Future, and be not Puff'd
" up with the Wealth and Plenty of the Land of Canaan, when you ſhall come to " take Poſſeſſion of it; but know it to be your Intereſt, as well as your Duty, not to " behave your ſelves frowardly to Thoſe that are ſet over you: For if ever Wealth
" and Luxury ſhall make you Inſolent, to the Contempt of Religion, Authority, and " Virtue, God, of a Protector, will become your Enemy. You ſhall loſe That Land
" again with Infamy, that you got with Honour and Courage; and be ſcatter'd all " over the Face of the Earth, as the moſt Deſpicable of Mankind. When it comes to " That once, it will be too late to Wiſh things Undone again, and that you had con" tain'd your ſelves within the Bounds of your Laws and Duty. Now to prevent " the Danger of This Mortal Apoſtacy for the time to come, give No Quarter where " you get the Better of it, for in ſo doing, you cut off all the Seducers. As " for their Temples, Groves, and Altars, let them be Deſtroy'd, one and all, with " Fire and Sword, where-ever you come; even to the Extinction, if it were poſſible,
" of the very Memory of them. This, in fine, is the Only way to ſecure your ſelves
" to all purpoſes; but yet for fear of the Worſt, and to Aſſiſt the Ignorant toward
" the Underſtanding of their Duties, I have written a Body of Laws by the Command
" of God Himſelf; and ſuch a Form of Adminiſtration, Publick and Private, that " you ſhall be certainly the Happieſt People under the Sun, if you Conform your " ſelves to Thoſe Rules and Meaſures.

Moſes delivers them a Book of Laws and Precepts for Government and Good Manners.

When Moſes had made an end of ſpeaking, he deliver'd them a Book of Laws and Precepts in Writing, with reſpect to Government and Good Manners. This Book was but the Prologue to a Final Separation, and brought ſeveral things to their Mind that made the whole Multitude burſt out into an Exceſſive Weeping. Some were at their Wits end what ſhould become of them when Moſes was gone, and all in Deſpair of ever getting ſuch Another Commander. Others were upon the Subject of his Bravery and Conduct, what Pains he had taken, and what Dangers he had run, and how Generouſly and Chearfully he did Every thing for their Good. Some again again were at a loſs for a Mediator, who ſhould Conſult God for them when they wanted Advocates, or Intercede for them when he was Angry? But Nothing went Nearer them than the Memory of their Outrages againſt Moſes in the Deſart; upon which Reflection they were all Tranſported into ſuch Violent Lamentations, that what with Shame and Guilt, it carry'd them out of All Government of Themſelves, till Moſes at laſt by his Perſuaſion and Authority, put an End to the Sorrow, and to the Meeting, both at once: but firſt recommending to them the Study and the Uſe of his Book of Laws.

An Abſtract of the Laws Themſelves. Deut. 4.

It will be worth my while now, before I paſs over to Other Matters, to Inſert the Laws Themſelves, that the Reader may ſee how Anſwerable they are to the Majeſty of the Compiler of them, and the Original of our Uſages and Cuſtoms. Every thing that he wrote is yet Extant, and we muſt take it as he left it without any Room for Ornament or Variation. We have only taken the Liberty of Altering the Method, and of Reducing Thoſe ſeveral Laws that Moſes brought one after another, as God was Conſulted about them, into their Proper and Natural Place and Order. I have premoniſhed the Reader of This, to prevent the Calumny that ſome of our Own People might Otherwiſe have raiſed upon it, as if Moſes had not been fairly dealt withall in This part of the Relation. Now I ſhall only take Notice in This Place of the Publick Laws and Conſtitutions that have regard to the Policy of their Government, but for Matters of Private Dealing and Contract, whether among Our Selves, or with Strangers, I ſhall Treat of them in a Commentary, that I propoſe, God willing, to make Publick, concerning the Cuſtoms and Reaſons of Thoſe Laws.

How the Iſraelites are to Govern themſelves in the Land of Canaan.

When you ſhall have made your ſelves Abſolute Maſters of the Land of Canaan; ſettled your Plantations, and Built your Cities, you will have Nothing more to do toward the Maintaining of your ſelves in the Full, Safe, and Eaſie Enjoyment of your Acquiſitions, than to Love God, and Keep Theſe his Following Commandments, which will Eſtabliſh your Felicity upon a Foundation never to be Shaken.

One Holy City.

Let there be One Holy City in the Land of Canaan, to be Erected in ſome Certain place, for the Fruitfulneſs and Beauty of the Situation, which God by his Prophet ſhall make Choice of, and Appoint. Let there be One Temple in it, and One Altar, and That Altar to be made of Unhew'n Stones out of the Quarry, gather'd up here and there, and ſo put together and Varniſh'd, for the better grace of the Work, and to make it the more agreeable to the Eye: The Aſcent not to be made by Stairs or Steps, but by a Gradual Riſing of the Ground for the Decency of the Approach. But there muſt be no more Temples or Altars in any Other City; for the Hebrews are but One Nation, and Worſhip but One God.

One Temple, and One Altar.

Blaſphemy made Death.

Whoever ſhall Blaſpheme the Holy Name of God, let him be Stoned to Death; his Body Expoſed upon a Gibbet for One Day, and afterwards thrown into the Ground with Infamy and Contempt.

The whole Nation to Worſhip Thrice a Year at Jeruſalem. Deut. 16.

Let the whole Nation of the Hebrews come up from all Quarters to This Holy City and Temple, to Worſhip Thrice a Year, and Offering up Thankſgivings for Benefits receiv d, to Implore Future Bleſſings; and ſo by the Freedom of a Chearful Tenderneſs of Converſation, to Create Friendly Diſpoſitions, One toward Another. It is a Matter of Common Convenience for People of the ſame Stock, Intereſt, and Profeſſion, to be thoroughly acquainted; for there is a Wonderful Force many times in the Impreſſion of a Word, a Look, or an Action; as on the contrary, without Theſe Meetings and Interviews, all the Comforts and Advantages of Communication are loſt to us.

Tenths. Deut. 18.

Let there be alſo Reſerved to the Value of Another Tenth of the Fruits of the Earth (over and above the Dues to the Prieſts and Levites) out of the Sale of them in the Market, to be laid out in Sacrifices and Entertainments, that ſhall be Celebrated in This City; as it is but reaſonable to Dedicate the Fruits of the Land to Him that gives us Gratis the Propriety and Poſſeſſion.

Not to Offer the Hire of a Harlot. Deut. 23.

Thou ſhalt not Offer in Sacrifice the Hire of a Proſtitute, for God is not pleaſed with any thing that is either Wicked or Shameful; and there is No Fouler Uncleanneſs than This Mixture of Bodies. And ſo in like manner for the Hire of a Bitch to keep up the Strain of a Hound, a Sheep, or a Dog, as it is for the Hire of a Strumpet. Let no Man ſpeak Ill of the Gods of Other Nations, nor Rifle their Temples, nor take away any thing out of them that is Dedicated to Divine Uſe or Worſhip.

Only the Prieſt to wear a mixed Garment. Deut. 22.

Let no Iſraelite wear a Mix'd Garment of Wool and Linen, unleſs he be a (a) Prieſt; to whom alone it belongs.

The Prieſt to read the Law upon the Feaſt of Tabernacles. Deut. 11.

In every Seventh Year when the Feaſt of Tabernacles ſhall be Celebrated in the Holy City, let the Prieſt, from a High Pulpit, where he may be heard by the whole Congregation, read the Book of the Law, and all ſorts of People without Exception, Women, men, Children, yea and Slaves Themſelves too, be admitted to the Hearing of it: for when the Law is once thoroughly Imprinted in Peoples Minds, it will never out of their Memories: beſide that it takes away the Common Plea of pretended Ignorance. Laws have more Force alſo upon the Conſciences of Offenders, when they tell them beforehand what they are to truſt to in caſe of Diſobedience, and Mingle Terror with Authority. What men receive by the Ear ſinks into their Minds, and they find themſelves ſo far Convinced of the Intent and Reaſon of Laws, that they have Effectually their own Accuſers upon the Violation of them.

Children to be Early Inſtructed in the Law. Deut. 6.

Above all things let Children be Early Inſtructed in Theſe Laws, as the moſt Neceſſary and Profitable Diſcipline they can be trained up to. Wherefore let them twice a day, Morning and Evening, be conſtantly Minded of the Goodneſs of God that brought them out of the Land of Ægypt; and ſo of his Other Mercies; for it is equally reaſonable to give God thanks for Former Bleſſings, as to pray for New ones. Let them have Memorials of God's Power and Bounty, by Inſcri tions upon their Doors, their Heads, about their Arms, &c. ſo that which may ſoever they turn themſelves they may have Remembrancers of God's Providence ſtill in their Eyes.

Memorials of God's Mercy.

A Council of Seven in Every City. Magiſtracy to be Honoured.

Let Every City have a Council of Seven Magiſtrates; Men of Exemplary Virtue, and Lovers of Righteouſneſs, (a) and to Each of Theſe Rulers let there be Two Levites. Let the Dignity of the Seat of Judgment be kept ſacred, and no Man preſume to Utter an Irreverent or Intemperate Word in the Face of the Court; for the Practice of This Veneration toward Political Governours will wont us by degrees to a Love and Awe of Piety, as well as of Common Juſtice, and to an Affectionate ſenſe of our Duty to God Himſelf, in the Deference we pay to his Miniſters. There muſt be no Appeal from the ſentence of the Judge, unleſs in caſe of Manifeſt Error and Corruption. Juſtice is the Main End of Judgment; and it is to be Adminiſtred without any regard either to Power, Intereſt, or Affection. It is a Reproach to the Divine Power and Goodneſs, to be more afraid of a Great Man than of God Himſelf, as if the Latter were the Weaker of the Two: And this is in truth the Caſe of ſuch Partialities. If it ſhall ſo fall out that the Judges are either not Informed at all, or Miſinformed, and Conſequently Strangers to the Queſtion, and ſo Incompetent; (which many times happens) let the Cauſe be Caried up Entire to the Holy City, for the High-Prieſt, the Prophet, and the Senate to Decide the Controverty.

No Men Condemned under two or more Witneſſes, and Men of Probity. Deut. 19.

Let no Accuſation be Admitted, but from the Mouths of Two, Three, or more Witneſſes, and let Them be Men of Probity too, and an Unſpotted Reputation.

A Women's Teſtimony not to be Admitted.

The Teſtimony of a Woman ſhall not be Reputed a Warrantable Evidence, becauſe of the Natural Levity of the Sex, and that they talk too much at Randome.

No Slave to be a Witneſs.

No Slave ſhall be Allowed of as a Competent Witneſs, becauſe of the Servile and Mercenary Condition of his Mind and Quality, which may probably be Wrought upon, either by Fear, or by Profit, to give a Falſe Teſtimony.

The Puniſhment of a Falſe Oath.

Whoever ſhall be Convict of a Falſe Oath, ſhall be Lyable to the ſame Puniſhment that the Accuſed ſhould have ſuffered if the Charge had been Proved upon him.

Puniſhment in the caſe of Bloud. Deut. 21.

In the caſe of Homicide, when a Man ſhall be found Dead in a Field, and He that Killed him not appear, nor any Perſonal Jelouſy of a Malice Prepenſe againſt him, let there be a ſtrict Enquiry upon the Life of the Man, and Publique Rewards Offered by Proclamation for the Diſcovery. If after all This Search and Diligence, it ſhall not yet be made out how he came by his Death, let the Magiſtracy, and the Neighbouring Townſhips Meet together, and take an Exact Meaſure which of them was Neareſt to the Place when the Dead Body was found; and let the Inhabitants of the Place that ſhall be found Neareſt provide a Helfer, and bring it into a Fallow Spot of Ground that is fit for neither Planting nor Sowing, and there let the Sinews of the Neck be cut, the Prieſts, Levites, and Elders waſhing their hands with Water over the Head of the Heifer, and purging themſelves by an Open Proteſtation that they know Nothing, either Directly or Indirectly of the Homicide: Finiſhing the Ceremony with Prayers to Almighty God to preſerve That Place and People from the Guilt of Bloud for the time to come.

Ariſtocracy the Beſt Form of Government.

As to the Matter of Government, Ariſtocracy is the Beſt Form, wherefore let the Hebrews ſtick to it, and Maintain it; for whenever they caſt it off it will be to their Loſs; for they have Nothing above them but the Laws, and Thoſe Laws are a ſtanding Rule what they are to do; but let it ſuffice, that they have God for their King, and their Supreme Governour.

Advice in the Choice of a King. Deut. 17.

Now after all This, if you ſhould come to have a Hankering for Monarchy, be ſure you chuſe Your King out of Your Own Stock and Lineage: a Perſon of Juſtice, and Good Faith, without Paſſion or Guile: One that ſhall depend upon the Direction of God, and the Laws, more than upon his Own Wiſdom: One that ſhall take the Advice of the High-Prieſt and Elders along with him in all he does, without ſetting his mind upon a Multitude of Wives, or the Pomp of Treaſure and Horſes, for fear the Ambitious Affectation of This Power and Magnificence, ſhould tranſport him into Encroachments upon your Laws and Liberties, and make him Greater, in fine, then would ſtand with your Eaſe and Convenience.

No Land-Marks to be removed. Deut. 19.

Remove No Boundaries, or Land-Marks, whether Your Own, or Your Neighbours; for they are the Beſt Security we have for a Common Peace. Let them be kept as Firm as the Foundations of the Earth, and as if Providence it ſelf had Fixed them there. The Breaking in upon Theſe Bounds Opens a Certain Way to Wars and Tumults; and what Avarice does in One Caſe, Ambition does in the Other.

Of the Firſt Fruits of Trees under Four Years Growth.

The Firſt Fruits of Trees that bear before the Fourth Year from their Planting, are not either to be Offered to God, or to be Eaten by Man: for coming before their time, they are rather Obortions than a Natural Production. But in the Fourth Year, when the Fruit comes to Maturity, let all be gathered and Tranſported to the Holy City, to be there Spent by the Owner, (together with the Tenths of Other Fruits) in treating his Friends and Acquaintances, Widows and Orphans. But in the Fifth Year, the Proprietor has the Whole Product to Himſelf.

Planting of Vines.

Let No Ground be ſowed that is Planted with Vines; for the Earth hath enough to do to Attend the Service of That Plant, without the Superfluous Vexations of the Plow over and above.

To Plow with Oxen alone.

Let the Earth be Plowed with Oxen alone; for Beaſts of ſeveral kinds are not to draw in the ſame Yoke.

The ſeed to be ſimple.

Let the ſeeds to be Sown be ſimple and unmixt, not Two or Three ſorts together, for the Confuſion of ſuch Diverſities is Unnatural.

No Adulterate Mixtures.

Let there be No Adulterate mixtures betwixt the Female of one kind, and the Male of Another, leaſt Men ſhould be Tempted alſo by the Corruption of This Unnatural example into the Liberty of Inordinate Luſts: as the Fouleſt Extravagances have taken their Riſe many times from Trivial Beginnings, wherefore let Nothing be Permitted in Humane Converſation; that by a Perverſe Hint of applying it, may tend to the Depravation of Good Manners. So that it is not for Laws to paſs over in Neglect, even the Smalleſt Things in appearance when ſo Great Matters depend upon them.

Let not the Harveſt-Reapers Sweep away the Whole Crop, but leave a Large Allowance of Gleanings for the Neceſſities of the Poor; and ſo for Cluſters of Grapes upon the Vintage, and Wind-falls upon the Gathering of Olives, let there be a Compaſſionate Remainder left for thoſe that have Nothing to Eat of their Own. The Reward of the Charity will Infinitely more than Countervail the Charge of the Bounty, for God will Bleſs the Land with Fertility, and the Owner of it with Plenty, when a Man has a regard to the Wants of the Neceſſitous, as well as to his Own Convenience.

No Muzzling of the Ox when he Treads out the Corn. Deut. 25.

The Ox is not to be Muzzled when he Treads out the Corn; for it would be Unreaſonable to deny any thing a part in the Fruit of its Own Labours.

Deny no Paſſenger Fruit that is a gathering, upon a Journey.

Let No Paſſenger upon a Journey be refuſed the Taſt of Ripe Fruit if he deſires it, whether of the Country or a ſtranger; but let him Take and Eat and Welcome, as if it were his Own, provided he carry None away with him.

Give Grapes to a Paſſenger upon the way, as they go to the Preſs.

Let No Man in bearing Grapes to the Preſs, refuſe a Bunch of them to a Traveller that meets him upon the Way; for it would be very hard to deny any Man ſo Small a Proportion of the Good things that God hath beſtowed upon Mankind, Gratis, and in ſuch abundance; eſpecially conſidering the Nicety of the Seaſon, according to the Courſe of Providence, and how ſoon it will be over. Nay if Men ſhould be ſo Scrupulous upon a Point of Modeſty, as to forbear Touching, or Deſiring any thing, let them be Invited, and Entreated to Take and pleaſe themſelves. If they be Iſraelites, they are to be looked upon as Partners and Fellow-ſharers in what you have, being All of the ſame Bloud and Brotherhood. If ſtrangers, let them be deſired to Accept of ſuch a Reſpect as a Preſent of Hoſpitality out of Gods bounty. We are not to Account any thing loſt that is thus beſtowed; for when it pleaſes God to ſhowre down his Bleſſings upon the ſons of Men, it is not for This or That Mans ſake, or Uſe Alone, but a Depoſitum with them as Truſtees for the Common Service of thoſe that Want. Neither can Men do a Greater Right to Gods Magnificence toward Themſelves, than by Communicating part of the Bleſ-

ſings

ſings to Others. Whoever ſhall preſume to Act Contrary to what is here preſcrib'd ſhall receive Forty Laſhes ſave One from the Hand of the Common Executioner; a Servile Puniſhment, but Good enough for a Mercenary Freeman, that Sacrifices his Dignity to his Avarice. It is all the Reaſon in the World ſays Moſes, that thoſe People that Suffer'd ſo much Themſelves in Ægypt, and the Wilderneſs, ſhould from the Experience of their own Miſery, Contract ſomewhat of Tenderneſs and Compaſſion for their Neighbours: ſo far at leaſt, as being in Plenty Themſelves to Aſſiſt the Needy in ſome degree out of Their Abundance.

A Third to the Poor.

Beſide the Two Yearly Tenths already appointed to be pay'd, the One to the Levites, the Other to the Holy Feaſts, there remains yet a Third to be Every Third Year divided among the Poor Widows and Orphans.

The Firſt-Fruits to the Temple. Deut. 26.

Let Every man carry his Firſt-Fruits to the Temple, and after Thankſgivings to God for the Earth that brought them forth, and Sacrifices Celebrated in Due form of Law, let him give them to the Prieſts: and This being done, and the Tenths with the Firſt-Fruits for the Levites and the Feſtivals, Preſented according to Cuſtom, let him when he is ready to go Home again, give God thanks before the Door of the Temple for Delivering the Hebrews from their Grievous Slavery, and putting them in Poſſeſſion of ſo Fair, and Plentifull a Country: Publiquely Declaring that he has paid his Tenths according to the Law, and Appointment of Moſes. Let him then pray to God both for Himſelf, and for the Publique, to Grant them not only a Continuance of his Graces, and Mercies toward them, but by his Infinite Power and Goodneſs, to Vouchſafe them an Augmentation of Thoſe Bleſſings.

The Choice of a Wife.

When Men are of Years to Marry, let them make their Choice out of Virgins that are Well-born, and Well-Nurtur'd, and the Children of Virtuous Parents, but let not him that will not Marry a Virgin, preſume to Seduce the Wife of Another Man, to the Diſquiet, and Affliction of her Husband.

Love is no Plea for a Free-man that marries a Bond-woman.

Let not a Freeman marry a Bond-Woman, and then plead Love in his Defence; for a Man Forfeits his Dignity when he can no longer Command his Paſſions.

Let no man marry a Harlot.

Let there be No marrying with a Harlot; for God will not receive a Nuptial-Sacrifice from an Unclean Body; beſide that Libidinous Marriages are commonly attended with a Suitable Iſſue, both for want of Sobriety and Honour.

The caſe of a Woman that marries for a Virgin, and is None, Deut. 24.

If any man thinks he has marry'd a Virgin, and finds afterwards that he was Miſtaken, let him put the Cauſe upon a Tryal, and bring his Proofs, While on the Other ſide the Father, the Brother, and the Next a-kin may appear on the behalf of the Woman: if ſhe be Acquitted, her Accuſer ſhall be Bound to live in Wedlock with her, and That Marriage never after to be Diſſolv'd, unleſs upon Poſitive Evidence beyond Contradiction; but whoever ſhall be found in ſuch a Caſe as This, Raſhly and Scandalouſly to Calumniate an Innocent Perſon, let him have the Corporal Puniſhment of Nine and Thirty Stripes, and ſtand Condemn'd in a Mulct of Fifty Sicles, to the Father of the Woman. But if it ſhall be made out that She was Corrupted before her Marriage, ſhe ſhall be Stoned to Death for her Incontinence, if a Perſon of a Mean Quality; or if Otherwiſe, as of the Family of a Prieſt, let her be Burnt alive.

No Transferring the Right of Primogeniture to a Younger Child. Deut 21.

If a man have Two Wives, and a much Greater Value for the One than for the Other; (whether upon the account of Beauty, Inclination, or what other Motive ſoever) in caſe the Husband ſhall be prevail'd upon by the Favourite-Wife to demand a Right of Primogeniture for her Younger Son to the Prejudice of an Elder Son by Another Wife (for by My Laws, ſays Moſes, the Seniority Entitles him to a Double Portion) let it not be allow'd of: for it is Unjuſt that the Elder Son ſhould be Robb'd of his Birth-right for the Partiality of the Father to One Wife more than the Other.

Of Debauching a Woman Contracted to Another man.

If any man ſhall Debauch a Virgin Contracted to Another Man, they are Both Guilty, and ſhall Both ſuffer Death; the Man for Corrupting the Woman, and the Woman for Conſenting: The One for Seducing the Woman into the preference of a Scandalous Uncleanneſs to an Honourable Marriage; the Other for Yielding her ſelf a Proſtitute, either for Luſt or Profit. But if a Man ſhall be found to have forced a Woman alone, and no body within diſtance of coming to her Relief, the Man only ſhall Dye.

The Penalty of Corrupting a Virgin that's Free.

He that ſhall Corrupt a Virgin that's under no Obligation to any Other Man, let him Marry her, or if her Father will not agree to it, let him give him Fifty Sicles for a Compoſition.

The Caſe of a Man's Parting with his Wife.

If a man has a mind to part from his Wife upon what Cauſe ſoever; as there are Pretences in abundance, let him give it under his hand that they ſhall never come together again; She may Marry Another Man, but without That Diſcharge ſhe cannot, neither will the Divorce ſtand Good; but in caſe the Second Husband ſhould die, and the Woman have a mind to go back to her Firſt again, it is not to be Permitted.

The Caſe of a Husband that dies, and leaves his Wife without Iſſue.

Where a Husband dies, and leaves his Wife without Iſſue, let the Brother of the Deceaſed Marry the Widow, and in caſe of a Son by the Second Husband, let him bear the Name of the Family, and Inherit the Eſtate; for it concerns the Publique, that Names and Families ſhould by preſerv'd, their Poſſeſſions kept Entire, and it is a Relief to the Woman to live with ſo near a Relation to her Firſt Husband. But if the Brother refuſe to marry her, let her Complain to the Senate, that whereas ſhe Offer'd her ſelf to Stay in the Family, and to bring Children to it, her Husband's Brother had given her the Repulſe, and put a Diſhonour upon the Memory of her Dead Husband. The Elders ſhall then Interrogate the Brother upon the Reaſon of his Refuſal, and whether it be more or leſs, the Iſſue with be This in the Concluſion: The Widow ſhall looſen the Lappet of the Brother's Shooe, and Spit in his face, telling him that he Deſerved all this, for caſting a Diſhonour upon the Memory of the Deceaſed. After This, he Departs the Court with a Marque of Infamy that he carries to his Grace; and ſo the Widow is left at liberty to Marry again where She pleaſes.

A Maid, Widow, or Wife that's taken Priſoner, and then Marries. Deut. 21.

If any man takes a Maid, Widow, or Wife, Priſoner, and hath a mind to Marry her, they are not to accompany together as Man and Wife, till the Priſoner ſhall have Shaved her Head, and run thorough the Whole Courſe of her Mourning for the Friends and Relations ſhe loſt in the Battle; and This Ceremony being over, She is at liberty to Enjoy the Comforts of Mirth and Marriage. It is a Reaſonable thing, for him that takes a Woman to have Children by her, to Indulge the Will and Affections of his Wife, and not ſo abſolutely purſue his Own Satisfactions, as to Neglect hers. But after Thirty days Mourning, which is enough for any ſober Man, it may be Seaſonable to Marry. If the Man ſhould prove Fickle, and grow Weary of her, he muſt not think to make her a Slave again, for ſhe hath Purchaſed her Freedom to go whither She Pleaſes.

Of Undutifull Children.

When Children ſhall behave themſelves Undutifully, and Contemptuouſly toward their Parents, without any regard to Filial Reverence, Piety, or Good Manners, let the Father and Mother in the Firſt Place, (whom Nature has made their Judges) Inſtruct, and Tutor them by ſome Diſcourſe to This or the Like Purpoſe.

Good Advice to Children.

" You ſhould conſider, Children, that the Conſcientious End of Marriage is not " either Wealth, or Pleaſure, but firſt to have Children, as a Bleſſing which we are " to Acknowledge with Joy and Thankfulneſs; and then to Train up Thoſe Chil- " dren to the Knowledge and Exerciſe of Virtue, and ſubmiſſion; that they may ſo " live, as to be a Comfort, and a Stay to their Aged Parents. You cannot ſay that we " have ſpar'd for any thing in the care of your Inſtitution, that might Honeſtly Qua- " lify you for all the Agreeable Advantages of a Happy Life. And what Return at " laſt for all This Tenderneſs? But Youth is Raſh and Frail, and the Errors of it are " not Unpardonable. Come Children, you have been to Blame; be ſo no more, but " Repent, and Amend, before it be too Late. You are not aware perhaps how God " Himſelf is Wounded in Your Unnatural Croſſneſs to Thoſe, from whom, next " under Him, you received Your Being; and that your Heavenly Father takes All " to Himſelf that you Commit againſt your Earthly Father, under the Analogy of " That Common Appellation, being the Father of All Fleſh Living. To ſay Nothing " of the Inevitable ſeverity of the Law in That Point, which I had rather you ſhould " Underſtand by Diſcourſe than Experience.

If This way of Reaſoning take Effect, it will be but a piece of Charitable Juſtice to Paſs it all over as a Slip of Ignorance without Malice: Beſide that it would be for the Honour of Governours, and the Comfort of Parents ſo to do; but if neither Authority, nor Advice can prevail, and that Rebellious Children will ſtill Perſiſt in an Incorrigible Contumacy, there is no way left then, but to Turn the Laws Looſe upon them, which will have them carry'd out of the City, and there Stoned to Death; the Bodies to be Expoſed upon a Gibbet for One day, and at night to be Taken down and Bury'd.

Incorrigible Obſtinacy in Children to be Puniſh'd with Death.

Publique Enemies to be allow'd Burial.

The ſame thing is to be done in All other Caſes of Capital Puniſhment. Publique Enemies are not to be Deny'd Burial. The Dead muſt be allow'd Earth to Cover them. The Law Preſcribes the Puniſhment, and it would be Injuſtice to go beyond the Sentence.

No Lending betwixt Hebrews, upon Uſury, Deut. 23.

It is not Lawfull for One Hebrew to Lend unto Another, either Money, Meat, or Drink upon Uſury; for it is not fair to make Advantage of the Neceſſities of a Brother. Let it ſuffice, that the Conſcience of a Good Office does more than Countervail the Profit of it; ſo that the very Charity is Clear Gain if Men would but Truſt God Almighty for their Reward, which never fails, ſooner or Later, to follow Good Works.

Works. As for thoſe that Borrow, either Mony, or Fruits, Wet or Dry, let them be ſure to make a Chearfull Repayment of it, ſo ſoon as ever God ſhall put them in Condition ſo to do: which is no more than Depoſiting ſo much in Another hand for your Own Uſe to be in readineſs upon ſuch Another Occaſion.

Debtor and Creditor.

In caſe of a Debtor, that hath neither the Shame, nor the Conſcience, to Reſtore what he Borrow'd; the Creditor ſhall not Enter into his Houſe to take a Pledge, but Demand it at the Door, where the Debtor Himſelf is to Deliver it, but upon the Order of the Judge in favour of the Creditor, there muſt be no Oppoſing of it. If he that has given the Pawn can Conveniently ſpare it, let the Creditor keep it till he receives Satisfaction; but if he be very Indigent, and Wants it, let it be return'd before Sun-ſet; Eſpecially if it be a Garment, leſt he ſhould want it to keep him Warm in the Night. Such is the Tenderneſs of Almighty God in favour of the Poor.

A Mill not to be Taken in Pawn, Deut. 24.

Take not a Mill in Pawn, or any thing that is Eſſentially Neceſſary to the Working of it, for fear it ſhould deprive ſome poor People of the Means of a Livelihood.

Death to Spirit away any Body.

Let it be Death to Spirit away, or to Steal a Man; and He that Steals Gold or Silver, let him Reſtore Double.

Lawfull to kill a Thief in the Act of Stealing.

He that ſhall kill a Thief in the Act of Stealing, or of Breaking into a Houſe, ſhall be Acquited.

The Penalty of tealing a Labouring Beaſt.

He that Steals a Labouring Beaſt ſhall be Condemn'd in Four times the Value of it; unleſs it be an Ox, and then the Penalty ſhall be Quintuple; but if the Party be not able to pay the Fine, let him be turned over for a Slave to the Perſon he has Wrong'd.

The Caſe of ſelling One Hebrew to Another.

If One Hebrew be ſold to Another, he ſhall ſerve Six Years, and be made Free the Seventh; but if it ſhould ſo fall out, that he hath Children in his Maſter's Houſe by any of his Female Fellow-Servants, and ſhall think fit, out of ſome Particular Inclination to Out-Stay his time, he ſhall be freed in the Year of Jubile, with his Wife and Children.

Finding Gold or Silver upon the Way.

If any man ſhall find Gold or Silver upon the way, let him Seek and Enquire who it was that Loſt it, in order to the Reſtoringof it, for it would be Inhumane to make Profit of Another Man's Misfortune. And ſo for Cattle that ſhall be ſeen Aſtray, and Wand'ring in a Deſert: either let the Maſter be found out to whom they belong, or let the Finder keep them to Himſelf, till the Right Owner may be heard of, calling God to Witneſs that he does not Covet the Goods of any Other Man.

Set a Traveller into his Right Way.

Whoever ſees a Traveller at a loſs for want of knowing his way, let him give him his Beſt Direction, and Advice, to ſet him forward on his Journey. It is Barbarous, either to make Sport with him, or to Hinder his Bus'neſs.

Speak no Ill of Deaf, or Abſent.

Speak no Ill either of the Deaf, or of the Abſent.

Striking upon a Sudden Quar-

If One Man Strikes Another upon a Sudden Quarrel, and not with a Sword, let Juſtice be inmediately done upon the Aggreſſor, by the ſame Number of Blows that he gave the Other: But if He that was Struck be Carry'd Home; lay'd-up Sick for ſeveral Days, and then Die, there ſhall lie no Action of Murder in the Caſe; but if he Recovers, the Other ſhall bear the Whole Charge of his Cure, Doctors, Apothecaries, Surgeons, Keepers and the like.

Of Beating a Woman, and making her Miſcarry.

If any Man ſhall Kick a Woman-with-Child, ſo that She Miſcarries, the Judges ſhall Condemn him in a Summ of Mony for the Loſs of a Subject: Beſide Another Summ by the way of a Fine to her Husband. But if ſhe dies of the Stroke, the Man muſt Die too, for Life muſt Anſwer for Life.

Finding a Mortal Poiſon in the Poſſeſſion of an Iſraelite.

If there ſhall be found in the Poſſeſſion of an Iſraelite, the Preparation of any Mortal, or Dangerous Poiſon, he ſhall ſuffer Death for it to Anſwer for the Lives of Thoſe againſt whom it ſhall appear to have been Deſign'd.

An Eye for an Eye.

He that Strikes out Another Man's Eye ſhall Forfeit his Own, and make Satisfaction in Kind, an Eye for an Eye, unleſs he ſhall Otherwiſe think fit to Compound for it with Mony; for the Law will ſo far allow a Man to be a Judge in his Own Caſe, where he ſhall think fit to Moderate the Rigour of a Penalty for an Injury done to Himſelf.

The Caſe of an Ox that Gores.

If an Ox be Miſchievous, and given to Goring, let his Maſter Kill him. If an Ox Kill any body let him Immediately be Ston'd to Death, and no man preſume to Eat of his Fleſh; but if it ſhall appear that the Maſter had been forewarn'd of the Fierceneſs of This Beaſt, and gave no Heed to it, He Himſelf ſhall ſuffer Death for not preventing the Death of Another man. If an Ox ſhall Kill a Man or a Maid-Servant, the Ox ſhall be Ston'd, and the Owner of the Ox ſhall ſtand Condemned in Thirty Sicles to the Maſter of the Slave that was Slain. If One Ox ſhall Kill Another let the Living, and the Dead be both ſold, and the Money divided betwixt their Two Maſters.

Let no Pit, or Well lye Open, Deut. 22.

If any Man digs a Pit or a Well, let him Cover it with Boards, and caſt up a Mound Mound about it when he goes from it, not to Engroſs the Water but to give Notice of the Danger, and to keep Man and Beaſt from falling into it; or in Caſe any Beaſt ſhall drop in at Unawares; and be loſt for want of ſuch a Fence, or Cover, the Owner of the Ground ſhall make Satisfaction to the Value of the Beaſt.

A Depoſitum is a Truſt that is Sacred, Deut. 24.

Whoever receives a Depoſitum, that is to ſay, ſomewhat in Truſt for the Uſe of Another Man; let him preſerve it as a thing Sacred, and not to be Touch'd by Man, Woman, or Child, though the Whole world were to be gotten by it, to the Prejudice of the Creditors. And Witneſs, or No Witneſs, either to the Truſt, or to the Fraud, does not One jot alter the Caſe. The Conſcience is the Only Judge, and Evidence, of what we ought to do, and of what we Do, and whether we do Well or Ill; and according to That Inward Teſtimony we ſtand or fall to a God that is not to be Impos'd upon. But now ſuppoſing the Depoſitum, Bonâ fide to be loſt; and He that had it in Charge not to Blame neither. Where it ſo falls out, let the Truſtee Apply himſelf to the Seven Judges, and there make Oath in the preſence of God, that he never Employ'd any part of it to his Own Uſe, and that neither Directly nor Indirectly he had any Hand or privity in the going of it; and This ſhall be Sufficient to Acquit him of having perform'd his Truſt. But yet if it ſhall afterward be made appear, that he ever Converted any Particle of This Depoſitum to his Proper Benefit, he ſhall be Obliged to make good the Whole.

Give the Labourer his Hire.

God will have the ſame Strictneſs of Juſtice to be alſo Obſerved in the Punctuality of paying the Labourer his Hire, which conſiſts partly in not Defrauding him of any Portion of his Due, and partly in not delaying the Payment of it; but upon the ſame Day, when he makes an End of his Work, let him receive his Wages.

Children not to be Puniſh'd for their Father's Faults.

Children are not to be Puniſh'd for the Iniquity of their Fathers, but where they are good, they deſerve rather to be Pity'd, for lying under the Lot of having ſuch Fathers: Beſide the Equity of reſpecting them for their Own Virtues, rather than making them Odious for the Failings of Others. Neither is the Lewdneſs of Children in All Caſes to be Imputed to their Parents; for there are ſome Natures ſo Harſh, and Intractable, that all the Gentleneſs of Good Example, Care, and Diſcipline, can never Work upon them.

There are an Abominable ſort of People, that out of ſome Unnatural Affectation, make themſelves Eunuchs, and in ſo doing, Deſtroy as much as in them lies, the very Intent of Nature and Providenee, in Male and Female; cutting-off the means of Encreaſing, and Conſequently of Poſterity, Both at once, to the Diſappointment of the Main End of their Creation. Their Minds were firſt Corrupted, before they came to make This Experiment upon their Bodies. Theſe Men are to be Avoided, and Deteſted as the Worſt of Monſters, wherefore let Nothing be Caſtrated, neither Man, nor any Other Living Creature, for it is a Departure from the very Inſtitution of Nature.

Theſe are the Laws you are to Obſerve in times of Peace, and I hope by the Bleſſing of God, they will be continu'd Unchangeably Sacred, and Inviolable, to your ſelves, and your Children after you for ever. But yet, in regard of the Uncertainty of Humane Affairs; and that upon ſome Ground or Other, whether of Malice, or Miſadventure, Difficulties and Troubles will Inevitably Ariſe, I ſhall Endeavour in a Few Words, the beſt I can, to prepare you for the Obviating of Thoſe Contingencies, ſo far at leaſt as a Reaſonable, and a Political Foreſight of Things may Enable me, that you may not be Taken Unprovided how to Acquit your ſelves upon Occaſion.

I wiſh you with all my heart in a Quiet Poſſeſſion of the Land that God hath Allotted you; and that you may come to reap the Fruit of your Induſtry and Patience, in Peace, and Plenty, without the Hazard, either of Open Enemies from abroad, or of Worſe in Your Own Bowels; for a Schiſm at home would Endanger the Overturning of the Laws, Cuſtoms, Diſcipline, and Religion of your Forefathers; which are no Other than the Ordinances of God Himſelf, being Warranted by the Stamp and Authority of his Divine Approbation. From Theſe Conſtitutions you are never to depart.

Advice in caſe of a Warr. Deut 20.

But if it ſhall be your Fortune, either now, or hereafter, to fall under the Neceſſity of a War, God grant it may be a Foreign one, and for the Decency of the Proceeding, let it be Advanced in form. You ſhall do well to let your Heralds, or Embaſſadors be ſent in the Firſt place with Memorials, and Declarations upon the Matter in Queſtion; for according to the Courſe of Reaſon and Nature, Words ſhould go before Blows You may give to Underſtand that your Buſ'neſs is not to Enrich your ſelves with Priſoners, or Booty: how Unwilling you are to put things to Extremities, and how deſirous of Peace, upon any Reaſonable Terms; notwithſtanding all the Advantages of Numbers, Horſe, Arms, Military Proviſions, and more than all the reſt, of an Almighty and a Gracious God to fight your Battles. But if your Competitor Competitor ſhall yet think fit to put the Cauſe upon a Tryal of War, Draw out your Men againſt him, committing the Government of the Whole to God, and next under him to the Braveſt Man of Arms, Policy, and Courage, that you can Pitch upon, as his Deputy. Have a care of many Heads; for they do commonly more Hurt than Good: not only for want of Agreement, but in the Matter of Execution and Diſpatch. Look to the Choice of your Levies, for the Minds of Men muſt be conſider'd as well as their Bodies. Let them be Daring as well as Robuſt, for the leaſt Mixture of Cowardice may be enough to Unſpirit, and to Debauch a Whole Army.

Perſons Excepted out the Militia.

You ſhall Except out of This Militia the Maſters of New-Built Houſes that they have not yet liv'd a Year in. The Planters of Vineyards that have not as yet Taſted the Fruit of their Own Vines, and New-marry'd Men that have not taken their Wives home with them yet, who when they ſhould be venturing their Lives for their Country, will be Indulging them for their Pleaſure.

Obſerve Good Order in the Camp.

Cut down no Fruit-Trees for Common Uſe.

Keep Good Order in your Camp, and Allow no Liberties that are Harſh and Cruel. When you want Wood at any time upon a Siege, as for an Engine, or ſome Military Uſe, Spare all Fruit-Trees, upon This Conſideration, that they were both Created and Planted for Other Uſes. If they had Tongues they would Expoſtulate the Matter with you, why Thoſe that were No Cauſe of the War ſhould be Deſtroy'd for the Service of it: and for Their Parts, if they were at Liberty to Tranſplant themſelves they could be as well Elſewhere.

No Quarter to the Obſtinate. The Canaanites to be routed out.

When you have the Fortune to Overcome in Battle, give no Quarter to Thoſe of your Enemies that were Obſtinate and ſtood it out, but preſerve the reſt, and make them your Tributaries, ſaving only the Canaanites; and thoſe you are to Extirpate, even the whole Nation of them, Root and Branch.

No Man to put on a Woman's Habit, nor a Woman a Man's. Deut. 22.

(a) Let no Man appear in a Woman's Dreſs or Habit, nor any Woman in a Man's; but Eſpecially in a Military Action.

The Form of the Hebrew Commonwealth. Deut. 30, 31, 32, 34.

This was the Form and Polity of the Hebrew Commonwealth as Moſes left it, and he delivered Other Laws alſo that he had Written ſome Forty Years before: of which in Another Tract.

A Prophetical Hymn, and Benediction. Deut. 33, 34.

He held Aſſemblies ſeveral Days after This, ſucceſſively; beſtowing his Benedictions upon thoſe that liv'd in Obedience to his Holy Laws, and Purſuing the Malicious Tranſgreſſors of them with Bitter Maledictions. He then Recited a kind of a Prophetical Canticle in Hexameter Verſe, containing a Diſcourſe of Things to come, and in the very Order as they fell out after, without any Variation either in the Matter it ſelf, or in the Series of the Story. This he left in Writing to be kept in the Oratory. He delivered his Books to the Prieſts, and alſo the Ark, wherein were the Ten Commandments, written in Two Tables, leaving it in Charge to the People, that ſo ſoon as ever they ſhould come to be Maſters of the Promis'd Land, and ſettle their Plantations, they ſhould take their Revenge of the Amalekites, for the Indignities they had formerly put upon them in the Deſart.

The Canaanites to be Deſtroy'd, and an Altar Erected betwixt Mount Garizim and Gebal. Deut. 27, 28.

He Commanded alſo that upon the Taking of Canaan, and putting the whole Multitude to the Sword, they ſhould raiſe an Altar to the Eaſtward, not far from b) Sichem, betwixt Two Mountains, Garizim on the Right Hand, and Gebal on the Left, and ſo Dividing their Army into Twice Six Tribes, they were to Diſpoſe of Thoſe Two Diviſions upon Theſe Two Mountains, together with the Prieſts and Levites. They were to Pray in their Turns, and Garizim to lead the Office, imploring all ſorts of Bleſſings from Almighty God upon thoſe that kept his Holy Commandments, and walked in the ways of his Servant Moſes: The Tribes upon Gebal, by way of Reſponſe, at the Cloſe, returning their Acclamations, in token of Approving what the Other had done. And then after the ſame manner they follow'd with their Maledictions, which were Pronounced and Ratify'd with the ſame Solemnity as before. Theſe Bleſſings and Imprecations were at That time Committed to Writing, for a Perpetual Memory of the Thing. He cauſed them alſo, when he was dying, to be Engraven on Each ſide of the Altar, the People Aſſiſting and Offering up Sacrifices and Burnt-Offerings: a thing not Warrantable in it ſelf, and therefore not to be brought into Precedent. You have here the Ordinances and Conſtitutions of Moſes, which the Hebrews obſerve moſt Religiouſly to This Day.

Bleſſings and Maledictions.

The People under an Oath to Obſerve God's Laws.

Upon the Day following, the whole Multitude being gather'd together, Men, Women and Children, the meaneſt of Slaves Themſelves not Excepted, Moſes bound them with an Oath to the Obſervance of Theſe Laws according to the Will of God, and that neither Favour, Terror, nor any Other Pretence, ſhould ever make them depart from their Obedience to Thoſe Precepts; but that if any Single Perſon, though never ſo Near or Dear to them, or any Body of Men, ſhould ever Attempt an Innovation, they would Joyn as One Man againſt Him and Them, to Perſecute the People;

Raſe

Raſe their Cities, and not leave them ſo much as One Stone upon Another, if they had Power to Compaſs it. But Otherwiſe, in Caſe of Inſuperable Difficulties, they would at leaſt make a Publick Proteſtation againſt the Wickedneſs, and Diſclaim to any thing of Conſent to't. This was the Summ and Subſtance of the Oath the Multitude took upon This Occaſion. Moſes Inſtructed them further alſo, how they ſhould govern themſelves in their Sacrifices, and what Meaſures they were to take in All Great Enterprizes; to know whether they had God's Approbation or not, by Obſerving the Stones upon Aaron's Breaſt-Plate, as is already ſet forth.

Joſhua's Prediction. While Moſes was yet Alive, Joſhua foretold, by the Spirit of Prophecy, what he Himſelf was to do for the Welfare of the People, either in War abroad, or in a legal Adminiſtration at home; preparing the Multitude by his Diſcourſes for the Entertainment of their New way of Diſcipline. He told them alſo, that what he ſaid was by a Divine Impulſe; and that if ever they would depart from the Religion of their Country, they ſhould fall into great Calamities; their Land ſhould be Over-run with Foreigners, their Cities ſack'd, their Temple laid in Aſhes, and Themſelves ſold for Slaves to a Mercileſs and a Barbarous People; till they came at laſt to a Late and Unprofitable Repentance: Not but that God would be pleaſed in time to come, to Reſtore them to their Cities and their Temple. But yet that after ſuch a Reſtauration, they were ſtill in the Future, to be loſt over and over again.

Joſhua Order'd to March againſt the Canaanites. Deut. 31. Moſes being now ready to Diſcharge himſelf of his Commiſſion, Order'd Joſhua to March with his Army againſt the Canaanites, in a full Aſſurance that God would Proſper him in his Undertaking, and not without Preſages likewiſe of all ſorts of Bleſſings to the People, of whom he took his laſt leave in the Words following.

Moſes's Laſt Speech and Advice to the People. Deut. 33, 34. Since it is the Will of God to call me to my Fathers, and ſo to Order it, that this very Day is to be the Laſt of my Life, it will become me, while I am yet living, and in your Preſence, to give him Thanks for all his Cares and Providences Extended to you, and your Affairs; not only in your Deliverances from all manner of Calamities, but in the Bounty of Innumerable Bleſſings and Benefits; and I muſt likewiſe Acknowledge his Infinite Goodneſs to my ſelf, in Proſpering and Aſſiſting all my reaſonable Endeavours for your Comfort and Advantage: wherein my Part hath been only Subſervient, and Miniſterial, toward your Well-being; while God Himſelf was the Firſt Mover and Perfecter of it: For all which Providences, his Holy Name be praiſed; and to his Gracious Protection, now as a Dying Man, I reckon it a Duty to recommend You. I muſt mind you likewiſe of the Honour and Veneration you Owe to That Almighty Power, which alone, and no Other, you are to Worſhip or Adore. And pray ye have a care to put a True Value alſo upon the Laws he hath given you, as the moſt Sacred and Ineſtimable of all his Bounties. Make it the Caſe but of a Common Lawgiver, to have his Ordinances Trampled upon, and his Authority Deſpiſed, how Unpardonable an Affront would This be, even from One Man to Another? But who ſhall ſtand againſt the Indignation of an Incenſed God then, who is your Divine Lawgiver, when he ſhall be provoked to call you to an Account for the Contempt of his Commandments?

These Laſt Words of his were accompany'd with a Thouſand Benedictions to the Tribes, and not without ſeveral Prophetical Preſages of things afterward to Befall them, and which accordingly came to paſs. The Multitude fell all into a Violent Paſſion of Weeping at This Diſcourſe of Moſes: the Women beating their Breaſts, and their very Children under a Miſerable Impatience of Lamentation. Such was the Tenderneſs that Even Theſe Poor Innocents had for the Dignity and Vertue of ſo great a Man, upon the Apprehenſion of his Approaching End. The Grief, in fine, was Univerſal, and without Diſtinction, of either Age, Sex, or Quality. Some of them were afflicted to think what would become of them for the time to come; Others to conſider how Ill they had Treated him in time paſt, and that they never Underſtood the Value of the Bleſſing they Enjoy'd, till they were now to loſe it. But the Force of This Impreſſion did not appear in any thing ſo much, as in the Effect it had upon the Conſtancy, and Magnanimity, even of the Comforter Himſelf. For after all his Philoſophizing upon the Contempt of Death, and his Conſolatory Counſels of Reſignation, and Submiſſion to the Will of God, and to the Law of Nature, he yielded Himſelf up at laſt to the Weakneſs he Condemn'd, and wept for Company. While he was now moving toward his Laſt Retreat, and the Multitude all in Tears attending him he gave a Sign with his Hand to thoſe at a Diſtance to ſtop where they were, and deſired thoſe nearer hand not to trouble the Peace of his laſt Hour, with Thoſe Fruitleſs and Unſeaſonable Importunities. So they kept back to Gratifie his Intimation, but ſtill looking after him with Weeping Eyes and Sad Hearts, as far as they could ſee him. He took along with him only the Elders, Eleazar the High-Prieſt, and Joſhua his Succeſſor When he came to Abarim, a very High Mountain over againſt Jericho, he took a View of the Fair and Fruitful Country of Canaan, Diſchaged the the Senators, and after a Final leave taken of Eleazar and Joſhua, with Mutual Embraces, Moſes was taken away from them in a Cloud, while they were yet Diſcourſing, and Tranſlated into a certain Valley. The Holy Scripture ſays he Died, leſt People ſhould Imagine him, becauſe of the Excellency of his Perſon, to be yet alive, and with God. He lived a Hundred and Twenty Years: and within One Month of a Third Part of That time in his Command over the Hebrews. He departed This Life in the Laſt Month of the Year, and the Firſt Day of the Month, which the Macedonians call Dyſtrus, and we, Adar.

Moſes taken away in a Cloud.

The Age and Death of Moſes. Deut. 34.

He was a Man of Admirable Wiſdom, and one that made the beſt Uſe of what he Underſtood; an Excellent Speaker, and no Man better Skill'd in moving the Affections of the People than Himſelf: So Great a Maſter of his Paſſions, that he Liv'd as if he had None, and as if he had known them only by their Names; or elſe as he Obſerv'd them in Other Men: never a Greater Captain, nor a Prophet Equal to him; for all his Words were Oracles. The People mourned for him Thirty Days, and the Death of This Holy Man was the moſt Senſible Mortification they ever felt; and This was not only his Character, among Thoſe that knew him in his Life and Death; but he has made himſelf as Famous to Poſterity in his Writings, as he was to the Age he liv'd in, for his Actions. This is All we have to ſay concerning the End of Moſes.

Joſhua 1. Joſhua ſends Spies to Jericho. Joſh. 2.

MOSES being now Tranſlated, as aforeſaid, the Laſt Duties paid to his Memory, and the Mourning Ceremony over, Joſhua Order'd the People to be in readineſs to March, and ſent away his Spies to Jericho, to learn how they ſtood Affected, and to view the Strength and Condition of the Town. So drew out his Army, with a Deſign to paſs the River Jordan by the Firſt Opportunity. Upon This Occaſion he Conven'd the Princes of the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manaſſes; [For One half of Manaſſes was allow'd to Plant and Settle in the Country of the Amorites, which was a Seventh part of the Land of Canaan.] Minding them of their Promiſes to Moſes, and deſiring them, both for His ſake, and their Own, that they would now be as good as their Words; and do it Chearfully too, as a Juſtice to the Memory of their Glorious Patron that had been ſo Particularly Careful for them, even with his Laſt Breath. They came in with their Aſſiſtance very Frankly; inſomuch that Joſhua march'd from Abila with Fifty Thouſand Men, a matter of Sixty Furlongs, toward the Banks of the River Jordan. Immediately upon their Encamping, the Spies brought Joſhua an account of the State of Jericho, and what the Canaanites were a-doing. They came thither as Strangers, they ſaid, and ſo went whither they would, and ſaw whatever they had a mind to, without any Stop or Queſtion. They took a View of the Walls, the Gates, and the Ramparts; all the Weakneſſes and Strengths of the Town, paſſing the whole Day for Men of Curioſity only, without any Deſign. They took up toward Evening, in a little Quarter near the Wall, where they refreſhed themſelves; and after Eating, came the News, as they were Diſcourſing how to get back again, that Intelligence was brought the King as he was at Supper, of ſome Certain Spies that were come out of the Hebrew Camp, and lay hid in the Houſe of (a) Rahab; and that Order was given Immediately for the ſeizing of them, and putting them to the Torture to know their Buſineſs. So ſoon as Rahab underſtood that the Houſe was to be ſearch'd, ſhe cover'd the Spies under a parcel of Flax that lay a drying upon the Wall, and upon the coming of the Meſſengers to look for Theſe People, Rahab told them indeed, of Certain Strangers that came thither the Evening before, about Sun-ſet, and went their way again after Supper; and if They were Dangerous Men, they might eaſily be Overtaken. The Woman Talk'd and Look'd ſo Innocently, that the Officers preſently Poſted away toward the River Jordan, without ever ſearching the Houſe, in hope to Catch them That way in their Return; but having loſt their Labour without making any Diſcovery, they let the Buſineſs fall. So ſoon as the Hurry was over, Rahab called forth her Gueſts; minded them of the Riſque ſhe had run for their ſakes; for if they had been Diſcover'd it would certainly have Coſt Her, and her Family their Lives. Wherefore, ſays ſhe, whenever you come to take This Place, (as I have a Revelation from God that it will be ſo) do you take as much care of Mine, and My People's Lives, as we have done of Yours. The Spies promiſed, with Oaths, that her Kindneſs ſhould be Punctually requited, and therefore Adviſed her in Order to it, that whenever ſhe found the Town in any Danger, ſhe ſhould withdraw with what Friends and Goods ſhe had, into her Own Houſe, and Hang out a Red String before her Door. The General, they ſaid, ſhould be told of the Token, and of the Meaning of it, and would Undoubtedly provide for the Safety of whatever

The Hebrews were now Encamped upon the Banks of the River Jordan, on their way to Jericho; but the Waters being out, the Current, of it ſelf, Rapid and Impetuous; not ſo much as a Boat, or a Bridge to help them over, nor the means of Building any; with an Enemy over and above, ſo near, and the Town at laſt on the wrong ſide of the Water: the General's Heart was ready to ſink under the Apprehenſion of ſo many Invincible Difficulties, till it pleaſed God to aſſure him by a Comfortable Revelation, that Thoſe Obſtacles ſhould be Remov'd, and the River made Fordable for the Tranſporting of his Troops.

After Two Days Expectation of This Miraculous Providence, Joſhua paſs'd the River with his Army. In the Firſt place, went the Prieſts, with the Ark: the Levites after Them, with the Tabernacle, and the Holy Veſſels: After the Levites, follow'd the whole Army, which was ranged according to the Order of their ſeveral Tribes: the Women and Children in the Middle, the better to ſecure them againſt the Violence of the Stream. It was Obſerved upon the Prieſts Firſt Entrance into This Paſſage, that the Fierceneſs of the Current Abated, and the Water fell. They found the Bottom Firm, and by degrees, the Channel came to be as Dry as a Pavement: So that the whole Multitude Forded it over, without any farther Doubt or Trouble, when they ſaw Every thing ſucceeded according to what God had Foretold them. But the Prieſts continu'd ſtill in the Middle, till the People were all paſs'd over, and Landed on the Other ſide. So ſoon as the Army was got aſhore, the Prieſts follow'd them, and left the River to its Natural Courſe again, which immediately fill'd up the Channel, and put Every thing into the ſame State as before.

Their Miraculous Paſſage. The Order of their March.

The Army Marched from thence Fifty Furlongs toward Jericho, and there Encampped within Ten Furlongs more of the Place. Here it was that Joſhua Erected an Altar of the Twelve Stones, which Twelve Princes of the Several Tribes brought along with them out of the Bottom of the River, by the Prophet's Order and Command, for a Token and a Memorial to Future Ages of This Miraculous Separation of the Waters; and upon This Altar did Joſhua Sacrifice, Celebrating the Feaſt of the Paſſover alſo in the ſame Place; and in a State of Plenty and Abundance, equal to the degree of Want and Miſery, that they had hitherto Endur'd; for the Canaanites Harveſt was at This time Ripe upon the Ground; Cattel, and Other Booty every where Expos'd, and the Hebrews had it all at Mercy, only the Manna fail'd them now at laſt, after a Subſiſtence of Forty Years upon it in the Wilderneſs.

The Iſraelites living thus at Diſcretion upon the Canaanites Country, without any ſort of Check or Controul, gave the Hebrew General to Underſtand, That the Enemy was not to be drawn out of their Holds, though but to the Hazard of a Skirmiſh, or a Sally, by any Provocation or Affront whatſoever: So that he bethought himſelf of making ſome Tryal rather what might be done by a Siege. Upon the Firſt Day of the Feſtival, the Prieſts took up the Ark, and ſo Marched forward with it in the Middle of a Guard of Soldiers; Seven Other Prieſts going before them, with Seven Horns or Trumpets, ſounding, to Animate the Army to behave themſelves like Men. And thus they went round about the Walls of the City with the Elders after them; but the Prieſts only Sounding; and when they had gone the Circuit of the City, they went back again to their Camp without any more Ceremony. This was the Firſt Day's Work; and when they had done the ſame thing over again for Six Days ſucceſſively, Joſhua called the Army and the People together, on the Seventh, and told them for News, That the Town ſhould That Day be delivered up to them without any Hazard or Trouble; for the very Walls ſhould fall down of their own accord, and leave the Place Naked; giving them in charge at the ſame time, not to Spare any Creature that had Life in't; and that neither Wearineſs of doing Execution, Tenderneſs of Nature, or any Other Conſideration of Booty or Flight, ſhould prevail upon them to hold their Hands; but that they ſhould put all to the Sword without Reſerving any thing of the Spoil to their Own Advantage. What Gold or Silver ſoever ſhould be found, they were order'd to lay it in One Maſs all together; for it ſhould be Dedicated to God, as the Firſt-Fruits of the Victory Obtain'd over That City; ſaving only that Rahab, with her Family and Relations, ſhould be Preſerv'd, for the ſake of the Spies Oath and Promiſe.

The Canaanites keep to their Holds. Joſh. 6.

The Prieſts carry the Ark round Jericho for 6 Days ſucceſſively.

With Theſe Words, he Marched with his Army toward the City, and went the Round of it with the Prieſts, the Senate, and the Soldiers, in the ſame Order as before. Upon the Seventh time going about it, they made a little ſtop, and the Wall fell down all on a Sudden, without any Engine or Force bent againſt it. This Terrible Surprize put the people into ſuch an Amazement, that they had not the Hearts left them to ſtrike a ſtroke: ſo that the Hebrews Entered the Breach, and Cut off all before them without the leaſt Hazzard or Reſiſtance. Some in the Streets, Others in their Houſes; ſome in One place, and ſome in Another, till it came, in fine, to an Univerſal ſlaughter, without Sparing either Women or Children; ſo that the City was only a Pile of Dead Bodies in the Concluſion, and No way of Scaping the Common Fate. This Deſolation Ended in the Burning of the City, and the Country about it; only Rahab, and her Friends and Family were Reſcued by the Spies, who being brought to the General, received his Acknowledgments for the Good Office ſhe had done his Agents; Promiſing withal, that ſhe ſhould not fail of a Suitable Reward, which he Suddenly made Good to her by the Honour of Conſiderable Favours and Benefits. What the Fire had Spared, was Deſtroyed by the Sword; with a prophetical Curſe upon any man that ſhould ever preſume afterward to Rebuild it, Wiſhing that whoever ſhould take upon him to lay the Firſt Stone of a New Foundation, might loſs his Eldeſt Son, and He that ſhould Finiſh the Work, his Youngeſt; and God would not ſuffer This Malediction to paſs in vain neither, as we ſhall ſhew hereafter. There was Taken in This Town to an Ineſtimable Value in Gold and Silver, and likewiſe of Braſs; without any Diminution of it for the Profit of any Particular Perſon: but Joſhua delivered it up to the Prieſts, to be Depoſited in their Treaſury; and This was the Fate of Jericho.

But it ſo fell out that One (a) Achar, the Son of Zebedee, and of the Tribe of Judah, had gotten a Rich Cloak of the Kings, of Cloath of Gold, and a Huge Maſs of the ſame Metal, Weighing Two Hundred Shekels. This Man thought it ſomewhat Unreaſonable to give that to God that he had no Need of; That which he had Ventured his Life for, and had ſo much Occaſion to make uſe of: ſo that He Digged a Hole in the Ground under his Tent, and there Hid it; imagining that ſo long as his Fellow-Soldiers knew Nothing of it, the Concealment might paſs upon God Himſelf. The Army at that time was Encamped at a Place called (b) Gilgal, which ſignifies Liberty: for being now paſſed the River, they reckoned themſelves as good as Secured from the Slavery of Egypt, and the Miſeries of the Deſert.

Some Few days after the Razing of Jericho, Joſhua ſent out a Detachment of 3000. Men to Ain, a City a little above: where they Engaged the Enemy, and were beaten back with the Loſs of Six and Thirty Men. The Tidings of This Repulſe put the Iſraelites to a Terrible Anxiety of thought, not ſo much for the Number of the Slain (though their Near Relations and Men of Honour and Experience) but for the Ill Boding of the Diſappointment; for they looked upon the Difficulties of the War (even according to Gods Promiſe) to be as good as over, when they were poſſeſſed of the Land; but their Enemies had now taken Heart again, they ſaid, and Immediately, upon This Reflection, they put on Sackcloath, and ſpent That Whole Day in Faſting, Weeping, and Mourning; ſo Grievous was the ſenſe they had of the Diſgrace that was befallen them. The Spirits of the Army were ſo Sunk upon This Diſaſter, and Caſt down into ſuch a Deſperation of Better Things for the Future, that Joſhua, upon This Occaſion, addreſſed himſelf with a more than Ordinary Aſſurance to Almighty God, ſaying,

Joſhua

Joſhua delivered This Ejaculatory Prayer Groveling, with his Face upon the Ground, till upon finiſhing, God bid him Riſe, and Purge the Army from a Pollution that had Defiled it; for there was a Sacrilegious Fraud that lay Unaccounted for among them; and That Corruption was the True Cauſe of the Miſchief that had lately befallen them; but, ſays the Oracle, let there be Lots caſt, to find out the Criminal, and then let him be Puniſhed, and the Iſraelites ſhall certainly carry their Cauſe, and be Victorious. Joſhua made a Report of all This to the People, and calling to him Eleazar the High-Prieſt, and the Princes of the Tribes he put the Tribes to the Firſt Teſt of the Lot; and the Lot falling upon the Tribe of Judah, they caſt Lots next, upon the ſeveral Families of That Tribe, and the Lot fell upon the Family of Zacharias; bringing the Queſtion in fine, to the Individual Perſon that Committed This Sacrilege; and it fell then, upon a Perſonal Examination of Man by Man, upon Achar; who thereupon was forthwith taken into Cuſtody, and finding that there was No Trifling with Divine Juſtice, his Conſcience alſo riſing up in Judgment againſt him, he Confeſt the Sacrilegious Theft, and delivered it up in the ſight of the People whereupon he was immediately put to an Ignominious Death, and his Body committed to the Earth in a Scandalous Manner, like a Common Malefactor, which was a Puniſhment but Suitable to his deſert.

God bids him purge the Army of Sacrilege, and Caſt Lots to find out the Offender.

The Lot falls upon Achar.

When the Army was Purged, Joſhua drew them out toward the City of (a) Ain; planted his Ambuſhes, and Early next Morning preſented himſelf in ſight of the Enemy with his Main Body. The Ainites were ſo Elevated with their Former Succeſs, that ſo ſoon as they had the Iſraelites in their Eye, they Immediately Advanced in a Furious manner againſt them to give them Battle; the One giving way by little and little, as for fear, and the Other Preſſing upon them as in a Full Aſſurance of a Certain Victory. By This Stratagem of a Pretended flight, the Ainites were drawn into the Toyle; for Immediately upon a ſignal given Joſhua put a ſtop to the Army, and the Ambuſh, almoſt in the ſame Inſtant; and Entered the Town, with little or No Oppoſition; for the Inhabitants were moſt of them gotten together upon the Walls, out of a Curioſity to ſee the Action, and inferring from the Countenance of Things, that the Day was as good as their Own already. It came however to a Terrible Slaughter; and in the mean time, the Army being Totally routed before the Town, had no Other Retreat left them, but to fly back again to the City for Sanctuary: which was the Courſe they ſteered; upon a Preſumption that the Place was ſtill in the ſame State they left it. But when they came to find it Taken, their Houſes Rifled and Burnt, and their Wives and Children, either Deſtroyed or Priſoners; the Miſerable Remainder of them that Scaped the Sword, were forced to Betake themſelves to the Wild Fields, and Woods, for Refuge. It was an Incredible Booty that was taken upon This Encounter: a World of Women, Children, and Bondſlaves; Plate, and Coſtly Furniture, to a Prodigious Value; a great many Flocks, and Herds of Cattle, and Mighty Summs of Current Money. The Country, in ſhort, was Exceſſively Rich; and the Whole Spoil of it was divided among the Soldiers, which were then Encamped in Galgala.

An Ineſtimable Booty.

When the (b) Gibeonites (being near Neighbours to Jeruſalem) came to Underſtand the Miſerable Condition of Jericho, and Ain, they began to conſider that their own Turn might be next, but however, being Prepoſſeſſed with an Expectation that the Whole Nation of the Canaanites were to be Rooted out, they thought it not worth their while to make any Barefaced Application to the Hebrews for Favour. They called however upon their Neighbours the Chephirites, and thoſe of (c) Kiriath-jearim, to Joyn with them in the Propoſal of a Fair Allyance with the Hebrews. If they could Obtain it; Well and Good, they ſaid; or if not, it was a Caſe Common to them Both, and they ſhould do well to Unite in a Common Defence. The Advice was found Reaſonable, and ſo they Diſpatched away an Embaſſy to Joſhua, of the Fitteſt Men they could pick out to Menage ſuch a Commiſſion. They had it in their Inſtructions, not upon any Terms to Own themſelves for Canaanites, but rather to let fall Words by the By, that they lived a Great way off, and had no manner of Dealing with Thoſe People. They had heard much, 'tis true, of the Reputation of the Hebrews, and they were now come to Attend their General upon This Occaſion. It might be ſeen by their Cloaths, that they had come a Great way; for they were New when they ſet out, and they were now worn all to pieces in their Journey. And the ſtuff of them was Courſe and Thred-bare too, for the Better Credit of the Impoſture. In This Habit they preſented themſelves before the Aſſembly, with their Teſtimonials, that they came as Commiſſioners from the Gibeonites, and their neighbouring Cities to Enter into a Treaty of Friendſhip with them, Saving only the Rights and Privileges of their Country; for they found, that by Gods Grace and Bounty, they were put into the Land of Canaan, wherein they Gratulated their Good Fortunes, deſiring only to be Admitted as their Friends and Confederates; making an Oſtentation of their Raggs all this while, as the Evidence of their Sincerity. Joſhua gave ſo much Credit to the pretences, both of their Words, and Cloaths, that taking for granted they were not Canaanites, he ſtruck up an Amity with them: the High-Prieſt, and the Elders, at the ſame time giving them the Oaths of Friends and Allies, and that they ſhould never do any thing contrary to the Tenor of That Obligation. The Agreement was Solemnly Executed, in the Preſence, and with the Approbation of the Whole Multitude. By This Artifice they Gained their Point, and ſo returned to their own Home. It happened ſoon after This, that Upon Joſhua's drawing his Army to that Quarter of the Canaanites, that looks toward the Plains; he was given to Underſtand that Theſe Gibeonites did not live far from Jeruſalem, and that they were of the ſame ſtock with the Canaanites: ſo he ſent for ſome of the Chief Men of the Country to come to him, and told them plainly that they had not dealt with him like Men of Truth and Honour. They Excuſed themſelves upon the Neceſſity of the Caſe; for they had No way elſe to be Safe, they ſaid. Upon This Difficulty, the High-Prieſt, and the Elders were conſulted, as to the Obligation of the Treaty, and were all Poſitive in their Opinion, that an Oath ſo Circumſtanced, and ſo Ratified, was Abſolutely ſacred, and Inviolable: but that the point might yet in ſome ſort be Modified, by ſetting them apart for the doing of ſervile Offices in the Publique Drudgery: which was the Condition they ſtood afterwards Condemned to; and upon Thoſe Terms they were well enough content to Compound for their Lives.

The Gibeonites made Drudges.

When the King of Jeruſalem came to be Informed that the Gibeonites were Revolted, and gone over into Allyance with the Hebrews, he took it ſo Heinouſly, that he preſently ſent to Four Neighbouring Kings to Joyn with him in a War againſt them. They debated the Matter, and came Immediately to a Reſolution, drew their Troups together, and Encamped near a certain Fountain not far from the City, which they were then preparing to Beſiege; the Gibeonites applying themſelves to Joſhua for Aſſiſtance. Matters were now come to This Paſs, that they were to be Ruined by their Own People, and forced to fly for Protection to Thoſe that were in Arms, expreſly to Deſtroy them. But ſo it was however, that they had no Hope of Safety under the Sun but in their New Friendſhip. Upon the Firſt Intelligence of This Enterprize, Joſhua Marched with his Whole Army, night and day to ſuccour the Gibeonites, and fell upon the Enemy Early in the Morning, as they were juſt about to Attaque the Town, Routed, and had the Chace of them along the Hills, till they came to the Valley of Bethora. The Hand of God was never more Viſible in any Humane Action than it was in This Battle; for, over and above the Dreadful Thunder and Lightning of That Day, with a Violent Tempeſt of Hailſtones of a Podigious ſize, there was yet One Prodigy Stranger than all the reſt, and ſuch a one as was never heard of before: The Sun it ſelf ſtood ſtill in the Firmament, that the Hebrews might not want Day-light for the Perfecting of their Victory. Upon This Rout, the Five Kings were Purſued to the Cave of Makkeda, where they were found by Joſhua Taken, and All put to Death. The Miracle of the Lengthening of This day beyond its Natural Meaſure, and of the Suns Stopping in its Courſe, is moſt Expreſly atteſted in the Holy Scriptures, according to the Copies, reſerved in the Temple.

The Fame of the Hebrews for their Martial Exploits, and the Numbers of the Slain, made ſo Great a Noiſe Every-where, that the very Reputation of their Arms carryed a Terror along with it. But This did not yet hinder the Canaanite Kings of Mount Libanus and thereabouts, nor Thoſe of the Plains, together with the Philiſtines, from Joyning in a Confederacy againſt them; for they drew their Forces together and Encamped at (b) Berothe, a City of Galilee, not far from the Upper-Cœdeſa, which is alſo in the Country of Galilee. Their Whole ſtrength was Computed to amount to 300000 Foot, 10000 Horſe, and 2000 Chariots. The Thought of This Formdiable Power caſt ſuch a Damp upon the Spirits, not only of the Iſraelites in general, but upon Joſhua Himſelf, that the Dread they had for ſo Unequal an Encounter, fell little ſhort of a Downright Deſpair: but upon Gods Reproving them for their Faint-Heartedneſs and Diſtruſt; and Encouraging them with Freſh Aſſurances of Victory and Protection; commanding them likewiſe to Hamſtring the Enemies Horſes and Burn their Chariots, the General took Heart upon it, and forthwith Marched with a Full Aſſurance of Succeſs toward the Enemy. Upon the Fifth Day he came up to them, and Fought them. The Encounter was Obſtinate, and ſo Bloody, that the Truth of the Action would be almoſt Incredible; but however the Confederates were abſolutely Broken; Vaſt Numbers kill'd in the Purſuit; all the Kings ſlain, and the whole Army, in Effect, Entirely Cut off: Nay, ſuch was the Rage of the Victors againſt the Conquer'd Party, that when they had no more Men to Kill, they Wreak'd their Fury upon the Horſes and Chariots. The Fortune, in fine, of This Day, made Joſhua Abſolute Maſter of the Country. He took their Towns; kill'd all he could come at; did what he thought fit, and no Creature left to Oppoſe him. Their Country, in ſhort, was wholly Depopulated and the very Nation it ſelf Extirpated, ſaving only ſome Few Straglers that had the Good Hap to get out of the way into Strong Holds, or to Hide themſelves. And all Theſe Diſtreſſes were but the Miſerable Devaſtations of One Five Years War.

A Bloody Battle.

The Canaanites Overthrown, and their Kings ſlain.

Joſhua lays the whole Country Waſt.

Upon This Fatal Overthrow, Joſhua moved his Camp from Gilgal up the Mountains toward Siloe, where he Planted the Holy Tabernacle; with an Intent to wait a while there, for the Firſt Opportunity of Erecting a Temple: the Situation of the Place being both Commodious and Delicious, and in All reſpects agreeable to the Deſign. From thence he took all the People along with him to Sichem, where he Erected on Altar, as Moſes in time paſt had Foretold and Appointed. This being done, he divided his Army: One Half he Order'd to Mount Garizim, and the Other to Mount (a) Gibal, where there was likewiſe Another Altar built; the Prieſts and Levites being alſo divided. Here they Offered their Sacrifices, and when they had Denounced the Maledictions (formerly mentioned) and Engraven them upon the Altar, they returned to Siloe.

Joſhua was now far gone in Years, and conſidering that the Canaanites had yet ſeveral Places of Strength left them, which, betwixt Art and Nature, were in a manner Impregnable. (For the Canaanites had an Inkling by a Tradition from their Fathers, that a People out of Ægypt had a Deſign to Over-run them, and therefore let No time ſlip to Secure and Fortifie Themſelves.) Joſhua, I ſay, being aware of all this, call'd a General Aſſembly of the People to meet at Siloe, where the Appearance was very Great, and all the People wonderfully Unanimous and Chearful. Joſhua, upon This Occaſion, ſumm'd up what he had to ſay in few Words, and laid the Matter in hand before them. He gave them a ſhort Hiſtory of the Great Things they had done, and ſucceeded in, already, by the Aſſiſtance of God's Favour and Protection, as a People that Religiouſly Obſerv'd his Laws. He minded them how God had given them Victory over One and Thirty Kings, that had the Confidence to take up Arms againſt them; Rooting out the very Generations of their moſt Mighty Oppreſſors. But in regard, that the Conqueſt was as yet but Imperfect; ſome of their Cities being already Taken, and a great many Others remaining in their Hands that were better Mann'd and Fortify'd; and that it would be a Work of Time to Reduce them, he thought it Adviſeable, in the Firſt Place to Diſmiſs Thoſe of their Friends that came from beyond Jordan, to Join in the Riſque of the Common Cauſe; and with all Due Reſpects and Acknowledgments, to ſend them back to their Own Lot again. And Secondly, that Commiſſioners ſhould be choſen reſpectively out of Every Tribe; Men of Approved Skill and Integrity; and their Buſineſs ſhould be, to take an Exact Survey of the Country, and to make a Full Report of it without Fraud or Delay.

With Inſtructions to make an Eſtimate not upon Quantity, but Equivalence.

The People, Every Man of them, were Highly pleas'd with the Motion, and ſo Joſhua preſently Order'd his Agents to enter upon the Work, appointing them for their Aſſiſtants, Men that were well Skill'd in Surveying, and ſo could not well be Impos'd upon, or Miſled in the Account.

They had it in their Inſtructions alſo, notwithſtanding the Survey upon Meaſure, to make a Final Eſtimate upon the Quality or Goodneſs of the Land, as one Piece might fall out to be Better or Worſe than Another; for there are in Canaan a Great many Fair Large Fields, that being put in Balance with ſome Others, might be allow'd a Preference of Profitable and Fruitful; but upon Confronting them with Jericho or Jeruſalem, they would be found Comparatively to be little or nothing worth. The Country indeed is not large, and a good part of it Mountainous; but for the Plenty, Growth, and Beauty of the Productions, no Place whatſoever goes beyond it. For This Reaſon it was Concluded, not to Value the Lotts barely by the Meaſure, but by the Virtue of them: for One Acre ſometimes might fall out to be worth a Thouſand. There were Ten Men Employ'd upon This Commiſſion to Anſwer the ſame Number of Tribes concern'd in the Queſtion. Theſe Ten Commiſſioners took both a View, and an Eſtimate of the Country, and within Seven Months after, they they came back again with the whole State of the Computation to Siloe, which was at That time the Seat of the Tabernacle.

Joſhua then calling to his Aſſiſtance Eleazar the High-Prieſt, with the Elders, and Princes of the Tribes, made a Partition of the Whole, into ſo many Shares, to be divided among Nine Tribes, and One Half Tribe of Manaſſes; Every one to have in Proportion, according to the Rate and Equity of the Diſtribution.

A Partition of the Whole by Lot into Nine Parts, to Answer the Nine Tribes and Half.

Upon putting it to the Lot, the Tribe of Judah had for Their Lot all the Upper Judæa, reaching in Length to Jeruſalem, and in Breadth to the Lake of Sodom: comprehending alſo the Cities of Aſcalon and Gaza.

The Lot of Judah.

The Tribe of Simeon, had That Part of Idumea which Borders upon Ægypt and Arabia.

Simeon.

The Tribe of Benjamin, had That Part of the Country that Stretches out in Length from the River Jordan to the Sea; and in Breadth, from Jeruſalem to Bethel. This is a ſmall Territory, but the Quality makes amends for the Quantity; for Jericho and Jeruſalem are Comprized in it.

Benjamin.

The Tribe of Ephraim had for their Lot the Country in Length from Jordan to Gadara, and in Breadth from Bethel to the Large Plain.

Ephraim.

The Half Tribe of Manaſſes had their Lot, Length-ways, from Jordan to the City Dora; and Breadth-ways, to Bethſana, which is now known by the Name of Scythopolis.

The Half Tribe of Manaſſes.

The Tribe of Iſſachar had for their Lot, all betwixt Jordan and Mount Carmel, which reaches out in Breadth, to Mount (a) Itabyr.

Iſſachar.

The Tribe of Zabulon had for its Lot, the whole Country that Borders upon Mount Carmel, and the Sea, and ſo as far as Genezareth.

Zabulon.

The Tribe of Aſſer had for their Lot, the Country behind Mount Carmel over-againſt Sidon, reckoning the City of (b) Arce alſo; otherwiſe Actipus.

Aſſer.

The Tribe of Nephthali had for their Lot, the Upper Galilee; and the Country Eaſtward to the City of Damaſcus, Mount Libanus, and the Head of the River Jordan, which has its Riſe from that ſide of it that Borders upon the City Arce toward the North.

Nephthali.

The Tribe of Dan had the Valleys toward the Weſt, which are Bounded by Azotus and Dora; and to them likewiſe belong the Cities of Jamnia and Gittha, and the whole Country from Acaron to the Mountain, where the Portion of the Tribe of Judah begins.

This was the Diviſion that Joſhua made of Six Provinces of the Canaanites, that took their Names from ſo many of the Sons of Canaan: and of This Country did he deliver the Poſſeſſion to the aforeſaid Nine Tribes and a Half: But as to Amorrhæa, ſo call'd from one of the Sons of Canaan, Moſes had Diſpoſed of it long ſince to the Two Other Tribes and Half, as we have ſhew'd above: But then the Regions of the Sidonians, the Arucæans, Amathæans, and Arithæans, are not to be reckon'd into This Diviſion, not being at that time Inhabited.

The Amorites Country already Diſpos'd of.

While Joſhua was now Struggling with the Infirmities of Old Age, and the Cares of the Government, he found Evidently that as he was no longer able to diſcharge the Offices of his Function in his Own Perſon; ſo there was no Depending, either upon thoſe that Acted for him, or thoſe that were to ſucceed him in the Publick Adminiſtration; for they had no regard at all, he ſaw, to the Common Good. Wherefore he gave it in Charge to Every Tribe reſpectively, not to ſuffer any thing of the Race of the Canaanites in the Land where They had to do; minding them how ſolemnly Moſes had Declar'd himſelf in This Matter, to whoſe Advice and Opinion he doubted not of their giving both Heed and Credit: Beſide, that their Own Security, and That of their Laws, Rights, and Religion, depended All upon it, and that he had Experience, as well as Authority for what he ſaid. He Enjoyn'd them further, to deliver up to the Levites the Thirty Eight Cities that were deſign'd them, being in Poſſeſſion of Ten already in (c) Amorrhæa, on the Other ſide of the River. Three of Theſe were to be Cities of Privilege or Refuge. In the Tribe of Judah, the City of Hebron; in That of Ephraim, Sichem; and in the Third of Nephthali, (d) Cedeſe, in the Upper Galilee: To all which they readily agreed, out of a Veneration they had for the Obſervance of the Laws and Cuſtoms of Moſes. He proceeded after This, to a Diſtribution of the Booty, which, in Herds and Flocks, Money, Plate, Furniture, and Other Pillage, amounted to a Value not to be Imagin'd, for it was a Large and Plentiful Country, and the Iſraelites, one and all, from the Higheſt to the Loweſt made their Fortunes out of the Spoil.

came, the reſt Conducting them ſome part of their way, till after much Weeping and Joſh 22. An Altar Erected in Memory of the Leaguebetwixt the Borderers on Both ſides the River.

The Tribes of Reuben and Gad were no ſooner paſs'd the River, with Thoſe of Manaſſes that follow'd them, but they Erected an Altar upon the further Bank, to remain as a Monumental Record to Poſterity of the Allyance that was then Contracted betwixt the Borderers on Both ſides of the Jordan. The News of This Altar was immediately carry'd over to their Friends on the Other ſide of the Water, without One word of the Intent and Meaning of it; which put their Aſſociates into ſo Outrageous a Jealouſie of their Confederates, as Apoſtates and Innovators, that they preſently betook themſelves to their Arms, for the Vindication of the Worſhip and Religion of their Forefathers; and to Avenge the Cauſe of God upon the Heads, and Authors of This Defection. In This Heat they took up a Reſolution, with Sword in Hand to paſs the River, and to do Juſtice upon the Principals of This Deſertion, without any Reſpect to the Dignity of Perſons, or the Nearneſs of Relations; for it was God's Cauſe, they ſaid, and in the Caſe of his Service, they were abſolv'd from all Other Obligations. In the Flame of this Tranſport, the General, the High-Prieſt, and the Elders, betwixt Authority and Advice, ſo far prevail'd upon the Headſtrong Multitude, as to Suſpend the Execution of ſo Extravagant a Revenge, till they might be certainly Inform'd, whether their Brethren were Guilty of This Abomination or not: and if they found them Guilty, they ſhould be then left at liberty to fall upon them without Mercy. They agreed to the Motion, and ſo made Choice of Phineas, the Son of Eleazar, and Ten Other Perſons of Eminent Note among the People, to go over to their Country-men, and learn what was the True End of Building That Altar. They departed upon This Errand, and ſo ſoon as ever they got croſs the Water, there was ſummon'd an Aſſembly, wherein Phineas Diſcharg'd himſelf of his Commiſſion in Words to This Effect.

If you have done it out of any Pious End, we have no Quarrel to you; but " if you are gone over to a Falſe Worſhip, it is for our God and our Religion, that we " muſt draw our Swords againſt you. We ſpeak our Fears; for we cannot think it " Credible yet, that a People ſo well Inſtructed in the Will, and in the Laws of God; " our Friends and Allies, that we have but juſt now Parted with; a People newly " Eſtabliſhed in the Lot of a Plentiful Poſſeſſion, by God's ſpecial Grace and Pro- " vidence: We cannot, I ſay, believe You to be ſo Inſenſible and Ungrateful, as to " Abandon the Holy Tabernacle, the Ark, the Altar, and the Worſhip of your Fore- " fathers, to Joyn with the Canaanites in the Adoration of their Falſe Gods: Or if " Unhappily You ſhould have been ſo Miſled, do but Repent and Diſclaim Your Er- " ror, and Return to that Reverence you owe to the Laws of God, and of your " Country, and you ſhall be yet received. But if you ſhall Obſtinately Perſiſt, there " is no Labour or Danger that we ſhall think too Great for the Defence of our Laws " and Worſhip. If that be the Caſe, we muſt immediately break in upon you by " force of Arms, and put No Difference at all, betwixt Apoſtate Iſraelites, and Pro- " feſs'd Canaanites: but Deſtroy the One Indifferently with the Other. Do not Per- " ſuade Your ſelves, that becauſe you are out of our Bounds, and a River betwixt us, " you are therefore out of the reach of God's Power, and Providence; for you are " upon His Ground wherever you are, and under his Juriſdiction. If you are not " able to Withſtand the Temptations of the Place you Live in, take Your fortune in " a New Diviſion of Lands, and Quit the Country, let it be never ſo Fruitfull. Be " Wiſe, and Temperate, in Time, and do not ſuffer your ſelves to be carry'd away " with a Hankering after New Things. This we beg of you, for the ſake of your " Wives, and Children, and whatever elſe may be Dear to you: Do not force us " upon the Neceſſity of ſuch a War, as we Tremble at the very Thought of: but it " is at your Choice ſtill, Whether you will rather Submit to be Overcome by Reaſo- ", nable Words, or to put the Main Cauſe to the Dint of a Battle.

When Phineas had made an End of Speaking, the Rulers of the Aſſembly, in the Name of Themſelves, and of the Whole Multitude, Inſiſted much upon their Common Juſtification, and returned Anſwer as follows.

The Reubenites Reply.

" We are not Conſcious of having ever departed from Your Alliance; neither are " we, in any Sort, Guilty of That Affectation of Novelty in the Erecting of This " Altar, which is now Charged upon us. We know but One God; and That God is " the God of All the Hebrews: and but One Altar, which is the Brazen Altar before " the Tabernacle. As for This Altar here, which, we are Suſpected for, it was ne- " ver intended for any Religious Uſe, but only for a Civil Memorial to Future Times " of our Fellowſhip and Allyance; and rather to Keep us Steady to our Ancient Re- " ligion, then to be any ways Introductive to the Violation of it. We can Safely ap- " peal to God that we had No ſuch thought in the Setting up of This Altar as is Im- " puted to us: Wherefore pray have a Better Opinion of your Brethren for the Fu- " ture, than to think us Guilty of ſo Mortal an Apoſtacy from the Rites and Cuſtoms " of our Progenitors; a Sin not to be Expiated, in any of the Sons of Abraham, but " with the Loſs of his Life.

All Miſunderſtandings remov'd.

Phineas was Overjoy'd at ſo Firm and Satisfactory a Declaration, and returning immediately to Joſhua, gave him a Particular Account of Every thing, in the Hearing of the People; who were All infinitely pleaſed with the Reſult of This Embaſſy; when they ſaw things brought to ſo Amicable a Concluſion, without any danger of a Civil War, or of Bloudſhed: Hereupon they Sacrified, and gave God Thanks; after which, Joſhua Diſmiſs'd the Multitude to their Several Homes, while He Himſelf took up his abode in Sichem.

At This Meeting, he made them a Pious, and a Pertinent Diſcourſe, upon the Subject of God's Infinite Mercies and Providences toward them: " Setting forth, how he had preſerv'd them in all their " Calamities; Relieved them in all their Wants and Diſtreſſes; and Now Advanced " them at laſt, out of the moſt Deſpicable Condition of Ignominy, Penury, and Op- " preſſion, to the Higheſt Degree of Reputation, and Plenty. THE Canaanites were at This time very Strong; and Waiting with a Great Army (b) near the City of Bezec, under the Command of Adonibezec, (that is to ſay, in Hebrew, Lord of Bezec) to give the Iſraelites Battle. The Thing they moſt depended upon for Encouragement, and hope of Succeſs, was the Iſraelites Diſappointment in the Loſs of their General; but the Two Foreſaid Tribes, Encount'ring them, after a Glorious Combat, Kill'd 10000 upon the Spot, and had the Chace of the reſt. Their Leader Adonibezec, they took Priſoner, and Cut-off his Fingers and Toes; wherein he acknowledged the Juſt Judgment of God upon him, having formerly Served Seventy Two Kings Himſelf after the ſame Manner. They carry'd him-off Alive, with Theſe Maims upon him, toward Jeruſalem, where he Dy'd and there they Bury'd him: The Iſraelites Roving up and down, after This, and Ravaging the Country; Taking alſo, and Deſtroying Town after Town, till in the End they laid Siege to Jeruſalem it ſelf. They made themſelves Maſters of the Lower Town, putting all they found in it to the Sword; but for the City it ſelf, that ſtood above, what with Artificial Fortifications; the Strength of the Walls, and the Natural Site of the Place, it was ſo Strong, that they were forc'd to Quit it, and remove to Hebron, which they Enter'd by Aſſault, and Cut-off All before them, without giving any Quarter. There were found among the Slain, Divers Bodies of the race of the Gyants, which for Bulk, Stature, and Countenance, were ſo much differing from the Ordinary Appearance of Other Men, that the very People that ſaw them, could hardly Believe them to be of Humane Extraction; for they had quite Another Sort of Voice, and Aſpect; and there are of their Bones Expoſed for a kind of Prodigy, even to This day. This Town, being a place of Conſideration, was given to the Levites, with 2000 Cubits of ground about it; the remaining part of the Territory belonging to it being given to Caleb by the Fore-appointment of Moſes. Now This Caleb was one of the Spies that had been formerly ſent by Moſes for Diſcovery into the Land of Canaan. There was a Dividend given alſo to the Sons of Jethro, the Madianite, Moſes's Father-in-Law, who abandon'd their Native Country to Joyn in the Expedition, and to bear their Part with the Adventurers in all the Difficulties and Hazards of the War, and of the Deſert.

The Tribes of Judah, and Simeon betake themſelves to the Arts and Bus'neſs of Peace.

The Two Enterprizing Tribes of Judah and Simeon, being now grown prodigiouſly Rich by the Spoil of the War, withdrew by degrees to a Private Retreat; laid down their Arms, and betook themſelves to the Arts and Bus'neſs of Good Husbandry, and Peace. The Benjamites, to whoſe Lot Jeruſalem fell, came to an agreement with the Inhabitants, upon a Compoſition, and ſo under the Protection of Tributaries, Both ſides thought themſelves Secure; the One from Violence, and the Other from Seditiſon; and in This Proſpect of Tranquility, they apply'd themſelves to the Cultivating of the Land under their Care. The ſame thing was alſo done by Other Tribes after the Example of the Benjamites, contenting themſelves upon the ſame conditions of Taxes and Tributes, to let the Canaanites Enjoy themſelves in Peace.

Other Tribes do the like.

The Tribe of Ephraim had been now a long while before Bethel, without making any Great Advance toward the Taking of it, conſidering how much Time and Trouble the Siege had Coſt them; for they made a very Obſtinate Defence on the One ſide, and the Work was as Reſolutely carry'd-on by the Other: But it ſo fell out at laſt, that a Townſman of the Place fell into the hands of the Ephraimites, as he was Conveying Proviſion into the City. They Treated with him, and came in the End to an agreement upon Oath on Both ſides; the Citizen to let them Secretly into the Town, and the Ephraimites to Save Him, and his Friends, and Relations upon their Entering the City, which was Performed on Both parts; the Ephraimites being Introduced, and the Citizen and his Friends Preſerv'd, but all the reſt put to the Sword; the Ephraimites now remaining Maſters of the City.

The Iſraelites Relent toward the Canaanites.

The Hearts of the Iſraelites began now to ſoften toward the People of Canaan, and inſtead of Extirpating them by the Proſecution of a War, they bethought themſelves rather how to make Advantage of their Labour, in Planting and Tillage, by the Good Husbandry of an Induſtrious Peace: But their Hearts being ſet upon Wealth, and Pleaſure, they preſently gave-up themſelves to their Luſts and Appetites, without any regard at all to God's Will, and Worſhip, or to the Laws and Diſcipline of their Anceſtors. God, in his Wrath, for Theſe Indignities gave them to Underſtand that they had None of his Commiſſion for the Sparing of the Canaanites, and that it would not be long before they ſhould pay Dear for That Unſeaſonable Mercy, by Cruelties they ſhould ſuffer from the Canaanites Themſelves. They were Startled at This Revelation, but not enough yet to Advance a War upon it; Religion being the Leaſt thing in their Thought; and as to the Matter of any Military Exploit, their Luxury had quite Unmann'd them; beſide the Temptation of the Great Advantage they made of the Canaanites Tribute and Labour.

The Iſraelites Diſpenſe with God's Order.

A Total Diſſolution of Government, and Good Manners,

The Form of the Government was Depraved; the Authority of the Elders Slighted; the Choice of the Senators, and Other Magiſtrates, Nothing ſo Regular as formerly; But Every Man for his Own Private Ends, and No Care at all Taken for the Publique. In the courſe of This Diſſolution of Government and Good Manners, there happen'd an Occaſion of a Terrible Sedition, which ſoon after brake forth into a Civil War, and the Caſe was This.

The Hiſtory of the Levite and his Wife. Judges 19.

There was within the Lot of Ephraim, a Certain Levite, of an Ordinary Extraction that marry'd a Wife of the City of Bethlem, belonging to the Tribe of Judah. She was Wonderfully Beautifull; and the Man had a Paſſionate Tenderneſs for her; but to his Great affliction, ſhe made him Little or No Return of his Kindneſs. This Diſagreement begat Daily Diſputes and Wrangles, inſomuch that the Woman, under an Impatience of Theſe Expoſtulations, went away from her Husband in the Fourth Month after they were Marry'd, to her Own Parents. The Husband, out of his Infinite Affection, Poſted after her, to her Father's Houſe, where he was received with All Hoſpitality and Affection, and Matters made-up again betwixt Him and his Wife. When he had been there preciſely Four days, he propoſed upon the Fifth to be going Home again: But Friends were loth to part, and ſo they made it late before they Set out; They went their way however, He, and his Wife together, with only One Servant, and an Aſs for the Woman to Ride upon. When they had Travelled a matter of Thirty Furlongs, and being Then not far from Jeruſalem, the Servant Adviſed them to take-up at a Lodging ſomewhere near Hand, before it was too Late, to Avoid the Danger of Travelling in the Night; Eſpecially in an Enemy's Country; beſide that Late Hours are Suſpicious, even among Friends; but the Husband had No mind to put himſelf among Strangers; and the City was at That time in poſſeſſion of the Canaanites: So that he choſe rather to Venture Twenty Furlongs further, where he might Lodge among his Friends and Allies. Travelling forward to Gabaa, a City belonging to the Tribe of Benjamin; it was ſo late, that he was at a Loſs for a Lodging. It happen'd however that an Ancient Man of the Tribe of Ephraim, coming juſt at That time out of the Country to a Houſe he had at (a) Gabaa, ſaw This Man, and Ask'd him what he was, and what made him abroad at ſo Unſeaſonable an Hour. He told him that he was a Levite, and carrying his Wife home with him from her Father's, to his Own Houſe, in the Lot of Ephraim. The Old Man, for Tribe, and Relation-ſake, and likewiſe for the ſake of Hoſpitality it ſelf, took the Levite along with him. Some Young men of the Town taking Notice, it ſeems, of the Levite's Wife in the Street, for a very Beautifull Woman, Trac'd her to the Houſe of This Ancient Man; Rapt at the Door, and Demanded the Woman. The People of the Houſe were not able to make any Conſiderable Oppoſition; but the Old Man Spar'd for no Importunities to perſuade them to Moderation, and quietly to go their Ways, without Offering any Violence, or Indignity to his Gueſt. All the Anſwer they could get, was This; Let him deliver up the Woman, and he ſhall have No further Trouble. The Other pleaded the Relation of a Kinſwoman, the Wife of a Levite, and laid Great Streſs upon the Hideouſneſs of ſo Brutal an Outrage, under ſo many Tender Circumſtances, againſt all the Laws of Religion, Honour, Humanity, and Common Juſtice. But the Gravity of Theſe Reaſonings and Counſels ſerv'd only for matter of Deriſion, with Bloudy Oaths in the Concluſion, that they would either have the Woman, or Cut his Throat. When the Good Man found himſelf brought to the Laſt Neceſſity, either of Yielding, or Compounding, he made them an Offer of his Own Daughter in Exchange for That Stranger, as the Leſs Evil of the Two; for This way, he did but Sacrifice the Reputation of a Private Family; whereas in Violating the Rights of Hoſpitality, he ſhould have been Guilty of an Affront upon the Publique Faith of Humane ſociety. But Supplications, and Arguments, were to no manner of Purpoſe with Men ſo peremptorily reſolved upon That Woman, and that No Other ſhould content them. In This Heat, they took her away by force, to their Own Quarters, where they Spent That whole night in all manner of Beſtial Liberties, and then ſent her back again next Morning. She fell into ſuch a Confuſion of Thought upon her return, for what had befall'n her That night, that betwixt Shame and Indignation, it brake the very Heart of her. As to her Husband's part, ſhe look'd upon the Wound to be Utterly Incurable, and had not the Confidence, ſo much as to look him in the face after it; but as ſhe came near him, ſhe fell down upon the ground and Dy'd. Her Husband took it at firſt, only for an Oppreſſion of Wearineſs for want of Sleep; or at the Worſt, but for ſome Fainting Fit: And ſo he try'd to Wake her, and bring her to her ſelf again, by telling her for her Comfort, that This Violence had not at all Derogated from the Dignity of her Unſpotted Innocence, and Virtue. But all This came too late; for the Woman was Dead; and the Levite behaved himſelf with a Wonderfull Preſence and Conſtancy of Mind upon it, conſidering the Quality of ſo Mortal a Surprize. He Packed up the Body of his Dead Wife; laid it upon his Aſs, and carry'd it directly Home with him. Being come to his Own Houſe, he Divided the Body into Twelve Parts, to be Diſtributed among the Twelve Tribes, ſending Every Tribe One of them. The Several Bearers had their Inſtructions to Acquaint the Tribes where they went, with the Whole Hiſtory of This Villany; the Authors of it, and the Barbarous Circumſtances of the Fact it ſelf. They All agreed the Wickedneſs to be ſo far beyond Example, that the Like was never ſeen or Heard of before. The Horror, in Short, of This Action, Tranſported them into ſuch a Rage, that they immediately Gather'd together in Siloe before the Tabernacle, with a Reſolution, The firſt thing they did, to Aſſault Gabaa. The Elders, upon This, put a little Check to the Firſt Heat, by telling them that "it would not do well, hand over head thus to make a War "upon their Allies, without a Strict Enquiry firſt into the Merits of the Cauſe: a "Thing, they ſaid, that the Laws and Practice of the Iſraelites would not Allow, "even toward Strangers, without ſome Previous Embaſſy, or Treaty to bring the "Matter it ſelf, if Poſſible, to ſome Reaſonable Terms of Satisfaction, or Compoſition. Wherefore the Beſt Way would be, in purſuance of This Legal Method, "to ſend to the Gibeonites to Demand the Criminals that Committed This Inſolence: "In Caſe they give them up, you may Puniſh them; If they refuſe, you are then at "liberty to do Your ſelves Right by force of Arms.

Judges 20. The Levite Cuts the Body into Twelve Parts, and ſends it to the Twelve Tribes.

Upon This Motion, they ſent to the Gibeonites to deliver up to the Profligate Malefactors that had Committed This Brutal Violence upon the Levite's Wife, that Juſtice might be done upon them. They Demanded Thoſe Individual Men, they ſaid; becauſe they would not Involve the Publique in a Particular Cauſe. Upon the Reſult, the Gibeonites would not give up the Malefactors, nor did they think it Honourable, for fear of a War, to Submit to Rules of Other peoples Preſcribing. They wanted neither Courage, Skill, nor Numbers, they ſaid; the Whole Tribe Declaring themſelves to be All of a piece, and all of a mind, and reſolved to ſtand by one another to the Laſt Man in the Cauſe of a Common Defence.

The Iſraelites make an Oath not to Int ermarry with the Benjamites. And March gainſt them with 40000 Fighting Men.

The Iſraelites were ſo Diſguſted upon the Report of This Anſwer, that they preſently entered into an Oath not to Inttermarry with the Tribe of Benjamin, and to Carry on as Fierce a War againſt the Benjamites, as ever their Fore-fathers did againſt the Canaanites. Upon This Occaſion, they Took the Field with an Army of 400000 Fighting Men. The ſtrength of the Benjamites was 25600 in which Number there were 500 Left-handed Slingers, that were all Excellent Marksmen. The Two Armies fought near Gabaa; where the Iſraelites were Routed by the Benjamites with the Loſs of Two and Twenty Thouſand upon the place, and the Slaughter had been much greater, if the the Night had not parted them. The Iſraelites returning to the Body of their Army in a Confuſion, upon the ſenſe of This Diſaſter, while the Benjamites went back again to the City in Triumph: It came to a ſecond Battle the Next day again, when the Iſraelites loſt 18000 Men more; and Theſe Two Diſaſters ſtruck them with ſuch a Terror, that they Quitted their Camp, and removed a little way off to Bethel, where they ſpent the next day in Faſting and Prayer; beſeeching Almighty God by the Mouth of Phinehas the High-Prieſt, that he would be pleaſed, after the Judgment of Two ſuch Overthrows, to put a ſtop to the Courſe of his High Diſpleaſure, and Grant them Victory over their Enemies.

The Iſraelites routed, and loſs 22000 upon the Place. The Iſraelites loſe 18000 more upon a ſecond Battle.

Their Prayers being heard, and a Favourable Anſwer returned to them by the ſame Prophet, they divided their Army into Two Bodies; One Half they Planted in Certain Ambuſhes about the City, while the Other ſtood drawn up in readineſs to give the Enemy Battle. The Iſraelites, upon the Firſt Charge, gave way, not that they were not able to ſtand the ſhock; but, in truth, with a deſign to draw the Benjamites further off from the Town: ſo that the Iſraelites, by little and little, loſt Ground, and ſtill as the One plyed, the Other, in proportion, preſſed ſo much the Harder upon them: Inſomuch, that the People of the Town looked upon it as a Defeat, rather than a Diſpute, and came Trooping out Young and Old, without any doubt of a Victory, to put in for their part of the Spoil. When the Benjamites were gotten far enough from Home, and within reach of the Ambuſh, the Iſraelites Faced about; Rallied, and Charged, giving the ſignal at the ſame time to their Companions, to fall upon the Rear. This Surprize put the Benjamites into ſo Deſperate a ſtreight, that they were forced to Retire into a Bottom, where they were ſurrounded and Deſtroyed like ſo many Beaſts in a Toyle: only a ſelect Body of ſix Hundred Reſolute Men Cut their way through the Middle of the Enemies Troops, up to a Mountain there at hand, where they Poſted themſelves for the preſent, and ſo Eſcaped. All the reſt Periſhed, to the Number of about Five and Twenty Thouſand Men. The Iſraelites, after This, burnt Gaba, ſparing neither Men, Women, nor Male-Children, and they did the Like too in ſeveral Other of the Benjamite Cities. Nay, ſo Mortal was the Animoſity they had Contracted in This Quarrel, that they ſent Twelve Thouſand Men againſt (a) Jabes, a City of Gilead, who took the Town, and put all in it to the Sword, Men, Women, and Children, ſave only Four Hundred Virgins; and All This, barely for refuſing to Joyn with the Iſraelites againſt the Benjamites.

The Iſraelites draw the Benjamites into an Ambuſh.

Only ſix Hundred of them Eſcape to the Mountains.

25000 Beniamites Cut-off.

Judges, 21. Jabes Taken and all put to the Sword but 400 Virgins.

This was the Bloudy Event of a Revenge, for the Abuſe of a Woman, upon a Punctilio of Honour in the Benjamites, to Puſh the Cauſe on to a War. The Iſraelites were come now to bethink themſelves, and in ſome degree to Repent of the Calamities they had brought upon the Benjamites: That Tribe being in a manner Cut-off from the Main Body. Upon the Whole Matter, they propoſed a Faſt but not as Conſcious of having done an Unjuſt Thing in Puniſhing a Breach of the Law. In This Tenderneſs of Thought, they ſent Commiſſioners to Invite the ſix Hundred Men back again, that were fled into the Mountains, where they found them upon a Rock called Rhoa, in the Deſert. Theſe Miniſters Condoled with them, not for their Own Miſery Alone, but for that of their Relations and Friends, adviſing them to bear their Lot like Men returning to their Society, and as much as in them lay to prevent the Utter Extermination of That Tribe, which would be the Conſequence of withdrawing themſelves from the Fellowſhip. Theſe Commiſſioners told them withall, that for their Lands and Cattle, Every thing ſhould be Reſtored, and Themſelves put in poſſeſſion as before. Theſe Men could not but Confeſs themſelves to have been in the Wrong, and Acknowledged the Righteous Judgment of God in what they had ſuffered, and ſo returned to their Obedience, and to their Tribe, upon This Invitation.

The Six Hundred Beniamites invited back again from the Mountains.

The Next Queſtion was how to Provide them Wives; the Iſraelites having bound themſelves by an Oath before the War not to marry any of their Daughters into the Tribe of Benjamin. Some would have the Oath to be a Nullity, as being an Oath under a kind of Force, and an Oath of Paſſion, without Due Conſideration or Judgment. Others were of Opinion that the very Neceſſity Diſcharged the Oath, and that it would not be pleaſing to God to hazzard a Whole Tribe rather than Diſpenſe with ſuch an Obligation: Making Perjury without Malice to be No ſin: But the Elders would not Endure any Thought of Perjury, under what Cover or Countenance ſoever. They had Provided Wives already for Four Hundred of the ſix out of the Virgins that were Taken at Jabes; and for the remaining Two Hundred, one of the Senators offered This Expedient, for the doing of the buſineſs without ſtraining an Oath.

The 400 Virgins given in Marriage to 400 Benjamites.

" Here is (ſays he) a Cuſtomary Solemnity of a Publique Feſtival that is Cele" brated thrice a Year in Siloe, and our Wives and Daughters are commonly part " of the Company. Leave the Benjamites upon This Occaſion at liberty to Seize,
" and take to Wife as many of the Virgins as they can catch, without your Medling in
" it either One way or Other, For, or Againſt it. If the Fathers ſhall complain, and " appeal for Juſtice, the Anſwer will be ſhort, that they ſhould have looked better to their Daughters then; and that it is not good to Exaſperate the Iſraelites againſt the Benjamites, as we have found by Woful Experience already. Upon This Motion it was agreed, that the Benjamites ſhould be Connived at, in providing themſelves of Wives after This manner, by force. The Solemnity being now at hand the Two Hundred Men that wanted Wives Planted themſelves about the Town in Vineyards, and Other Hiding Places, by Twos and Threes, and ſuch Numbers as they thought fit, to watch for the coming of the Virgins. The Benjamites took their Opportunity as the Virgins came Sporting along and Started out among them; Every Man Seizing One for his Wife, and carrying her off to his Plantation, where they made it their Buſineſs, by Induſtry, and Good Husbandry, to Eſtabliſh themſelves Happily in the World yet once again. By This means, and by the Prudence of the Iſraelites, was the Tribe of Benjamin recovered out of a Hopeleſs Condition, and came ſoon after into a Flouriſhing Eſtate, both for Wealth, People, and Power.

Wives provided for the Other 200 Benjamites by a Surprize.

This was the End of the Benjamites War, and the Affairs of Dan were not in a much better Poſture neither. The Iſraelites being now quite gone over from the Study and Practice of Arms, to the Country-Entertainments of Husbandry and Tillage. The Canaanites made Advantage of This Degenerous Change of Humour, and Entered into a Formed Conſpiracy againſt them; though with the Greateſt Contempt Imaginable) not for fear of any hurt they could do them at preſent, but in hope of bringing them ſo Low, that they ſhould never be able to give them any further Trouble for the time to come. They made mighty Levies of Men, and Proviſions of Chariots; Trained up their People to Martial Diſcipline; beſide, that they had already drawn over to them, Aſcalon, and Accaron, from the Tribe of Judah, and ſeveral Cities of the Plains: Inſomuch that the Danites were forced up to the Mountains for Sanctuary, and not one Foot of Ground in the Champian that they could call their Own. Their Circumſtances, briefly, were ſuch, that they were neither ſtrong enough to do themſelves Right by War, nor had they Land enough for their People to Subſiſt upon in a ſtate of Peace: Wherefore they ſent Five of their People into the Inland Countries to find out ſome Commodious Place of Reſidence, where they might Plant and Settle. When Theſe Commiſſioners had Travelled a matter of a Days Journy from the Great Plain of Sidon, (and not far from Mount Libanus, and the Head of the leſſer Jordan) they found themſelves in a Fruitful and Well-Conditioned Country; and gave their tribe an Account of Their Opinion of the Place, who forthwith Marched with their Army directly thither; Erecting a City there, by the Name of Dan, ſo called from one of the Sons of Jacob of That Name, from whence the Whole Tribe alſo had it's Appellation.

The Danites forced for Sanctuary to the Mountains.

The Danites Plant at the Head of the Jordan.

The Iſraelites were at This time ſo abandoned to Sloth, and Luxury, and without any regard to Religion or Buſineſs, that all their Affairs went to Wrack upon it; The Government Looſe, and out of Frame; Men lived without any reſtraint, either of ſhame, or of Law; the Corruptions of the Canaanites reigning every where without Controle.

The Iſraelites Degenerated both in Religion and Manners.

The Juſt Judgment of God upon the Iſraelites for their Corruptions in Manners and Worſhip.

THIS General Defection was ſo Provoking in the ſight of God, that the Iſraelites, being left to Themſelves by a Total Diſſolution of Piety, Diſcipline, and Good Manners, put a ſhort End to All the Hopes and Pretences of Hapineſs, that with much Toile, and Induſtry, they had been ſo long a Raiſing. While they were were in this Abandon'd State of Looſeneſs and Debauch, (a) Chuſarth, the King of the Aſſyrians made War upon them; Kill'd them a great many Men in Battle; ſeiz'd their Towns; ſome by Force, Others by Treaty, and laid Heavy Taxes upon the People: Plaguing them, in fine, with all Varieties of Indignities whatſoever. This was the Wretched State they were in for Eight Years; after which time, they were deliver'd out of the Hands of their Oppreſſors in manner as follows.

Kenaz, a Great Man of the Tribe of Judah. Judges 3. Othniel the Son of Kenaz.

THere was one Kenaz, of the Tribe of Judah; a Man of Senſe, Buſineſs, and Courage. This Perſon being Animated by a Secret Impulſe from Heaven, to make ſome Bold and Generous Attempt, for the Relief of the Hebrews in This Extremity of their Diſtreſs, communicated the Privacy to ſome few of his Particular Friends, that he knew to be Men of Honour and Reſolution, and likewiſe Diſſatisfied with the Preſent State of Things. Upon Concerting the Matter, they came to this Concluſion, That the firſt thing to be done toward the Eaſing of the Hebrews, muſt be the Surprizal of the King's Guards and Cutting the Throats of the Garriſon. This was agreed upon, and accordingly Executed: And the Succeſs of this Exploit gave ſuch a Reputation, and brought ſo many over to That Intereſt and Party, that in a ſhort time they gave the Aſſyrians a Fair Battle; Routed, and beat them over the Euphrates, and conſequently ſet the People at Liberty; who in acknowledgment of the Obligation they had to Kenaz for their Deliverance, by the means of his Bravery and Conduct, made him a Preſent of the Government, which he accepted of, and when he had Ruled them Forty Years in the Quality of a Judge, he Ended his Life in the ſame Station.

The Iſraelites Oppreſs'd by Eglon, and Deliver'd by Ehud.

BY the Death of Kenaz, the Iſraelites were left once again without a Head; and then as they fell more and more off from their Duty to God, and the Laws, they were ſtill more and more Expoſed to Freſh and Greater Afflictions. Their Converſation was ſuch, that Eglon Himſelf, the King of the Moabites, had them in Contempt for their want even of Policy and Order, and This very Conſideration Encourag'd him to make War upon them. In One Word, He Worſted them upon Several Encounters, and Humbled them to That Degree, that he made them his Tributaries: After which, he remov'd his Court to Jericho; and for Eighteen Years Succeſſively, omitted Nothing of Rigour or Oppreſſion, that might make the People Miſerable, even to the Degree almoſt of Starving them. But it pleaſed God at laſt in Compaſſion to their Sufferings, and in Mercy to their Prayers, to deliver them from the Tyranny of the Moabites, by This Means.

Judges 3.

Eglon worſts the Iſraelites in ſeveral Encounters, and makes them his Tributaries.

There was a Certain Young Man that dwelt at Jericho; the Son of Gera, of the Tribe of Benjamin, and his Name (b) Ehud. He was a Vigorous and a Daring Man; of a Robuſt Force of Body, and had Both Hands at Command, if not the Left the better of the Two. He was of a Make, in fine, for any Bold and Hazardous Undertaking. This Ehud Order'd the Matter ſo as to make himſelf Familiarly known to Eglon, by the means of Preſents, and Other Court-Offices; inſomuch that his Particular Favour with the King had made him a great many Friends at Court. Being One Day to make the King a Preſent, the Firſt Thing he did, was to Gird a Short Ponyard to his Right Side, and taking two Servants along with him, to keep it under his Cloaths, out of ſight; and in this Manner of Addreſs he was Admitted to the King. This was in the Heat of the Summer, and the Middle of the Day; None of the Guards Stirring, and moſt People being Retir'd to Dinner. When this Young Man had made his Preſent; the King being withdrawn into a Cool place of Refreſhment, Ehud deſir'd a Word in Private with him: Whereupon the King ſent away his Servants out of the Preſence, being himſelf ſeated upon his Throne. Ehud was all this while in pain, for fear of Miſſing his Aim when he came to do the Execution. So that to give the King Occaſion to Riſe, that he might have the Fairer Mark at him, he told him that he had ſomewhat to ſay to him from God Almighty, about a Certain Dream of his. The King had a kind of Impatient Curioſity upon him, to hear what it was, and ſo ſtanding up to Hearken to it, Ehud in that very Inſtant Plung'd a Dagger into his Heart, and forthwith went his way, ſhutting the Doors after him, and leaving the Dagger in the Wound. The Waiters were ſtill and ſilent, all this while, for fear of Waking the King, who they ſuppoſed might be aſleep.

Ehud Stabs Eglon;

Ehud went away upon This directly to Jeruſalem, where he put it about in Private, that he had Kill'd the King, in order to the ſetting of the People at Liberty. The News was ſo Welcome to them, that they ſent their Trumpets immediately upon it all over the whole Country; This being their way of calling the People together. It was a long time before the Court knew any thing of the Matter; but toward Evening ſome of the King's Servants took upon up an Apprehenſion of ſome Accident more than Ordinary; and upon Entring the Bed-Chamber, there lay the King Dead, which was ſo ſurprizing a Spectacle, that it ſtruck them all Dumb and Senſeleſs. The Guards were preſently ſent for; but the Iſraelites, in Great Bodies brake in upon the Palace, before they could be drawn together Some they Kill'd in the Firſt Heat; Others, to the Number of Ten Thouſand, made away to the River, toward the Country of Moab, but the Iſraelites having prepoſſeſſed themſelves of all the Fords and Paſſes, Intercepted them in their Flight; ſo that they were wholly cut off, without ſo much as One Man of them getting over. By This Means the Hebrews ſhook off the Yoak of the Moabites; and Ehud, for an Acknowledgment, had the Honour of the Government Conferr'd upon him by the People; and at the End of Eighty Years Adminiſtration, there he died. He was a Perſon, that over and above the Merit of This Generous Exploit, deſerv'd upon ſeveral Other Accounts to have his Name and Memory Celebrated to Poſterity. CHAP. VI.

The Iſraelites paſs from One Slavery to Another, and are deliver'd in the Concluſion by Deborah and Barack.

THE Iſraelites that went Headlong forward from Iniquity to Iniquity, and conſequently from One Calamity to Another, would not be yet brought to Underſtand, that the Hand of God was in all this, for their Contumacy and Diſobedience to the Laws and Commandments, both of God and Man. Inſomuch, that before they were well Quit of One Slavery they fell into Another; as upon This Revolution, they only Exchang'd the Tyranny of Eglon, the King of the Moabites, for that of Jabin, King of the Canaanites, who was their Next Maſter. This Jabin kept his Court at Azor, upon the Lake (b) Samachonitis, having an Army in Pay of (c) 300 000 Foot, 10 000 Horſe, and 3 000 Chariots, under the Command of (d) Siſera, a Great Favourite of the King's for the Services he had done in Reducing the Iſraelites, whom he Worſted upon ſeveral Encounters from time to time, and would never give over the Purſuit, till he brought them at laſt to be Abſolute Slaves, and Tributaries to his Maſter. When they had Languiſhed out a matter of Twenty Years in This Scandalous Servitude, without daring ſo much as to Open their Mouths againſt their Oppreſſors, and without being one jot the Wiſer for their Experience; (God in his Providence having thought fit alſo to continue Theſe Judgments upon them for their Impiety and Ingratitude) they came at laſt, by a kind of Neceſſity, to ſome ſort of Repentance, and to a Conviction, that Theſe Miſeries had befallen them as a Juſt Puniſhment for their Contempt of the Laws of their Forefathers. In This Fit of Contrition, they went to a Famous Propheteſs, One Deborah, (in Hebrew a Bee) deſiring her Interceſſion on their Behalf, that God would be pleaſed in Mercy to Forgive them, and Reſcue them out of the Hands of their Cruel Perſecutors. At her Mediation, God was prevailed upon to promiſe them a Deliverance, and made Choice of Barack, of the Tribe of Nephthali, for the Inſtrument, as General of the Army, that was to do the Work. So Deborah ſent for Barack, (which word in Hebrew ſignifies Lightning) and Order'd him to Draw out a Body of 10 000 Choice Men, and March directly with them toward the Enemy; the Propheteſs never Heeding the Number, ſo long as Providence had undertaken for the Succeſs. Barack Expoſtulated the Matter with Deborah, flatly refuſing to Meddle with the Command, unleſs ſhe her ſelf would go along with him. Well! (ſays Deborah, in a Scoffing way of Diſguſt) and are not you a Doughty Captain now, to turn over the Honour of a Command to a Woman, when God has given it to your ſelf! but however, ſays ſhe, I am content to make One. So they drew out their Number, and Pitch'd their Tents upon (a) Mount Tabor; Siſera, by the King's Order, Marching out to meet them. The Two Armies lay Encamped One within ſight of Another; but the Iſraelites were ſtruck with ſuch a Terror at the Infinite Odds of the Enemy in Number, that both General and Soldiers were once upon the very point of ſhifting for themſelves, without ſo much as ſtriking a Blow: but upon Deborah's Aſſurance that it was the Cauſe of God; and that He Himſelf would Aſſiſt, and bring them off, they were prevail'd upon to ſtand the Shock of a Battle. The Armies were no ſooner engag'd, but there Aroſe a Violent Wind, with a moſt Impetuous Tempeſt of Rain and Hail along with it: This Storm driving juſt in the Face of the Canaanites, made their Bows and their Slings uſeleſs to them, and ſo for Other Weapons for a Cloſe Fight; for they could not ſo much as Open their Eyes againſt the Weather, and their Fingers were ſo Numb'd with Cold too, that they could not Handle their Arms. Now the Iſraelites, with This Tempeſt at their Backs, had all Advantages on the One Hand, without the Inconveniencies on the Other; beſide the Encouragements given them by ſo ſignal a Manifeſtation of God's Eſpouſing their Cauſe. It came to This in the Concluſion, that the Canaanites Army was Broken, Diſpers'd, and Cut to Pieces: So that betwixt Thoſe that fell by the Sword; Thoſe that were Trampled to Death under the Horſes Feet; Thoſe that were Torn to Pieces by the Chariots, and thoſe that fled away, and fell into the Hands of the Iſraelites in their Flight; This Prodigious Army was in Effect totally Deſtroy'd. Siſera, finding the Day Irrecoverably loſt, and his Men Flying every where before the Enemy, he leapt from his Chariot, and betook himſelf to the Houſe of one Jael a Kenite, for Sanctuary; who receiv'd him with a Countenance of readineſs to do him a Good Office. Siſera was quite ſpent with the Toyl and Fatigue of the Day, and calling for ſomewhat to Drink, Jael brought him a Draught of Sowre Milk; which he took down very heartily, and ſo fell aſleep. When Jael found that ſhe had him Faſt and Sure, ſhe took a Hammer with an Iron Nail, and drove it into his Temples, ſhewing him for a Spectacle to the Iſraelites that came to look after him, where ſhe had Pinn'd him to the Ground. This made good Deborah's Preſage, when ſhe told Barack that a Woman ſhould have the Honour of a Title to the Victory. Barack was now March'd with the Army toward Azor, where he Encounter'd Jabin by the way, and Slew him. The King being Kill'd, Barack laid the City level with the Ground, and afterward Govern'd Iſrael for a matter of Forty Years.

Judges 6. The Death of Deborah and Barack.

Deborah and Barack died much about a time, and it was not long after, when the Midianites enter'd into an Aſſociation with the Amalekites and the Arabians againſt the Iſraelites: Marched with an Army againſt them, Fought, and Overcame them; Deſtroying the Fruits of the Ground, and carrying away their Cattle with a Great Booty. At This rate they Order'd them Seven Full Years together; forcing them from the Plains to the Mountains for Refuge, where they digg'd themſelves Vaults and Caves, partly for the Security of their Perſons, and partly for the Concealment of what Stores and Proviſions they were able to ſave from the Hands of the Enemy. Now the Midianites were well enough Content to let the Iſraelites Till the Ground in the Winter, when They Themſelves were ſure to reap the Fruits of Their Labours in the Following Summer. By theſe means the Iſraelites were brought to a Morſel of Bread, and no hope of Relief left them in This their Starving Extremity, but Prayers and Supplications, which were ſtill their Laſt Refuge.

Gideon reſcues the Iſraelites out of the Hand of the Midianites.

Judges 6. IT happened one time, that as Gideon the (b) Son of Joas, and a Leading Man in the Tribe of Manaſſes, was Thraſhing a little Corn by Stealth, at a Wine-Preſs, which he durſt not venture to do in a Publick Place for fear of Diſcovery; there there appeared a Viſion to him in the figure of a Young Man that Greeted him as a Happy Perſon, and Exceedingly in Gods favour. " One would hardly think ſo, ſays " Gideon, of a Man under my Circumſtances, that is fain to make a Preſs to do the Office of a Floor. The Apparition bad him have a good Heart; and immediately ſet his Thoughts to work how he might Deliver his Country. " Alaſs! ſays Gi- " deon, it is Impoſſible for me to do any thing toward it: We have not Men enough " in our Tribe for ſuch an Attempt; neither am I a perſon of Practice and Expe- " rience enough, to Menage ſuch a Deſign. The Apparition made him Anſwer that what ever he fell ſhort in, God would Supply; and that if He would but Frankly take upon him the Command of a Body of Men, the Iſraelites ſhould gain a Victory under His Conduct. Gideon Communicated This Affair, with all the Circumſtances, to ſome Young Men of his Acquaintance, who aſcribed ſo much to the Authority, and Credit of This Revelation, that they had preſently an Army of Ten Thouſand Choice Men in readineſs to run any Hazard for the Common Cauſe.

A Viſion appears to Gideon as he was Threſhing of Corn at a Wine-Preſs.

A Voice bids him bethink himſelf how he may Deliver his Country:

Aſſuring him of a Divine Aſſiſtance.

Gideon draws an Army together of 10000 Men.

While This was in agitation, the Voice of God ſpake to Gideon again in a Dream, in Words to This Effect, It is but Natural for Fleſh and Blood to Over-ween, and for Men to value themſelves, upon the Providential Operations of an Almighty Power as the Effects of their Own Force and Wiſdom; Eſpecially when the Work may ſeem to be brought about purely by the Mediation of Common Cauſes. But to ſhew you now (ſays the Voice) that Victory is Influenced from above, and that the Arm of Fleſh is not able to do any thing without a Divine Aſſiſtance: Take Your Army to the River Jordan, in the Parching Heat of the Sun at Mid-day, and make your Obſervations upon the manner of the Soldiers Drinking. Thoſe that lie down upon the Bank, and Compoſe themſelves to Drink at leiſure, you may depend upon to be for your purpoſe, and Men of Courage; but for Them that take their Drink in a Hurry, and with Diſtraction, they have the Fear of an Enemy in their Heads, and there's no Truſting to them. Gideon did as he was Order'd and found but bare Three Hundred of the Former ſort in the Whole Army that Drank out of the Hollow of their Hands, without Staring about them. With This Pittance of Three Hundred Men, God Commanded Gideon to Attaque the Enemy in the Night; to which End he Poſted himſelf upon the ſide of the River, the day before the Exploit was to be put in Execution, and not without Great Apprehenſions what might be the Iſſue of That Enterprize. The Voice, upon This Diffidence bad him take a Soldier with him, and Steal over That night to the Camp of the Midianities, where he ſhould learn ſomewhat that ſhould put him in Heart again. He went as he was Bid, and taking his Own Servant Phuran along with him, they crept up to One of the Enemy's Tents (where they were yet Waking) and there Over-heard a Soldier telling his Camerade of a Strange Dream he had. " Methought, ſays he, I ſaw a Bar- " ley Loaf (the Courſeſt of all Grains and not fit for a Man to Eat) come Tumbling " into the Camp, where it Over-ran all the Tents that ſtood in the Way; the King's " Tent in the Firſt Place, and ſo the reſt Indifferently one after another. Well! Says " This Dreamer's Fellow-Soldier, and what can This Overturning of all the Tents " ſignify but the Total Deſtruction of our Army? Barley is, as you ſay, the Courſeſt " of Grains; and ſo are the Iſraelites the Vileſt, and the moſt Abject of All the Peo- " ple in Aſia. Gideon is now in the Head of an Army againſt us, and I am afraid that " the Barley Loaf Overthrowing our Tents, will be Expounded by Gideon's over- " running us with his Iſraelite-Army. Upon the Good Omen of This Dream Gideon returned preſently to his people full of Hope and Comfort at the Preſage, and his Men were no leſs Animated upon the Hearing of it; for they put themſelves immediately in readineſs for the Word of Command, toward any Hazardous Adventure whatſoever.

Judges 7.

Victory is from Above.

Only 300 of the 10000 ſtand the Teſt.

Gideon ſteals over the River to the Enemy's Camp.

He Over-hears Two Soldiers talking of a Strange Dream.

Gideon draws a Good Omen from the Interpretation of it:

About the Fourth Watch, Gideon Advanced toward the Enemy with his Little Army in Three Diviſions, a Hundred Men in Each, and Every Man Carrying an Empty Pitcher with a Burning Lamp in it, to the End that they might fall upon them at Unawares before they could be Diſcover'd: And they carry'd likewiſe in their Right-Hands, Rams-Horns that Served them for Trumpets. The Enemy had ſuch a Multitude of Camels, and ſo many Several Nations in their Diſtinct Lodgments, that the Camp muſt needs take-up a Huge Content of ground, but ſtill One Common Line Encloſing the Whole. Upon the Hebrews approach toward the Enemy, it was Given them in Command, that upon the Signal of Sounding Trumpets, and breaking Pitchers, they ſhould make a Sally with Shouts, and their Lamps in their Hands, as to an Aſſured Victory, by the Bleſſing of God upon Gideon. They Acted according to their Order, and by This Stratagem, they were Struck with ſo Judicial a Conſternation, betwixt Sleeping and Waking, (the Horror of the Night aſſiſting the Imagination too) that being in the Dark, in a Medley of Several Languages, and under a Terror that knows No Difference betwixt Friend and Foe, they fell foul in the Confu-

Confuſion, upon one Another; Every Man taking him that was next him for an Enemy. There was, in fine, a Prodigious Slaughter; but the Greateſt Execution Incomparably was done by Them one upon another.

So ſoon as the fame of This Notable Defeat came to the Ears of the reſt of the Iſraelites, they preſently ſent out Armed Troups to all the Difficult Paſſes upon the Mountains, Rivers, and Torrents, to Obſtruct, and Cut-off their Retreat, putting all to the Sword they could lay hand on, and Two Kings, Oreb, and Zeb among the reſt. But for the Remainder, to the Number of ſome 18000 Men, that had made a Shift to get-off in a Body under the Command of their Proper Officers; Thoſe Troups Poſted themſelves as far from the Iſraelites Camp as they could. Gideon's Troups had been Extremely Haraſs'd in the Late Action, but This did not yet hinder him from preſſing This Party of the Enemy upon the Rear, and Engaging them ſoon after with his Whole Army. In This Encounter, he put them to an Abſolute Rout; Deſtroying the Whole Body of them to a Man, and Taking their Two Leaders, the Princes, (a) Zebin, and Hezarbon, Priſoners. There were Slain of the Midianites and their Aſſociates, in Theſe Encounters, near 120000 Men; to ſay Nothing of the Booty in Gold, Silver, Rich Stuffs, Camels, Aſſes, &c. that fell to the Hebrews. When Gideon came afterward into his Own Native Country of Ephraim, he put to Death the Two Kings of the Midianites above mentioned: But the Tribe of Ephraim, out of an Envy to the Glory of his Atchievments, had a Great mind to pick a Quarrel with him for Engaging in a Publique Act of Hoſtility, being a Member of That Tribe, without Their Privity and Conſent: Inſomuch that they were juſt upon the point of making war upon him. But Gideon, that was a Man of Modeſty, and Prudence, as well as Bravery, diverted the ſtorm by telling them that This was God's War, and not Gideon's; for what he did he was Commanded to do; and that the Honour of the Victory was Theirs ſtill, though the Labouring Part of the Action fell by Providence to His Lot. The Softneſs and Diſcretion of Theſe words was more worth to the Hebrews than the Defeat; for it prevented the Great Miſchief of a Civil War, which was then ready to break out. But This Invidious Spiteful Cavil coſt them dear in the Concluſion, as we ſhall ſee hereafter in its Proper Place.

Judges 7. The Iſraelites put all to the Sword; Oreb and Zeb among the reſt.

Gideon Pleads that it was God's War, not Gideon's.

When Gideon had ſet his Country at liberty, he would fain have Diſcharged himſelf of his Commiſſion; but the people were ſo Unanimouſly reſolved not to part with him, that he was forced to Continue it; which he did for the Space of Forty Years; Exerciſing all the Parts of a Careful Ruler over them; in preſcribing Laws; Adminiſtring Juſtice; Deciding Controverſies, and doing Right betwixt Man and Man; Acquitting himſelf upon the Whole, with the Character of This Reputation, That no Man ever complained of, or Appealed from his Sentence. He lived to a Great Age, and was Buried in his Own Country at Ephraim.

Gideon offers to Lay down his Commiſſion but the People preſs him to continue it.

Judges 9. Gideon had Seventy Legitimate Sons, and Abimelech by his Concubine.

GIdeon had Seventy Legitimate Sons by ſeveral Women; and by Druma, his Concubine, One Natural ſon, whoſe name was Abimelech. This Abimelech, after the Death of his Father, went to Sichem, to the Relations of his Mother, who was born there. They ſupplyed him with Money; and Abimelech finding them to be Men for his Turn, and Lewd and Deſperate enough to Adventure upon any thing let it be never ſo Hazardous or Wicked, he went ſtreight back again to his Fathers Houſe, and took a Cabal of Theſe Swaggering Companions along with him. His Firſt Exploit there was to Murder All his Brothers, ſave only Jothan, who ſlipt out of the way, ſo that they could not find him. When Abimelech had once by This means poſſeſſed himſelf of the Government, he knew no Other Law than That of his Own Will and Pleaſure, profeſſing an Open Enmity to Juſtice it ſelf, and all its Abettors; neither was he Himſelf leſs Hateful to all Good Men than They were to Him.

Abimelech Killed all his Brothers but Jothan; who makes his Eſcape.

He Siezes the Government.

He makes his Will his Law.

It happened one time, upon a Great day of Solemnity in Sichem, and a World of People gathered together there, that Jothan, who had made an Eſcape, as we ſaid, upon This Feſtival, was got up to the Top of the Mountain Garizim that overlooks Sichem: and thence called out aloud to the Multitude, deſiring only their Patience for a Few Words he had to ſay. They put themſelves preſently into a Poſture of Attention; and the Speech was This.

The Fable of the Trees Chuſing a King.

" There was a Time, ſays he, when the Trees had their Meetings and Conferences, " and Talked after the Manner of Men. In Thoſe days, and in a Great Council, " upon the Subject of who ſhould Command, the Major part of the Plants made their " Addreſs to the Fig-Tree, to take care of the Government; but the Fig-Tree " modeſtly Declined the Honour, as being amply Satisfied with the Eſteem it had " in the World for the Fruit it bare, ſaying alſo, that it had No Ambition to be " Greater, or Other then it was. The Trees, after This Refuſal, made the ſame " Requeſt to the Olive-Tree, and to the Vine, and they Both agreed in returning " the very ſame Anſwer. They went next to the Bramble, with the ſame Propo- " ſals, being an Excellent ſort of Fuel. Well! ſays the Bramble, if you are in Earneſt, " I'll take the Government upon me; but then you muſt reſolve to reſt quietly under " my Shadow: for if you Offer to be unruly, there ſhall come a Fire out of me " that ſhall Deſtroy you. This is no Tale told, ſays Jothan to make you Merry, but to Move you to bethink your ſelves what you are now a doing; that after ſo many ſacred Obligations to Gideon, can yet ſuffer Abimelech, the Murderer, of the Children of your Deliverer, to Uſurp, and Reign over you. This Abimelech is the very Fire in the Fable I have told you.

Upon Theſe Words he Withdrew, and was forced, for Three years after, to lie Sculking up and down the Mountains, and keep out of the way of Abimelech's Rage and Revenge. The Sichemites came however in a ſhort time to be ſenſible of the Wickedneſs of That Horrid Barbarity upon the Sons of Gideon, and ſo forced Abimelech out of the City, and Tribe; who upon This Indignity ſet his Wits at work how to be Even with them.

Abimelech driven out of Sichem.

The ſeaſon of the Vintage was now at hand, and the People durſt not Venture out of Town to Gather the Grapes, for fear of ſome Surprize or affront from Abimelech. There happened to come to Sichem, juſt at That time, a Certain Prince of the Country, whoſe Name was (a) Gaal, with a Band of Soldiers, and ſeveral of his Relations. The Towns-Men Petitioned him for a Guard, only to ſecure them during the time of the Vintage, and He Allowed it them. They Entered upon the Work and brought off their Grapes, at firſt freely enough, and without Interruption, Laſhing out againſt Abimelech, in the Liberty of their Cups, the Bittereſt Things that could be thought of; and Cutting off ſeveral of his Men that fell into their Ambuſhes. While matters were in This State, Zebul, one of the Chief of the Sichemites, and Abimelech's Hoſt, gave him Intelligence by an Expreſs, how Buſy Gaal was to Irritate the People againſt him; but, ſays he, if you can but Diſpoſe of an Ambuſh in ſome Convenient Place near the City, I will undertake to put Gaal into your Power to requite him as he deſerves: Beſide, that when all This is done, I will become Anſwerable to Settle a Fair Underſtanding betwixt you and the People. Abimelech followed Zebul's advice, and Planted his Ambuſh; Gaal Unwarily ſtaying longer in the Suburbs with Zebul than he ſhould have done; ſome of Abimelech's Troops being by This time within ſight of the Town, Gaal called out to Zebul, that the Enemy was there upon their March No No, ſays Zebul; Thats only the ſhadow of the Mountains. Well! but I tell you again, ſays Gaal upon their coming nearer, that they are Bands of Men and not ſhadows. Nay, ſays Zebul again, and if it be as you ſay, how comes it that you, who will have Abimelech to be a Coward, do not now prove your ſelf to be the Braver Man of the Two, and go out and Fight him? Gaal preſently Advanced toward the Enemy (though in ſome little Diſorder) and received the Firſt ſhock: but finding himſelf too Weak, and having loſt ſeveral of his Men, he fled into the Town. Zebul laid hold of This Occaſion to Calumniate Gaal with Cowardice, and ſo got him Expelled the City. Abimelech, in the mean time, being Enformed from very good hands that the Sichemites would yet go on with the Gathering of their Vintage, had ſeveral Ambuſcades in readineſs to Surprize them. And accordingly, upon their firſt coming out, he ſent a Third Part of his Army to take poſſeſſion of the City-Gates, and by That means, to cut-off the Retreat of Thoſe that were out of the Town; who were ſo hard Preſſed, and Scattered up and down, that there was a very great Slaughter made upon the Purſuit. The City it ſelf in This Interim, being Taken upon the Firſt Aſſault; Levelled with the Earth, and finally ſowed with ſalt, as the Laſt Inſult of a Triumphing Enemy. This was the End of This Miſerable Place, and People. There were yet remaining Conſiderable Numbers of Straglers and Fugitives, that had hitherto Scaped the Edge of the Sword, and Theſe gathered themſelves into a Body, flying to a Rock for Sanctuary. The Place was Naturally ſtrong, Beſide that they ordered the Running up of a Wall about it, to make it Impregnable. This they deſigned ſigned for a Retreat of Refuge; but Abimelech was uponthem with his Army before they could Fortifie it, and ſurrounding it with a mighty Pile of Dry Wood, and Faggots, they ſet fire to it; ſo that Men, Women, and Children were all Burnt to Aſhes, without ſo much as One Creature Eſcaping. The Calamitous Fate of This Wretched People would have deſerved Compaſſion, if it had not been a Juſt Judgment upon them for their Brutal Ingratitude to a Perſon that had deſerved ſo highly well at their Hands.

This Cruelty of Abimelech to the Sichemites was ſo far Inſtructive, and Exemplary to the Iſraelites, as to ſhew them what they were to Truſt to, if ever it ſhould be their Lot to fall into the ſame Hands: the uſurper being reſolved never to be Quiet till he ſhould have brought all to a Thorough Devaſtation.

Abimelech takes Thebes by Aſſault; but the Caſtle ſtands out.

It was not long after This, when he Marched with his Army againſt Thebes, where he took the Out-Town by Aſſault, but the Garriſon made their Retreat into a ſtrong Caſtle belonging to it; Abimelech puſhing the Attaque up to the very Gates, with a Reſolution, either to Force, or to put Fire to it. As he was gotten juſt under the Wall, a Woman from above Dropt a Heavy piece of a Mill-ſtone upon the Head of him, that ſtruck him to the Ground. Upon coming a little to his ſenſes, and finding that the Wound was Mortal, he called for his Armour-Bearer, and bad him Kill him Immediately, that it might not be ſaid Abimelech fell by the Hand of a Woman. The Officer did according to his Order; ſo that Abimelech paid Dear for his Inhumane Outrages againſt his Brothers, and the Sichemites, as Jothan had foretold he ſhould. Upon Abimelech's Death, the Army Diſbanded, and Every Man went to his own Home.

Abimelech Mortally wounded with apiece of a Mill-ſtone from a Wall by a Woman. His Armour-Bearer kills him.

Judges 10. The Government comes to Jair a Gileadite.

The Government of Iſrael, after This fell to Jair, a Gileadite, of the Tribe of Manaſſes: a man Every way Happy, but moſt of all in the Bleſſing of a Numerous, and a Virtuous Iſſue. He was the Father of Thirty Sons; Good and Brave Men Every One of them, and of Eminent Authority and Reputation in their Country. He lived Two and Twenty Years in This Poſt; died Ancient, and his Body was Interred at Camon, a City in Gilead.

The Iſraelites Corrupted in Religion, Government, and Manners.

The Hebrews were by This time Exceedingly Degenerated in their Manners and Religion; for they had neither Moral Honeſty, nor a ſenſe of Civil Obedience, Religion, Law or Common Juſtice left them. The Ammonites and the Philiſtines having them in Contempt upon this account made ſuch Advantage of their Weakneſs, that they brake into their Country with a Huge Army, and laid it Waſt: and not contenting themſelves to Spoil, Haraſs, and take poſſeſſion of all beyond Jordan, they were preparing alſo to Croſs the River, and make a Thorough Conqueſt of it on Both ſides.

The Ammonites and Philiſtines break in upon the Iſraelites.

Affliction brings the Iſraelites to Themſelves again. Judges 11.

Theſe Afflictions brought the Iſraelites to their Prayers, and Sacrifices again; which they ſtill made uſe of as the Laſt Reſort they had upon All their Miſdoings. By theſe Supplications, and Penitent Adreſſes God was however prevailed upon for a Grant, and promiſe of Mercy and Relief. The Ammonites being now Entered with an Army into the Country of Gilead, the Inhabitants put themſelves in Arms with a Reſolution to oppoſe them: but wanting a Head, there was one Jephtha propoſed; a Perſon in High Eſteem with the People for Conduct and Valour, both upon his Fathers Account, and his Own; For he had at That time a Conſiderable Army of his own that he kept in Pay. Upon theſe Conſiderations, they applied themſelves to him by conſent, with the Preſent State of their Caſe, and an Humble deſire that he would be pleaſed to Joyn Forces with them; and Accept of a Commiſſion from them, as General for his Life, of the whole Army. Jephtha ſtood off at firſt, not without ſome Admiration, that they ſhould come to him for help, now when they Themſelves were in Diſtreſs, that had formerly left Him in the lurch ſo meanly when he ſtood in need of them; and was withall ſo manifeſtly VVronged by his Brothers. "I was ſays he, the Son of a ſtrange VVoman, you told me, that came into the Family you knew not how, and you would have nothing to do with me. Upon "This pretence was I driven out from among you, and forced into the Land of Gilead, where I have continued ever ſince, Liſting all People that offered themſelves "to my Service, and in ſuch Condition as you now find me. The Iſraelites would not take this for an anſwer; but went preſſing him on ſtill with further Importunities and Profeſſions, till at laſt he was VVrought upon to Eſpouſe their Cauſe, and to take Charge of the Army, upon their Oaths of Fidelity to him as their General.

Upon This Agreement, the Two Bodies were Immediately Incorporated, and ſo ſoon as ever Jephtha had given the Neceſſary Orders for what was firſt to be done, he Marched away with the Army to (a) Miſpeh: and from thence ſent an Expoſtulatory Embaſſy to the King of the Ammonites; Taxing him with an Unjuſt

Invaſion

Invaſion of a Country where he had nothing to do. The Anſwer was only a Retort of the ſame Charge upon the Iſraelites, who coming out of Ægypt, took Poſſeſſion by Arms of the Land and Territories of Other People; and therefore Warned them to depart out of the Country of the Ammonites, as belonging to them in the Right of their Fathers. Jephtha on the Other hand Replied, that inſtead of Charging the Iſraelites with taking away Amorrhæa from them, they ſhould rather have acknowledged the Obligation of giving them Ammon; and Moſes might have had That too: but the Laſt Reſult was this; that as for the Lands which they had been now Three Hundred Years poſſeſſed of, they would not part with them, but by Gods Aſſiſtance defend them with their Swords. This Peremptory Declaration put a ſhort End to the Treaty, and the Embaſſadors were Diſmiſſed. The King Recriminates.

The Matter being brought to this Point, that the Controverſie was to be Decided by Arms. Jephtha made a Vow, that if ever he returned alive, and Victorious from the Battle, he would offer up to God in Sacrifice, the Firſt Living Creature he ſhould meet with after he came home again. The Preparations went on, and he Fought the Enemy; gave them a Total Overthrow, and had the Chace of them to the City of Maniath; forcing his Paſſage alſo into the Country of Ammon; where he laid ſeveral Cities Waſt, and gave the Soldiers the Spoil. This Action, in fine, ſet the People at liberty, after a Slaviſh Servitude of Eighteen Years continuance. Jephtha's Raſh Vow. Jephtha Overthrows the Ammonites.

Jephtha acquitted himſelf in This War with Great Honour; but upon returning home again, there happened to him ſo Grievous a Calamity in his Own Family, that it took off the Reliſh of all his Publick Satisfactions. For the Firſt Living Creature he ſet his Eye upon, was an Only Virgin Daughter he had, juſt coming out of the Door, big with Joy to receive, and bid him Welcome. This Encounter ſtruck him to the very Heart, and exceedingly troubled he was at her Officiouſneſs to come out to meet him, telling her the Story of the Vow, by which he had Oblig'd himſelf, upon ſuch Terms, to Offer her to God for a Sacrifice. She was not at all Dejected at the Tidings, but told her Father with a Generous Conſtancy, That ſhe ſhould never think much to part with her Life upon the Condition of Securing her Father's Honour and Succeſs, and the Liberty of her Country; only ſhe begg'd Two Months time firſt, for a Parting Lamentation with her Companions, and after That, he might be pleaſed to Perform his Vow. Her Requeſt was Granted, and at the End of the Two Months, This Innocent Devotee was made a Sacrifice, without any Reverence either to Religion, Law, or Common Fame; ſo far was Jephtha Tranſported with a Blind Zeal into a Contempt of all Other Conſiderations. Jephtha Sacrifices his Daughter.

After Jephtha's Victory over the Ammonites, and the Settling of the People in a State, or at leaſt in a fair Proſpect, of Peace and Freedom, the Envious Ephraimites ſtarted a Freſh Cauſe of Quarrel. Why ſhould He Engage in ſuch an Expedition without Them, they cry'd, but only out of an Ambitious, Covetous Deſign of Engroſſing the Honour and Profit of the Adventure wholly to Himſelf, without allowing Them any Share or part in it? Jephtha made Anſwer in his Own Defence, that They knew very well their Alles were Oppreſs'd; Nay, and that They Themſelves were Sollicited to come-in to their Aſſiſtance, but never came; though Men of Honour, in ſuch a Caſe, would not have ſtay'd for an Invitation. And then he Charged them further, with a moſt Scandalous piece of Injuſtice, for Men that durſt not look the Common Enemy in the face; now when the Work was done without them, to fall ſo Inſolently foul upon their Friends: concluding with a Menace, that if they went on in That way of Clamour and Outrage, he would make them Smart for 't. But there was no Good to be done he ſaw, with Wording and Reaſoning the Matter: So that he preſently betook himſelf to the more Convincing Argument of a Powerfull Army, with which he Advanced toward the Enemies Main Body, which they had brought from Gilead; Charg'd, and utterly defeated them; Prepoſſeſs'd themſelves of all the Fords and Paſſes upon the River Jordan; and in ſhort, follow'd the Purſuit ſo hard, that betwixt the Battle and the Chace, they cut them off near Two and Twenty Thouſand Men. Judges 12. The Ephraimites pick a Quarrel with Jephtha. Jephtha cuts off near 22000 of the Enemy.

Jephtha, after theſe Exploits, departed this Life in the Seventh Year of his Government, and was Buried at Sebeth, the place of his Nativity, in the Land of Gilead. (a) Abſan, of the City of Bethlem, in the Tribe of Judah, ſucceeded him, and Ruled for the ſpace of Seven Years, without doing any thing worth the ſpeaking of. He had Ninety Children; Sixty Males, and the reſt Daughters, which he left all Living and Marry'd. He died Ancient, and was Bury'd in his Own Country. Elon, of the Tribe of Zebulon, had the Government for Ten Years after him, and there paſs'd nothing Memorable in his Reign neither. Abdon, the Son of Heliel, ſucceeded Elon, of the Tribe of Ephraim, and Native of the City of Pharathon: a Man of a numerous Iſſue, and little remarkable for any thing elſe. But the Jephtha governd Seven Years, and dy'd at Sebeth. Abſan. Abdon ſucceed Elon.

Times

Times being Easie and Peaceable, gave him little or no Occasion, for the Exercise of his Bravery and Courage. He had Forty Sons, and Thirty Grand-Children, all Excellent Horse-men, and these Seventy were his Constant Guard. He left them all behind him; Died far in Years, and was Buried at Pharathon with Great Magnificence and State.

The Prediction, and the Birth of Samson. His Amours, and Encounters.

The Israelites Tributaries to the Philistines for Forty Years.

After the Decease of Abdon, the Philistins had the better of the Israelites, and kept them Tributaries for some Forty Years; but in the End, they were set at Liberty in this manner.

Judges 13. Manoah, an Uxorious and a Jealous Husband troubled for want of Children.

There was one Manoah, of the Tribe of Dan, and the first Man of Quality and Credit in his Country, beyond all Dispute. This Manoah had for his Wife a Lovely Woman, and one that at all Hands pass'd for the most Faultless Beauty of that Age; but to Manoah's Unspeakable Affliction he had no Children by her In this Uneasiness, he would ever and anon be taking his Wife to a Country House he had in a large Plain near at hand; in which Solitude, he spent almost his whole time, in Prayers to Almighty God for the Blessing of Children. He was Passionate to the Highest Degree, and in proportion Jealous of her. As the Woman was there Alone once, there appear'd an Angel to her in the Resemblance of a Tall Young Man, who told her for her Comfort, That God in his Providence would give her a Male-Child, who should come in time to be a Man of a very Graceful Presence, and a Prodigious Strength; and one that should take down the Pride and Stomach of the Philistines; charging her in the Name of God to let his Hair grow Uncut, and to see that he drank nothing but Water; the Vision vanishing so soon as it had deliver'd this Message. Upon her Husband's coming in, she told him of this Apparition of the Angel, wonderfully Enlarging upon the Comely Stature, and Loveliness of the Shape it appear'd in: insomuch that the Husband grew Jealous of some Unwarrantable Love under that Pretence. The Poor Woman was at her Wit's end how to cure him of this Anxious and Unreasonable Suspition, and in the Anguish of her Soul, made it her Supplication to Almighty God to send his Angel yet once again, and in such a Manner, that her Husband might be Convinc'd of the Authority of the Revelation as well as her self. Upon this Prayer of hers, the Angel, a while after, presented it self a Second time to the Woman alone, in the same Place as before: who, immediately upon the Appearance, besought the Angel's Patience till she might fetch her Husband. Her Request was granted, and so Manoah was called and came; and such was the Force of his Jealousie, that though he Actually saw the Angel, he would hardly be brought to believe his own Eyes; pressing to have the same thing said to him, over again, that had been spoken to his Wife. Let it suffice, says the Angel, that it is known to your Wife. Manoah then desir'd him to Declare who he was; to the end, that when God should send him a Child, he might know whom to Thank for't, and where to pay his Acknowledgments for the Blessing. The Angel told him, That He had no need of Rewards, neither did he expect any for his News. Why then, says Manoah, be pleased to Accept of a Hospitable, Homely Treat. The Angel Declin'd it at first; but by Prayer and Importunity he was over-perswaded to stay till somewhat might be provided. Manoah immediately Kill'd a Kid, and gave it his Wife to Dress. And when Every thing was ready, the Angel Commanded the Bread and the Flesh to be laid loose upon a Rock there, without Dishes. This being done, he Touch'd the Flesh with a Rod he had, and presently there started a Fire from it that Devoured Flesh, Bread and all; and as the Smoak mounted, the Angel was seen to be Wafted up to Heaven in the Vehicle of that Cloud. Manoah lay under a Superstitious Dread of some Great Mischief that might Betide them, upon this Vision; but his Wife kept up his Heart by a Confident Assurance, that it would turn to their Comfort, and prove the Greatest Blessing imaginable to them Both in the Conclusion. She found her self soon after to be Big, and from That time forward kept Punctually in her Mind, the Orders the Angel had given her.

The Woman foretold in a Vision, That she shall have a Male-Child.

She tells her Husband the Story, and puts him into a Jealousie.

The Husband sees the Apparition, and is still Jealous.

The Angel Disappears.

Judges 13. Samson Born.

The Child she went with prov'd to be a Son, and they gave him the Name of Samson, that is to say, Robust. He Improv'd every Day wonderfully as he grew up; in the Advantages both of his Body and Mind: insomuch that betwixt the Dignity of his Loose flowing Hair, and the Sobriety of his way of Living, in the Government of his Appetite, he seem'd to have somewhat (I know not what) in him, that was more than Humane.

It

It was his Hap once upon a Solemn Feſtival-day in Timnah, a City belonging to the Philiſtines, being there with his Parents upon That Occaſion, to fall in Love with a Damſel of the Country that he ſaw at that Meeting; and upon the Sight of her, he was very Earneſt with his Father to procure her for him in Marriage. His Parents told him, That it was againſt the Rules of their Religion to Marry with Strangers, and that there was Choice enough of Matches among the Hebrew Women that were fitter for him. But the Will and Humour of the Son prevailed over the Reaſon and Authority of the Father, and the Love proceeded to a Contract. It was Samſon's Fortune, as he was once upon the way on a Viſit to his Miſtreſs, to Encounter a Lion directly in his Paſſage. He never Shrunk or Boggled for the Matter, but Advanced up to the very Throat of him; and unarm'd, as he was, with his Naked Hands ſtrangled him; caſting the Body into a Thicket afterwards by the way-ſide. As he was upon the ſame Journey ſome Few Days after, and on the ſame Errand, he ſtept into the Wood to look at the Carcaſs of the Lion; and there he found a Swarm of Bees working their Wax and Honey in the Breaſt of him. He took out Three Honey-Combs; and with ſome Curioſities that he had gotten together, made a Preſent of them to his Bride Elect. The Nuptials being now to be Solemniz'd, his Wife's Relations and the People of the Place that were Invited, aſſigned him Thirty of their Stouteſt Young Fellows to wait upon him, as an Inſtance, in pretence, of the Great Honour and Reſpect they had for him; but in Truth, as ſo many Spies and Guards upon him, in caſe he ſhould be Troubleſome in his Cups, being a Man of ſo Unruly and Incredible a Strength. As the Gueſts grew Warm and Chearful, and paſſing from One Merriment to Another, Samſon told the Company that he had a Riddle to propound; and if any of them ſhould Reſolve it in Seven Days, he would be bound to give them every Man a Shirt, and a Coat, as a Reſpect, and a Reward; ſo that they ſhould have both Honour and Profit. Now betwixt Thoſe that had a mind to be thought Wiſe, and Others that had an Eye upon the Benefit, they Accepted the Propoſal by Conſent, and bad him put the Queſtion. Why then, ſays he, the Parable is This. [Out of the Eater came forth Meat, and out of the Strong came forth Sweetneſs.] In ſhort, the Philiſtines laid their Heads together about it, till after Three Days Puzzling, and never the nearer, they fell to work at laſt by Fair Means, and by Foul, upon the New Bride, to draw the Secret from her Husband; threatning, without any more ado, to Burn her, unleſs ſhe fiſh'd it out, and made a Full Diſcovery of the Secret. Samſon ſtood off a while, but in the End, betwixt Tears, Importunities, and Reproaches, (for ſhe imputed his Refuſal to his want of Love) he was prevail'd upon to give her the whole Story, of his killing the Lion, and of the Honey-combs he brought her; and ſo Expounded the Riddle from End to End, without ſo much as Dreaming of any Myſtery or Intrigue. But ſtill, whatever he told her, ſhe told it again to the Philiſtines. The SeventhDay was now come, which was the Preciſe Term appointed for the Solution of this Difficulty; ſo that the Philiſtines met before Sun-ſet, and told Samſon, by way of Anſwer to his Queſtion, That nothing is Stronger than a Lion, or Sweeter than Honey. No, ſays Samſon, nor Falſer than the Woman that has given you the Key to this Cypher. This did not hinder Samſon yet from making Good what he had promiſed; for he ſtript Thirty Men of Askalon, [which are reckon'd among the Philiſtines] and made payment of the Shirts and Coats he had Undertaken for. He caſt off his Wife upon't; and ſhe in Spite Marry'd his Friend that ſollicited the Match, which Samſon took for ſo Unpardonable an Affront, that he determin'd a Revenge, not only upon the Woman, but upon the whole Nation for it; having at that Time alſo a Fair Opportunity before him of putting it in ſome Meaſure in Execution. It was then towards Harveſt-time, and the Corn being Ripe upon the Ground, Samſon got Three Hundred Foxes, and tying them Tail to Tail, with Firebrands between them, turn'd them Looſe into the Fields of the Philiſtines. In the hurry of this Fright, they carry'd the Fire from place to place all over the Grounds; and where-ever they came, they deſtroy'd all the Fruits of the Earth in an Inſtant. So ſoon as the Philiſtines came to underſtand, That it was Samſon's doing, and what it was Provoked him to it: They ſent the Princes of the Country to Thamna, who took up the Wife of Sampſon, and all her Relations, and Burnt them Alive, as the Authors of This Calamity.

Samſon made ſeveral Bloody Inrodes into the Land of the Philiſtines; and took up his Habitation at Etam, a Rock of Great Strength, and in the Tribe of Judah; againſt which Tribe Entire, the Philiſtines were now upon the Point of declaring War. The People pleaded for themſelves, that they liv'd Quietly, and paid their Taxes, and that they hop'd they ſhould not be Puniſh'd for Samſon's Fault; but it was turn'd upon them, that nothing could Diſcharge them of Samſon's Guilt, but the Delivering up of Samſon's Perſon. They were ſo much concern'd to clear themſelves of This Suſpicion, that they drew together Three Thouſand Arm'd Men, and marched to the Place of his Retreat: where they enter'd into Expoſtulations with his People, what a Miſchief Samſon's Violence had drawn upon the Hebrews, in ſtirring up an Enemy againſt them, that might bring a Ruine perhaps upon the whole Race. Their coming, they ſaid, was only to take Poſſeſſion of his Perſon, and give him up to the Philiſtines, which they deſired him to Submit to, both for Their ſakes and His, as his Own Voluntary Act. Upon this Overture Samſon came down from the Rock, and upon their Solemn Oath that they would do him no further Hurt, than barely to deliver him up into the hands of the Enemy, he rendered up his Perſon to his Country-men, who led him away, according to the Agreement, near to a place that was formerly Obſcure, but ſince made Famous by a Memorable Exploit of Samſon's there. Not far from the Enemies Camp, the People came out in Troups to Meet them, with ſhouts of Joy and Exultation, for the Good Fortune that had befallen them. Samſon in the mean while brake his Chords to Pieces, and with the Jaw-Bone of an Aſs that lay there upon the Ground, fell upon the Philiſtines, and Defeated them; Killed a matter of a Thouſand upon the place, and Routed all the reſt. Samſon was ſo Tranſported upon the Thought of This Victory, that he had the Vanity to Aſſume the Honour of the Action to himſelf, without Aſcribing the Glory of it to Gods Power and Providence, as he ought to have done. But while This Arrogant, and Overweening Humour was yet upon him, he found himſelf Seized with a Violent Parching (a) Thirſt; which gave him to Underſtand, that after all his Succeſſes, he was but Fleſh and Bloud ſtill, and liable to Humane Infirmities. The ſenſe of This Diſorder brought him to the Knowledge of himſelf, and to a Penitent Confeſſion that the Victory was Gods, and that he was able to do Nothing of Himſelf, without the Divine Aſſiſtance. He begged pardon for his paſt Vanity and Preſumption, and ſo caſts himſelf wholly for the future, upon Gods Infinite Power and Goodneſs; as his only dependence for Deliverance out of all his Diſtreſſes. His Prayers were not in vain, for there Guſhed immediately out of a Rock near at hand there, a ſtream of Delicious VVater to Relieve him in his Raging Drought: which Rock, from the Exploit of Samſon, bears the Name of the Jaw, unto this very Day. After this Combat, Samſon made Nothing of the Philiſtines; but went Publiquely to Gaza, and took up his Lodging there in a Common Inn. The Governour of the Town getting Notice of it, had Guards and Spies ſet at the Gates to VVatch him; that he ſhould not give them the ſlip; but Samſon, having ſome Hint of the Deſign, got up at Midnight, and taking the Gates off the Hinges, carried them away upon his ſhoulders, Frames, Bolts, Locks, and every thing that belonged to them, to Mount Hebron, and there he left them.

Samſon was now come by little and little to a Great Abatement of the Reverence he formerly had for the Laws of his Country, and conſequently to a Hankering after the Laws and Cuſtoms of Other Nations, which proved in time the Foundation of his Ruine. It was his hap to fall paſſionately in love with a Common Proſtitute of the Philiſtines, whoſe Name was Dalilah; and the Amour was gone ſo far, that they lived and accompanied together. The Judges finding how Great a Power this Mercenary Woman had over him, made uſe of her Intereſt, by Flattery and Corruption, toward the Betraying of him. It was their Buſineſs upon the main, ſome way or other to Deſtroy Samſon, and the part ſhe had to play, was to find out his Weak-ſide, and to Diſcover where That Invincible ſtrength of his lay. This was the State and Condition of Affairs betwixt the Philiſtines, and the Harlot, and as there wanted not either Art, or Bribery, on the one ſide, ſo neither was there any Failing in the Matter of Treachery, and Good Will, on the other, for the bringing of it about ſhe took all Occaſions in his Cups, and Daliances, to be ſtill Admiring his ſtrange Activity, and Vigour; and Nothing would ſerve her, but ſhe muſt needs know where That Excellency lay, that put ſuch an Unaccountable Difference betwixt Samſon, and all other Men. Now Samſon had as yet ſo much wit in his Freak, as to put of his Miſtreſs at preſent, with a Trick for her Trick: and ſo told her that if his Hands were but Bound with Seven Green Withs, or Creepers of a Vine, it would be with him as it is with other Men. Dalilah ſaid no more, but went away preſently to the Magiſtrates with the ſtory. Upon This Report there were Soldiers ordered privately into the Houſe, who upon the firſt Opportunity of finding Samſon Drunk, and drowſie, laid hold of him, and bound him according to their Inſtructions: but Dalilah awakened him immediately with an outcry, that the Philiſtines were upon him. Samſon upon the very Inſtant, took the Alarum, and Snapping the Withs like Twine-Threads, put himſelf in Poſture as for the Encounter of an Enemy.

There

There followed a Heavy Squabble a little while after, betwixt Dalilah and Samſon. If he had loved her, ſhe ſaid, he could never have denied her a thing her Heart was ſet upon; but ſhe found he durſt not Truſt her, and ſo Fobbed her off with a Tale; as if ſhe could not keep a Secret as well as Another Woman. At this rate ſhe went on, putting the ſame Queſtion to him over again; and over again he Fooled her too, with a Mock-ſtory, that if he were tied up with a Band of Seven Chords it would do the Work; but upon Trial, that Experiment failed them likewiſe; and ſo did a Third alſo, of Filleting, and Twiſting up his Locks. Dalilah having been now thrice Impoſed upon, was not at all Diſcouraged yet, but betwixt Spite, and Willfulneſs, preſſed him ſo hard with Freſh Charms and Importunities, that he was now brought to the Laſt Fatal Neceſſity of yielding up what he could hold no longer; and ſo he up and told her. "That God, ſays he, that gave me my Being, hath been pleaſed in "his Goodneſs, to take me into his particular Care, and to give me in ſpecial Charge "not to ſuffer my Hair to be Cut, for that in the preſervation of That Hair conſi- "ſted my Security and Strength. Upon this Diſcovery, ſhe cut off his Locks in his Sleep, and when he was no longer able to defend himſelf, delivered him up to his Enemies, who put out his Eyes, and carried him up and down in Bonds, for a Spectacle. Some Conſiderable time after this when Samſon's Hair was well grown again, there was a Great Meeting of the Princes, and Nobility of the Philiſtines. The Feaſt was held in a Building that had only two Large Pillars to ſupport the Roof of it. While they were together at This Feſtival, in their Jollity, Blind Samſon was ſent for to make Sport for the Company. Nothing went ſo near the Heart of him, as the Indignation of finding himſelf out of Condition to be revenged of his ſolent Enemies; but he ſpake to the Boy however that led him, to let him lean againſt one of the Pillars, for he was weary he ſaid, of ſtanding. The Boy did ſo; and Samſon, with all his might gave the Pillar ſuch a ſhake, that he brought down the Houſe upon the Heads of Three Thouſand Men beſides Himſelf, and they were all Cruſhed to death under the Ruines.

This was Samſon's End, in the Twentieth Year of his Government. He was a Man of Wonderful Strength and Courage, and to his Immortal Honour, he Employed his uttermoſt Force to the Confuſion of his Enemies. It is true that it was his hap to be Inveigled by a Women; and where is he that hath not been ſo more or leſs, that carries Fleſh and Blood, and Humane Frailty about him? To ſay nothing of his Other Excellent Qualities, that deſerve Eternal Memory. His dead Body was under the Care of his Kindred, who cauſed it to be Tranſported to Saraſa, and there laid by his Fathers.

CHAP. II.

Of Naomi, Ruth, and Booz. The Birth of Samuel, The Hebrews defeated by the Philiſtines.

ELI the High Prieſt ſucceeded Samſon in the Government of the Iſraelites; and in his Time, there happened a Miſerable Famine. Abimelech, a Citizen of Bethlehem, in the Tribe of Judah, that was loth to ſtand it out, took Naomi his Wife, and Two Sons that he had by her, Mallon, and Chellion, and ſo withdrew into the Land of Moab, where Every thing went proſperouſly with him, and they Married their Sons to Two Women of the Country; Chellion, to Orpha, and Mallon, to Ruth. Within the Compaſs of Ten Years Abimelech and his Two Sons Died, in a ſhort time one after another. Upon their Deceaſe, Naomi, that had now to her Inconſolable Affliction, loſt thoſe Dear Friends and Relations, for whoſe only ſake ſhe was prevailed upon to quit her Country, with this Change of Affairs changed Counſels too; and reſolved to go back again; eſpecially being Informed that Matters at Home were now in a Better State than ſhe left them. Her Sons Widows could not endure to think of Parting with her, but preſſed her with Importunities, even whether ſhe would or no, to bear her Company. She wiſhed them all manner of Good Fortunes, and that they might be Happier in their next Husbands than they had been with Her Sons, but alas! She was not in Condition, ſhe ſaid, to be any way Helpful to them; and for them to Venture a Certainty for an Uncertainty, in the Riſque of ſuch a Journey, only to Condole with a Miſerable Mother-in Law, to no ſort of purpoſe; ſhe was Utterly againſt it, ſhe ſaid. Upon This Reaſoning of the matter, Orpha was over-ruled; but for Ruth's part, come Life come death, Nothing ſhould ever make her forſake her Mother, ſhe ſaid: So that Naomi, without any more Ceremony, went her way, and took Ruth along with her.

When they came to Bethlehem, they were there received by Booz, a Kinſman of Abimelech's, and the People calling Naomi by her Name; Nay, ſays Naomi, let it be rather Mara: The Former in Hebrew ſignifying Felicity; the Other, Sorrow. It was now Harveſt-time, and Ruth, with her Mothers leave, being gone out a Gleaning for ſomewhat to Eat, ſhe happened into a Field of Booz, who a while after came Himſelf, and upon the ſight of This Young Woman, Enquired more particularly of his Head-Servant what he knew concerning her. So he told his Maſter over again what he had heard from her Before. Booz was wonderfully pleaſed with the Tenderneſs of her Affection for her Mother-in-Law, and for the Memory of her Dead Husband; and therefore Ordered his Servant, not only to ſuffer her to Glean what ſhe could, but to let her Reap, and Carry away whatever ſhe had a mind to, and to ſupply her with Meat and Drink Sufficient, in common with his own People. Ruth ſaved part of the Bread and Proviſions they gave her, for her Mother-in-Law, and at night carried it to her, with her Gleanings, all together; Naomi doing the like for Ruth, in what ſhe had received That day from her Charitable Neighbours. As they were together in the Evening, Ruth gave her Mother the whole Hiſtory of what paſſed betwixt her and Booz; the Mother giving her to Underſtand that Booz was her near Relation, and that being a Conſiderable Perſon, and a Man of Great Piety, ſhe did not know but he might take his Poor Kindred into his Care. So that Ruth went on ſtill, day after day, into the Fields a Gleaning with the Maid-Servants of Booz, till the Harveſt was over; and then after ſome few days, when the Corn was Thraſhed out, Booz took up his Lodging in his own Barn, which coming to Naomi's Knowledge, put her upon a Contrivance, how ſhe might bring Him and Ruth to lie together, to the Advantage of them Both: which was, that Ruth ſhould Convey her ſelf into the Barn to the feet of Booz, and there lie down to take her Reſt. Ruth making a Conſcience of Obeying her Mother, did as ſhe was Commanded. But Booz, being faſt aſleep, knew nothing at all of the Matter, till waking about Midnight, he found that he had gotten a Companion; and calling out to know who it was, Ruth told him her Name, and begged his Permiſſion, in the Quality of his Servant, that ſhe might ſtill lie at his Feet. There paſſed no more Words at preſent but Early in the Morning before any of the Servants were gotten up to their Work, he called to Ruth, and bad her take as much Corn as ſhe could Carry, and be gone immediately to her Mother with it, before any notice could be taken where ſhe had been That night; for, ſays he, in caſes of This Nature, people cannot be too Cautious, let them be never ſo Innocent. But in one Word, ſays he, before you go; there is a Perſon nearer to you in Bloud than my ſelf. My advice is, that you demand him for your Husband. If he agrees to it, you are bound to follow him: If he refuſes, I can Lawfully take you to Wife my ſelf. With This ſhort Word of Comfort, Ruth returned to her Mother, who upon hearing the ſtory, bleſſed the Providence of finding her Affairs in ſo Good Hands.

Ruth 3.

Ruth, by the advice of Naomi, lays her ſelf in the night at the Feet of Booz.

About the Noon-time of the Day, Booz was back again at the City, where he called a Court, and Summoned Ruth and her Kinſman, to make their Appearance. Well! ſays Booz, to the Kinſman. If I am not Miſtaken, you are at preſent poſſeſſed of the Eſtate of Abimelech, and his Sons. I am ſo, ſays T'other, and the Law has put me in poſſeſſion of it by Virtue of a Right I have to it by nearneſs of Blood. Pray, ſays Booz, do not talk of the Law by Halves; but whether it be for you, or againſt you, take your Lot in the one part as well as in the other. Here ſtands before you the Widow of Mallon, and you are Bound by the Law to Marry the Woman, or to Quit the Inheritance. The Kinſman Excuſed himſelf from Marrying her, by ſaying that he had a Wife and Children of his Own already; and ſo by a Publique Declaration in Court, rendered both the one and the other to Booz, he being then the next akin to the Deceaſed. Booz had this Declaration Recorded, and then (a) Commanded the Woman to Looſen her Kinſmans ſhooe, and (b) Spit in his Face, according to a Formality of Law. This being done he took Ruth for his Wife, and within the Compaſs of a Year, ſhe brought him a Son which he committed to the Care of Naomi, and by Advice of the Women called him Obed, which in Hebrew, is as much as Service, or Aſſiſtance; applying the Name to the Aſſiſtance they Expected from him to Naomi in her Old age. From Obed came Jeſſe, and Jeſſe was the Father of King David; in whoſe Family the Government continued for one and Twenty Generations. I have been the more Particular in this Hiſtory of Ruth, to ſet forth the Power, and Diſpenſations of God in his Providence, that brings the Greateſt Things to paſs, even by the Meaneſt of Inſtruments, advancing to the Throne, many times, Men of the Loweſt Condition, according to his Good Pleaſure. This we find Verified abundantly in the Genealogy of David.

Mat-

Matters at This time went very Ill with the Hebrews, having Engaged themſelves a-freſh in a War with the Philiſtines. Eli the High-Prieſt had Two Sons, Hophni, and Phinehas: who were Libertines to the Higheſt degree, in the Contempt of Religion, and Common Juſtice. They were Men that ſtuck at Nothing that was Ill. The Ordinary way of Gratuities, and Honorary Preſents would not ſerve their Turn, unleſs Every thing were Extorted from them by Violence and Rapine. They made it their Buſineſs to Debauch Women, even at their Devotions, and to Corrupt them by Bribes and Flattery, at the very Altar: and all This, with an Inſolence Equal to any Tyranny that ever was heard of. The Profligate Wickedneſs of Theſe Licentious Men went to the very Soul of their Father, by reaſon of the Daily Dread and Apprehenſion he lived in, of ſome Terrible Judgment that would befall them. To ſay Nothing of the Groans of the People under a moſt Intolerable Oppreſſion; but when it came ſoon after to be revealed by God to the Father, and to the Prophet Samuel, who was at that time but a Child, what would be the wretched Fate of Theſe Men, Eli gave them quite over, and mourned for them as already Loſt, or dead. But for Order ſake, I ſhall firſt ſpeak a Word of the Prophet, and paſs afterward to the Wretched End of Theſe Lewd Young Men, and ſo to the True Cauſe of the Miſeries that befell the Hebrews.

1 Samuel 2. Eli's two Sons, Hophni and Phinehas, Notorious Libertines.

There was one Elkanah, a Levite, and an Inhabitant of Ramath, in the Lot of Ephraim, that had Two Wives, Hannah and Phenannah: By the Latter he had Children, but by the Former, for a good while, None at all: but This Diſappointment however did not one jot Leſſen his Affections to her. Coming one Day with his Family to Shilo to Worſhip, the Holy Tabernacle being there, as has been ſaid heretofore, Elkanah made a Diſtribution of Part of his own Portion and Proviſion, to his Wives and Children; Phenannah, and Her Little ones, feeding together. This ſight made ſuch an Impreſſion upon Hannah, that ſhe lookt upon it as a Tacit Reproach of her Barrenneſs, and upon that Thought, betwixt Grief and Envy, burſt out a Weeping. Her Husband and Friends did what they could to Comfort her; but ſhe rejected All, and in That Paſſion went away directly to the Tabernacle: where ſhe beſought God with Earneſt Supplications to grant her the Comfort of a Son, Vowing, with a moſt Religious Solemnity, to Dedicate him wholly, and in a moſt Peculiar Manner, to his Worſhip and Service. The Length, and Earneſtneſs of her Prayers gave Eli, who was then ſitting before the Tabernacle, an Occaſion to Suſpect ſhe was in Drink; inſomuch that he called out to That Drunken Woman to be gone. She made Anſwer that ſhe drank Nothing but Water, only her Heart was Heavy for want of Children; and that ſhe was now Imploring God in his Mercy to make her a Mother. Eli bad her ſet her Mind at reſt then, for God would ſend her Children. Upon This Encouragement ſhe went back Chearfully to her Husband; fell to her Meat again, (which before went againſt her Stomach) and ſo returned with her Husband into the Country, where, after a while, ſhe Conceived, and in Due time brought forth a Son, whom they called Samuel; That is to ſay; Asked of God. The Parents returning to Shilo, to Offer up Sacrifice, and pay their Tenths, according to Cuſtom, and to give God thanks for the Bleſſing of a Son, the Woman was not Unmindful of her Vow but delivered the Child up to Eli, and Dedicated him to God. They let his Hair grow; His Drink was altogether Water, and his Station, about the Temple where he Officiated, and was in time to become a Prophet. Hannah, after This, brought Elkanah other Sons, and Three Daughters.

The Birth of Samuel.

When Samuel was juſt Entered into the Thirteenth Year of his Age, he began to Prophecy; and as he lay aſleep one night, God called him by Name. He took it for Eli's Voice, and ſo went to him to know his Pleaſure; but Eli had not called him, he ſaid; and ſo he told him over and over again, upon a Second, and a Third call after the ſame Manner: But Eli finding at laſt where the Miſtake lay, told him that it was God that Called him; wherefore, My Son, ſays Eli, whenever thou Heareſt the Voice again, let This be thy Anſwer; Here I am Lord; ſpeak, for thy Servant heareth, and is ready to Obey thee. The Words that Eli put into his Mouth, Samuel made Uſe of at the next Call, and the Voice then went forward, ſaying, "Since thou art here at hand, I will now give thee to know, that the Iſraelites "are at this Inſtant upon the Brink of ſo Dreadful a Calamity, that is not to be Ex- "preſſed, or Believed, and hardly to be Conceived. The Two Sons of Eli ſhall "be Cut-off Both in a Day; the High-Prieſthood taken away for ever, from himſelf and "his Family, and Transferred to Eleazar; for Eli (ſays the Voice) hath had "more regard to his Sons, than to my Worſhip, though to the Common Deſtructi- "on of them all. Samuel was not willing to be the Reporter of Theſe Diſmal Tidings to Eli, and his Family, but being Adjured by the High-Prieſt to give him a Faithful Account of the Whole Revelation, he delivered it in Order from Point to Point, and left the Old Man no Place to doubt of the Inevitable Deſtruction of his Sons. Samuel's Reputation Encreaſed daily for a Prophet that never failed.

1 Sam. 4. At the ſame time the Philiſtines Marched with an Army againſt the Iſraelites, and Encamped in Ampheck; but Meeting there with no Oppoſition, they advanced further, and came ſoon after to a Battle, wherein the Hebrews were routed; and having loſt 4000 upon the Place, the Remainder fled, and were Purſued to their very Tents.

The Hebrews loſe 4000 Men in a Battle with the Philiſtines. This Blow ſtruck the Hebrews with ſo Mortal a Dread, that they gave all, in a manner, for as good as Loſt, and ſent immediately to the High-Prieſt, and the Elders, to Cauſe the Ark of God to be brought into the Army; That by its Preſence they might obtain a Victory; little dreaming that they were doomed to Deſtruction by a Higher Power than that of the Ark; nay, by that Divine Original, for whoſe ſake Alone the Ark it ſelf was had in Veneration.

The Ark is brought into the Army. The Ark however was brought into the Field, the Sons of the High-Prieſt attending it with a Charge, that if it ſhould happen to be Loſt, they ſhould never look their Father in the Face again. Phinehas Aſſiſted only as the Old Mans Deputy, who was Far gone in Years, and out of Condition for That Service. The Preſence of the Ark Inſpired the Hebrews with New Courage; as if the very Appearance of it brought Victory along with it, while the Other ſide looked upon it as a Foreboding of their Ruine; but upon the Event, they Both found themſelves Miſtaken; for the Hopes of the one were Diſappointed, and ſo were the Fears of the other alſo; if an Error to their Advantage may be called a Diſappointment. But in ſhort, the Hebrews turned their backs upon the

1 Sam. 4. THE ſad News of This Overthrow, and the Taking of the Ark, being brought to Shiloh by a Young Benjamite that made his Eſcape out of the Battle, filled the City with Mournful Cries and Lamentations, which coming to the Ear of the High-Prieſt, as he ſat Mounted upon a High-Chair at one of the Gates, gave him reaſonably to preſume the Truth of the Matter, and that ſome Miſerable Diſaſter had befallen the Army. So he called for the Young Man to ſpeak with him, from whom he Underſtood the Particulars, and the Event of the Battle. As for the Loſs of Men, and for the Death of his Sons, he ſupported That part of the ſtory with Conſtancy enough, being, in truth, prepared for it by a Revelation, which gave him Foreknowledge of ſo much of the Calamity, and he bare it the better, in regard that it

Eli falls down dead upon the News of the Arks being Taken. was no Surprize to him. But when he came to the Circumſtance of the Ark being Taken, the ſtroke was ſo Unexpected, that he ſunk under the Weight of it; Dropt down from his feet, and gave up the Ghoſt; in the Ninety-Eighth-Year of his Age, and the Fortyeth of his Government. The Wife of Phinehas, that was Seven Months gone with Child; fell in Labour upon the News of her Husbands Death, and died the ſame Day; but the Child lived, and was called Ichabod: (That is to ſay, Shame and Ignominy) pointing at the Diſgrace of That Defeat.

The Succeſſion of the High-Prieſthood. Eli was the Firſt of the Family of Ithamar, (Another of the Sons of Aaran) that Exerciſed the Function of High-Prieſt; for till Then, it paſſed from Father to Son in the Line of Eleazar: who left it to Phinehas; and He to his Son Abiezer: from him it went to his Son Bocejas, and thence to his Son Ozis, whence afterward to Eli, of whom we are now ſpeaking; and in his Family it Continued till the Reign of King Solomon, after which it returned again to the Houſe of Eleazar.

CHAP. I.

The Taking of the Ark. Dagon falls down before it. The Plagues that Attended it, till it was brought back again.

AFter this Rout of the Hebrews, and the Taking of the Ark Prisoner, as is said already, the Philistins carry'd it to [a] Azotus, in Triumph, and there Lodged it among Other Donatives, and Trophyes, in the Temple of their God Dagon. Upon coming thither next day to their Morning-Devotions, there was Dagon Tumbled down from his Pedestal, and lying flat upon the Ground before the Ark. This Accident put them into a Superstitious Confusion what to think of it; but they presently helped him up again, and put him in his former Place. They continued going and coming, off and on, as they had Occasion, and still as they set him Right One Day, they were sure to find him Prostrate upon the Floor, and in a Posture of Adoring the Ark next time they came, which ran in the People's Heads as the Worst of Omens. In conclusion, the City and Province of Azotus was Visited with a most Judicial Plague of the Guts, which Rotted them Alive, and carry'd them-off by a Violent Dysentery, with Vomitings, and Torments not to be Express'd. They had Another Plague in the Fields too; That is to say, such Swarms of Mice that they lay'd all Wast where-ever they came; Plants, Fruit, Corn, and in short, Nothing Scap'd them. While the People of Azotus lay Groaning under These Afflictions, without any Hope or Prospect of Ease or Remedy, they came to Understand that All This had befall'n them for their Sacrilegious Violence upon the Ark; and that at This rate, all things Consider'd, they had pay'd Dear for the Victory: So that they sent a Messenger with a Request to the People of Ascalon, that They would be pleased to take the Ark into their City; who were so far from any Difficulty of Complying with them that they most Thankfully admitted it. After a short time they found, that the Judgments went along with the Ark; for the very Plagues of Azotus were now Transported to Ascalon: And it stay'd not long there neither, but was still sent away from Place to Place, one after another, till it had Travell'd through Five of the Philistins Cityes; and where-ever it went, the same Calamityes Attended it, with Such a Mortality, as if Divine Justice had Imposed a Tribute upon the Violators of God's Holy Worship. The Ark Wander'd, in fine, so long, and so far, that People were grown Shy of it, and would have Nothing further to do with it: So that it was now the Question, how to get Quit of it for good and all.

The Plagues that went along with it, Through the five Cities of Gath, Ekron, Ascalon, Gaza, and Ashdod.

To This End, there was a Councel call'd of the Principal Men of the Five Cityes before spoken of: That is to say, of [b] Gath, Ekron, Ascalon, Gaza, and Ashdod, to advise what Measures to take upon This Occasion. Some were of Opinion at first, for sending the Ark back to the Owners of it; for the God, they Saw, that had it under his Care, would vindicate it, having already upon That Account Deſtroy'd their People with Peſtilential Diſeaſes, and lay'd Several of their Cityes Deſolate. There were ſome again, that would not Allow the Ark to be a Thing of Moment enough to make all This Buſsle about. If God, they cry'd, had ſuch a Kindneſs for it, why did he ſuffer the Enemy to take it? (and an Enemy of Another Religion too.) So that This Party was abſolutely againſt the Sending of it Home again; Adviſing them rather to bear the Common Chances of Humane Life with Courage, and Patience: and to conſider, like Wiſe Men, that there was Nothing in all this, but according to the Courſe of Nature, that has a Power over Men's Bodyes, Plants, Seaſons, and the like, to do greater Wonders then any thing here Amounted to. There remained yet Another Sort, and Men of Gravity and Experience too, that Adviſed a Middle Courſe betwixt either ſending it Home, or Detaining it; and This Expedient carry'd it from the Former, as being more Congruous to the Preſent Humour and Affair. The Propoſal was This, that there ſhould be made Five Golden Images, One for Each of the Five Cityes, and Dedicated to God, in Acknowledgment of his Goodneſs in delivering them from a Plague by his Allmighty Power, which was out of the reach of any Natural Remedy to Relieve. They Propounded alſo Five Golden Mice, alluding to the Vermin that Devour'd their Plants; all to be put in a Box, and lay'd upon the Ark; the Ark it ſelf to be put into a New Wagon, made Expreſly for That Service, and ſo to be drawn by Two Milch-Kine, their Calves ſhut up, and left behind to keep them from Lingring upon the Way: This Wagon, with the Ark, to be Conducted to the Parting of Three Ways; and the Cattle there left at Liberty to go whither they pleaſ'd. If they took the Hebrew Road, and went forward in it, the Calamityes they ſuffer'd might be Imputed to the Ark; but if they bent their Courſe any Other way, they might conclude there was Nothing of the Ark in the Caſe. This Advice was the Senſe of Every Man that was there Preſent; and it was ſoon after put in Execution: Every thing being provided according to the Order; the Wagon drawn out to the Croſs-way; and the Company leaving it.

CAHP. II.

The Joy of the Iſraelites at the Return of the Ark. A Miraculous Victory Obtain'd over the Philiſtins.

THe Beaſts being left to Themſelves, ſtruck directly into the Hebrew way, and went forward in it as directly as if they had been Led, or Driven. Divers Philiſtins following at a Diſtance, out of a Curioſity to ſee whither they would go, and where they would Take-up. They went Travelling-on till they came to [a] Bethſhemeth, a Village in the Tribe of Judah, and there they ſtopt, notwithſtanding the Temptation of a Large Plain in ſight to Invite them further. It was now Sumer-Harveſt, and the People all Buſy about their Corn; but upon This Occaſion there came Great Multitudes Thronging in: Some from their Work; Others from their Houſes in the Village, to ſee the Ark; and Overjoy'd they were at the Occaſion. Upon coming to the Wagon, they took down the Ark and the Box, with the Images, and Mice in it, and ſet them down upon a Great Stone that was there in the Field. After This, they Sacrificed and Feaſted; Preſenting both the Wagon it ſelf, and the Beaſts that Drew it, to God, for a Burnt-Offering. So ſoon as This Ceremony was over, the Philiſtins, that had follow'd them thus far, returned into their Own Country. Upon This Occaſion ſeveral of the Bethſhemites, to the Number of Seventy, fell under God's Diſpleaſure for the Temerity of laying Prophane Hands upon the Ark, without the Due Authority and Qualification of the Prieſthood. This Judgment caſt a Terrible Damp upon the Spirits of the Multitude in the Middle of their Rejoycings, to ſee ſo many of their Friends and Companions taken away from them by ſo Judicial a Stroke. By this Calamity, they became Conſcious to themſelves of their own Unworthineſs to have the Ark of God Lodged under their Care: ſo that they ſent Meſſengers up and down to all the Hebrews, with Advice, that the Philiſtins had brought it back again. Upon this Notice, it was forthwith Tranſported to Kiriath-Jearim, not far from Bethſhemeth in the Houſe of Aminadab, a Levite; a Man of Great Repute for Religion and Integrity, and therefore the fitter for the Entertainment of ſo Sacred a Truſt. It was committed to the Charge of Himſelf, and his Sons, and with Them it reſted Twenty Years; (ſaving only the Four Months that it was Detained by the Philiſtins,) to the Great Honour of Themſelves, and the Satisfaction of the People. For the Twenty Years that the Ark continued at Kiriath-Jearim, the People ſpent their whole time almoſt in Prayers and Sacrifices; Attendances upon God's Worſhip, and the Exerciſe of Holy Dutyes. Samuel took an Occaſion from This good Diſpoſition of the Multitude, to Harangue them upon the Subject of Liberty, and the Bleſſings that Attend it; Accommodating his Diſcourſe very Pertinently, both to the Seaſon, and to his Bus'neſs.

Samuel to the Multitude, upon the Subject of Religion, Liberty, and Good Manners.

Ye Men of Iſrael, ſays he, ſince you find by Experience that the Malice of your Enemyes is Implacable, and that your Earneſt Supplications to God for Relief, are Graciouſly Receiv'd; You ſhall do well to Conſider, that your Wiſhing for the Freedom you want, will never do Your Bus'neſs, without Exerting your Power to the Uttermoſt, upon the Proper Means of Procuring it; for to do Othewiſe, is but Praying One way, and Acting Another. Wherefore, in the Firſt Place, be Careful not to bring a Scandal upon your Profeſſion by Ill manners, but Inure your ſelves to the Love and Practice of Juſtice, without Partiality or Corruption. Purge your Minds of all Groſs Affections; Turn to God, Call upon him, and Adore him; and Honour him in your Lives and Converſations, as well as with your Lips. Do Good things and Good will come of it: That is to ſay, Liberty, and Victory; for Theſe are Bleſſings not to be Obtain'd by Force of Men, Strength of Body, or Bands of Soldiers; but God, who is Truth it ſelf, hath promiſed them, as the Rewards of Probity and Righteouſneſs, and you may depend upon it, he will never Diſappoint you. This Diſcourſe was follow'd with the Acclamation of the whole Multitude, who with One Voice made a ſolemn Profeſſion of their Readyneſs to do or ſuffer any thing that it ſhould pleaſe God to Will, and Command them.

Samuel calls an Aſſembly to Mizpeh.

Samuel, after This, ſummoned the People to a Congregation in a City call'd [a]Mizpeh, (That is to ſay, Conſpicuous) where they drew Water, and Sacrificed; ſpending the Whole Day in Faſting and Prayer. The Philiſtins, in the mean time, were not without Intelligence of This Meeting of the Hebrews; and ſo they Advanced toward them with a very Great Army, deſigning to fall upon them, while they were utterly unprepared for Action, and not ſo much as Dreaming of any Occaſion for it. This Surprize put them into the Greateſt Terror Imaginable; inſomuch, that they went Trembling, and Half Dead to Samuel for Advice what to do; telling him flat and plain, that they had neither Hearts, nor Strength, to Encounter an Enemy by whom they had been ſo often Worſted. They ſhould be Glad to be Quiet, they ſaid, without provoking ſo Powerful an Adverſary. They told him that They came thither in Obedience only to his Order, to offer up Prayers and Sacrifices, and to enter into a Military Oath of Fidelity; and here are we, they ſaid, Naked, and Unarmed, at Mercy, without any Hope or Poſſibility of Coming-off, unleſs You can prevail with God to Reſcue us Miraculouſly out of the Hands of the Philiſtins. Samuel bad them fear Nothing; for God had promis'd them his Protection and Aſſiſtance, and he would moſt certainly make good his Word. So Samuel Sacrificed a Sucking Lamb to God, in the Name of the People; Imploring his Aid againſt the Power of the Philiſtins, in favour of the Hebrews, who put their whole Truſt in Him, and not to Forſake them at preſent, in the danger of a Second, and a Final Ruine. God Accepted of the Sacrifice, and Anſwer'd Samuel's Requeſt with the Comfortable Aſſurance of giving the Hebrews an Entire Victory. But while the Sacrifice was yet upon the Altar, and not wholly Conſumed, the Philiſtins drew out in a Body, and Preſented themſelves in Order of Battle, in ſuch Hopes and Aſſurances of a Victory, as if the Jews were already taken and ſurprized; without either Arms or Order, or the Leaſt Thought or Deſign of Fighting. The Event however prov'd ſo Contrary to what they Expected, that if the Iſſue had been foretold by an Oracle it would not have been Believ'd.

In the Firſt place, God ſhook the Foundations of the Earth under the Feet of the Philiſtins, ſo that they could not ſtand without Staggering. Elſewhere it Open'd, and ſwallow'd them up alive before they knew where they were: and all This, Accompanied with ſuch Dreadful Claps of Thunder, and Flaſhes of Lightening, that their very Eyes, and Limbs were Scorched, to the degree that they could neither ſee their Way before them, nor ſtand to their Arms. In this Conſternation, they fled, in as Defenceleſs a Condition, as if they had been ſo many naked Men without their Arms; Samuel and his People following them upon the Heel with a Terrible Slaughter, [a] till they came to a Place called Chore; and there he Fixed a kind of Monumental Stone, in the Nature of a Trophee, for a Mark of the Bounds, both of the Victory, and of the Chace, calling the Place, the [Strong,] in remembrance of God's Powerful Assistance of his People in the Action. The Philistins were so Cow'd, and Cast-down with This Disaster, that betwixt the Dread they had of the Hebrews, and the Memory of what they Suffer'd, they never had the Hearts afterward to lift up their Hands against them; but Contented themselves to sit down Losers, and to keep within their Bounds. The Ancient Courage of the Philistins was now gone over to the Other Side. And Samuel would not give them over, till by Inroads, Fresh and Fresh upon them, and Frequent Executions, he had brought down the Stomachs of the whole Nation to the Lowest Degree of Despondency and Abjection. In This Course of Successes, he Retook the Country that lies betwixt Gath and Ekron, which the Philistins had formerly Taken from the Jews. But there was Peace at This time betwixt the Hebrews, and the Canaanites.

Samuel Recovers all the Country they had Lost betwixt Gath and Ekron.

CHAP. III.

Samuel being now in Years, Transferrs the Government to his Two Sons.

SO soon as Samuel had put the People in some sort of Order, and Reinstated them in the Possession of their Lands and Cityes, he appointed Publique Meetings at Certain Times and Places, for the Hearing of Causes, and Administration of Common Justice: taking a Progress twice a Year into All Those Towns of Appeal, and Law-Bus'ness, to see Right done, Himself; making it his Principal Care still, not to depart from the Laws of his Country. This was the Polity, and Method of his Management for a Long time. But in the End, when Old Age, and the Weaknesses that attend it, had put his Body out of Condition for the Personal Performance of These Publique Offices, he Devolved the Authority and Care of the Whole upon his Two Sons, Joel, and Abiah; the Former, the Elder, and the Other, the Younger: Directing them to make a Distribution of the People into Two Divisions, and the Two Brothers to go Several Circuits; the One to have his Court of Judicature at Bethel; the Other at Beersheba.

The Excellent Polity and Method of Samuel's Government.

1 Sam. 8. Samuel, now in Years, devolves the Care of the Government upon his Two Sons, Joel and Abiah. Appointing them their Walks and Circuits.

We may learn from hence, that Sons do not allways take after their Fathers, either for Good, or for Evil: But many an Excellent Father has a Wicked Wretch to his Son; and so on the Contrary, a Sober Conscientious Child, may be the Son of a Graceless Father. As These Young Men for Example, without any regard to the Doctrine, and Practice of Samuel, steered a Course directly contrary to the Prudence and Equity of His Institutions and Measures. They Prostituted the Sacred Name of Justice for Mony, making Judgment to be Mercenary; and in This State of Corruption, Controversyes were Decided by the Value of the Bribe, not the Righteousness of the Cause. They were still Guzzling at their Treats and Collations, when they should have been upon the Bench, and so Abandon'd to their Avarice and Pleasure, as if they had Deliberately Entred into an Equal Defyance of the Will and Commands of their God, and of their Father. For Samuel lay'd Nothing more to Heart then the Care of keeping the People in the Train of a Dutiful Obedience to their Superiours, and in the Knowledge and Observance of Common Justice one with Another.

The Sons of Samuel Degenerate.

CHAP. IV.

The Israelites press Earnestly for a King, and God in his Wrath gives them One.

THE People were so Outragiously Transported against the Sons of Samuel, to see such Havock made of so Excellent a Frame of Government, both in respect of Policy, and of Manners, that they went presently Open-Mouth to the Father, who was then at Ramah, with a Grievous Complaint against his Sons for their Miſgovernment in General, and the Particulars at length, of their Male-Adminiſtration; making it their Earneſt Requeſt to him, in regard of his Own Crazyneſs of Body, and the Intolerable Extravagancy of his Sons, that he would ſet ſome King over them, under whoſe Conduct they might Revenge themſelves upon the Philiſtins, for the Injuries they had done them.

And Preſs to have a King over them.

Now Theſe Words to Samuel, who was naturally a Lover of Juſtice, and a Profeſs'd Enemy to Tyranny, went ſo near the Heart of him (being in his Judgment alſo for an Ariſtocracy, as a Form moſt Accommodate to the Well-being of the People) that he could neither Eat nor Sleep, for the Thought of it; but lay Toſſing and Turning himſelf all Night, Reſtleſs, and Unquiet. While he was thus Labouring under an Anxiety of Mind, God appeared to him in a Viſion, and for his Comfort, bad him Trouble himſelf no further with This Remonſtrance of the People: for, ſays the Voyce, they have not Caſt-off You, but Me, to the end that I Alone ſhould not Reign over them: And This is no more than the ſame thing over again that they began with, when they were firſt brought out of Ægypt: wherefore let them go their own Own way; but they ſhall dearly Rue it e're it be Long, and Abhorr themſelves for their Ingratitude, both to Me, and to My Prophet; but it will be then too Late, and to no Purpoſe; for when the Thing is once done 'tis never to be Undone. Wherefore, I will have you give them a King, and he ſhall be a King of My Deſigning too; but before they go any further, tell them the Miſeryes they are now drawing upon their Own Heads. Do as I bid you; but let them ſee at the ſame time how much it goes againſt Your Heart to Comply with them.

Samuel could not Sleep all Night for the Thought of This.

God tells Samuel, They have not Caſt-off Thee but Me.

God Orders Samuel to give them a King.

Samuel, according to his Commiſſion and Inſtructions, Summoned an Aſſembly to Meet next day, paſſing his Promiſe that he would Aſſign them a King, but not without letting them know before-hand, what they were to endure under That Form of Government. Your New King, ſays he, ſhall take your Sons to Drive his Chariots, and to be his Horſe-men, and ſome ſhall run before his Chariots; Others he will make Tribunes, and Centurions; ſome again he will ſet to Till his Ground, Reap his Harveſt, Dig in his Vineyards, and make him Inſtruments both for Warr, and for Other Purpoſes. There is Nothing ſo Mean, or Extravagant, but you ſhall be forc'd to do it, like Slaves bought with his Mony. He will make your Daughters Perfumers, Cooks, and Paſtry-Servants; compelling them to do All That upon Neceſſity, which the Meaneſt of your Slaves are frighted into for fear of Correction, and Blows. He ſhall give away your Poſſeſſions to his Eunuchs, and Guards; divide your Flocks and Herds among his Favourites; but to ſay all in a Word, You and Yours ſhall be as much his Vaſſals as his own Domeſtiques. When you come to find All This to be True, remember what I foretold you. When that day comes, you ſhall beg to be quit of your King, with as much Importunity as ever you did to Have One. You ſhall then Curſe Your Obſtinacy, and Reflecting upon your Sins, cry to God for Mercy, in the Anguiſh of your Souls, and not Obtain it. You ſhall Deſpair under the Repulſe, and ſuffer the Puniſhments of your Wickedneſs in the Torment of a Guilty Conſcience.

Samuel calls an Aſſembly, and promiſes them a King: Telling them firſt what kind of King it will be.

The People are foretold they ſhall Repent, when 'tis too Late.

Theſe Councels, and Premonitions wrought no more upon the Multitude than if they had been all Deaf; for they ſhut their Ears againſt All that could be Offer'd them, either of Sobriety, or Sound Reaſon; and inſtead of Deſiſting, nothing would ſerve them but a King immediately at a Venture. They could not defend themſelves, they ſaid, againſt their Enemies under any Other Form of Government; and why ſhould not They have a King as well as their Neighbours? When Samuel found them ſo Untractably Willful, in Deſpite of All Councels and Forebodings, he Diſmiſs'd them All to their Own Homes, with This Aſſurance, that he would call them together again ſo ſoon as ever he ſhould receive direction from God what King to give them.

CHAP. V.

Saul Declared King. Nahaſh Beſieges Jabeſh. Saul Relieves it, and gives the Enemy a Total Defeat.

THere was one Kis, of the Tribe of Benjamin, a Man well-born and bred, that had a Son whoſe Name was Saul; a Man of a Proper, Goodly Stature, and a Mind Anſwerable to the Graces of his Body. The Father took much Pleaſure in a Breed of Aſſes he had, above all his Other Beaſts; and ſome of them being ing miſſing, he ſent his Son abroad, and One Servant with him, to look after them. When he had Sought, and Enquired from One Tribe to Another, without any Tydings of them, he put himſelf upon his way Home again, for fear his Father ſhould be Troubled to think what was become of him. As they were upon the way near Ramah, the Servant told Saul that there was a Famous Prophet liv'd there, and Adviſed him to Go and Inquire of Him, after the Aſſes. Ay, but ſays Saul, I have not wherewithal about me to Gratify him for his Pains, for the Stock is all ſpent that I brought out with me. The Servant told him that He Himſelf had a Quarter-Sicle left yet; and he thought That might be Sufficient; not Underſtanding that This was none of the Prophets that make a Trade of Diſcovering things Loſt, for Mony. So they went forward, and Meeting ſeveral Damſels at the Gates of the Town going out to fetch Water, asked them whereabouts the Prophet Liv'd. They ſhew'd them the Houſe, and told them, that if they had any Bus'neſs with him, they ſhould do well to make haſt, and get to him before he went to Supper; for he had Invited a great deal of Company that Night, and they ſtay'd only for his Coming, to take his Place with the Reſt of his Gueſts.

1 Sam. 9. Saul the Son of Kis, of the Tribe of Benjamin, is ſent abroad to look after his Father's Aſſes.

He goes to the Prophet Samuel, to enquire after them.

Samuel had been Cloſe at his Prayers the whole day before, for Directions from God what King to ſet up; and he was Anſwered, that the next day he ſhould receive his Order; for there ſhould come a Young Man to him of the Tribe of Benjamin, at the ſame Hour. Samuel ſat waiting in the Houſe all this while, in Expectation of This Benjamite, till the Preciſe Hour was come, and then going down to Supper, there was Saul in his way, whom he knew by an immediate Inſpiration to be the Perſon that was Deſign'd for the Government. Saul went forwards toward Samuel, and with a Fair Civility, told him he was a Stranger, and ſo deſir'd the favour of him to know where he might find the Prophet. Samuel's Anſwer was, that he had found him already; and ſo taking him to Supper, he diſcover'd unto him not only that the Aſſes he ſought for were all Safe; but that He himſelf was upon the Point of being advanced from That Employment to the higheſt Pitch of Sovereign Power. Alaſs! My Lord, ſays Saul, I have no ſuch thing in my Hope, or Thought, as you do me the Honour to Imagin: Neither am I of a Tribe, or Family that ſets up for Kings. It looks as if you were not in Earneſt, to put a Phancy in my Head of a Dignity ſo much above my Condition. The Supper Waited, and the Prophet took Saul, and Placed him above the reſt of his Gueſts, (who were Seventy in Number) and his Servant Next him, giving Order to the Waiters to bring Saul a Royal Meſs. There they ſat till towards Bedtime, when the Company Brake-up, and Every Man went to his Own Home, ſaving only Saul and his Servant, who ſtay'd with the Prophet That Night.

Saul's coming to Samuel was foretold him.

Samuel takes Saul to Supper with him.

By break of day next Morning, Samuel call'd-up his Gueſt, and ſet him onward of his Way. When they were gotten out of the City, he deſired Saul to Bid his Servant go a little before; for he had ſomewhat to ſay to him in Private. He did ſo; and when the Prophet had him Alone, he took out a Glaſs of Oyle, and Pouring it on his Head, he Pronounced, and Saluted him King, upon that Anointing; telling him that This Honour was done him in Expectation that he ſhould Protect the Hebrews, and do them Right upon the Philiſtins, for the Injuries had been put upon them. Now, ſays Samuel, for the better Authority of what I tell you, Satisfy your ſelf with This Token, You ſhall fall into Company upon your Journey, with Three Men going to Bethel to Worſhip: One of them carrying Three Loaves; the Second a Kid, and the Third a Bottle of Wine. They ſhall Treat you with reſpect, and give you Two of their Loaves, which you are to receive. You will then advance to the Sepulchre of Rachel, where you ſhall Meet the News of your Aſſes being found. After That, You will go to Gabatha, and joyn your ſelf to a Congregation of Prophets that you ſhall find there, and by the Aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God, You Your ſelf ſhall Prophecy in Company with them, to the Aſtoniſhment of All that ſhall ſee and hear you: Inſomuch that People ſhall ſay among themſelves in Admiration, how comes the Son of Kis to be found among the Prophets? When This comes to paſs, you may Conclude for a Certainty that the Hand of God is in it. You may go then to your Father, and your Kindred; and when I ſend to you, come to Me to Gilgal, where we may Offer-up our Prayers to God, with Sacrifices, and Thanksgiving. Upon Theſe Words they parted, and Saul found every Circumſtance in his Journey to fall out, as Samuel had Foretold him.

1 Sam. 10.

Samuel Anoints Saul, and Pronounces him King.

Samuel foretells Saul what ſhould befall him in his Journey.

Upon coming back to his Father's Houſe, his Kinſman Abner (for whom he had a very Great Kindneſs and Eſteem) was Mightily Inquiſitive into the Story of his Late Adventure, and Saul very frankly told him the Whole Bus'neſs of his going to to the Prophet, and how he came to hear of his Aſſes again, but not One Word of his Elevation to the Throne, for fear, either of drawing an Envy upon him, if it ſhould be believ'd, or of Incurring the Cenſure of a Vain Whymſical Man, if it ſhould be Miſtruſted: So that though Abner was his Singular Friend, and Near Relation, yet conſidering that Men's Affections are Changeable, and Fleſh and Bloud Frail, he thought it Safer, and more Diſcreet, to Reſerve himſelf upon That Point; for Men do Naturally caſt an Evil Eye upon Other People's Proſperity, in preference to Themſelves, even where the Diſtinguiſhing favour of God ſhews it ſelf moſt Remarkably in the Bleſſing. The Next Thing Samuel had to do, was to Call the People together; which he did, and they met at [a] Miſpah; where, in a full Congregation he deliver'd himſelf to This Effect.

Samuel calls the People together.

Samuel's Diſcourſe upon the Subject of God's Goodneſs, and the Peoples Ingratitude, in Renouncing God for their King.

I am now, by the Command, and in the Name of God, to tell you, that it was He that deliver'd you out of your Egyptian Bondage, and again and again Reſcu'd you out of the hands of your Enemies, when they had you under their Feet at Mercy. I am likewiſe to Mind you of your Contumacy and Ingratitude toward That God, in return for All Thoſe Mercyes and Benefits: How you have, as much as in you lay, Depoſed him from his Authority over you, and rather Choſen a Man of your Own Make, and Frailty, then the Almighty King of Kings for your Governour; as if any Ruler would do better for you then He that made you: a King, that ſhall Treat his Subjects like Beaſts, at Will and Pleaſure, and uſe them only as Inſtruments and Miniſters of his Paſſions and Luſts. But well! my Brethren, ſince you are Unalterably Determin'd to have it ſo, and for the ſake of an Inconſiderate Tranſport of Levity to caſt-off all manner of Reverence for the Dutyes of Honour, Honeſty, and Conſcience: ſince This, I ſay, is Your Final Reſolution; a King you ſhall have, and therefore divide your ſelves into Tribes and Familyes, and put it then to the Lot who ſhall be the Man. They did ſo, and the Lot of the Tribe fell upon Benjamin. That of the Familyes, upon Matri; and in Concluſion, when they came to Try it Man by Man, the Perſonal Lot fell upon Saul the Son of Kis: who being made Privy to all This before-hand, Slipt out of the way ſo ſoon as the Choice was over, that he might not be thought Ambitious of the Honour. It was an Inſtance of Great Modeſty and Good Government in him, that being advanced from a Private State to a Sovereign Authority over a Mighty Nation, he was not only, not Vain, Proud, and Forward to ſhew Himſelf upon the Promotion, but to avoid the Pomp, and Oſtentation of his New Dignity, he ſo Induſtriouſly withdrew Himſelf from the Eyes, and Acclamations of his Own Subjects, that No body knew where to find him; whereas the Hundredth Part of This Surprize would have turn'd the Brain of a Man leſs Temperate, with Joy and Oſtentation.

Samuel puts the Choice to the Lot, and the Lot falls upon Saul.

Upon Saul's not appearing, or rather upon his Not being to be found, they were all at their Wit's end, what to do without him, and how to come at him: till upon the Application of the Prophet for further Light and Direction, God was pleas'd to make known to him the Place where Saul lay Conceal'd; whereupon, Samuel caus'd him immediately to be ſent for, and brought into the Field, where he was Obſerved to be Taller by the Head and Shoulders then the reſt of the People, and to have ſomewhat of a Natural Majeſty in his very Perſon.

Saul being thus Produced, the Prophet Preſented him in manner as follows. Behold, ſays, he, the King that God hath given you, and you may read in the Excellency of his Perſon how well he is Qualify'd for This Honour: The People Seconding This Recommendation with Shouts, and Acclamations, of [God ſave the King.] Samuel had Committed to Writing the Prediction of what would befall this People under a Kingly Government, and read it over to them in the Hearing of Saul Himſelf; Depoſiting the Book at laſt in the Tabernacle of God, to remain as a memorial to Poſterity of the Truth of all he foretold.

Samuel Preſents Saul to the People as the King that God had deſign'd them: and they all ſhout.

Samuel's Preſages concerning Saul are read to the People, and Recorded in the Sanctuary.

This Solemnity being now over, Samuel Diſcharged the Congregation, and went Home Himſelf to [b] Ramah; and Saul, to [c] Gibeah, the Place where he was born. He was attended with a great Train of very Good men, that made their Court out of Pure Loyalty, and Reſpect, to Gratulate his Acceſſion to the Throne; but not without Mutineers, and Male-contents in abundance, that out of Spite and Envy, made ſport of the Whole Matter, behaving themſelves Contemptuouſly, even toward the King Himſelf, as well as his Dutiful Followers, and without any Preſents or Gratulations to bid him Wellcome to his Dignity.

By the time that Saul had been a Month in the Exerciſe of his Authority, there fell out a Warr with Nahaſh, the King of the Ammonites, which Redounded very much much to his Honour. This Nahaſh had Committed ſeveral Outrages upon the Jews beyond Jordan, breaking-in upon them, and Deſtroying their Country and their Cities with a Numerous, and a Powerful Army; and it was not enough neither, to make Slaves of them at preſent, by force, unleſs they might be put out of all Poſſibility alſo, by Stratagem and Cunning, of ever recovering their Freedom. Now the Invention was This; They pluck'd out the Right Eyes of all they got into their Power, whether by Force, or by Treaty; So that they muſt either loſe the Uſe of the Buckler that Cover'd the Left Eye, or the Benefit of having any Eyes at all.

The Ammonites Pluck out the Right Eyes of all the Priſoners they take.

When Nahaſh had gone this way to work with the People beyond Jordan, he Marched with his Army on the ſame Deſign to the Country of the Gileadites, and ſo to Jabeſh, the Capital City of the Province, and there encamp'd. From hence he ſent a Summons to the Inhabitants, either to deliver up the Town, and ſubmit to the Loſs of their Right Eyes, or Otherwiſe to ſtand the uttermoſt Peril of Fire and Sword; leaving it at their Choice, either to Compound for a part, or to run the Hazzard of the whole, Life and all. The Men of Jabeſh were now at a ſtand, whether to give a Tame, or a Reſolute Anſwer: But upon Conſideration, they divided the Buſineſs, and the Return was This. They deſired only Seven-Days-Liberty, to ſend to their Friends and Allies for Relief: And if None came within that Compaſs of Time, they promiſed to Render themſelves up to the Enemy upon their Own Terms, otherwiſe to Fight it out. Nahaſh had ſo mean an Opinion of theſe People, that he made no Difficulty at all of Complying with their Conditions.

A Terrible Summons to Jabeſh;

And Seven Days allow'd them to Conſider of it.

Upon This Criſis, they Poſted away Expreſſes to all their Friends up and down for immediate Succour, with an Account of the Streights they were in, under the Menaces of a Powerful Enemy. The Miſerable Diſtreſs of their Condition drew Tears and Pity, where-ever they came, but not a Creature durſt ſo much as Wag to help them. And it was the ſame thing with the People of the Metropolis alſo, where Saul kept his Reſidence, as it was in other Places: But he having been Abroad, and upon coming to Town again, finding the People under ſo Diſmal a Conſternation, he fell Inſtantly upon Sifting and Enquiring, and from the Couriers that brought the News, he got the whole Story.

They ſend away to Saul, and elſewhere, for Relief.

While Things were in this Deſperate Extremity, the Spirit of God came upon Saul; who in the Heat of this Impulſe, ſent ſome of the Meſſengers back again to the Men of Jabeſh, with an Aſſurance, that in Three Days they ſhould be Reliev'd; the Enemy Beaten by break of Day; and that the Riſing Sun ſhould ſee them totally Routed and Deſtroy'd; and the wretched Citizens Safe againſt any further Danger. Some he Diſpatcht away with this Meſſage; Others he kept for Guides, to Conduct him the Right way upon his March to his Journy's End.

Saul Anſwers them Propheticaly, that in three Days they ſhall be Reliev'd, and the Enemy Routed and Deſtroy'd.

CHAP. VI.

Saul gets an Army together; Routs Nahaſh; and is a Second time Anointed, and Declar'd King.

SAUL, being now ſtreighten'd in time, and the People backward enough to the War, bethought himſelf of an Invention how he might both Quicken, and Encourage them; making Account that in ſome Caſes, Men will do more for fear of Loſs, then for the love of Virtue: So that he firſt cut-off the Legs of his Own Oxen, and then Publiſh'd a Declaration, that whoever ſhould fail of appearing the next Day in Arms, at the River Jordan, and thence to follow Him, and Samuel, whereſoever they ſhould Lead them, he ſhould have His Oxen ſerv'd after the Same Manner. This Succeeded ſo well, that for fear of Incurring the Penalty, there were gotten together at the Preciſe time, a Body of Seven Hundred Thouſand Fighting Men, as appear'd upon a Review near the City of Balam, where they had their Rendezvous; not reckoning Seventy Thouſand Men more, of the Tribe of Judah. With this Army they paſs'd the Jordan, and after a March of about ten Schœni that Night; they poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Ground that Saul had Pitch'd upon, before Sun-riſe next Morning. From this Place they brake in upon the Enemy, Front, Flank, and Rear, in Three Diviſions, by a moſt Unexpected Surprize, cutting them down on all Hands with a Dreadful Slaughter. The Ammonites, in fine, fine, were Totally Routed; their King Nahaſh among others ſlain in the Battle, and the Hebrews remaining Maſters of the Field, with an Entire Victory. This Glorious Action gave Saul a mighty Reputation, both for his Valour and Conduct; inſomuch that it brought his very Enemies over to him; and thoſe that betweit Envy, Hatred, and Contempt, could not before afford him a Good Word, were now the Men that pay'd him the Greateſt Honour, and cry'd him up to the Skies for the Braveſt, and the Beſt of Governours. For he did not Stop, they ſaid, at the Relief, and Deliverance of Jabeſh, but carry'd-on a War againſt the Ammonites; laid Waſt their Country; Enrich'd his Army with the Spoil, and brought off the People Safe and Victorious to their Own Homes again.

An Entire Victory, and Nahaſh ſlain in the Battle.

Saul gets a Mighty Reputation by this Action.

Neither did the Multitude forget to Celebrate Themſelves all this while, for the notable Expedient of Phancying a King; for they look'd upon Saul to be the People's King, and conſequently their Inſtrument: So that whatever he did, they took it Virtually to be their Own Act. Where are thoſe Buſy Fellows, they cry'd, that were ſo Fierce againſt our having a King? Why are not thoſe Traytors to their Country, Ston'd, or made Examples of? At this Rambling rate of Outrage and Extravagance, they went Roaring up and down, (after the Humour of the Rabble that Judge of every thing by the Event) till Saul Interpoſed with an Oath, that he would not ſuffer any thing ſo Derogatory to the Occaſion, as the Confounding of God's Mercys, with Humane Paſſions; by Polluting a Day of Victory over their Enemies with the Blood of their Friends. He put a Complement however upon the Good Intention of a Laudable Zeal, but ſtill Adjuring them to lay aſide all Animoſities and Grudges, and to join all as One Man in the Dedication of that Bleſſed Day wholly to Joy and Thankſgiving.

The People make their Boaſts that it was done by Their King.

When Matters had proceeded thus far, Samuel adviſed the calling of another Aſſembly to Ratify and Eſtabliſh Saul in the Right and Poſſeſſion of the Throne. So the Convention was appointed, and met at Gilgal, where Saul was again Anointed, and Proclaimed King a Second time, in the Sight and Hearing of all the People. Thus was the Republican State of the Hebrews Tranſlated to a Monarchy: The Form of the Government, Military and Civil, under Moſes and his Succeſſor Joſhua, was an Optimacy, or Ariſtocracy: And for a matter of Eighteen Years after that, it was no better then a Direct Anarchy without any Order at all; but returning to their Old way again, of chuſing ſome Eminent Perſon, whom they found moſt Competent for the Function; the Sovereignty was Lodged in Magiſtrates under the Name of Judges, and there it continued ſo long as the Adminiſtration Laſted.

Samuel calls another Aſſembly at Gilgal.

Saul a Second time Anointed, and Proclaimed.

The Hebrews Ariſtocracy turn'd into a Monarchy.

The Aſſembly being by this time ready to break up, Samuel apply'd himſelf in a Diſcourſe to them, by way of Appeal, to this Effect. I do Adjure you, ſays Samuel, in the Name of the Great God of your Forefathers, that gave them thoſe Incomparable Brothers, Moſes and Aaron, for their Rulers and Guides, and deliver'd them out of the Bondage of Egypt, to give me a True Anſwer now, in the Preſence of the King, without any Reſtraint, or Fear, Tenderneſs, or Reſpect, to ſome Few Queſtions that I ſhall ask you. Can you, or any of you, Charge me with ſo much as one Single Act of Corruption, Partiality, or Injuſtice, in my whole Adminiſtration; Whoſe Ox, whoſe Sheep, or whoſe Aſs have I taken? Not but that Preſents of Good-will in the Matter of Neceſſaries for Life, may be received, without either Crime, or Scandal. Yet give me leave to ſay again, if you can lay any thing of this kind to my Charge, let it be done, and do not ſpare me. Upon this, the whole Multitude acquitted him with One Voice, to all manner of Purpoſes; declaring Unanimouſly, that his Government had been Faultleſs, and according to the Strickteſt Rules of Piety and Juſtice.

1 Sam. 12. Samuel Juſtifies his Adminiſtration, in an Appeal to the People.

Well! ſays Samuel, I am glad of your Acknowledgement here before the King, that you have no Cauſe of Complaint againſt me. I wiſh I could ſay as much for you too; for to deal freely, you have been mightily to Blame. What ſhould you chuſe Another King for, after the Experience of ſo many ſignal Mercies, and miraculous Deliverances, while you were under God's Protection, and own'd him for your Governour. You have forgotten the Story of your Forefather Jacob's coming into Egypt, only with Seventy Men in his Train, and purely for want of Bread; how God provided for them, and by his Bleſſing how they Encreaſed and Multiplied. You have forgotten the Slavery and Oppreſſion they Groaned under, till upon their Cries, and Supplications for Relief, God Reſcu'd them Himſelf without the Help of Kings, by the Hands of Moſes and Aaron, who brought you out of Egypt into the Land you are now poſſeſs'd of. How can you be ſo Ungrateful now, after ſo many Bleſſings and Benefits received, as to depart from the Reverence, and Allegeance you owe to ſo Powerful, and ſo Merciful a Protector! How often have you been Deliver'd up into the Hands of your Enemies for your Apoſtacy, and Diſo- bedience, bedience, and as often afterward restor'd to God's Favour, and your Liberty, upon your Humiliation and Repentance! Who was it but God that gave you Victory, first over the Assyrians, and then over the Ammonites, and the Moabites, and last of all, over the Philistins? Not by the Influence and Direction of Kings, but under the Conduct of Jephtha, and Gideon. What Madness has possess'd you then, to Abandon a Heavenly Governour for an Earthly! But however, to Gratify your Asking; a King you would have, and a King you have, whom I have only Ministerially Declar'd, according to the Overruling Order, and Appointment of God.

Samuel prays for a Tempest from Heaven, in token of God's Displeasure.

But to shew you now, by an Infallible Token from Heaven, that God is Highly Offended at this Importunity of Yours, for an Alteration of your Government, I do now beg from Heaven, as a Sign that I speak Truth, and that God is Infinitely Displeased with you, that such a Tempest may fall now, as in the Middle of Summer; never was heard of before in this Quarter. The Word was no sooner out, but there follow'd so Outrageous a Storm of Thunder, Lightening, and Hail, that it look'd as if the Day of Judgment had been come, and Frighted the Congregation immediately to their Prayers, that God would forgive them the Sins, both of their Iniquity, and of their Ignorance; desiring the Prophet also, out of his Fatherly Tenderness, to join with them in his Mediation to God for their Pardon, for this Last, as well as for former Transgressions. Samuel promised them his Intercession, and not without hope of Obtaining Mercy for them: But at the same time gave them a strict Charge, to lead Sober, Virtuous Lives, and never to forget the Miseries and Calamities that had befall'n them for departing from their Duties; and to bear likewise in Perpetual Memory, the Miracles that God hath wrought in their Favour; and the Laws delivered by Him to his Servant Moses; and this to do, as they had any Consideration, either for the Well-being of their King, or of themselves: Upon the Penalty, as he foretold them, of a certain Ruine both to the One, and to the Other, if they Acted contrary to what he had Prescribed. And so with This Second Confirmation of Saul in his Government, the Assembly was Dismiss'd.

A Dreadful Storm of Thunder, Lightening, and Hail.

CHAP. VII.

Saul incurrs God's Displeasure. Jonathan Obtains a Glorious Victory over the Philistins. Saul makes a Rash Vow. His Children, and his Mighty Power.

1 Sam. 13. SAUL being now Settled, and Confirm'd in the Possession of his Royal Dignity, made a Call of Three Thousand Choice Men out of the whole Body of his People. Two Thirds of them he took with him to Bethel, where he kept his Residence, for the Guard of his Person; and the Other Thousand, he Order'd to attend his Son Jonathan, whom he sent to Gibeah: With which Party, Jonathan reduced a Castle, not far from thence, and belonging to the Philistins. Now the Philistins thereabouts, where-ever they got the better of the Jews, did not only Disarm them, but forbad them the Exercise of any Trade that Wrought in Iron: So that for the very Iron-work of their Ploughs, Spades, Mattocks, and Other Domestique Necessaries, they were fain to have recourse still to Philistin-workmen to supply them. They took care also to secure all Passes; Fortify all Tenable Towns, and to furnish them with Men and Munition. The News of This Baffle was receiv'd by the Philistins with all the Indignation and Contempt Imaginable; and presently they drew an Army into the Field of Three Hundred Thousand Foot, Thirty Thousand Chariots, and Six Thousand Horse, and pitched their Tents at Michmash. So soon as the Tidings of this Preparation came to Saul's Ear, he went to Gilgal, and sent his Messengers, and Proclamations, every where up and down to Summon all his People that had any regard for the Liberties of their Country, to take up Arms against the Philistins; making them much less Considerable then in truth they were, both for Numbers, and Military Prowess. But when Saul's People came to understand, upon the certainty of better Intelligence, the Full State and Strength of the Enemy, there past a Panick Terror quite through the whole Body of them, to such a Degree, that they fled every way up and down, Skulking and Scowring, as in a Rout; some into Vaults, and Caves, and other nasty Hiding-places; but the Greater part of them made over the Jordan for Shelter, and Concealment, among the Tribes of Gad and Reuben.

Jonathan the Son of Saul takes a Castle of the Philistins.

The Philistins forbid the Hebrews medling in Iron-work.

The Philistins draw out an Mighty Army, in Horse, Foot, and Chariot.

Saul Summons the People to Joyn, and make Head against them.

The People run away at the Sight of the Enemy, and hide themselves.

While

While Things were in This Hurry and Confuſion, Saul ſent for the Prophet to adviſe with, upon the Preſent Juncture: who made him This Return, that he ſhould continue where he was; get Sacrifices in Readyneſs; and that at the End of Seven Days, He Himſelf would be with him, when they would offer them up, and ſo advance to give the Enemy Battle. Saul waited out his Time, but moſt Unhappily fail'd in Another Article of his Commiſſion; for the Prophet, he thought, was long a-coming, and his Men perpetually Deſerting him, he offer'd-up the Sacrifice without attending any further for Samuel. The Ceremony was no ſooner over, but word was brought that the Prophet was come; and Saul immediately, as upon a Point of Honour and Reſpect, went out to Meet him. When Samuel came to underſtand what had paſs'd, he told Saul that he had done very Unadviſedly in not keeping to his Inſtructions, and in taking ſo Raſhly upon himſelf the Office of Delivering up the Prayers and Sacrifices that God had appointed on the Behalf of the People, in his Abſence. Saul excuſed it, that he had attended ſo many days according to his Order; but that the Enemy's leaving Michmaſh, and Marching directly towards Gilgal, had ſo frighted his Men, that he was under an Abſolute Neceſſity in all haſt to Offer-up the Sacrifice before his People had quite forſaken him. Well! ſays the Prophet, it would have been Better for you to have follow'd my Direction, which was Effectually a Meſſage to you from God Himſelf, then ſo Heedleſly to Incurr the Cenſure of ſo dangerous a Contempt: for, in ſhort, Your Obedience would have ſecured the Government to your ſelf, and your Poſterity. Upon This Reproof, the Prophet left him, and went his way Home again, highly Unſatisfy'd with what hath been done. Saul, after This, with Six Hundred Men only, and his Son Jonathan, Marched to Gibeah, the Greater part of his People unarmed too; for there was little Iron in That Country; and none of the Hebrews permitted to Exerciſe the Trade of Armorers, as we have ſaid already.

Saul conſults the Prophet. Samuel bids him have Sacrifices ready, and wait for him Seven Days. Saul Unhappily ſacrifices before the Prophet comes. The Prophet reprehends him for it. Samuel goes back again much Unſatisfy'd. Saul Marches with 600 Men, and his Son Jonathan to Gibeah.

The Philiſtins divided their Army into Three Bodys, and ſo Marched Three Several ways into the Country of the Hebrews, where they Ravag'd, and Deſtroy'd all the way they went. Saul and his Son, with Ahiah the High-Prieſt (of the Houſe of Eli) helpleſly looking on from an Eminence near hand, but in no Condition, (to their Infinite Affliction) of giving them any Relief.

The Philiſtins in three Bodys break into the Country of the Hebrews.

Jonathan was ſo Tranſported with the Spectacle of This Outrage, that he took his Armour-bearer aſide upon it, and put a ſhort Queſtion to him how far he would ſtand by him in a Bold and Generous Enterpriſe, for the ſaving of his Country? His Anſwer was (and he Bound it with an Oath too) that let the hazzard be what it would, he would dye at his Feet. Now the Plot was This, that Jonathan and his Armour-bearer ſhould Convey themſelves ſecretly into the Enemy's Camp, and Try what they could do to put them into a Tumult and Confuſion. So they went away down the Hill toward the Enemy's Quarter, being Poſted in a Craggy Place that ran-out at length into Three Angles, Encompaſs'd every where with Rocks, that were as good as Ramparts, to keep-off an Enemy. The Place was ſo ſtrong of it ſelf, that there hardly needed any Guard to Defend it; the Paſſage to it being not only Difficult, but Dangerous, and within a little of Inacceſſible. As they Two were upon the way, Jonathan told his Armour-bearer, for his Comfort and Encouragement: If, ſays he, they Diſcover us, and call out to us to come-up, you may depend upon it that we ſhall certainly Succeed; but if they ſay nothing at all, we muſt content our ſelves to go back again as we came.

1 Sam. 14.

A Generous Reſolution of Jonathan and his Armour-bearer to ſteal privately into the Enemy's Camp.

Jonathans's Diſcourſe to his Armour-bearer.

When they were come within a very little of the Enemy's Camp, the Philiſtins got ſight of them, and made ſport of it from One to Another, how the Hebrews were come creeping out of their Holes and Burrows; calling-out to Jonathan and his Companion, to come-up to them, and take the Reward of their Impudence: Theſe Words were look'd upon by Jonathan as a moſt Auſpicious Preſage of Victory; and ſo they went from One ſide of the Rock to the Other, where the very Situation was lookt upon to be Defence ſufficient without a Guard. They made a hard ſhift however with Creeping and Clambering, to Mount the Rock, though with Infinite Toyl and Difficulty; and from thence, ſlipt-in upon the Enemy at Unawares; Cutting-off a matter of Twenty of them in their Sleep. The Alarum the Enemy took upon this Aſtoniſhing Surprize, put the whole Army into ſuch a Terror, and Conſternation, that ſome threw down their Arms, and made the beſt ſhift they could to ſave themſelves by Flight; Others (being of ſeveral Nations) fell foul one upon another among themſelves, not knowing Friends and Foes aſunder. Some were forc'd into Rivers, and down Precipices, and into the Certainty of Death, to avoid the very Fear of it: Others, as it happens commonly in Tumults, were Trod to death in the Croud, Tumbling One over Another.

The Philiſtins ſurprized in their Sleep: And in that Fright and Confuſion, they ran ſeveral ways; and Deſtroy one another.

Saul hears of the Uproar, and that Jonathan and his Armour-bearer are miſſing.

By this Time the King had Intelligence brought him by his Scouts, that the Army of the Philiſtins were all in an Uproar; and the Firſt Thing he did was to Enquire if any of his own People were Miſſing, and Word ſoon after brought him, that Jonathan and his Armour-bearer were not to be found. Upon This Enformation, he appointed the High-Prieſt to put-on his Sacerdotal Veſtments with his Ephod, and to Conſult God about the Event of This Action. He did ſo, and brought him for Anſwer, that God would make him Victorious, to the utter Confuſion of his Enemys: Whereupon Saul drew out immediately, and preſs'd-in upon the Philiſtins, while they were in Diſorder, and falling Pell-Mell one upon another. The Rumour of this Fatal Diſtraction was made Publique every where, and came at laſt to the Ears of the Fugitive Hebrews in their very Dens and Caverns. Upon this Intelligence, they ſally'd out from their Several Retreats, to the Number of ſome Ten Thouſand Men in the whole, and preſs'd ſo hard upon the Philiſtins, that they had the Chace, and the Execution of them at pleaſure. But the King, after all this, was ſo Unhappy yet as to commit a Great Overſight in the very Courſe of his Succeſſes, whether out of an Impotency of Mind under ſo Surprizing a Joy, (as that's a Common Caſe) or out of Inadvertency, is not the Queſtion. But ſo it was, that Saul, in the Vindictive Reſolution of making but one work of a Total Extirpation of the Philiſtins, pronounced a Heavy Curſe upon that Hebrew whoever he were, that ſhould preſume, barely to Intermit the Slaughter and Purſuit of the Enemy, though but by Eating or Drinking any thing before the Night parted them. Soon after the Denouncing of this Malediction, Jonathan had the Hap, paſſing through a Wood of the Ephranites where there were Bees, to find the Droppings of ſome Hony. He took a Comb, and ſuckt it, knowing nothing as yet of his Father's Vow, and the Solemnity of the People's Conſent to it; but when they came afterward to Admoniſh, and Enform him of the Malediction, with all the Circumſtances, Jonathan gave over Eating, and not without ſome Reflection upon the Temerity of the Vow: For ſays he, when Men are Spent and Weary, a little Refreſhment would have enabled them to go through with their Work, with more Alacrity and Vigour.

Saul conſults the High-Prieſt, who gives him an Aſſurance of Victory.

Saul, upon This, Preſſes in upon the Philiſtins, and Cuts them to pieces.

A Raſh, and a Heavy Curſe,

Which falls upon Jonathan.

The Iſraelites get the Spoil of the Philiſtins Camp.

After the Slaughter of a great many Thouſands of the Philiſtins, upon the Place, the Hebrews came back at Night to the Rifling of the Camp; where, beſide Other Booty, they took a World of Cattle, which they kill'd as they had Occaſion; Dreſſing, and Eating them with the Bloud in them. This being an Offence againſt their Law, the Scribes immediately complain'd of it to the King, who preſently Commanded a Huge Stone to be ſet-up in the Middle of the Field; Ordering the Beaſts to be killed upon that Stone, and the Fleſh not to be Eaten till it ſhould be firſt Purg'd of the Bloud; for that it was an Abomination in the ſight of God. This Decree was readily Obey'd, and ſo Saul Erected an Altar (the Firſt Altar of his ſetting up) and offer'd Sacrifices upon it.

They Eat the Fleſh with the Blood in it, contrary to the Law.

Saul Erects an Altar, and Sacrifices.

Now Saul's Heart being Mightily ſet upon a Full and Final Extermination of the Philiſtins, he thought it highly Adviſable, without giving the Enemy any time for the Recovery of their Broken Strength and Courage, to follow his Blow againſt the Miſerable Remainder of thoſe that ſcap'd, That very Night; and he was ſure of the Hearts and Hands of the Soldiers along with him to All Purpoſes. But however, before he would attempt any thing further upon the Ruines of their Scatter'd Troops, he appointed the High-Prieſt Architob to conſult the Will of God upon the Iſſue of this Enterprize; who returned Anſwer to the King upon his Application, that the Oracle was Silent. Well! (ſays Saul) It is not for Nothing that God keeps himſelf thus upon the Reſerve on this Occaſion, who has been formerly ſo Gracious as to Prevent our very Requeſts by Granting them before-hand, and therefore there muſt be ſome Secret Myſtery of Iniquity in This Matter, to draw his Diſpleaſure upon us: ſo that I am reſolved to ſift it out; and by that Holy God, I ſwear, if I ſhould find even My Son Jonathan Himſelf to be the Guilty Perſon, His Life ſhould Anſwer for't, with no more concern to Me, then if he were a Stranger. The Multitude were One and All for putting of it to the Teſt, and immediately thereupon, Saul Order'd the People to keep together as they were, Himſelf and his Son ſtanding apart, and ſo to Try the Iſſue by Lots. The Lot falling upon Jonathan, his Father bad him bethink himſelf, what Ill Thing he had done that he could Charge upon his Conſcience. Truly, ſays he, I know nothing more then This: that Yeſterday, upon the Purſuit of the Enemy, I taſted a Little Hony, knowing nothing at all of any Decree of Yours to the Contrary. Why then, ſays Saul, with Another Oath, You ſhall Dye for't; for the Reverence I have for my Vow, is more to Me than all the Kindred and Tender-

The High-Prieſt Conſults God upon the Proſecuting of the Warr, and the Oracle is ſilent.

Saul ſuſpects ſome Secret Iniquity, and puts it to the Lot to diſcover where it lies, with no Oath, that the Guilty Perſon ſhall dye.

The Lot falls upon Jonathan.

Saul ſwears again that it ſhall coſt him his Life.

Tenderneſs in Nature. The Young Man was not at all Daunted with the Apprehenſion of Death; but with a Brave and Generous Reſolution, he told his Father, that he did not deſire to be forgiven; for That Death, ſays he, ſhall be wellcome to me, that Acquits my Father of the Obligation of a Religious Vow, and only befalls me in conſequence of ſo Glorious a Victory, to him that gave me my Being. I have liv'd long enough, ſince I have liv'd to ſee the Pride and Inſolence of the Philiſtins brought down by the Hebrews; which will ſerve me for a Conſolation, in all my Other Sufferings. The whole Multitude was ſo Charm'd with the Piety and Bravery of the Young Man, that in an Extaſy of Tenderneſs and Compaſſion, they took him away out of the Hands of his Incenſed Father, with an Oath, that they would not ſuffer a Hair of That Perſon's Head to be Touch'd, who had been ſo Inſtrumental in That Victory, to the Preſervation of them All. Only they beſought God to forgive him for what he had done Amiſs.

Jonathan's Modeſt, and Generous Reſignation.

The Multitude Reſcues Jonathan out of the Hands of his Father.

After the Slaughter of a matter of Sixty Thouſand of the Enemy, Saul returned to his Own Home, and reigned very Happily, acquitting himſelf with Great Reputation in all his Military Adventures againſt the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Philiſtins, the Edomites, and the King of [a] Zoba. He had Three Sons, Jonathan, Joſhua, and Melchi-ſhui, and two Daughters, Merab the Elder, and the Name of the Other was Michal. Abner, the Son of Saul's Uncle Ner, was the General of his Army. Ner and Kiſh, the Father of Saul, were Brethren, and the Sons of Abiel. He had a mighty ſtrength in Chariots and Horſemen, and ſtill came off Victorious, what Enemy ſoever he had to do withall. He advanced the Hebrews, in fine, to the Higheſt degree of Glory, for their Martial Exploits, and made them Formidable to all their Neighbours, taking Particular Care in the Choice of his Guards, not to have any about him but the Goodlieſt Perſons, for Make, Stature, and Vigour of Body, that he could pick-up out of his Dominions.

After the Slaughter of 60000 Philiſtins, Saul returns to his Own Home.

Saul's Exploits, Children, and Conduct.

CHAP. VIII.

God Commands Saul to Extirpate the Amalekites: But taking King Agag Priſoner, and keeping him Alive, he is Caſt-off for his Diſobedience.

ABout this time, Samuel came to Saul, by the Special Direction and Appointment of God, with a certain Meſſage to him; which was, to put him in mind, who it was that Advanced Him above his Fellows to be a King, and of his Duty to the King of Kings that made him ſo; for though he was a Ruler over the People, it was yet but in Subordination to the Sovereign Ruler of the Univerſe: And he had in Charge he ſaid, to tell him further; that whereas the Amalekites had been Great Perſecutors of the Hebrews, in the Wilderneſs, upon coming out of Egypt into the Land which they then poſſeſs'd; it was therefore the Will of God that he ſhould Declare a Warr againſt them, and that upon ſubduing them by Arms, he ſhould not ſpare ſo much as One Living Soul, Man, Woman, or Child: Nay, that he ſhould deſtroy the very Sheep and Oxen, and Every thing elſe that belonged to them, as well as the People, without making Profit of the Spoil, or ſeizing any part of the Booty to Himſelf; for All their Goods and Poſſeſſions were to be Dedicated to God in One Common Sacrifice: The very Name of Amalek, according to what Moſes had Order'd, to be Raſed out of the Hiſtory of Mankind; And all This, as a Juſt Vengeance for Former Injuries and Oppreſſions, as above.

1 Sam. 15. Samuel brings Saul a Meſſage from God, Minding him of his Duty to his Maker.

Samuel's Inſtructions, were Peremptory and Strict, and Saul, on the Other hand, was as Frank of his Promiſes to Obſerve them all to a Tittle, and to ſhew his Readineſs, not only to do as he was bid, but to put his Orders alſo in Execution without delay. The next thing Saul had to do, after This, was the drawing of his Men together; which upon a Review at Gilgal, he found to be ſome Forty Thouſand, beſide the Tribe of Judah; which Muſter'd Thirty Thouſand Men of Warr it ſelf. With This Army, Saul brake-in upon the Amalekites, Diſpoſing of his Ambuſhes upon the Paſſes of the Woods, and the Rivers, in ſuch manner, that the Enemy could hardly Wag without danger of a Surprize. But from This Inſidiary way of Skirmiſhing, it came, in a ſhort Time, to a Capital Battle; wherein the Amalekites were Routed, and betwixt Thoſe that fell in the Combat, and Thoſe that were Cut-off upon the Purſuit, the Whole Body was ſo totally Deſtroy'd, that there were ſcarce enow left to carry the News of the Defeat.

Saul Muſters 40000 Men, beſide 30000 of the Tribe of Judah.

Saul gives the Amalekites a Total Overthrow.

[a] Ὄβα Joſ.

After

Saul beats them after This, out of their Walled Towns, and Strong Holds.

After This Overthrow of their Army, according to what God had foretold, Saul's Next Work was to Attack them in their Walled Towns, and ſtrong Holds. Some they took by Siege, and Approche; Others, by Engines, Stratagem, Mines, Starving, &c. Till in the end, carrying all before them, This Outrage Concluded in an Univerſal Slaughter of Men, Women and Children. For they look'd upon Nothing to be Cruel, or Inhumane, that was done either in a Juſt Warr, or in Obedience to a Divine Command, which would have been Dangerous to Diſpute.

Agag Taken Priſoner: and kept Alive.

In This Diſmal Calamity, Agag, the King Himſelf was Taken Priſoner, who was ſo Goodly a Figure of a Man, that Saul, even for the ſake of his Perſon, reſolved to Save him: In which Unwarrantable Diſpenſation, he did but Indulge a Natural Infirmity at his Own Peril, and in Oppoſition to the Expreſs Command of God. For the Amalekites had made themſelves ſo Abominable in the ſight of Heaven, that God's Wrath Deſcended to their very Children, in which Caſe, Nature it ſelf would have Excus'd a Tenderneſs, if there had been any room left for Mercy. But ſo it was, that Saul kept Agag alive to Gratify his Phancy, in contradiction to his Duty; and in ſo doing, he laid the Foundation of all the Miſeries that afterwards Enſued to the Hebrews. The People fell into the ſame Iniquity alſo with their King, in driving away the Amalekites Flocks, and Herds, and Converting to their Own Uſe, the Pillage of Mony and Goods, and the Beſt of Every Thing; which was all Contrary to God's Poſitive Order; and in fine, only deſtroying what was not Worth the Saving. In This Expedition, Saul over-ran the Whole Country, from Peluſium, on the Borders of Egypt, to the Red-Sea, and laid it all Waſt, leaving only the Sichemites in the Land of Midian Untouch'd: Saul having Precautioned them before the Warr, not to Joyn Intereſts with the Amalekites, but rather to get ſome where out of the Way, without Involving themſelves in the Fatality of a Judicial Ruine that Attended them. Now the Hebrews had a Particular Kindneſs for Theſe People, upon the Account of Ancient Affinity; for out of Them came Raguel, the Father-in-law of Moſes.

The Souldiers. make Advantage of the Spoil, contrary to God's Order.

Upon the credit of This Glorious Exploit, away went Saul to his Own Home again, mightily Satisfy'd in appearance to all Manner of Purpoſes; both in his Honour, and in his Conſcience, as if he had not only done the Great Work of ſubduing the Enemy, but kept himſelf to his Commiſſion too, in a Punctual Obedience to his Inſtructions. But the King's ſparing of Agag, and the People's making profit of the ſpoil, being Two Articles ſo Expreſly forbidden in Saul's Commiſſion, gave great Offence: and it would have been look'd upon as an unpardonable Contempt, even toward a Temporal Prince, not to allow Him that gives the Victory, a Right, and Title to Order and Diſpoſe the Iſſue of it as He pleaſes. Upon This way of proceeding in Saul, according to his Own Humour, without any regard to the Tye of a Known Duty Obliging him to the contrary, God was pleaſed to declare himſelf to the Prophet, that it now repented him of ſetting-up Saul to be King; for His Buſ'neſs was, he ſaw, to do what he had a Mind to do, not what he was Commanded to do. This Revelation put Samuel in the Greateſt Confuſion, and Anxiety of Thought Imaginable; Inſomuch that he ſpent the Whole Night following in Fervent Prayers and Interceſſions to God for Saul's Pardon: to all which Importunityes he receiv'd This ſhort, and Final Anſwer, That it was no longer Lenity, but Facility, and a Miſtaken Mercy, upon any Mediation whatſoever, to paſs over Faults of ſuch a Quality as to make the Pardoning of One Offence a Manifeſt Encouragement to the Committing of Another.

God repents that he made Saul King.

Samuel intercedes to God for Saul, but cannot prevail.

When Samuel found that God was not to be prevail'd withall, on Saul's Behalf, he went his way next Morning to him at Gilgal: Where the King had him no ſooner in his Eye, but he ran preſently to him, with Open Arms, Embracing, and Saluting him, with a Gratulatory Thankſgiving in his Mouth, for the late Victory, which God had given them, telling him withall, that for the Order of the Affair, Every Thing was done according to his Direction. If it be ſo, ſays Samuel, what Meaneth This Bleating of the Sheep in my Ears, and the Lowing of the Oxen, which I hear in the Camp? The King told him, Thoſe were only ſome Beaſts the People had reſerv'd for Sacrifices: And then for the Amalekites, he had Deſtroy'd them all but One Man, whom he kept a Priſoner till he might have Advice what ſhould be done with him. Samuel's Anſwer was, that God took No Delight in Sacrifices, but in the Righteouſneſs of Good and Juſt Men: That is to ſay, of ſuch as Obſerve his Holy Will, and Keep his Commandments; accounting Nothing to be Well done, but what is done in conformity to his Sacred Pleaſure. God doth not conſider the Sacrifice, but the Obedience, and without That True and Only Sacrifice, the Fat of Beaſts, and the Oblations of

Gold

Gold and Silver, are but such Ostentations of a False Piety, as he neither requires, nor will Accept of: But as to Them on the Other side that take Delight in his Commandments, and keep his Precepts in Mind, and will rather dye then depart from them, God Exacts no Sacrifices at Their Hands: But whatever they Offer, let it be never so Mean and Poor, the Integrity of the Heart gives it a Recommendation beyond all the Pomp and Vanity under the Heavens.

I am to tell you now, says Samuel, that you are fall'n under God's Heavy Displeasure for the Neglect and Contempt of his Commandments. What will you be able to say for your self, when he shall call you to an Account for Reserving that for a Sacrifice, which God had expresly Commanded should be wholly Destroy'd? Unless you look upon Destroying and Sacrificing to be one and the same Thing. For this Disobedience you are now Condemn'd to the Loss of your Kingdom, and of that Power which you have most Dangerously abused, to the Dishonour of the Sovereign Author of your Promotion. Saul could not in his Conscience but confess himself Guilty, and Own that he had done grievously Amiss, in Transgressing the Prophet's Orders, and going beyond his Commission. All he had to say for himself was, that he lay under a Force, and that the Common Soldiers were so Intent upon the Booty, that he durst not Venture either to Oppose, or Restrain them; but says Saul, Obtain my Pardon only This One Time, and it shall be a Warning to me to my Live's End, never to do the same Thing over again. After this Profession of his Repentance, he would fain have had Samuel stay a little longer, and Sacrifice to God on his Behalf: But the Prophet, foreseeing that it would be to no manner of purpose, went his way.

Samuel pronounces Saul Condemn'd to the Loss of his Kingdom.

Saul confesses his Fault, and turns it upon the Soldiers.

Samuel leaves him.

CHAP. IX.

The Translation of the Kingdom from Saul to Another Family; and David Proclaim'd King.

AS Samuel was Pressing to get away, Saul caught hold of his Garment to stop him a while, and upon that Accident the Mantle was Rent, betwixt them; which the Prophet apply'd by an Allusion to Saul, telling him that his Kingdom would be torn from him, and given to a Man of Piety and Justice. The Sentence is pass'd, says he, and it is not with God as it is with Men; for his Decrees are Unchangeable. Saul confess'd his own Iniquity, and the Justice of God's Displeasure: But says he, What is Done, cannot be Undone. Honour me only before the People, and turn again, that I may Worship the Lord. So Samuel turned back, and they went and Worshipped together. After this, they brought forth Agag the King of the Amalekites, who being over-heard to say something about the Bitterness of Death, had this Reflexion turn'd upon him by the Prophet: As thy Sword, says he, hath made many an Hebrew Mother Miserable and Comfortless in the Destruction of their Children, so it is but Reasonable, that thy Mother should be left Childless too. So the Prophet Order'd him immediately to be put to Death in Gilgal, and he went back himself to Ramah.

The Renting of Samuel's Mantle, an Allusion to the Transferring of Saul's Kingdom.

Agag is put to Death in Gilgal.

Saul was come now to be sensible of the Calamities he had brought upon Himself by his Disobedience, and so went away to his Palace at Gibeah (or the Little Hill) which was the Last Time that ever Saul saw Samuel. The Prophet was Extremely Afflicted at the Dismal Circumstances of this Separation; but God commanded him, without Troubling himself any further about that Matter, to take a Cruse of Holy Oyl, and go to Bethlehem with it to Jesse, the Son of Obed: There to Anoint such a Son of Jesse's, King, in Saul's stead, as he should be Directed to, and One that should be found Worthy of the Royal Dignity. The Prophet Objecting, that if ever it should come to Saul's Ear, he would certainly be the Death of him, one way or other; But Samuel had nothing to fear, and so he set forward for Bethlehem, and got safe to his Journy's End: Where there was Great Numbers of People met to Receive them. Every Body enquiring what brought him thither, and One Answer serv'd for All, that he came to Sacrifice.

1 Sam. 16.

Samuel sent to Bethlem to Anoint such a Son of Jesse King, as he shall be directed to.

So soon as the Holy Office was Over, Samuel Invited Jesse and his Sons to take a Dinner with him. The Eldest Son was so Tall, so well Made, and so Graceful a Person, that Samuel said within himself, This is to be our King. But Providence it seems look'd Another way; for upon the Prophet's breaking out into Admiration at the Graces of his Person, and how Worthy he was to be plac'd upon a Throne, Samuel invites Jesse and his Sons after Prayers, to Dinner with him.

and putting it to the Queſtion alſo, whether this was the Man or not that was to be Anointed. Anſwer was made him, that God does not ſee with the Eyes of Men, as if the Excellency of an External Frame of Body, were enough to Entitle a Man to the Prerogatives of Government: But the Qualifications that he requires are Piety, Juſtice, Fortitude, nay and Obedience too; all which together make up, in Harmony, the Beauty of the Mind. The Prophet, upon this Anſwer, appointed Jeſſe to ſend for the reſt of his Sons, and there were Five more produced, as Goodly, and as Well-Favour'd Men as their Eldeſt Brother, (Six in all.) Their Names, according to their Seniority were Eliab, Abinadab, Samma, Nathanael, Rael, and Aſa. Samuel Conſulted God now upon this Appearance, which of theſe Brethren was to be Choſen, and the Anſwer was, [None:] which put Samuel upon a further Enquiry to the Father, what other Sons he had? Only One more, he told him, that look'd to his Sheep, and his Name was David: Whereupon the Prophet Order'd Jeſſe to ſend immediately away for him, for there was no Eating without him. The Father ſent for him the ſame Inſtant, and the Son came upon the Firſt Call: He was a Youth of a Freſh Ruddy Complexion; A Brisk Soldier-like Air of a Face, and with all this, a Great deal of Modeſty, and Good Nature in his Countenance. Upon the Firſt Sight of him, Samuel Whiſper'd the Father, that this was the Perſon God had Deſign'd for their King: So the Prophet ſeated himſelf, with the Young Man next him; and after them, the Father, with the reſt of his Sons. When they were thus diſpos'd of in Their places, Samuel, in the ſight of David, took out the Holy Oyl, and Anointed him; telling him in his Ear, that it was God's Will, he ſhould take the Kingdom upon him; ſtrictly Admoniſhing him, to do Juſtice to his People, and to keep God's Commandments; for in ſo doing, ſays the Prophet, you ſhall ſtand Firm in your Government: The Name, and Honour of your Family ſhall be Glorious to After-Ages: You ſhall Triumph over the Philiſtins, and be Victorious in All Encounters: You ſhall Live Great, and be yet Greater in the Fame of your Memory.

David being come, they all ſit down, and Samuel Anoints David King

When Samuel had made an End of his Charge, he departed, and the Spirit of God paſſed from Saul to David; by the Power, and Virtue of which Spirit, David at that Time began to Prophecy: When all on a ſudden, Saul was taken with Fitts, and Phancies of Suffocation, and Difficulty of Breathing like a Dæmoniac. The Phyſicians could not give any Natural, or Philoſophical Account of the Diſtemper, but only Advis'd the having ſome Body about him that could ſing, and play upon the Harp well, that might be ready at Hand to give him the Diverſion of an Hymn, or an Air, ſtill as the Fit ſhould be upon him. Saul was ſo well ſatisfy'd with the Preſcription, that he preſently Order'd ſuch a Man, with all Care and Diligence, to be preſently found-out and brought him. One of his Domeſtiques, upon this Hint, told him, that there was one Jeſſe of Beth-lehem had a very Lovely Handſom Youth to his Son, that Sung, and Touch'd the Harp to Admiration. He ſaid he was as Brave too, as he was Beautiful, and every way Anſwerably Accompliſh'd. Upon this Recommendation, Saul ſent a Complement to Jeſſe, giving him to Underſtand that he had heard ſo many Good Things of ſuch a Son of his, for his Courage, Lovelineſs; his Skill in Muſick, War, and the Like, that he had a Great mind to ſee him. Jeſſe call'd him out from his Flocks, and ſent him to Saul with Preſents ſuitable to the Occaſion, and the Perſon. David, upon his coming to Court, was received with Great Joy; Taken into the Guards, and Treated by Saul, with Remarkable Inſtances of Eſteem. He was Highly Acceptable to the King at all Times, and upon all Accounts; but never more then when he was in his Fitts; for David was the Only Phyſician, and his Voice and Harp, the Only Remedy, that in theſe Fitts ever had the Power to bring him to himſelf again. Saul, in fine, was ſo Delighted with him to All Purpoſes, that with his Father's Leave, and Conſent, he took him into his Own Palace to Live with him.

The Spirit paſſes from Saul to David, and he begins to Prophecy.

CHAP. X.

The Philiſtins advance with an Army againſt the Hebrews. Goliah Defies the Iſraelites to a ſingle Combat; and David Accepts the Challenge.

IT was not long after This, that the Philiſtins marched againſt the Iſraelites with a Prodigious Army, and Encamped betwixt Shecoth, and Azekah; while Saul on the Other Hand, was at the Head of Another Army to Encounter them. He drew-out his Men upon a Mountain, and forced the Philiſtins to Remove, and Poſt themſelves upon a Stronger Mountain juſt over againſt the Iſraelites, with a Valley betwixt the Two Armies. While they were in this Order, there came down from the Philiſtins, One Goliah, a Citizen of Gath; a Man of a Prodigious Stature, and a Strength anſwerable to his Height: Which was Six Cubits, and a Span; and his Armour Proportion'd to the Size, and Force of his Vaſt Limbs. His Coat of Mail weigh'd, 5000 Sicles; His Helmet, and Cuiſſes, of Braſs, Anſwerable: The Head of his Spear was Iron, and weigh'd 600 Sicles: It was not a Spear to be carry'd like a Lance, but born upon his Shoulder. With Theſe Accoutrements did This Mighty Man March down the Hill, and a Troop of Armed Men at his Heels, into the Middle of the Valley betwixt the Two Bodies, and there he ſtopt; calling-out to the Iſraelites with a Horrid Outcry, after this manner. I am come hither, ſays he, you Men of Iſrael, to do an Office of Humanity, and to ſave Blood. Why ſhould we hazzard ſo many Thouſand Lives upon the Uncertain Iſſue of a Battle, when the Cauſe may be more Reaſonably Decided by Two ſingle Perſons. My Buſineſs here is only to do the Part of a Champion for the Philiſtins. Do but you ſend out another Man with the ſame Commiſſion from the Hebrews, and leave it to Us Two to put an End to the Matter in Diſpute, for the Prevention of a Bloody War. If He Kill Me, then will We be Your Servants: But if I Kill Him, then ſhall you be Our Servants, and Subject to us. It is better, in fine, to expoſe One then All. With theſe Words, he went back again to his Party. He made the ſame Challenge again the very Next day, and ſo day after day for Forty days together, to the Great Trouble and Amazement, both of Saul, and of his People, to have the Armies ſtand Facing one another ſo long without Engaging.

1 Sam. 17. The Two Armies are drawn-up.

Goliah the Philiſtin comes down the Mountains with a Challenge to the Hebrews.

Goliah makes the ſame Challenge for Forty Days ſucceſſively.

Saul had Three of Jeſſe's Sons along with him in this Expedition: But David was ſent back again to his Father, and to his Flocks. In ſome ſhort time after this, Jeſſe ſent him to the Army with Neceſſaries for his Brothers, and to learn what News. Upon his coming to the Camp, Goliah was ſtill Bragging, and Reproaching the Hebrews, that not a Man of them had the Heart to look him in the Face. It was his hap, one time, as he was Talking with his Brothers about ſomewhat of his Father's Buſineſs, to hear Goliah, in the height of his Execrable Outrages againſt the Hebrews. This Tranſported David to ſuch a Pitch of Indignation, that he took up a Reſolution Himſelf of Accepting his Challenge, and he told his Brothers as much; but Eliab took him up ſharply for his Raſhneſs; a Boy, ſays he, that has neither Strength, Skill, nor Experience, to talk of Undertaking ſuch a Commiſſion! No, no: E'en go to your Father, and to your Sheep again. That's the fitter Employment for you of the Two. David had a Reverence for his Brother, but yet could not forbear ſaying the ſame things over again in the Hearing of the Soldiers, who preſently carry'd the Report of it to the King, and David was forthwith ſent for to Court upon it; where Saul ask'd him what he had to Offer upon that Point? Great Prince, ſays he, Hope the Beſt, and Fear Nothing, for I my ſelf will take down the Pride of this Boaſting Man; and as Tall as he is, Tread him under my Feet. Your Army ſhall appear Glorious, and your Terrible Enemy become the more Ridiculous, when they ſhall ſee him fall by the Hand of a Raw Unexperienc'd Boy. The King ſtood in Admiration at the Firmneſs, and Magnanimity of the Youth; but he could not yet think it ſafe, or Prudential, to put the Main Cauſe to an Iſſue upon ſo Unequal a Match: David perceiving that Saul took his Meaſures from the Common Reaſon of other Encounters, gave the King to underſtand that This was not ſo much a Challenge to the Army, as a Defyance to Heaven it ſelf; neither was the Combat to be Taken, in Truth, for a Tryal of Skill betwixt Goliah and David, but betwixt Goliah and the Lord of Hoſts: For it is not My Arm, ſays David, that fights the Battle; but the Power of a Gracious, and Invincible God, that many times brings to paſs, even by the Weakeſt of Inſtruments, the Nobleſt of his Divine Purpoſes, for his Greater Glory.

Three of Jeſſe's Sons being with Saul, the Father ſends David to the Camp to know what News.

David would needs Encounter Goliah; but Eliab Oppoſes it.

Saul ſends for David, and Diſcourſes the Matter with him.

David's Generoſity and Piety.

In that God is My Truſt; and I doubt not but he will ſtill continue to Protect, and Deliver me in all Difficulties, as he hath done formerly. As I was Tending my Father's Sheep once, there came a Lyon, and took away a Lamb out of the Flock. I purſu'd him till turning upon me, I took him by the Tail, and threw him againſt the Ground, and kill'd him. It was my hap to have Another Encounter with a Bear, upon the ſame Occaſion, and with the like Succeſs. Now this Blaſpheming Foul Mouth'd Beaſt, from their Army, is no more to Me then a Lyon and a Bear out of the Forreſt. But Divine Juſtice will call this Audacious Wretch to an Account, and make Me the Inſtrument of his Vengeance. I do not ſpeak this upon the Impulſe of a Raſh, and Ungrounded Confidence, but in a Full Aſſurance of Perſuaſion, that God will Avenge himſelf upon this Audacious Wretch; And that even I my ſelf ſhall have the Honour of a Hand in the Execution of that Juſtice.

He tells of his Encounter with a Lyon and a Bear.

David's Bravery had more of a Divine Impulſe in it then of any thing of Hot Blood.

David prepares for the Encounter.

These Words were deliver'd with Another ſort of Spirit, then the Daring Heat of Youth and Hot Blood: So that Saul looked upon them rather as an Inſpiration, then a Propoſal of his Own Proper Motion; and being ſo Convinc'd, David eaſily Obtained his Leave, and his Benediction, Both in One; and then accordingly prepared himſelf for the Action. To which End, Saul dreſs'd him-up in his Own Armour, Coat of Mail, Sword, and Helmet, and ſo bad God ſpeed him. But David found theſe Arms for want of Uſe, rather a Burden than a Defence: Excuſing himſelf to Saul with Modeſty and Reſpect, That they were much fitter for a Prince then for a Shepherd. Wherefore he put them off again, deſiring only that he might be Allow'd to Fight after his Own Way. Upon this, he took his Shepherd's Staff, a Sling in his Right Hand, Five ſmooth Stones out of the Brook in his Scrip; and ſo Advanced toward the Enemy: The Other Launching forward to meet him as faſt as his Legs, under ſo vaſt a Load of Armour, were able to carry him. When they were come within Ken one of another; and that Goliah ſaw what a Dwarf of an Adverſary he had to Encounter, with the Uncouth Appearance of his Equipage, he called out to him in Deriſion: Heark ye little Man, ſays he, with the Cudgel there: Are you come into the Field now, to Beat a Dog, or to Fight a Soldier? To beat worſe then a Dog, ſays David; and Preſſing ſtill nearer him. This Reproach Tranſported the Barbarian into ſo Blaſphemous a Rage, that he Curs'd David by his Gods; Threatning to give his Fleſh for Food to the Fowls of the Air, and to the Beaſts of the Field. You come to Me, ſays David, with a Sword, a Spear, and a Coat of Mail; but I come to You with a Commiſſion from the Living God, who by My Hands will this Day Deſtroy both your ſelf, and your Army; Divide your Head from your Body, and carry it away with Me, and caſt Your Carcaſs upon the Dunghill for Dog's Meat: Dog as you are your ſelf. By this Providence it will be made Evident to the Whole World, that the God of the Hebrews takes care of his People, and that his Protection is both their Strength, and their Armour. As likewiſe on the contrary, that there can be no Security either in Arms, or in Numbers, to thoſe that fall under his Diſpleaſure. The Philiſtin in the mean time, Advanced toward David, as faſt as he was able to March, under the Weight of his Armour; and with All the Contempt Imaginable, to think of having to do with ſo Raw, and Undiſciplin'd an Adverſary.

A Shepherd's Staff, with a Sling, and five ſmall Stones are David's Arms.

David kills Goliah. The Philiſtins Routed. And Saul takes-up a Mortal Jealouſy againſt David.

David ſtrikes Goliah dead with a Stone out of a Sling

He Cuts-off his Head with his Own Sword The Loſs of their Champion puts the Philiſtins in a Conſternation.

DAVID, on the Other Hand, Preſſing forward to the Combate, under the Conduct, and Protection of his Almighty and Inviſible Second: He took out of his Scrip, one of the Stones of the Brook, that he had Provided for this Occaſion; Couched it in his Sling, and caſt it with ſuch a Force at the Head of his Enemy, that it brake the Skull of him, and Pierced his very Brain; Laying the Monſter Groveling, with his Face upon the Ground, in his Laſt Sleep. David immediately runs-up to him, and Beſtrides him; takes his Sword from his Side (having none Himſelf) and Cuts-off the Philiſtin's Head with his Own Weapon. This Exploit had ſuch an Effect upon their Army, that they fled, and ſcatter'd, upon the very Hearing of it. The Loſs of their Champion put them into ſuch an Aſtoniſhment, and Deſperation, that all they had to do in the World was by a Shameful Flight, every every Man of them, to make the Beſt Shift he could for the ſaving of his Own Skin. Saul and the whole Army of the Hebrews, made their Advantage of this Diſorder, and falling-on in the Hurry of this Terror, with Military Shouts and Clamours, had the Chace of them to the Skirts of Gath, and the very Gates of Askalon. They reckoned Thirty Thouſand Kill'd out-right upon the Purſuit, and twice as many Wounded. The Army alſo, at their Return, taking the Pillage of the Camp, and ſetting Fire to it. As for the Head of Goliah, David carry'd That to his Own Tent, and Dedicated the Sword to the Lord.

Saul Frights, and Purſues them to Gath and Askalon.

David carries the Gyant's Head to his own Tent, and Dedicates the Sword to the Lord. 1 Sam. 18.

This Brave and Generous Atchievement of David's, Raiſed ſoon after, a Mortal Jealouſy, and Hatred in Saul; which happened Particularly on this Occaſion.

Upon Saul's returning from the Victory, the Women and Virgins went in Throngs out of all the Cities, Singing and Dancing, with their Cymbals and Taborets, to meet him upon the Way, and Joy him of his Succeſſes: The Women leading the Song with [Saul hath ſlain his Thouſands;] the Virgins following it, [And David his Ten Thouſands.] This Preference of David to Saul, in a Ten-fold Proportion, put ſuch a Freak into his Head, that he could not think himſelf ſafe after it, ſo long as David had any Command near his Perſon: Wherefore he Advanced him to the Charge of a Colonel: And in Truth, his Promoting the Young Man, and putting him upon ſo many Hazzardous, and Glorious Enterprizes, was not ſo much to do David Honour, as to provide for his Own Security; in hope he might fall by the Chance of War in a Battle. For after ſuch an Inſtance of the People's Affections to David, as to aſcribe to him the Credit of the Victory, their next Buſineſs would be to Transferr the Authority of the Government, and for him to take it too. But David had the Providence of God along with him, where-ever he went, and in whatſoever he did; and he had not only Won the Hearts of the People by the Charms of his Courage and Behaviour, but ſo far gain'd upon the Affections of a Virgin-Daughter of Saul's, that her Father Himſelf took Notice of the Paſſion ſhe had for him; and in his Ordinary Diſcourſes upon that Subject, he ſeemed well enough Content that it ſhould be a Match: Not out of any True Tenderneſs and Eſteem that he had for David, but as the moſt Plauſible Cover for a Snare, that in a ſhort time might probably Coſt him his Life: Which was the very Bottom of his Deſign.

A Virgin-Daughter of Saul's hath a Great Eſteem for David.

While this Treaty was in Speculation, Saul caſt-out a Word by the By. Let him, ſays he, bring me the Heads of 600 Philiſtins, as an Acknowledgment; and take my Daughter. He Computed within himſelf that David was not of a Temper to Decline any Generous Enterprize, that carry'd Honour, and Danger along with it; and that his Acceptance of this Offer would certainly Engage him in ſome Deſperate Action upon the Philiſtins, that might probably coſt him his Life in the Attempt. This, ſays Saul to Himſelf, will be the more Decent way of Gratifying my Jealouſy and Revenge; for it will look better to have him Taken-off by the Hands of the Philiſtins, as my Inſtruments, then Expreſly by my Own Order.

Saul offers David his Daughter in Marriage, for the Heads of 600 Philiſtins.

Saul, upon this Deliberation, ſet ſome of his Domeſtiques at Work to learn how David ſtood affected to the Marriage of his Daughter; who gave him to underſtand by Inſinuations, that he was in ſo Great Favour both with King and People, that there was a Speech as if Saul intended to make him his Son-in-Law. You may perhaps reckon it no Great Matter, ſays David, to be Son-in-Law to a Mighty Prince; but under the Circumſtances of My Quality, and Extraction, I am not Vain enough ſo much as to think on't.

Upon the Return of the Commiſſioners with an Account of their Negotiation, Saul ſent them once more back again with further Inſtructions. Tell the Young Man, ſays he, that My Buſineſs is not either Fortune or Preſents; and that whenever I part with my Daughter, ſhe ſhall be Beſtow'd, not Sold. The Son-in-Law that I propoſe to my ſelf muſt be a Man juſt ſo Qualified with Courage, and other Laudable Graces, as I find him to be. Tell him, that I expect neither Silver nor Gold from his Father; for I do not want either Mony or Honour. Let him only bring me Six Hundred Philiſtin's Heads; which will be wellcomer to Me then any thing, and the moſt Honourable of Preſents to my Daughter, in Juſtification of her to the Whole World, that ſhe has taken a Brave Man to her Husband. David took every thing that Saul ſaid, for Good Faith, in his Propoſal of this Affinity, without any Dilatory Conſideration, whether the Thing were Feaſible or not: And immediately fell to Work with his Companions upon the Execution of the Conditions, and found God's Providence as Propitious to him in This, as it had been in Former Encounters; for his Adventure ſucceed-

CHAP. XII.

Saul designs upon David's Life, and Jonathan from time to time gives him Notice of his Danger.

1 Sam. 19.

SAUL found himself so Hamper'd that there was no starting, without giving Himself the Lie, or discovering the Treachery of his Heart, in so Base a Design upon the Life of a Generous Young Man, under the Pretext of an Honourable Affinity: So that betwixt Shame, and Scandal, he lay under a kind of Force to be as good as his Word, in giving his Daughter in Marriage to David. But this Nearness of Relation wrought no Change at all upon the King: For Saul observing that David grew every Day more and more in Favour both with God and Man, he Phancy'd to Himself, that so long as He Liv'd, neither his Crown, nor his Life were in Safety: So that he took up a Resolution, for the Security of Both, to have David Dispatch'd; designing his Son Jonathan, with some of the Trustiest of his Servants, for his Executioners. This Lewd Inconstancy of Saul, not only in withdrawing his Affection from so Deserving a Youth, but entring also into an Impious, and Perfidious Design upon his Life, struck the Son with such an Amazement and Horror, that what with the Natural Inclination he had for the Person of David, and likewise a Profound Veneration for his Virtue, he went and gave David Private Notice of Saul's Intention; advising him as he lov'd his Life to be gone without any Delay: And in the mean time, says he, I will go to my Father, and take my time to mention Your Name to him; for I have a mind to try if I can learn what it is he takes so Heinously, and bring him to Better Reason; for, says Jonathan, I cannot Imagine so much as any Colourable Pretence for such an Indignation and Displeasure, against a Person that has deserved so Eminently well, both from his Prince, and from his Country. Or supposing things at the Worst, and that in Truth he might have made a False Step or two, why are not his Services set in Ballance against it? For the Publique owes him a Pardon. Jonathan then told David, that he should be sure to have Intelligence from time to time how Matters went with his Father. So David follow'd Jonathan's Councel, and immediately withdrew out of the way.

Saul, out of Pure Shame, takes David for his Son-in-Law;

But at the same time designs upon his Life, and tries to bring Jonathan into the Plot.

Jonathan presses David to go out of the way.

CAHP. XIII.

Jonathan reconciles Saul to David: and Saul restores him to his former Post.

Jonathan solicits Saul on David's behalf.

JONATHAN, accordingly went the next day to his Father, and finding him in a pleasant Easy Humour, lays hold of the Critical Minute to say somewhat to him about David. Father, says he, You have here taken up a Terrible Displeasure against This Young Man, and given Orders for his Death; but upon what Provocation, or for what Fault, Great or Little, I cannot Comprehend. He is a Person to whom We stand Indebted for our Own safety, and the Destruction of the Philistins; for Vindicating the Honour of our Nation from the Scandal of a Forty-Days-Affront, in the Challenge of the Gyant; and not a Creature but This Innocent Youth that had the Heart to Encounter him: a Person that Purchas'd my Sister for his Wife at your own Price; to wit, the Heads of Six Hundred Philistins, which were punctually counted according to his Agreement. A Person, in fine, Entitled to your Esteem and Tenderness, both as a Brave Man, and as a Member of your Family, which will make up Two sensible Aggravations of the Loss. Be pleas'd to consider too, the Injury you do your Own Daughter in making her feel the Mortification of a Widow, before she enjoys the Blessing of being a Mother. Pray be pleas'd to lay these things together, and betake your self to moderate Councels. Remember who it was that cur'd you of your Dark Splenetique Fitts, and drove the Evil Spirit from you; and consider the Obligation he has lay'd upon the whole Family by That Relief; and who it was next under God, that deliver'd us from our Implacable Enemies.

These

These are Benefits never to be forgotten, without the Infamy of the Blackest Ingratitude. The Strength and Equity of this way of Reasoning wrought so effectually upon Saul's Rage and Jealousy, that he bound himself with an Oath, never to do any manner of Harm or Wrong to David, for the time to come. Jonathan carry'd the News of this Reconciliation, to David, with an Assurance that Saul was Mollify'd, and ready to do him all sorts of Good Offices: in which Confidence he carry'd him back again to Court; Reconciled him to his Father, and Re-instated him in the same Post of Service and Attendance that he was in before.

Saul Relents, and promises upon his Oath that he will never Hurt David.

David Marries Abigail. Achish entertains him; gives him Zicklag, and Engages him in his War against the Israelites.

ABout this Time the Philistins made War afresh upon the Hebrews, and David was sent out by Saul in the Head of an Army to Encounter them. They Fought a Battel, and the Philistins were totally Broken and Cut to Pieces, with a Terrible Execution. So soon as the Action was over, David went forthwith back to the King with an account of the Victory. But his Reception was not Answerable, either to his Expectation, or to the Merit of his Services; for Saul was rather Sad, and Cast down at the Story of the Success, then Elevated with it; for fear of the Consequences of David's Growing Reputation among the People; for Saul turned every thing that Contributed to David's Honour, and Advantage, to his Own Loss, and Reproach.

David gives the Philistins a Total overthrow, with a Terrible Execution; Which the Ill-Natur'd Envy of Saul could hardly thank him for.

It happen'd one Day, that Saul, being fall'n into one of his Old Fits again, sent for David into his Bed-Chamber, to Sing, and Play on the Harp to him as he lay there upon the Couch with a Lance in his Hand. David was in the very Act of his Obedience, Singing and Playing, as the King had Commanded him, when Saul starting up all on a sudden, Darted his Lance at him; but David keeping a Watchful and a Jealous Eye upon him, slipt aside out of Harms-way, and so from thence, as fast as he could run, to his Own House; where he continu'd for the Remainder of that Day. At Night, there was a Guard set upon the House by the King's Order, to prevent David's Escape, and to bring him in Custody next Morning as a Criminal, to suffer Death by a Publique Sentence; but [a] Michol, David's Wife, and the King's Daughter, having very good Intelligence of her Father's Design, ran presently to her Husband, and told him the whole Story at length, and the Danger he was in, charging him to be gone before next Morning, or he was a Dead Man; for if you should be Taken, says she, my Father will certainly put you to Death. Wherefore shift for your self now in the Dark of the Night, and may God Lengthen it beyond the Ordinary Course, rather then you want time for your Escape. So [after a Decent Interchange of All Those Tendernesses that naturally Occur in such Cases, the Royal Couple were now upon the very Point of Parting, with mutual Protestations, that neither of them either Would, or Could live without the Other. This was the Farewell; and so] Michol let her Husband down from the Window by a Rope, Committing him to Providence.

As David was Singing and Playing to Saul in One of his Fits, Saul casts his Lance at him.

David slips away, and gets Home.

The King Orders David to be seiz'd.

Michol gets an Inkling of it and acquaints her Husband: and begs him to be gone.

Michol lets David down at the Window.

By break of Day came Saul's Messengers to the House to fetch away David; but Michol told them he was sick in Bed, and after a very bad Night on't, was now fall'n to rest; so she shew'd them the Bed, which she had dress'd-up on purpose for the Fallacy, and somewhat Panting under the Coverlet, which they took for the Sick Man. All pass'd for Currant with the Messengers, and so away went They to the King, with an Account of Every Thing; but Saul sent them back again the Next Night, with a Peremptory Command to bring David away as they found him: for Dye he must. Upon the Second Search, they turn'd up the Bed-Cloaths, and perceived that Michol had put a Trick upon them; for there was No David to be found. Now the Panting under the Blankets was only a Device of Michol's, that had Convey'd into the Bed the Warm Liver of a Kid Newly Kill'd to Represent the Palpitation. The Officers told the King the whole Bus'ness, and how his Daughter had Impos'd upon them. Saul Rattled her Severely for being so Base as to take part with an Enemy against her Father; but she had this to say Plausibly enough for her self; that her Husband swore he would Kill her if she would not Undertake to Conceal him, and Help him away: and therefore she hoped he would pass over what she had done under such a Force; for she must have Sacrificed the Life of his Daughter, if she had not saved the Life of his Supposed Enemy.

Michol Excuses her self to Saul.

Michol had now Obtain'd her Pardon, and David was gotten-off safe to Samuel at Ramah; where he gave the Prophet the History at large of the Snares that had been laid for him; the Adventure of the Lance, &c. without any pretence all this while of the Least Failing in matter of Duty and Respect, or of any Miscarriage in his Commissions; for God had still prosper'd him in Whatsoever he Undertook. And it must be Added now for a Further Aggravation, that God's Peculiar Favour toward him was the very Ground of All the Hatred, and Envy that was Stirr'd up against him.

David with Samuel at Ramah.

The more God Favours David, the more Saul Envys him.

When Samuel came to Understand the Extravagance and Iniquity of Saul's way of Proceeding, he took David along with him from Ramah to Galbaath, and there they Continu'd a while together; but so soon as Saul had gotten Intelligence of David's being with the Prophet, he sent a Party of Soldiers to take him up, and bring him away a Prisoner: but the Messengers, upon their Arrival, found Samuel in the Congregation of the Prophets; and after a while, by the same Spirit, they began to Prophesy Themselves too. Saul having Notice of This, sent Others, and then Others, again and again still, upon the Same Errand, and it fared with Them as with the Former. Upon the Third Disappointment, all in a Rage, Saul went Himself, and when he was come almost in sight of Samuel, the Spirit of Prophecy seized Him also: and going a little further, the Impulse was so Strong upon him, that he Stript himself Stark Naked, and Prophesy'd a Whole Day and Night So, in the Presence of David and Samuel.

Samuel takes David with him from Ramah to Galbaah.

Saul sends a Guard to take up David.

The Soldiers find Samuel among the Prophets, and They Themselves also begin to Prophesy.

Saul sends a Second and a Third time, and the Messengers Prophecy after the same Manner.

After This, Saul goes himself, and the Spirit of Prophesy seizes Him too.

David all this while thought himself very ill-Us'd by the King, considering how Dutifull and Usefull he had been to him: but upon making his Moan to Jonathan, of the Hard Measure he had receiv'd, T'other advis'd him not to Judge, or to Suspect Rashly, nor to be led away with Private Tales and Suggestions, but rather to Depend upon Himself, that there was no Mischief in the World intended him by his Father, who seldom did any thing of Consequence without making Him Privy to it; or if any such thing had been, He Himself would certainly have told him of it. David, on the Other hand, affirmed with an Oath, the Truth of the whole Matter as he had set it forth, and besought Jonathan to venture rather to be a little Credulous, where the Life of his Friend was at Stake, then to Suspend his Belief, upon the hazzard of coming to be Convinced of his Errour by the Loss of a Brother. Neither is it to be Imagined, says he, that the King, who knows You and Me to be so Particular Friends, should ever Communicate to Either of us, a Design he has upon the Life of the Other. David's Discourse had more Weight in it, then Jonathan could have Wish'd: so that being half Convinc'd, and in some Trouble at it; he only desir'd David to make use of his Service, if there were any thing in the World wherein he might be Useful to him. I am Sensible, says David, of Your Good Will, and Readyness to Oblige me, and in That Confidence I am to Mind you, that we are to have a New-Moon to Morrow, and a Festival in course. The King will be there; and while I was in Waiting, I had the Honour to be One of the Number My self. Now if you please, I can go out of the City, and privately Wait Your Leisure somewhere about the Fields where you may find me out. If the King should ask for me, You may tell him that I am gone to Bethlem, to Celebrate the Day with my Own Tribe, and that I had Your Leave to go. If he shall speak any thing Kindly upon it; as a Good Journy to him, or a God speed him, take That for a Certain Token that he has No Malice in his Heart against me. But if Otherwise, You are to take it for granted that he bears me a Grudge. Pray let me hear how you find him, as you will be Just to That Sacred, and Mutual League of Friendship that is Struck betwixt us, and as you desire to make Me Easy under my Present Calamity. If you can think me Unworthy of Your Affection, or any way Guilty toward your Father, e'en sheath Your Sword in the Heart of me without Waiting for further Orders. Jonathan took These Last Words a little Unkindly; but yet promis'd to do Every thing as he was Desir'd; and that if ever he should find his Father in any Plot, or Practice against David, he would be sure to give him him Timely Notice of it: Sealing This Promiſſory Declaration of his, with the ſolemnity of an Oath: that he would leave Nothing Unattempted that might Conduce to his Preſervation. That God, ſays he, that fills and Governs the Univerſe, and that knows the Thoughts of my Heart in the very Conception of them; let That God, ſays he, be a Witneſs to the Faith that is Vow'd and Promiſed betwixt us; and that I will never give over ſearching into, and Sifting the Private Deliberations and Purpoſes of my Father, till I ſhall have Diſcovered the Bottom of his Heart, and whether there be any Secret Rancour in his Thoughts or not, that may work to Your Prejudice: and if I ſhall be able to make any thing out at laſt, whether it be For you, or Againſt you, it ſhall be the Firſt Thing I do to give You the Knowledge of it. The Searcher of Hearts will bear me Witneſs that This is True, and that I have ever made it my Earneſt Prayer to Almighty God to Bleſs, and Proſper you in your Perſon and Deſigns; and you may Aſſure Your ſelf, that he will be as Gracious to you for the Future, as he hath been Hitherto, and lay all Your Enemies at your Feet; which he will moſt certainly do, even though my Father, and my ſelf ſhould be found in the Party againſt you. In the mean while, pray be ſure to keep Theſe Things in Memory, and when I am gone, to take care of my Poor Children. A Solemn League betwixt Jonathan and David.

Jonathan having now paſs'd his Oath, appointed David to withdraw into a Certain Part, or Corner of the Field, which they two had agreed upon: For ſays Jonathan, I will firſt go to my Father, and when I have gotten as much from him as I can, I will come back again to Your Hiding-Place, as if I were a-ſhooting, and bring a Boy Along with me. I ſhall then ſhoot Three Arrows, and if I bid the Lad take them up and bring them to me, Set Your Heart at reſt, that all is Well with My Father; but if I ſay any thing elſe, take it for granted that You are in Danger: But aſſure your ſelf however, happen what will, it ſhall be My Particular Care that you come to No Harm. Only once again I ſay, let not This be forgot in the Days of your Proſperity, and be kind to my Poor Children. David took the Hint, and ſo went his way to the Poſt that was Aſſign'd him. Jonathan and David agree upon a Private way of Intelligence.

The Day following was the Feaſt of the New-Moon; where the King, according to Cuſtom, having duly prepar'd himſelf, ſat down to Supper; with Jonathan on his Right-hand, and his General Abner on the Left; David's Place being Empty all this while; but Saul took no Publique Notice of it the Firſt Day; ſuppoſing that his Abſence might poſſibly be matter of Scruple, for want of a Regular, and Cuſtomary Purification, after the Company of his Wife. But Saul miſſing him again the next Day, put it quick upon Jonathan to know how it came to paſs, that the Son of Jeſſe ſhould now abſent himſelf from the Feſtival Two days together. Jonathan told his Father that he had given him leave to go into the Country, and Feaſt with his own Tribe, upon the ſame Occaſion. He would fain have had me along with him, ſays Jonathan, and truly I have ſo Great a Friendſhip for him, that, if you pleaſe, I ſhould be well enough content yet to go to him. This Expreſſion of Jonathan's touch'd Saul ſo to the Quick, that he was no longer able to conceal the Mortal Hatred he had for David; but brake-out into an Extravagant Paſſion againſt his Son, upon it: calling him a Traytour, and an Enemy to his Father; an Abettor of, and a Confederate with David; and a ſhameleſs Conſpirator with the Common Adverſary of the Family: For he muſt be wilfully Blind, ſays he, that could not ſee the Abſolute Impoſſibility of Saul's ever being ſafe, ſo long as David was Living: Commanding him alſo at the ſame time to ſend for him, and deliver him up to Juſtice. Jonathan, upon This, deſir'd of his Father very reſpectfully, to know what Capital Crime was Objected againſt David. This Queſtion tranſported Saul into ſuch a Rage, that he ſnatch'd up a Javelin there within reach, and had certainly kill'd his Son with it, if ſome of his Friends then Preſent had not interpoſed, and Prevented it. There needed no other Evidence of Saul's Deadly Malice to David, when the Father had like to have murder'd his Own Son for his Son-in-Law's ſake. Saul enquires for David at the Feſtival. Jonathan excuſes him. Saul calls Jonathan a Traytor to his Father: And ſtrikes at him with his Javelin.

This Furious Outrage made Jonathan quit both the Company, and the Feaſt; and what with the Trouble he had upon him for his Friend's Danger, and what for his Own, he paſs'd that Night without any Reſt either of Body, or Mind. So that early the next Morning, he took his Bow and Arrows, and a Boy along with him, into the Fields, under the Pretext of going a-ſhooting; but in truth, to give David the Neceſſary Enformation of what had paſs'd, The Firſt thing he did was to convey his Intelligene by his Arrows, as he ſaid he would. After which, he ſent the Boy away to Town upon a Formal Errand, for the better Opportunity of a Word or Two in private with his Friend. They were no ſooner within ſight one Jonathan enforms David of the whole Matter.

of another, but David caſt himſelf down at the Feet of his Preſerver, and in that Poſture ſaluted him: the Other immediately taking him up; and Both joyning in one anothers Arms, to curſe the Malignity of the Age, and their Own hard Fortune, that was now forcing them upon a Separation worſe then the worſt of Deaths. When they had condoled their Time out, and indulg'd all Softneſſes of Dear and Parting Friends, they took their Final Leave, with Freſh Vows and Aſſurances, never to depart from the Conditions of their League, and ſo ſubmitted at laſt to the Neceſſity of going their ſeveral Ways.

David goes to Abimeleck in the City of Nob. 1 Sam. 21.

David being now in Great Diſtreſs by the Perſecution of a Watchful, and an Implacable Enemy; and under the Conſideration of a certain Death if he ſhould be taken, went in his Wandrings to Abimeleck the High-Prieſt, in the City of Nob. He had no Company with him, either Friends, or Servants, which Abimeleck took notice of; and, not without ſome Admiration, ask'd him the Reaſon of it. He came by Special Order, he ſaid, upon a Piece of Secret Service, from the King; and that, for Privacy-ſake, he had for the Preſent diſcharg'd his Train, and appointed them a ſet Time and Place, when and where they ſhould attend him. He told Abimeleck likewiſe, that it would be a very Friendly Office, and a Great Furtherance to his Buſ'neſs, if he would but ſupply him with Neceſſaries for his Journy. This being granted, he told him once again, that if he could but furniſh him with a Sword, or a Spear, or ſome Piece of Arms, it would lay yet another Obligation upon him. It ſo happened that a Servant of Saul's was all this while within Hearing; a Syrian, by Nation: His Office was That of a Groom, and his Name Doeg. The High-Prieſt ſaid he had no Arms, but the Sword that kill'd the Philiſtin, which was hung up, and Dedicated to God; and that Sword he might have, if he pleas'd. David accepted of it; and with this Sword, making what Haſt he could out of the Juriſdiction of the Hebrews, he fled to the City of Gath in the Land of the Philiſtins. This was in the Reign of King [a] Achiſh. David had no ſooner ſhew'd his Head among them, but ſeveral of the King's Servants call'd him to mind, and taking him up in a Hurry, carry'd him Open-mouth to the King, with an Exclamation, that This was the Man, that, upon ſuch a Particular Occaſion, kill'd ſo many Thouſands of the Philiſtins, and this they offer'd to make good againſt him. But David, finding himſelf in as much Danger of Achiſh now, as he had been of Saul before, fell Immediately to Foaming at the Mouth, and Driveling like a Mad-Man; In ſo much that Achiſh call'd-out to his People in Wrath, to take away that Fool: what did they trouble him for with a Changling? he ſaid. And upon This Rebuke, David was a ſecond time deliver'd out of a Streight more Dangerous then the Other.

By This Artifice he got clear of Gath, and from thence ſhifted away into the Tribe of Juda, where he took-up his Reſting-Place for ſome time in a Cave in the Field of Adullam. His Friends and Relations, (and in truth other People promiſcuouſly) being advertis'd of the Place of his Preſent Abode, came Flocking-in to him: ſome for the Love and Reſpect they bare to himſelf; Others out of the Fear, or Hatred of Saul: ſome, in fine, that were Uneaſy in their Fortunes; Others in their Minds, being unſatisfy'd with the preſent State of Things; beſide Libertines of all ſorts, and the like. So that upon the whole, there were a Matter of Four Hundred of them gotten together, and Every Man Devoted to the Service of David with Life and Fortune.

The Moabite-King received David and his Company very Generouſly, and Treated them with Great Honour and Hoſpitality, for the Time they were there: That is to ſay, till by the Order and Direction of the Prophet Samuel, David marched away with his People out of the Deſart, into the Land of Judah, and ſo to [b] Hareth.

When Saul came to underſtand (and it was not long firſt) that David had been ſeen upon his March in the Head of a Body of Armed Men, he was not a little Terrify'd, and troubled at the Intelligence; for he had ſeen ſo many Experimental Proofs of the Greatneſs of David's Soul and Courage, that he could not but Reaſonably expect ſome mighty Matter from him; which he apprehended would tend, at leaſt, to the perplexing, and Diſordering of his Councels, if not to the Endangering of the very Government it ſelf. Upon This Occaſion, he call'd all his Friends, and his Captains together, the People of his own Tribe, and all his Officers Civil and Military, at his Royal City of Gibeah; and there Enthroning himſelf in the Field, at a Place they called the Field, with his Men of War, Honour and Buſ'neſs, about him, he ſpake to them from his Poſt of State, after this Manner. He calls a Great Council.

Taking for granted, my Friends and Fellow-Tribeſmen, that the Good Offices I have done you; the Poſſeſſions I have beſtow'd upon you; the Honourable, and Profitable Commiſſions that I have given you, are not as yet ſo abſolutely ſunk and bury'd, as to be quite out of your Memory: I ſhall now put this ſhort Queſtion to you; whether or no do you expect greater Benefits and Advantages from the Son of Jeſſe, then you have received from me? For I find it manifeſtly, that All your Inclinations Biaſs That way; and that my Son Jonathan Miniſters both an Example, and an Authority for your ſo doing: For I am no Stranger to the Solemnity of a Strict League and Confederacy betwixt Him and David; nor of his Abetting the Cauſe of my Adverſaries with his Power, Intereſt, and Councels. Now This is a Matter that You never trouble your Heads about; but ſit quietly, and indifferently looking on, in a Careleſs Indifference for the Event. A Bitter Speech of Saul's.

Theſe Words of the King were follow'd with a General Silence, till Doeg the Groom, a Syrian, deliver'd what he had to ſay upon the Point then in Queſtion. The Account he gave was This. When I came, ſays he, to the City of Nob, to the High-Prieſt Abimeleck, I ſaw David there to conſult the Oracle. Abimeleck gave him Conveniencies for his Journey, and the Sword of Goliah, and ſo Helped him forward to go whither he pleaſed. After this Declaration of Doeg, Saul order'd the High-Prieſt to be ſent for with All his Relations; to whom the King ſaid as follows. Doeg's Enformation of what paſs'd at Nob. Saul ſends for Abimeleck, and all his Relations.

What have I done to make you give this Encouragement to a Traytor to his Prince? For the Son of Jeſſe is no Better. And yet who but You to entertain him! Furniſh him with Proviſions and Arms, and to give him Comfortable Returns from the Oracle, of the Hopeful Succeſs of his Deſigns. You cannot be Ignorant that he is now run away, in the Conſcience of the Malice he has for my Family, and in the Fear of being taken-up, and Puniſh'd for't. Saul charges them for being in a Conſpiracy againſt him, with David.

The High-Prieſt made no Oppoſition to the Truth of the Charge; but frankly confeſs'd that theſe Reſpects had a Regard, not ſo much to David, as to the King himſelf; for, ſays he, I did not receive him as your Enemy, but as the Faithfulleſt of your Friends and Officers; and, which is more, in the Quality of your Son too, and a Relation in ſo tender a Degree of Affinity and Allyance. For how ſhould any body imagine that Man to be Your Enemy, upon whom you have conferr'd ſo many Honours? Or why ſhould not I rather preſume ſuch a Perſon, without any further Enquiry, to be your ſingular Friend? If he conſulted Me about the Will of God, it is not the Firſt Time that he has done it, nor the Firſt Time that I have given him an Anſwer: Neither has it been always alike. He told me that he was ſent in Haſte by your ſelf, about Earneſt Buſineſs, and if I had not ſupply'd him with what he wanted, it would have reflected an Indignity upon Your ſelf, rather then upon Him. Wherefore I hope the Blame ſhall not be laid at my Door, even if you ſhould find David to be as Guilty at laſt, as you ſuſpect him to be; unleſs an Act purely of Compaſſion, and Humanity, abſtracted from the leaſt Thought, Knowledge, or Imagination of any Evil Intention, ſhall be underſtood to make me a Party to a Conſpiracy. For the Service I render'd him was Matter of Reſpect to the King's Son-in-Law, and the King's Military Officer, not to the Perſon or Intereſt of David. Abimeleck's Defence.

This was all plauſible and fair; but the Fear of the Danger wrought more upon Saul, than the Apology, tho' never ſo Juſt. So that without giving any Credit to the Excuſe, he commanded the Guards about him to ſeize Abimeleck and his Family, and put them all to the Sword. The Hebrews flatly refus'd to execute ſo Sacrilegious a Commiſſion; for it was no leſs, in the Conſtruction of their Religion, to put any Man to Death that ſerv'd at the Altar. Upon this Scruple, and Denyal, the Charge was committed to Doeg the Syrian; who with an Impious Band of Ruffians, and Aſſaſſins like Himſelf, began with the High-Prieſt, and went through his whole Family, to the Number of Three Hundred and Eighty Five Perſons. This Barbarous Maſſacre was no ſooner over, but the ſame Helliſh Crew was diſpatch'd away to Nob, the Seat, and Reſidence of the Prieſt-hood, on the ſame Errand; where they kill'd all the Inhabitants they could find, to a ſingle Soul, ſparing neither Age nor Sex: And, in Concluſion, they laid the whole Town in Aſhes. Abiathar, the Son of Abimeleck was the only Perſon that eſcap'd in this Butchery, to verify an Ancient Revelation from God to the High-Prieſt Celi; foretelling him, that the Iniquity of his Two Sons would in Time to come be puniſh'd with the Rooting-out of the Family. to the Sword, without either Pity for the One, or Reverence for the Other; the Deſtroying of a City that God Himſelf had honour'd with a Peculiar Priviledge, by ſetting it apart as a Nurſery for Prieſts and Prophets: This Barbarous Courſe, I ſay, of Inhumane Violences, ſhews us the Licentious Corruptions of Fleſh and Blood, when Unbridled Nature is left to it ſelf, without ſome External Check upon it. While Men are Low, Poor, and Impotent; in Fear of Laws, and Penalties; and in Truth, under ſome ſort of Neceſſity to appear Honeſt, for want of Power to be Wicked: How Temperate, Juſt, and Gentle; nay, how Religious do they pretend to be! They live as if they Own'd a Providence, and believed the Omnipreſence of an Allmighty, and an All-ſeeing God. But ſo ſoon as ever they come to be deliver'd from the Clogs and Impediments of Theſe Inabilities, and Advanced to the Authority of Prerogative and Government, they are no longer the ſame Men; but ſhift like Stage-Players, and lay-by their Old Manners with their Old Cloths, changing both the Scene, and the Perſon. They grow Bold, Proud, and Inſolent; quitting all Reverence either for God, or Man; and inſtead of Exercifing that Piety and Juſtice, which can only ſecure Men in that Eminent Station, from the Stroke of Detraction, and Envy, (for their very Thoughts as well as Actions in that Height of Elevation are expos'd to Common Cenſure) they Live, and Act, as if either God knew not what they did, or as if their Greatneſs had Tranſported them out of the reach of Divine Juſtice. When this Arrogant Vanity is once upon the Wing, what Havock does it make of Men, and of Things! What Hurly-Burlies, and Confuſions in the World! They govern by their Paſſion, not their Reaſon: Vain Fears, and Groundleſs Averſions toward ſome, and Partial Prepoſſeſſions of Favour toward others, are the only Councellors they adviſe with. Now the Reſult of theſe Dictates is that which they Impoſe upon the World for no leſs then a Decree ratify'd in Heaven: And all this while, not one Word, or Thought of the Future. As for thoſe, in fine, that have done them ſignal Services, they commonly make them Early Acknowledgments, by Honours, and Rewards: But then it is in every Enformer's Power, by Subornation, or Calumny, to ſtrip them for a Word ſpeaking, not only of their Dignities, but of their Lives too; and all this without Proof, Probability, Tryal; nay, or ſo much as Examination. And this Tyranny exerciſes it ſelf not ſo much upon the Guilty that deſerve to be Puniſh'd, as upon the Innocent that may be Oppreſs'd without Danger.

And the very Nurſery of Prieſts and Prophets.

We find all this to be punctually made Good in the Preſent Inſtance of Saul, the Son of Kis, who was the Firſt King of the Hebrews after the Diſſolution of the Ariſtocracy, and the taking of the Adminiſtration out of the Hands of the Judges. He put to Death Three Hundred Prieſts and Prophets, upon the Caprice of a bare Jealouſy of Abimeleck. He laid their City in Rubbiſh, kill'd all that were in it, and Buried the Dead under the Ruins of it: Doing all that in Him lay, toward the Utter Extinction of the Sacerdotal Order and Race: Without leaving ſo much as One Prieſt Alive to ſerve at the Altar, or any Habitation, to receive them. Abiathar the Son of Abimelech, was the Only Man that eſcaped; and he carry'd the diſmal Tydings of the Deſtruction of his Father, and his Family, to David: Which was no more, he ſaid, then he expected, when he ſaw Doeg there; who he was ſure would make the worſt of it to the King: And, in fine, he told Abiathar, that it went to the Heart of him to find himſelf any way the Occaſion of ſo Dreadful a Calamity. But, ſays he, ſince ſo it is, keep where you are, and ſtay with Me, for you can be no where Safer.

Three Hundred Prieſts and Prophets put to Death.

About this Time there was Word brought to David, that the Philiſtins were enter'd with an Army into the Province of Keilah, Burning and deſtroying all before them where-ever they came. David had a mind to attaque them; but not without conſulting the Prophet firſt, for Encouragment, and Direction. The Prophet bad him go-on and Proſper; whereupon he preſently drew out; Fought the Enemy, and Routed them with a very Great Slaughter, and carry'd-off a Conſiderable Booty. After this, he ſtay'd a while in Keilah, for a Guard to ſecure the Inning of their Harveſt. Saul in this Point of Time, received a Particular Account of David being in the Town, and likewiſe of the Action; as it was too Conſiderable to lie long Conceal'd. It was alſo Obſervable, that the Relation was deliver'd much to David's Honour. Upon the Intelligence of David's ſhutting himſelf-up in a Walled Town, Saul look'd upon his Buſineſs to be as good as done; and as the Favour of a ſingular Providence that had put his Enemy into his Hands: So that He gave-out Orders immediately for the Beſieging of Keilah; and not to quit the Place till David ſhould be brought to Juſtice. But David being premoniſhed by a Revelation, that if he did not ſeaſonably provide for Himſelf, the People of Keilah would deliver him-up to the King to ſave themſelves; he quitted the City, and betook himſelf with his Four Hundred Men into the Deſert, where he encamped upon a Hill that was well Fortify'd, by the Name of En-geddi: But Saul underſtanding that David had left the Town, countermanded his Orders for the Siege too; while David, with his People, removed out of the Widerneſs to Cæna, a Place belonging to Ziphe; where Jonathan the King's Son came to him, and ſaluted him with an Intent to have ſome Diſcourſe with him about Things to come. He bad him Deſpond of nothing; for all thoſe Preſent Difficulties would vaniſh: For the Time (he ſaid) was at hand when the whole Nation of the Hebrews ſhould be His Subjects; adviſing him to conſider, that Bleſſings of that Quality are not to be compaſs'd without Toil and Hazzard. So they renew'd their League of Friendſhip over again, with a Sanction of moſt Dreadful Curſes, upon Him that ſhould firſt act contrary to Covenants: The Obligation to be for Life, and God to be a Witneſs to it. This Solemnity being performed, Jonathan left David upon the Place, much Eaſier, and better ſatisfy'd then he found him, and ſo returned to his Own Home.

And removes his Camp to En-geddi.

Jonathan comes to David at Cæna.

They renew their League.

While this was a-doing, the Men of Ziphe, to curry Favour with the King, gave him to underſtand that David lay lurking up and down about their Grounds, and undertook, if Saul would be pleaſed to come to their Aſſiſtance, to deliver him-up; for it was but the ſecuring of ſome Narrow Paſſes, and it would be Impoſſible for him to ſcape. Saul highly extoll'd the Zeal, and Good Will of the Men, with very Gracious Acknowledgments of the Obligation they had laid upon him, in telling him where he might find his Enemy, and promis'd them Large Requitals alſo for the Service they had done him. So he preſently ſent away his Agents, if poſſible, to find-out David, and to ſearch all the Hiding-Places in the Deſert for him; promiſing to follow them Himſelf in a very ſhort Time with his Army. The People of Ziphe were wonderfully forward and Officious, not only to ſerve as Guides toward the Diſcovery of David in his Haunts; but for the very Seizure of his Perſon, and the giving of him-up into the King's Power. But after all the Villany of this Pragmatical Zeal, their Malicious Purpoſe was at laſt Diſappointed. Now they might have held their Tongues in the Caſe, with all the Security Imaginable: So that the Baſeneſs of their thruſting themſelves into the Treachery of betraying a Pious, and an Innocent Perſon to Ruine and Deſtruction, contrary to Law, and Juſtice, was only a Scandalous Wicked Office, undertaken for the very Wickedneſs-ſake; but Mercenaries, and Pick-Thanks will ſtick at Nothing.

The Ziphites give Saul Intelligence where to find David.

The Ziphites Officiouſneſs to find out David.

David being ſeaſonably advertis'd of this Brutal Conſpiracy of the Ziphites; and of the King's being upon his March in Proſecution, and in Favour of it, he quitted the Faſtneſſes where he was before, and made away as faſt as he could to a Great Rock in the [a] Wilderneſs of Maon. Saul having gotten Intelligence upon the way, of David's Removal, and what Courſe he took, follow'd him upon the Heel; and was come ſo near him, that Saul was on one ſide of the Rock, and David on the other, and juſt ready to be hemm'd-in beyond all Poſſibility of Eſcaping: But by Great Providence, juſt in this Preciſe Inſtant, came the ſad News to Saul that the Philiſtins had broken-in upon the Hebrews, and were Ravaging their Country. This Intelligence diverted Saul from his Purſuit of David; chuſing rather to turn his Arms upon the Sworn Enemies of the Nation, and to Redeem his Country, then run the Riſque of loſing All to gratify a Particular Pique againſt one ſingle Perſon. By this Bleſſed Providence, was David deliver'd beyond all Expectation: And his next Retreat was to the Streights of En-geddi.

David withdraws to a Rock in the Wilderneſs of Maon.

Saul follows them.

The Philiſtins breaking-in upon the Hebrews diverts him.

His next Retreat is to En-geddi.

When Saul, had Encounter'd, and beaten-back the Philiſtins, Word was brought to him once again in his Return, where he might find David; for that he had been ſeen ſomewhere about En-geddi. Upon this Advice, Saul drew-out Three Thouſand Choice-Men to March immediately after him. As they were upon the way, and within a little of the Place, there was a Deep Dark Spacious Cave, and Saul ſtept aſide into it Alone, as a Place of Privacy, upon a Neceſſary Occaſion to eaſe himſelf. Now this Cave happen'd to be the very Place where David, and his Four Hundred Followers had hid themſelves. One of David's People that knew Saul very well, had the Fortune to diſcover him, and preſently went-up to David with the Good News, that now was his Time to put an End to all his Troubles, by taking the Opportunity of a Glorious Revenge, in cutting-off the Head of his Mortal Enemy; for God had now deliver'd Saul-up into his Hands. But it neither ſuited with David's Greatneſs of Mind, nor with the Senſe and Conſcience of his Duty and Allegeance, to lay Violent Hands upon his Anointed Lord and Maſter, whom God Himſelf had ſet over him; and to return Evil for Evil. So that David cut-off a piece of Upon Saul's going out of the Cave, David follow'd into the Open Air, calling out after him: The King, upon the hearing of a Voice he was ſo well acquainted with, turned preſently about; and David, with all Decency of Reverence and Reſpect both to the Perſon, and the Occaſion, addreſs'd himſelf to him in Words to This Effect.

David reaſons the Caſe to Saul, in a moſt Excellent Speech.

It is a very Unhappy Thing, Sir, with your Majeſty's Gracious Leave for this Freedom, when a Great Prince has his Ears ſo Open to Calumniators, and Detractors, as to ſuſpect the Integrity of his Try'd, and moſt Faithful Friends, upon the Credit of the Vaineſt, and Falſeſt of Men; That is to ſay, of Pick-Thank-Flatterers, and Underhand-Enformers. Were it not, under Favour, a much more Laudable Way to put every Man to the Tryal of his Honeſty by his Works? For Words may be Falſe as well as True; but Demonſtration by Fact, is Infallible. You may be pleaſed now, upon the Force of this ſingle Inſtance at preſent before you, to conſult your Reaſon, upon Second Thoughts; whether I have had Hard Meaſure or not, in being taken for a Criminal, upon the Suggeſtion of an Evil Intention, that never ſo much as enter'd into my Thought; and yet it has (moſt Unhappily to Me) ſo far gain'd Belief with your Majeſty, that I go in Danger of my Life every Hour of the Day, and of the Night, upon a bare, and an ungrounded Jealouſy of my Guilt. Can any thing, with Pardon, be clearer, then the Evidence of your Majeſty's Miſtake, when you ſuſpect Me for Malicious Practices upon your Life, as well as on your Family? How will your Majeſty look God in the Face with this Guilt upon your Conſcience, that you are ſtill practiſing upon the Life of a Perſon, that had you wholly at Mercy, and the Opportunity of Gratifying his Revenge; and yet ſpar'd you out of Good-Nature, Juſtice, and Reſpect. Look you Sir, ſays he, I could as eaſily have taken your Head from your Shoulders, as this piece of Stuff from your Mantle, (ſhewing the Skirt that he had cut-off, to Confirm the Truth of what he ſaid.) I had not the Heart to indulge any thing of a Vindictive Execution, though never ſo Juſt; while you at the ſame time, without any Difficulty, or Scruple, purſue me with a moſt Injurious Perſecution. But let God judge betwixt us, who will determine, in the Concluſion, which of the Two was in the Right.

Saul was ſo confounded at the Modeſty, and Softneſs of the Young Man, and in ſuch Admiration at the Good Nature, and Humanity of David in ſparing his Life, after ſo many Bitter Provocations, that he could not forbear Groaning, upon the Thought of it; and upon David's Anſwering his ſigh with Another. No, no, ſays Saul, Theſe Lamentations will better become me; for as you, on the One hand, have been the Cauſe, and the Author to me of a great deal of Good; ſo have I, on the other ſide, made you a Return only of Cruelty and Miſery, for all your Obligations and Benefits. You have in this, ſays he, given to underſtand that you are not degenerated from the Generoſity and Goodneſs of your Anceſtors; who, when they had their Enemies at Mercy, choſe rather to diſmiſs them Safe and Free, then to make an Ill Uſe of the Advantage they had over them. Now do I manifeſtly perceive by the Paſſages of this Day, that God has ſet you apart for this Kingdom; and that the whole Nation of the Hebrews is to be Subjected to your Government. Wherefore I have this Requeſt to make you, that you will give me your Promiſe, upon Oath, to forgive all the Injuries I have done you; and that when you come to be poſſeſs'd of your Government, you will be Merciful to my Family. David paſs'd his Promiſe upon Oath to do as he was deſir'd, and ſo diſmiſs'd the King, and [a] departed Himſelf with his Train to the Streights of Miſpeh.

Saul acknowledges David's Generoſity, and his Own Injuſtice,

And aſks David Forgiveneſs.

The Death of the Prophet Samuel. 1 Sam. 25.

At, or about this Time dy'd the Prophet Samuel, a Perſon in Great Reputation among the Hebrews, for his Probity and Virtue: And the People gave an Eminent Proof of the Eſteem they had for him, in the Magnificence and Expence of his Funeral. They bury'd him at Ramah in his Own Country, and mourned for him afterward a long Time, not with the Ceremony of a Formal Publique Sorrow; but every Individual had a Diſtinct, and a Particular ſhare in the Loſs; for he was a Man of a Natural Benignity and Juſtice, and moſt remarkably in God's Favours for his Virtues. After the Death of Eli, he govern'd Twelve Years Alone; and then in the Reign of Saul, Eighteen Years more, ending his Days according to the Relation that is here ſet-forth.

Samuel's Character.

The Hiſtory of Nabal.

There lived at that Time near the Place where David Frequented, a Man of Ziphe, of the City of [b] Emma, whoſe Name was Nabal. He was very Wealthy in Herds and Poſſeſſions; for he had in his Grounds Three Thouſand Sheep, and a Thouſand Goats. David was ſo much his Friend, that he ſet his own People to aſſiſt Nabal's in looking after his Flocks; forbidding them upon their Uttermoſt Peril, either for Avarice, or for Hunger, or upon any other Pretence whatever, to Touch ſo much as one Hair of them: No, not if they ſhould be ſure not to be Diſcover'd; preaching to them ſtill upon the Text of doing Juſtice to all Men living, in Conformity to the Will of God, who was never pleaſed with any Man that coveted, or laid Violent Hands on the Goods of his Neighbour. This was the Doctrine he inculcated to thoſe about him, and they liv'd accordingly: David little imagining that his Kindneſs had been caſt away all this while upon a Creature ſo Unworthy, as he appear'd afterwards, of ſo Generous, and ſo Friendly an Office.

The Character of Nabal.

This Nabal was a Brutal, Ill-natur'd Wretch; but the Husband of a Well-Faſhion'd, Prudent, and Agreeable Woman. One Day as he was upon his Sheep-ſhearing, David ſent Ten of his People to Nabal with the Complement of a Thouſand Good Wiſhes to him, and deſiring only ſome Moderate Supply of Proviſions out of his Abundance; for his Shepherds could Enform him, that all the while they had been together in the Deſert, they had been ſo far from doing Nabal any Injury, that they had rather kept, and preſerved his Sheep for him: Cloſing the Diſcourſe with an Aſſurance, that what Friendſhip ſoever he ſhould do for David upon this Occaſion, ſhould be abundantly Acknowledg'd. The Anſwer that Nabal returned them was Courſe, and Churliſh, like himſelf. [David? ſays Nabal, Why who's that ſame David, I wonder? They told him, he was one of the Sons of Jeſſe. Yes yes, ſays Nabal, your Runaway-Servants look upon Themſelves to be Brave-Fellows, I warrant ye.] This Contemptuous Affront put David in the Head of Four Hundred Men toward Nabal, leaving Two Hundred more hehind them with the Baggage; (his Number being now encreaſed to Six Hundred) with a Vow, and Determination That very Night to Ruine Nabal, to all manner of Purpoſes, with his Houſe and Family. Now David's Indignation againſt him, was not ſo much for his Barbarity and Ingratitude, where he had been ſo Frankly obliged; but for the Virulence of ſo Inſolent an Outrage againſt a Man that never did him an Injury.

Nabal's Churliſhneſs, and Ribaldry againſt David.

David Vows a Revenge upon Nabal.

While Matters were in this Hurry, ſome of Nabal's Shepherds and Servants carry'd the Story of This Encounter to their Miſtreſs: telling her how David had ſent to her Husband to deſire a ſmall Pittance of ſomething to Eat; which Nabal did not only Refuſe, but anſwer'd him with Unſufferable, and Opprobrious Revilings; though David had ever dealt Honourably and Reſpectfully by him upon ſeveral Occaſions; telling her further, what Apprehenſions they had of the Miſchief, that the Senſe of this Indignity might bring upon her ſelf and her Husband. So ſoon as Abigail, the Wife of Nabal, had heard what they had to ſay, ſhe preſently call'd for the Aſſes out; cauſed them to be laden with Preſents, and without one word ſpeaking to her Husband, (who was at that time Fuddled, and Senſleſs) ſhe put her ſelf upon the way to find-out David; whom ſhe met coming down the Straits of the Mountain, and Four Hundred Men following him, going to take Vengeance upon Nabal. Abigail had no ſooner ſight of him, but leaping from her Aſs, ſhe threw her ſelf proſtrate upon the Ground, and humbly beſought David to paſs over the Words of her Husband, as one whoſe Name was ſuited to his Nature; Nabal, in Hebrew ſignifying a Fool, and a Madman. She pleaded for her ſelf, that ſhe ſaw none of the Meſſengers to her Husband; begg'd Pardon, and deſir'd David to give God Thanks for ſending her as the Inſtrument to keep his Hands from Bloud: And, Sir, ſays ſhe, may you ſtill preſerve your ſelf clear of that Pollution, that God may turn the Vengeance that threatens Nabal, upon the Heads of your Enemies. Be pleaſed, I beſeech you, to accept of the Good Will of your Poor Servant, with theſe ſmall Preſents; and, upon my humble Requeſt, to paſs over the Offence of my Husband, who hath ſo juſtly incurr'd your Diſpleaſure; for there is nothing ſo well Becoming, the Character of the Perſon, that Providence Deſigns for a Crown, as Clemency and Compaſſion. David was prevail'd upon to receive the Preſents; and Woman, ſays he, Bleſs God that put it into your Heart to come hither this Day, you ſhould never have liv'd to have ſeen Another elſe; for I had ſworn to my ſelf to lay your Houſe in Ruins This very Night, and not to leave one Soul Alive in the Family of that Ungrateful Man, that had caſt ſo many Indignities upon me, and thoſe that belong to me. You are however now come in a Bleſſed Hour to allay my Rage, and put a ſtop to my Reſolution; but yet after all, though I am content, for your ſake, to forgive Nabal's Fault againſt me, there is a Judgment ſtill behind that attends him: and his Ill Manners will be his Ruine ſome other way. With theſe Words, David diſcharged Abigail, who went directly Home, and found her Husband among his Beaſtly Companions, ſo ſottiſhly Drunk, that there was no ſpeaking to him That Night; but the next Morning, while he was Dry and Sober, ſhe told him the whole Story from End to End; which ſtruck him into ſuch an Aſtoniſhment, that he fell into a Dead Numbneſs all over his Body upon't, and Died in Ten Days. David, upon the News Nabal's Wife, Abigail, meets David and pacifies him.

David pardons Nabal for Abigail's ſake: But foretells a Judgment to attend him.

Nabal dies, as David had foretold.

News of his Death, was heard to ſay, that the Judgment was Righteous, and that God had Avenged his Cauſe, while he that received the Injury came-off with Clean Hands. The World may gather from This Example, that there's no Avoiding the ſtroke of Divine Juſtice; and that it is Providence that Governs the World, not Paſſion, or Chance; but that both Good and Wicked Men are either Rewarded, or Puniſhed in their Own Kind.

David Marries Abigail, Nabal's Widow.

After the Deceaſe of the Husband, David ſent a Meſſage, and an Invitation to the Widow; deſiring her to come over to him; for he would take her to his Bed as his Lawful Wife. Her Anſwer was, that ſhe was not Worthy ſo much as to Waſh the Feet of David; but ſhe went to him however, with all her Equipage, and became his Wife; an Honour that ſhe was Indebted for to the Graces both of her Mind and Perſon; for it was her Prudence, Modeſty, and Beauty, that recommended her to this Preferment. David had alſo a Former Wife, [Ahinoam] of Abeſar; but as for his late Wife Michol, the Daughter of Saul, her Father gave her away to Phalti the Son of Laiſh of Gallim. It was not long after This, when the Men of Ziphe brought a Freſh Account to Saul, that David was come into their Quarters again, and that with a little Help he might be eaſily Taken. Upon this Intelligence, Saul immediately marched toward them with Three Thouſand Men; and the Night coming on, he pitched his Tents at a Place called [a] Zicklag. When David came to underſtand that Saul was moving that way, he ſent out his Scouts for a particular Enformation where the Enemy lay; and word being brought that they had poſted themſelves near a Place call'd Zicklag, David got-up in the Night, and with only Abiſhai, the Son of his Siſter Zeruiah, and Ahimelech the Hittite, went directly, without the Privity of any other Creature, into the Camp of the Enemy; where they found the King in his Tent, with his General Abner, and his Guards about him, all faſt aſleep.

Abiſhai, ſeeing the King in his Bed, and his Launce by him, would needs have nailed him immediately to the ground; but David held his Hands, and told him: Abiſhai, ſays he, Saul is God's King, and his Perſon Sacred, let the Man be never ſo Wicked; and he is only Accountable for the ill Management of his Power to him that gave him the Power it ſelf. But for a Proof however, that I had him at Mercy, though I would not make a bad uſe of the Advantage, I will now take away his Launce, and Pitcher of Water from his Bed-ſide. David leaving the Camp as Silently, and Unperceived, as he came into it, and betwixt the Darkneſs of the Night, and the Strength of his own Reſolution, he went his way, without any Apprehenſion of Danger upon the Adventure. He paſs'd the River, and then getting-up to the Top of a Mountain near at hand, within Hearing of the Camp, he called out from thence to Abner, and the Guards, as Loud as he could, to wake them: Abner ſtarted upon this Clamour; and hearing himſelf call'd upon by Name, cry'd-out Aloud to know, who it was that would ſpeak with Abner? Anſwer was made, it was David, the Son of Jeſſe, one of your Fugitives. Are not you a Fit Man, ſays David, to be a great Prince's Favourite; a General of his Army, and to take upon you the Guard of his Royal Perſon, and under all theſe Honourable Obligations, to lie dozing and ſtretching your ſelf at Eaſe, when your Maſter's Life is in Danger? Can you tell me what is become of the King's Launce, and the Pitcher of Water that were This Night taken by the Enemy out of his Tent, and from his very Bed-ſide? And you, in the mean time, and your Guards, all ſnorting about him, without knowing any thing of the Matter? Whether This were Neglect, or Treachery, 'tis as Broad as 'tis Long; for whether it was the One, or the Other, you do certainly deſerve to loſe your Head for't.

He croſſes the River, and chides Abner and the Guards, for looking no better to their Maſter.

When Saul, came to find This to be David's Voice, and Himſelf now a Second Time Betray'd, betwixt the Frailty of his Own Drowzyneſs, and the Neglect of the Guards, into the Hands of the very Perſon, whoſe Life He Himſelf was now about to take away; miſtaking the Beſt Friend he had for the moſt Mortal of his Enemies: Saul, I ſay, was ſo Senſible of David's Goodneſs and Reſpect, under the Greateſt of Provocations, and not without ſome ſort of Right to be ſevere upon him, that He gave him Publique Thanks for his Life: bidding him ſet his Heart at Reſt for the future, and Fear nothing, but return in Peace to his Own Habitation; for he found by Experience, he ſaid, that his Life was not Dearer to Himſelf then it was to David; whom he look'd upon as his Preſerver, and a Perſon of ſo Try'd, and Unchangeable Affection to him, that notwithſtanding All Baniſhments, Hazzards, and Ill Uſages; Loſs of Friends, and many Violent Attempts upon his Life, he returned him nothing but Benefits for Injuries, and Good for Evil. David, at laſt, called for ſome Body to fetch back the Lance, and the Pitcher; appealing upon the whole matter to the

After This Second Deliverance, Saul returned Safe, and at liberty to his Palace. But David having no Mind to venture Himſelf any longer in a place, where he was ſtill in Danger to be taken-up, remov'd with his Six Hundred Men into the Land of the Philiſtins, to Live There, with the Conſent, and Liking of all his People. Being now come to Achiſh, the king of Gath (a City belonging to the Philiſtins,) the King entertains David, and his Two Wives, Ahinoam, and Abigail. Saul all this while had notice ſtill of David's Removes; but after Two Diſappointments already, and falling into the very Trap Himſelf that He had ſet for David, he left his Adverſary to take his Fortune, and gave over the Chace.

Achiſh the King of Gath entertains David, and his Two Wives.

Saul gives over the Purſuit of David.

David found himſelf Uneaſy in the City of Gath, and ſo took the Freedom to deſire of the King This Addition to his Former Bounties; that he would be pleaſed to Aſſign him ſome Place, or Portion of Ground in his Dominions, for Himſelf and thoſe that belonged to him to Live upon; for it put him out of Countenance to continue ſtill in a Place, where he muſt appear Burdenſome to the People. So the King gave him Zicklag to Himſelf, and his Heirs, for ever; and David retained a Great Kindneſs for the Place, even after he came to be King: but of this more at large in Another Place.

King Achiſh gives David the City of Zicklag, to Him and his Heirs.

David's ſtay in Zicklag was Four Months, and Twenty Dayes; whence he made Several Inroads upon their Neighbours, the Sarites, and Amalekites, carrying away Vaſt Booties of Mules and Camels; but taking no Priſoners, for fear they ſhould tell Tales, and diſcover the whole Myſtery to Achiſh. He made the King Preſents however out of the Spoil, who would be asking him now and then, where he met with all That Pillage. His Anſwer was, that he had made Incurſions into the Southerly Parts of Juda, and there he found it. There was no Great Difficulty to make Achiſh believe a ſtory that his Heart was ſo ſet upon to have it True; for it was Reaſonably to be preſumed, that after all this Havock and Outrage committed by David upon his Own Countrymen, he would never dare to look homeward again; and by That means have nothing left to truſt to, but the Service of King Achiſh. The Philiſtins were about This time preparing for a War againſt the Hebrews, and a General Rendezvous appointed upon ſuch a Day, in Rengam, where Achiſh was to draw them into a Body, and thence to lead them out againſt the Enemy. The King ſpake to David alſo to Joyn him, with his Six Hundred Men, over and above his Own Troops; who not only promiſed it with Great Readineſs, but told Achiſh further, that the Time was now at hand, that would put it into his Power to make him an Honourable Return for all his Bounties. The King on the Other hand, paſſing his Royal Word to David, the more to Oblige him, that if he Succeeded in This Battle, he would do him all the Honour that in Him lay, and in Particular, give him the Command of his Guards,

CHAP. XV.

Saul conſults the Ghoſt of Samuel. The Spirit foretells him the Loſs of the Battle, with the Death of Himſelf, and his Sons: and it proves ſo accordingly. The Amalekites pillage and burn Zicklag: David purſues, and cuts them to Pieces.

All Diviners, Sooth-ſayers, and Fortune-Tellers baniſh'd the Kingdom.

IT is to be Noted, that Saul had already Baniſh'd All Diviners, Sooth-ſayers, Fortune-Tellers, and All Other People whatſoever of Thoſe Vain Pretenſions, out of his Dominions: but the Prophets he ſtill retained. News being now brought him that the Philiſtins were advanced as far as Sunem, and Encamped upon the Plain there, he went out to meet them, and drew up near the Mountain of Gilboah, directly over againſt the Camp of the Enemy. The Armies being now in ſight one of another, Saul found the Philiſtins ſo much Superiour to the Hebrews, both for Order, and Number, that his Heart miſgave him, and ſunk upon it; and This Terrour put him upon conſulting the Prophets about the Event of the Expected Battle. The Queſtion being put, and No Anſwer returned, the Silence of the Oracle was Worſe to Saul then all the reſt; for he look'd upon it to be ſo Foreboding a Preſage of an Evil Fate at hand, that he fell into a Downright Deſperation upon it; and yet ſuch was the Hardneſs of his Heart, that though God had withdrawn his Fa-

The Philiſtins advance, and Saul goes out to meet them.

The Armies Face one another, and the Philiſtins much the Stronger.

Saul conſults the Prophets, and the Oracle is Silent: which he looks upon as a Foreboding.

Favour from him in ſuch a Signal Manner, and He Himſelf conſcious of it, he had ſtill a recourſe, after all This, to Conjurers, and Wizzards, to learn the Event of Things, and ſet People at work to find him-out ſome Cunning Woman that could foretell Things to come: For there are a ſort of People that take upon them to call-up the Ghoſts of the Dead, and by the Help of the Black-Art, to reſolve ſuch Queſtions as Saul had to ask. While he was upon this Enquiry, One of his Family told him, that he had heard of ſuch a ſort of Woman at Endor. Upon This Enformation, Saul without any more ado, diſguiſes himſelf; and taking Two Confidents along with him, away he goes to the Famous Woman at Endor, without a word ſpeaking of it to any body elſe. The Firſt Thing he ſaid upon coming-up to her, was to deſire ſome Tryal of her Skill, in calling-up the Ghoſt of ſuch a certain Perſon as He ſhould Name. The Woman Excuſed her ſelf, out of a Reverence to the King's Edict, which had forbidden This Way of Divination, upon Pain of Baniſhment: Wherefore ſhe beſought him, not to betray her into a Snare; for if ſhe ſhould pretend to give a Reſolution, and be detected, the Practice would moſt Infallibly be her Ruine. But This Refuſal would not ſatisfy Saul: ſo that preſſing her ſtill more and more, with Bitter Imprecations upon Himſelf, that no Mortal ſhould ever know of one Syllable that paſs'd betwixt them, either Queſtion, or Anſwer, ſhe was prevail'd upon at laſt, betwixt Oaths and Importunities, to venture her ſelf upon the Credit of ſuch Aſſurances that ſhe was in ſafe Hands.

Saul diſguiſes Himſelf, and goes to the Witch of Endor.

Immediately upon her Yielding, Saul bad her call-up the Ghoſt of Samuel. She knew nothing at all who this Samuel was; but however, upon her calling him-up, the Phantome appear'd. The Woman was under an Aſtomiſhment at the ſight of ſo Divine a Figure, and turning toward Saul, asked him, if he were not Saul the King (for Samuel had told her as much:) Saul making Anſwer that he was the Man: and Obſerving her to be Trembling, and in Diſorder, deſir'd to know what might be the Cauſe of That Confuſion. She ſaw the Reſemblance, ſhe ſaid, of an Ancient Man with a Radiant Glory about him, Aſcending from the Earth. Saul demanded of her what kind of Figure, of what Years, and in what Habit it ſeem'd to be. A man in Years, She ſaid; of a Venerable Aſpect, and in a Sacerdotal Veſt. By This Deſcription, Saul concluded it to be the Figure of Samuel, and fell down upon his Face, and Worſhipped. The Spectre demanded what he gave him This Trouble for, to take him from his Place of Reſt? Saul reply'd, that it was abſolute Neceſſity: for he was threaten'd, he ſaid, with a Mighty Army, and wanted Advice what to do: God had forſaken him, and he had neither Prophets, Dreams, nor Viſions to fly to for Direction. For Theſe Reaſons, he had now Recourſe (he ſaid) to Samuel, as his Laſt Refuge, and a Perſon that he had ever found Favourable to himſelf and his Affairs. Samuel foreſeeing that Saul had but One Day more to Live, told him, how vain a Thing it was for Him that knew himſelf Forſaken of God, to launch-out into Unſeaſonable Curioſities, what ſhould hereafter become of him: But, ſays the Ghoſt, ſince Nothing elſe will ſerve your Turn, I am to tell you, that the Reſolution is Taken, and the Sentence paſs'd: That is to ſay; that David ſhall be put into Poſſeſſion of the Government, and bring the Preſent War to a Happy Concluſion, while You Your ſelf are to loſe your Crown, and your Life together, for your Diſobedience to God in the Buſineſs of the Amalekites; and for the Contempt of his Commmands, which from my Lips you received by his Order while I was Living. Know further, that you are to be with me to Morrow; Your Army ſhall be Overthrown, and Your ſelf, and your Sons fall in the Battle.

The Diſcourſe betwixt Saul and the Spectre.

The Spirit foretells David's coming to the Government; And Saul's loſing his Crown, and Life, and his Sons in the Battle.

Saul bids her call up the Ghoſt of Samuel.

Theſe Words ſtruck Saul Speechleſs, and in a manner Dead; for he fainted, and fell to the Ground upon them; whether out of the Tranſport of ſo ſurpriſing a Sentence, or out of weakneſs of Body with over-Faſting, may be a Queſtion, for he had eat nothing for Four and Twenty Hours before; but coming at laſt a little to himſelf again, the Woman was very Earneſt with him to take ſomewhat of Suſtenance to ſupport Nature; deſiring no other conſideration for the Dangerous Office ſhe had render'd him, then to have the putting of him into a Condition of Strength and Ability to return to his Army. She was ſenſible enough of the Hazzard ſhe had run in the Exerciſe of a Forbidden Profeſſion; and eſpecially in the Violation of a Decree at the Deſire (Unwittingly) of him that made it. After Twenty Importunities and Refuſals, in the Depth of his Deſperation, Saul was prevail'd upon, in the End, to admit of ſome Refreſhment. So the Woman though ſo Poor that ſhe got her Living by her Daily Labour, kill'd her only Calf; dreſs'd it, and ſet it before Saul, and his Servants, with her whole Fortune in that Treat; who, in fine, took his Repaſt, and Returned that Night to his Army.

Saul falls into a ſwoon.

I muſt not paſs over here the Candour, the Good-Nature, and the Greatneſs of This Woman's Mind, without ſome Note of Admiration. The King had forbidden her the Practice of an Art that was the only Maintenance of Her ſelf and Family. Here comes a Gueſt, and a Stranger to her, that ſhe had never ſeen before; but a Perſon in Miſery, and one that had need of her Advice in the way that He Himſelf had forbidden; for it prov'd to be the King. She receiv'd him, treated him, and reliev'd him, and All This ſhe did Willingly, and Chearfully, nay and ſo Frankly too, that ſhe gave him all ſhe had, and without any Proſpect or Contemplation of a Reward by gaining the King's Favour; for He ſhe knew was doom'd to Die. Beſide that over and above the Piety of theſe Offices, ſhe did all this for the very Man, whoſe Prohibition had been the Ruine of her. This Proceeding was quite contrary to the Cuſtom of the World, that makes Charity an Intereſt, and gives or relieves only to get by the Truck; putting out Virtue, as they do Mony, to Intereſt. We may reckon that we have recommended to us in the Great Example of this Generous Woman, the Honour and Humanity of doing Good Offices to all People in Neceſſity; beſide that a Sincere, and Unaffected Charity, is a Virtue of all Others the moſt Acceptable in God's ſight.

The Wonderful Good Nature and Generoſity of this Woman of Endor.

After This Right done to the Woman of Endor, there is ſomewhat further to be ſaid upon this Occaſion by Way of Admonition, that all ſorts of People may be the Better for it, Thoſe Eſpecially that are Born Great, and Prompted by Honourable Inclinations to the Love and Practice of Virtue. For this is it, that makes Men Immortal even upon Earth, and Inſpires Princes and Governours with Generous Thoughts and Reſolutions, in Defiance not only of Danger, but of Death it's ſelf, when the Safety and Well-Being of their Country requires it.

This Caſe of Saul is an Eminent Inſtance to my Purpoſe. He knew moſt certainly that he was to die in This Combat; for the Prophet had told him as much; but he Perſiſted yet in a Reſolution to ſtand his Fate, without betraying his Army to the Enemy, or expoſing his Royal Dignity to Scorn, for the ſaving of his Carcaſs. He made it his Glory to die Fighting for the Defence of his Government; and rather to have his Sons, and his Whole Family die Partners with him in the Honour of the Action, then to leave them behind him, under Anxious Uncertainties how their Survivors may prove, comforting himſelf with this, that a Good Name, would ſupply the Failure of any other Poſterity. This is the Man that, in my Opinion, deſerves the Character of truly Juſt, Brave, and Wiſe; and I would have the ſame Veneration paid to All Publique Spirited Examples of his Pitch, and Elevation, either Paſt, or to Come. For let Hiſtory ſay what it will, of ſome Men that may yet do Great Things, perhaps upon the Hope, or Aſſurance beforehand of coming-off Safe and Victorious; Theſe Men are not to be look'd upon as Heroes of the Firſt Rate; (though much however to be Eſteemed) but thoſe rather, that like Saul, ſtand Firm and Unſhaken in a Fearleſs Defyance of the Worſt of Fatalities, and under the Certainty, even of Death it ſelf. What mighty Matter is it for a Man to venture his Life upon a Common Chance of War, and betwixt Hope and Fear, to make the beſt of all Favourable Accidents! The Other is the Great Soul, that when he knows he is to Periſh, boldly Advances upon his Deſtruction; meets it, and Encounters his Fate, though without any Hope or Thought of ſurmounting it. Be this ſpoken to the Immortal Honour of Saul, who hath made himſelf Exemplary to all Lovers of Glory: and whoever would celebrate himſelf to After-Ages, muſt tread in his Steps; Princes eſpecially; to whom it is ſo Neceſſary to have exalted Minds, Anſwerable to the Sublimity of their Fortunes, that a Mediocrity either of Courage, or of Virtue, is a kind of a Scandal upon them. More might be ſaid upon the Subject of Saul's Dignity of Reſolution: but not to make This Digreſſion too Tedious, I ſhall now go-on where I left.

The Character of a Glorious Hero, in the Inſtance of Saul.

The Philiſtins having drawn their Troups together from All Quarters, according to their Diſtribution into Tribes, Kingdoms, and Governments; Achiſh the King of Gath, with his Men after the reſt, and David with his Band of Six Hundred after Achiſh; ſeveral of the Philiſtin-Commanders taking Notice of a Mixture of Hebrews among them, enquir'd from whence they came; who ſent for them? and what they did there? Achiſh made Anſwer, that the Young Man there (Pointing to David) was a Servant of Saul's, that was fall'n under his Diſpleaſure, and forced to fly for his Life. He came to me (ſays Achiſh) with the People he has about him, for Sanctuary: So I receiv'd him, and Provided for him: And now upon This Occaſion he has Promiſed me his Uttermoſt Aſſiſtance againſt Saul, in requital for his Protection, and to Gratify his Revenge. The Philiſtins were one and all againſt Truſting a Profeſs'd Enemy, and rather to have him ſent back again; for they did not know, they ſaid, what Miſchief the Treachery of ſuch a Party might do upon ſuch an Occaſion. And for the Controverſy betwixt him and his Maſter, the Service he might do him upon this Opportunity, would compound for Forty ſuch Breaches: Wherefore Achiſh ſhould do well, they ſaid, to look before him; and without more Words, to remand him back to the Habitation he had Aſſign'd him; for this was the David, they ſaid, that the Virgins cry'd-up ſo in their Songs, for killing ſo many Thouſands of the Philiſtins. Achiſh could not oppoſe the Force, and Reaſon of the Objection; and therefore he thought fit to take David aſide, and diſcourſe him upon that Subject. Young Man (ſays he) upon the certain Proof and Experience that I have received of your Fidelity and Courage, I have now entertain'd you as my Ally, and Aſſociate in this Expedition; wherefore withdraw your ſelf immediately to the Place I have allotted you, and have a Particular Care there of the Peace of my People, and the Country near you; for fear my Enemies ſhould take Advantage of my Abſence, and preſs me with Troubles at Home. You will do me the Office of a Kind Ally, every jot as effectually in that Government, as if you were my Second in the Army. And in the mean time, I am as much your Friend as ever. Upon this Declaration of Achiſh, they parted, and David, according to his Order went his way to Zicklag.

Zicklag taken by the Amalekites, and Burnt. 1 Sam. 30.

But in the mean time, while David was following the Camp of the Philiſtins, the Amalekites fell upon Zicklag; took it, and laid it in Aſhes; making the like Havock in the Country thereabout. They pillag'd all, in fine, where-ever they came, and at laſt went Home again with what Booty they could carry along with them. David, at his Return, finding the Place of his Habitation Deſtroy'd, and Deſolate; his Own Wives, and the Wives and Children of his Fellow-Soldiers, Hurry'd away Priſoners, with all that belonged to them, he brake-out into ſo Paſſionate an Extravagance of Lamentation and Outrage, that he rent his Clothes, and wept himſelf a-dry, even for want of Matter to ſupply more Tears. His Followers were ready to Stone him too, for the Loſs of their Wives and Children. For He was the cauſe of all, they ſaid; and the whole Miſcarriage was laid at his Door.

David's Followers Charge the Loſs of their Wives and Children, upon his Account.

When David had mourned himſelf a weary, he came at laſt to think of applying to Heaven for Comfort: and ſo deſired Abiathar, the High-Prieſt, to put on His Pontifical Robes, and conſult God in Form; And Then Report the Oracle. The Queſtion was, whether or not, in Caſe of Overtaking the Amalekites upon the Purſuit, The Hebrews might be Allowed, to Receive their Wives and Children again, that had been taken from them before, and Revenge themſelves upon the Enemy. The High-Prieſt bad David follow them, and Proſper. Upon which Encouragement, he took his Six Hundred Men, and purſu'd them upon the very Heel to the Brook [a] Beſor, where they found an Ægyptian that had loſt his way, and was Ready to Periſh with Hunger, having been Three Days in the Deſert without Eating. They took Pity upon him, and after giving him a little Refreſhment, they ask'd him what he was? and to whom he belong'd? He told them he was an Ægyptian born, and a Servant to a Perſon that was at the Sacking and Burning of Zicklag, and the Country thereabouts; who left him upon the way, in his Paſſage Home again, becauſe he was ſo Faint, that he could not keep-up with the Troups. David made uſe of This Ægyptian for his Guide, upon the Trace of the Amalekites, whom he overtook at laſt, and found them Tumbling upon the Ground; ſome Guttling, others Fuddling; and ſome again with much Pride, and Vanity, in the Contemplation of their Late Booty: But in ſhort, while they lay Dozing, and Drown'd in Sleep and Drink, and their Thoughts wholly ſet upon their Eaſe, and Pleaſure; Heedleſs, Defenceleſs, and Unarmed, David fell upon them in This Diſorder and Confuſion, mingling their Bloud with their Wine, and with Great Eaſe doing Dreadful Execution upon them: ſo that upon the Main, what with Thoſe that had no Arms at all, and Thoſe that had Arms, but were too Drunk to uſe them; there Scap'd of the whole Number, not above Four Houndred Perſons, who were carry'd-off by the Speed of their Camels. The Purſuit laſted from Noon till Night; and in the Cloſe of the Action, they recover'd their Wives, Children, and Booty.

The High-Prieſt bids him follow them, and Proſper.

David purſues, and overtakes them at the Brook Beſor.

David falls upon them in Sleep and Drink, and makes a Terrible Slaughter.

David had but Four Hundred Men with him in This Adventure: the Other Two Hundred (part of the Six) were left behind for a Guard to the Baggage. Upon his Return from the Chace, and the Spoil, the Four Hundred that were upon the Action would not allow the Other Two Hundred that were upon Eaſier Service, to have any Part in the Booty, more then That of their Wives and Children;

The Hebrews recover their Wives, and Children, and Booty.

David

David look'd upon it as an Unreaſonable Propoſition: For (ſays he) the Victory was God's, and being a Bleſſing upon the Common Cauſe, it is but Reaſon that the Whole Body ſhould Partake of the Benefit; eſpecially where the One Part of it was upon Duty, as well as the Other! and at the ſame time preſerv'd the Baggage. This Deciſion paſs'd into a Law, which is ſtill in Force to This very Day. That is to ſay; The Spoil to be Equally Divided betwixt them that Guard the Baggage, and thoſe that Fight the Battle. David, after his Return to Zicklag, ſent up and down to his Friends and Acquaintance in the Tribe of Juda, Preſents out of the Spoil. We ſhall paſs now from the Deſtruction of Zicklag, and the Total Overthrow of the Amalekites, to a Bloudy Victory obtained by the Philiſtins over the Hebrews.

A Bloudy Battle. 1 Sam. 31.

The Armies joyn'd, and the Encounter was very ſharp. Saul, and his Sons did all that was poſſible for brave Men to do; but finding themſelves Oppreſs'd with Numbers; (for the Whole Streſs fell upon them) they had no more to do, they ſaw, then to Dye Honourably, and to ſell their Lives at ſuch a Rate, that the Enemy ſhould have Little Reaſon to boaſt of the Purchaſe. They were ſurrounded, in fine, with Freſh and Freſh Multitudes; and ſtill, as they cut-off one Party, Another came-on: ſo that in the End They Themſelves were forced to ſubmit to the Neceſſity of an Inſuperable Fate. Upon the Fall of Saul's Sons, to wit, Jonathan, Aminadab, and Melchi, that were Slain in the Heat of the Battle, the whole Army fell into a Confuſion, and fled in a Direct Rout; the Philiſtins preſſing upon the Rear with a Prodigious Slaughter; Saul ſhifted for himſelf a while, with a Small Body of his Own, 'till in the End they were Broken all to Pieces by the Philiſtin's Darts and Arrows, and He found himſelf, ſo Weakned with Wounds and Loſs of Bloud, that after all his Heroical Exploits, He was not Able either to ſtand upon his Legs, or to do Execution upon Himſelf. In This Extremity, he called to His Armour-Bearer to do Him the Good Office, that He might not Fall Alive into the Hands of his Enemies. But the Servant Excuſed himſelf, out of the Veneration he had for Majeſty, and upon that Refuſal, Saul caſt Himſelf upon the Point of His Own Sword: But not being Able to Finiſh what he had Begun, He took Notice of a Young Man an Amalekite there at Hand, and Deſired him, to take the Sword, and ſome way or other, give him a Diſpatch. He did it at Firſt Asking, and in the ſame Inſtant made Prize of Saul's Golden Bracelets, and of his Royal Crown, running away with them immediately as faſt as he could. When the Armour-Bearer ſaw that Saul was Dead, he laid Violent Hands upon himſelf too, and there was not One Man of the King's Guard that out-liv'd his Maſter. This Battle was fought near the Mountain of Gilboah.

Saul's Sons, Jonathan, Aminadab and Melchi, are all ſlain.

Saul caſts himſelf upon the Point of his Sword.

An Amalekite diſpatches him, and takes away his Crown and Bracelets.

No ſooner had the Hebrews of the Valley beyond Jordan, and the Cities on the Plains, gotten Intelligence of the Death of Saul and his Sons, and of the Entire Deſtruction, and Diſſolution of his Army; but they withdrew themſelves out of their Open Towns into Faſtneſſes, and Strong Holds: while the Philiſtins took Poſſeſſion, and without any Difficulty made themſelves Maſters of the Places the Other had Quitted. On the Next Day after the Battle, the Philiſtins coming into the Field to view the Dead, found the Bodies of Saul, and his Sons, among the reſt. They ſtript them; cut-off their Heads, and ſent Expreſſes every way up and down with the News of this Defeat. Their Arms they depoſited in the Temple of Aſhtaroth, and their Bodies they Expoſed upon Gibbets, under the Walls of the City of Beth-ſhan, known at this Day by the Name of Scythopolis. This Barbarous Outrage upon the Bodies of Saul and his Sons, coming to the Ears of the Men of Jabeſh-Gilead, they took up ſuch an Indignation at the Inhumanity, of Refuſing them, The laſt Rites of Burial, that they made a Party of Daring, Enterprizing Spirits, among themſelves; (as that Place is full of them) and Travelling all Night; took down the Bodies of Saul and his Sons, from the Walls of Bethſhan, and carry'd them away to Jabeſh; not a Creature daring to open his Mouth againſt them. Their Deaths were lamented by the Whole People of the Place; who gave their Bodies a Publique, and an Honourable Interrment in the Chief Part of their Province. They ſpent ſeven Days in ſo ſtrict a Solemnity of Faſting and Mourning, that Men Women and Children were all bound Indiſpenſably to Obſerve it.

The Philiſtins cut-off the Heads of Saul and his Sons, and expoſe their Bodys upon Gibbets.

The Men of Jabeſh very bravely take down their Quarters, And give them a Publique and an Honourable Interment.

This was the End of Saul, according to the Prediction of Samuel, for his not Proſecuting the War againſt the Amalekites, according to his Order, and for the Maſſacre of Abimeleck, and his Family, with the Devaſtation even of the Sacerdotal City it ſelf. He ruled in the Days of Samuel, [a] Eighteen Years, and Twenty Two more after his Deceaſe; coming to his Unhappy End, in Manner as it is here ſet forth.

2 Sam. 1.

THE Battle last above-mention'd was fought upon the very Day of David's coming back to Zicklag, from the Overthrow of the Amalekites; and on the Third Day after that, came the Person that had Killed Saul, and made his escape out of the Battle. He advanced toward David with Ashes upon his Head, and his Clothes all rent, and so threw himself down Prostrate at his Feet. David asked him what he was, and from whence he came in such a Dress? He told him that he was an Amalekite, and came from the Unfortunate Battle of the Hebrews, where the King Himself, and his Sons, were Missing after the Battle, beside many Thousands of the Army. I shall speak no more, says he, then what I saw with my own Eyes. It was my Fortune to be near the King, when he was in his Extremity. He cast himself upon the Point of his own Sword; but so Faint with his Wounds, that he could not Execute what he had begun: so that upon his earnest Desire, I was forc'd to do the Office for him, to keep him from falling Alive into the Hands of his Enemies. He shewed David at the same time, the Bracelet, and the Crown that he took from the Dead Body, to confirm the Truth of his Story, which he reserved for a Present to David. There was no Place left for doubting, after this Evidence; so that David rent his Clothes upon it, and spent the whole Day with his Friends, in Tears, and Lamentations. But the most sensible Part of his Affliction was the Loss of Jonathan, his ever Dear, and Faithful Friend, and more then once the very Preserver of his Life. Now so Transcendent was the Virtue of David, and the Generosity of his Good Nature toward Saul, that notwithstanding so many repeated Practices upon his Life, he did not only deplore his Misfortune, but ordered the Criminal, to be deliver'd up to Justice; not only upon his own Confession, but upon the more Certain Evidence of his Guilt, in the Crown and the Bracelet, that he took from Saul after he was Dead, to carry them to David: and proving himself over and above, to be the true Brood of an Amalekite, by owning the very Principle of a Regicide. To say nothing of several Elegies and Epitaphs of David's Composition to the Honour of Saul, and Jonathan, that are still extant to this very Day.

The Amalekite that dispatch'd Saul casts himself at David's Feet.

David's most sensible Affliction is the Death of Jonathan.

He orders the Regicide-Amalekite to be put to death.

He writes Elegies and Epitaphs to the Honour of Saul and Jonathan. 2 Sam. 2.

When David had pay'd his Last Duties to the Honour and Memory of Saul and his Sons, and that the Term of the Mourning was expir'd, he consulted God by the Prophet, which of the Cities of Juda should be allotted him for his Habitation; and it was answered Hebron: Wherefore he left Zicklag immediately, and repaired thither, with his Two Wives, and the Guards of his Person that he had about him; whither the whole Body of the Tribe came Flocking, soon after, and in a Full Convention with one Voice proclaim'd him King. David had heard by this Time of the Generous, and Respectful Behaviour of the Men of Jabesh toward Saul, Hebron, by God's appointment, falls to David's Lot for his Habitation.

The People with one Voice, proclaim David, King.

Saul, and his Sons, and how bravely they reſcu'd their Bodies from the Gibbet, in the Face of the Enemy, and gave them a Pompous, and an Honourable Buryal: ſo that he ſent them Particular Acknowledgments, in his own Name, for what they had done in Favour of thoſe Princes, as an Obligation that ſhould for ever be remember'd to their Advantage: the ſame Meſſenger giving them alſo to underſtand, that the Tribe of Juda had Created and Declared David their King.

In this Juncture, Abner the Son of Ner, and Saul's General, a Man of a Large Heart and Soul, and Naturally cut-out and Qualify'd for Glorious Undertakings: This Great Man, I ſay, had no ſooner heard of the Death of Saul, Jonathan, and two other of his Sons, in the late Battle, but away he Poſted to the Camp to look after Iſhboſheth; at that Time, the only Survivor of Saul's Male-Iſſue. So he found him at laſt; and to put him out of Harms-Way, croſs'd the River Jordan with him, and got him to be Accepted and Declared King of all Iſrael, the Tribe of Juda excepted; appointing [a] Meanahaim for his Reſidence, which ſignifies as much as the Camp. Abner was ſo Incenſed againſt the Tribe of Juda for the Choice of their King, that he reſolved to make War upon them for it, and ſo Detach'd a Body of the Beſt Men he could pick-out, for the Encounter. Joab, the ſon of Suri, and Zerviah, David's Siſter, had the Command of David's Army; taking his Two Brothers, Abiſhai, and Hazael along with him. When they were advanced to a certain Fountain of Gibeon, the Two Armies being now in Sight of one another drew up, But as they ſtood in Order there, and ready to Engage, Abner propounded a Tryal beforehand between ſo many, and ſo many of a ſide, to ſee which were the Braver Men of the Two. So by Conſent they ſent out Twelve and Twelve to diſpute the Point, betwixt, and in ſight of the Two Armies. They began the Combat with their Darts, and then fell-in with their Swords; Every Man taking his Adverſary by the Hair, and Digging and Stabbing one another till they fell All Dead upon the Place. Upon this, the Armies joyn'd, and for a while it was hard fought on Both ſides: But in the End, Abner was totally Routed, and put to Flight; Joab, and his Two Brothers at the Heel of him upon the Purſuit, encouraging their Men, both to the Chace, and to the Execution. But no Man ſtuck ſo Cloſe to him as Hazael; who was ſo light of Foot, that he had the better of moſt Horſes; and having ſingled him-out, preſt cloſe after him, without turning either to the Right-Hand or to the Left. When Abner found him ſo hard upon him, he Offer'd him a Suit of Arms to let him go; and ſeeing that would not take him-off, he fairly advis'd him not to put him to the Neceſſity of doing him a Miſchief, for the ſaving of his Own Life: After which, he could never think of looking his Brother in the Face again. Abner perceiving by this Time, that Hazael was not to be wrought upon, he turn'd his Launce in his Flight, and ſtruck his Purſuer Dead upon the Place. This Accident put ſome kind of Stop to the Purſuit; for the People gave over the Chace to ſtand Gazing at the Spectacle. But Joab and his Brother Abiſhai were now paſt the Dead Body, and ſo exaſperated againſt Abner for the Death of their Brother, that with an Incredible Speed and Vigour, they preſſed the Purſuit till towards Sun-ſet, to Mathon; that is to ſay, the Aquaduct. In this Place, Abner, with the Tribe of Benjamin, took the Advantage of a Riſing Ground to obſerve the Enemy, and from thence to Reaſon the Caſe with Joab after this Manner.

After the Death of Saul, Abner finds out Iſhboſheth, the only Male of the Family:

And gets him declar'd King of all Iſrael, Juda excepted.

Abner makes War upon the Tribe of Juda for declaring David their King.

Joab commands David's Army, taking Abiſhai and Hazael his Two Brothers along with him.

The Two Armies draw-up, and Face one another.

Abner propounds a Combat, of 12 to 12, and they All dye upon the Place.

The Armies joyn; Abner Routed; Joab and his Two Brothers upon the Purſuit.

Abner ſtrikes Hazael Dead upon the Chace.

That this Outragious Animoſity was already gone too far among People of the ſame Bloud and Profeſſion. As for your Brother Hazael, ſays he, I begg'd of him to be Quiet, and let me alone without Purſuing any further; but he brought it to this in the Concluſion, that I muſt either take away his Life, or loſe my own: ſo that he may even thank himſelf for this Miſcarriage. Joab could not Oppoſe the Fairneſs of Abner's Plea, and ſo cauſed a Retreat to be ſounded; encamping upon the ſame Place that Night: But Abner continu'd his March over the River Jordan, and ſo to the Pallace of Iſhboſheth, the Son of Saul. Joab, the Day following, took a View of the Dead; (which he cauſed to be Bury'd) computing that Abner loſt Three Hundred and Sixty Men, and David Nineteen; without reckoning Hazael, whoſe Body was carried by Joab, and Abiſhai, to Bethlehem, and there laid in the Sepulchre of their Fathers; from whence they returned to David at Hebron.

Abner calls out to Joab, and reaſons the Caſe with him.

Joab gives over the Purſuit; but Abner marches away to Iſhboſheth.

Abner loſes 360 Men, and David 19. 2 Sam. 3.

This Controverſy betwixt the Houſe of David, and the Houſe of Saul, was the Riſe of a Long Civil War among the Hebrews; But ſtill as David and his Party got the Better of it in all Encounters, ſo the Sons of Saul, on the other ſide, were ſtill Worſted in whatever they undertook. David, in the mean time, had [b] Six Sons by as many Wives. There was Ammon the Son of Ahinoam; Daniel, the Son of Abigail; Abſalom, the Son of Maacah, the Daughter of Tolmai King of Geſhar; Adonijah, the Son of Haggith; Sphacia, the Son of Abithal, and Jethrakam the Son of Egla.

This Diſpute betwixt the Houſes of Saul and David, prov'd the Occaſion of a Tedious Civil War.

David had ſix Sons in Hebron by ſix Wives.

In

In the Proſecution of This Civil War, it was the Prudence, the Intereſt, and the Popularity of Abner, more then any thing elſe, that Supported the Pretenſions of Saul's Family, and kept the People in their Obedience to Iſhboſheth. But This Prince being Enformed that Abner liv'd in a kind of Scandalous Familiarity with Rizpah, the Daughter of Sibeth, one of his Late Father's Concubines, he laid it Point-blank to his Charge, and School'd him ſo ſeverely about it, that it put him into a Severe Fit of Melancholy, and Indignation, to find all his Faithful Services to Saul, and his Family, ſo Ill-requited. Upon This Provocation, he meditated a Revenge, no Leſs then the taking of the Crown off from Iſhboſheth's Head, and ſetting it upon David's; and giving the World to Underſtand, that Iſhboſheth was not Advanced to the Government for any Virtue, or Ability of his Own; but by the Advice, Arms, Intereſt, Recommendation, and the Try'd Fidelity of Abner.

Iſhboſheth reproves Abner for his Familiarity with Rizpah, one of his Father's Concubines. This Reproach provokes Abner to meditate a Revenge.

While This Humour was at Work, he ſent a Commiſſioner to Hebron, with Full Power to ſtrike-up a League with David in his name, upon This ſingle Condition: That From, and After the Time of Abner's drawing-off all the Tribes from Iſhboſheth to David, and Advancing David to the Throne by the Univerſal Conſent of the People, Abner ſhould be received from that Day forward, as David's Firſt Miniſter and Favourite. Nothing could have been more Welcome to David then This Propoſal of Abner's, and it was entertained accordingly. The Firſt thing he deſired, as the Earneſt of a Future Allyance, was the Reſtoring of Michol, whom he had purchaſed with very Great Labour and Hazzard, beſide the Heads of Six Hundred Philiſtins paid down upon a Bargain for her with Saul. So Abner took Michol out of the Arms of Phalti, upon whom ſhe was beſtow'd, with the Privity and Aſſiſtance of Iſhboſheth, who had been already poſſeſs'd with the Merits of the Cauſe, and the Reaſonableneſs of the Demand. While Things were at This Paſs, Abner call'd the Elders, and the Commanders; or in ſhort, the Principals of the People both Military and Civil, together: to whom be deliver'd Himſelf upon the Preſent Occaſion to This Purpoſe.

Abner compounds with David for the bringing of the Tribes over to him.

David embraces the Motion: inſiſting only to have his Wife Michol Reſtor'd.

Abner calls together the Principals of the People.

There was a Time, ſays he, when you would have gone over from Iſhboſheth to David, and I was againſt it; but you are now at liberty to do what you pleaſe: for the Prophet Samuel hath moſt Infallibly aſſur'd us from the Voice of God himſelf, that David is the Man, whom Divine Providence hath Deſigned for the King and Governour of the Whole Nation of the Hebrews: and that it is he, and only he, that is to Avenge us upon the Philiſtins, and to bring Them under Our Yoke. Theſe Words were ſo Clear a Diſcovery how Abner ſtood inclin'd, that the Heads of the People, and of the Army, fell-in Unanimouſly with His Opinion; and from That Time forward, declar'd and Acted barefac'd, in favour of David. When they had Proceeded thus far, Abner, in the Firſt Place, call'd for the Benjamites, which were all of the Life-Guard to Iſhboſheth, ſpeaking to them in the ſame Manner with the Former, and with the ſame Effect too; for they all declar'd themſelves as One Man for David.

The People declare themſelves for the Intereſt of David.

Abner brings over the Guard alſo into David's Party.

When Abner had made This Advance toward the Performance of his Conditions, he took a matter of Twenty Men of his Own Choice away with him to David; in Order, partly, to the Ratifying of the Treaty; and in part, for Common Satisfaction, becauſe Men are better pleas'd to do their Own Buſ'neſs Themſelves, then by Proxyes. And he had in it alſo This Further End, that the Proceedings on Both ſides might be the more Impartially tranſmitted from the One to the Other; and an exact Report made of what had paſs'd between Himſelf, and the Heads of the Tribes, and how he had now brought over the Benjamites to David's Party. Abner and his Company were Treated by David with all Imaginable Freedom, and Magnificence, for the Time they ſtay'd; but after ſome Few Days, he deſir'd for the Preſent to be Diſmiſs'd, that he might fetch-up the Army, and the People to him; and, upon delivering-up the Government into his Hands, by the Conſent of the Whole Nation, make good what he had Undertaken.

Abner goes to David, and takes Twenty Men along with him.

Abner and his People are fairly entertain'd, and Diſmiſs'd.

Abner was preſently Diſpatch'd according to his Deſire, and hardly out of the Gates of Hebron, at one End of the Town; but Joab, David's General, that had been ſomewhere abroad (it ſeems) came-in at the Other: where being given to Underſtand that Abner had been in Private with David, upon Certain Propoſals to ſettle him in the Government; the Conditions Offered and Accepted, and a League ſolemnly Ratify'd betwixt them, and Himſelf juſt then ſent back upon That Errand; an Outrageous Jealouſy took Joab in the Head upon't; that This Intrigue of Abner's would be His Ruine; and Supplant him, not only in his Maſter's Favour, but in the moſt Honourable of his Commiſſions: Eſpecially conſidering that Abner was a Man of Skill, and Addreſs, and Dext'rous enough to make the Beſt of a Fair Game.

Abner's Privacy with David, gives Joab a Mortal Jealouſy of him.

Joab calumniates Abner to David.

The Venom of This Envy began now to Work in the Heart of Joab, and his Firſt Recourſe was to Back-Biting and Detraction. So that away he went with a Smooth

Tale

Tale to the King, and an Advice at the End of it, that he ſhould do well to have a care how he Truſted Abner; for his Bus'neſs was above all things in the World to Eſtabliſh the Family of Saul in the Government. His Pretences were only Snares: and upon the Gaining of his Point, and Pumping-out what he had a mind to know, he was now gone Home again to reap the Fruits of his Falſe Dealing. When Joab found that there was no Good to be done upon David, by Calumny and Slander, to the Prejudice of Abner, he bethought himſelf of a ſurer, and ſhorter way of doing his Bus'neſs, by taking away his Life; and ſo ſent Meſſengers Poſting after him in David's Name, to call him back again, under a Pretext of ſomewhat forgotten in his Inſtructions that was very Conſiderable. They overtook him upon the way at a Place call'd Sirah, ſome Twenty Furlongs from Hebron; and upon delivering their Meſſage, Abner very Innocently went back with them to the City, little dreaming of what afterwards befell him. Upon his coming-up to the Walls of the Town, there ſtood Joab in the Gate with a Wonderful Appearance of Kindneſs and Humanity, ready to receive him; (as the Devil himſelf is never ſo Wicked as in the Shape of an Angel of Light) ſo taking him aſide, as upon ſome Private Bus'neſs, he took the Opportunity of a Secret Corner out of Sight, only his Brother Abiſhai in Company with him; and Surprizing him at Unawares, ran his Sword into his Guts. Thus was this Brave Man taken-off by the Perfidious Malice, and Hypocriſy of Joab, in Revenge (as he pretended) for the Death of his Brother Hazael, that was ſlain in the Battle of Hebron, upon the Violent Purſuit of Abner: but in truth, to Gratify his Jealouſy and Revenge, for fear of being Supplanted in his Court-Preferments. This is to ſhew us, that Men Abandon'd to the Luſts of Avarice and Ambition, will ſtick at nothing; for they are never at Eaſe, ſo long as they ſee any thing Above them. So long as they are in the Purſuit of what they eagerly deſire, they preſs their Ends without ever examining or conſidering the Means. There is no ſuch thing as Scruple of Honour, or Conſcience in the Caſe; but Right or Wrong, how the Work may be done; and they are ſtill Bolder yet in the Defence and Maintenance of a thing Ill-gotten, then they were in the Acquiring of it: for they can better bear a Miſcarriage in miſſing what they would have been at, then the ſhame of having any thing forc'd away from them that they have gotten. They will, in ſhort, ſtruggle harder to keep what they have; Eſpecially when they have taſted the Sweet of it, then to get what they had not: But here's enough in a Word upon This Point.

When Back-biting would not do, Joab has Recourſe to Violence.

Joab counterfeits a Meſſage from David to Abner.

Joab perfidiouſly Murders Abner.

The News of Abner's Death went to the Heart and Soul of David, inſomuch that upon the very Inſtant of Hearing it, he Stretched-forth his Right-hand toward Heaven, in an Appeal, and Proteſtation, upon the Whole Matter, that he was neither Privy, nor conſenting to the Fact; curſing moſt bitterly the Aſſaſſin whoever he was; his Family, and All his Complices: and All This, not only in a Deteſtation, of ſo Baſe, and Unmanly a Practice; but likewiſe to Purge Himſelf, upon the Strickteſt Niceties of Faith and Honour, that he had been True to Abner. He appointed by Proclamation a Publique Mourning for him, with all the Solemnities of Tearing Garments, and putting on Sackcloth. He himſelf with his Great Miniſters and Officers aſſiſting at the Funeral, and giving Sufficient Demonſtrations, by Wringing of Hands, Beating their Breaſts, and other Expreſſions of Sorrow, both of the Veneration they had for Abner's Memory, and the Senſe they had of ſo Ineſtimable a Loſs, All People being now fully ſatisfy'd in the Concluſion, that David was far from Approving, or Conſenting to ſo Execrable an Act. He cauſed the Body to be Interr'd at Hebron, with Great State and Magnificence, compoſing an Epitaph himſelf, to the Honour of the Deceas'd. He was the Chief Mourner, and a Preſident to All the reſt, who acted in Conformity to his Example. The Death of Abner, in Few words, pierc'd the Heart of him to ſuch a Degree, that his Friends could not prevail upon him to touch either Meat, or Drink, That whole Day. The Severity of this Religious Strictneſs gained Exceedingly upon the Affections of the People, and particularly upon the Friends of Abner; to whom nothing could be more Acceptable then this Laſt Teſtimony of David's Inclination and Eſteem for his Perſon, and Memory, now he was gone; for he did not Treat him, they ſaw, with a ſlight and Ignominious way of Buryal, as an Enemy, but with all the Tenderneſſes of Generoſity, Juſtice, and Friendſhip. Beſide that it highly Elevated the Character of David's Piety and Good Nature, in giving Men to Underſtand what they might Expect from him themſelves, if ever Abner's Caſe ſhould come to be theirs. So that David, in this way of Proceeding, conſulted his Intereſt, as well as his Reputation, and Virtue; for after this Proof, he was never ſuſpected for want of Good-Will to Abner.

The Death of Abner goes to the Heart of David.

David does all poſſible Honour to the Memory of Abner.

When the Company were upon the Point of breaking-up, David entertain'd them with a ſhort Diſcourſe to the Advantage of Abner, and firſt upon the Account of his Own Particular Unhappineſs, in being depriv'd of a Friend he had ſo Great a Value for:

David's high Eſteem for Abner.

for: And then with a reſpect to the Publique, how much the whole Nation ſuffer'd in the Loſs of ſo Brave, and ſo Wiſe a Man; and, in ſhort, a Perſon ſo Neceſſary both for War and Councel. But God, ſays he, that Governs all things, will not let This Murder paſs Unrevenged: He is my Witneſs, that I am not in Condition to call Joab and Abiſhai to an Account; for they have a greater Intereſt in the Army perhaps then I my ſelf: but this I dare pronounce, that Sooner or Later, Divine Juſtice will find them-out. Thus it was that Abner ended his days.

David's Prophetical Preſage of a Judgment to attend Joab, and Abiſhai.

CHAP. II.

Baanah and Rechab preſent David with the Head of Iſhboſheth; who orders them to be put to death by Exquiſite Torments. All the Tribes Own David for their King. He raiſes an Army, and takes Jeruſalem. Joab the Firſt that Scales the Wall.

THE Fall of Abner was a moſt Terrible Mortification to Iſhboſheth the Son of Saul; for in him, he loſt a Dear Friend, and a Near Kinſman, that advanc'd him to his Father's Throne: But he himſelf did not long ſurvive him neither, for he was Treacherouſly murder'd ſoon afterward by Baanah, and Rechab, the Sons of Rimmon. Theſe Two Brothers were Benjamites, and of the Firſt Rank among them. They were thinking with themſelves, that if Iſhboſheth were but taken out of the way, David would have a Clear Stage to himſelf: Upon which Conſideration, they concerted the matter betwixt them, how they might do him That piece of Service; making no doubt in the World, of Honour, Rewards, and Commands in Abundance, upon the Performance of that Good Office. So that at a time when he was Alone in his Bed-Chamber, and taking his Afternoon's Nap; No Guards at hand; and the very Servant that commonly kept the Door, Weary'd, and Faſt aſleep, they took their Opportunity to ſteal into the Chamber; kill'd him where they found him; cut-off his Head, and Poſted away with it all Night toward Hebron, the ſooner to get Clear of the People they had injur'd, and to bring the Preſent ſo much the Freſher to him that they pretended to Oblige. When they came to their Journy's End, they preſented it to David, not a little Valuing themſelves upon the Merit of having deſtroy'd his Competitor for the Empire: But their Entertainment was not Anſwerable to their Expectation, as will appear by what David ſaid to them upon this Occaſion.

Iſhboſheth hath a very Great Loſs of Abner. 2 Sam. 4. Iſhboſheth baſely murder'd by Baanah and Rechab.

The Manner and Contrivance of the Execution.

They carry Iſhboſheth's Head to David for a Preſent.

Wicked Wre'ches that you are! ſays he, Prepare your ſelves immediately to receive the Juſt Reward of your Horrid Villany. Do not you know how I requited the Murderer of Saul; that when he had taken away That Sacred Life, had the Confidence to bring me his Golden Crown for an Oſtentation of the Service he had done me in it? Nay, and it was at the Inſtance too of Saul Himſelf, that he did it, to prevent the Indignity of being taken Alive by his Enemies. Am not I the ſame Man, do you think, at This Day, that I was then? Or am I turn'd ſo Abandon'd a Wretch ſince, as to Countenance the moſt Profligate of Men and of Actions, and to reckon my ſelf under an Obligation to you for dipping your Hands (upon My Account, as you would have it thought) in the Blood of your Lord? The Cutting of his Throat in his Bed too; and the Throat, over and above, of a Perſon ſo Juſt, that he never did any Man Wrong; and ſo Generous a Patron and Benefactor to your Ungrateful ſelves, that all the Advantages you can pretend to in this World, are but what you ſtand Indebted for to his Bounty and Goodneſs. Wherefore you ſhall now pay for your Breach of Faith to your Maſter, and for the Scandal you have caſt upon me, both at once; for what greater Wound could any Man give me, in my Reputation, then to Expoſe me for a Perſon that could take Pleaſure in the Tydings, or give Countenance to the committing of ſo Barbarous an Aſſaſſinate? Upon theſe laſt Words, he gave Order to have the Two Regicides put to exquiſite Torments, and the Head of Iſhboſheth to be laid in the Monument of Abner, with all the Formalities of Funeral Rites and Honour.

David's Generous Indignation for ſo Baſe and Barbarous an Action.

The Two Regicides tormented to Death, and all Honour done to Iſhboſheth's Body. 2 Sam. 5.

So ſoon as this Execution, and Ceremony was over, all the Elders, and Great Officers of War and Peace, came thronging to David with a Complement of Recognition, and with a Tender of their Lives, and Fortunes, at his Service: not forgetting to Mind him of the Zeal and Devotion they ever had for him, even in the Life of Saul, and when they had the Honour to ſerve under his Command: enlarging upon it, how the Prophet Samuel, according to God's Order and Appointment, had declared him King, and the Government to Deſcend to his Sons after him; foretelling that the Great Work of ſubduing the Philiſtins, was reſerved for him alone, and conſequently the ſettling of Iſrael in the Poſſeſſion of a Laſting Peace and Safety. David highly commended them for their Good Will, and Diſpoſition; encouraging them to go-on as they had begun, with an Aſſurance, that he, for his part, would never give them cauſe to Repent it. David accompany'd this Declaration with a Splendid Treat, and when he had Entertained them with all Greatneſs, Humanity, and Freedom, he ſent them away with a Summons to the whole Body of the People to meet at his Palace.

There gather'd together upon this Call, of the Tribe of Judah Six Thouſand, and Eight Hundred Men, Armed with Shields and Launces. Theſe had been hitherto of the Party of Saul, over and above Thoſe of the ſame Tribe that had made David King, by themſelves: of the Tribe of Simeon, Seven Thouſand, a Hundred and upward: of the Tribe of Levi, Four Thouſand and Seven Hundred, with their Leader Jehoiada; and with theſe was the High-Prieſt Zadock, with Two and Twenty Eminent Men of his Relations: of the Tribe of Benjamin, Four Thouſand Armed Men; for this Tribe was altogether of Opinion that ſome of Saul's Family would ſucceed to the Government: of the Tribe of Ephraim, Twenty Thouſand and Eight Hundred; able-Body'd Men, and of Great Courage: of the Half-Tribe of Manaſſes, Eighteen Thouſand: of the Tribe of Iſſachar, Two Hundred Cunning Men, or a kind of Fortune-tellers; beſide Twenty Thouſand in Arms: Of the Tribe of Zebulun, Fifty Thouſand Choice-Men, and well Armed; This Tribe coming-in to David, Entire: All theſe us'd the ſame Arming with the Tribe of Gad. Of the Tribe of Naphthali, a Thouſand Eminent Commanders, armed with Shield and Spear, with almoſt an Innumerable Multitude of their Followers: Of the Tribe of Dan, Twenty Seven Thouſand Choice-Men: Of the Tribe of Aſher, Forty Thouſand: And of the Two Tribes beyond Jordan, and the other Half of the Tribe of Manaſſes, that were Armed with Shield, Spear, Sword, and Helmet, Two and Twenty Thouſand. The Remainder of the Tribes wore Swords alſo.

1 Chron. 12. A Muſter of all the Armed Troops of the ſeveral Tribes that met upon this Call.

This is the Muſter-Roll of thoſe that came-up to David at Hebron. They brought Corn, Wine, and Other Neceſſary Proviſions with them in Abundance, and with One Voice proclaim David to be their King. When they had ſpent ſome Three Days there, in Feaſting and Jollity, David Marched-out in the Head of this Army to Jeruſalem. The Jebuſites, a People of the Race of the Chanaanites, were at that time in poſſeſſion of the City; and upon David's Advance toward them, they ſhut their Gates upon him, and in a Pleaſant way of Defying David, and his Troups, brought out their Lame, and their Blind to the Walls for the Guard of the Town. They ſhould need no other Guard, they ſaid, for the Encounter of ſuch an Enemy: ſo Great was their Confidence in the Strength of the Place. David was ſo nettled at this Contemptuous Mockery, that he took up a Reſolution immediately upon it, to Attaque the City: reaſonably computing, that the making of this Place, and theſe People Exemplary, would ſtrike a Terror into all Others for the Future. So David fell-on with the Flower of his Army; and, upon a General Aſſault, enter'd the Lower-Town: But the Caſtle ſtill held-out. David finding it to be a ſtrong piece; the Attempt likely to be Hazzardous, and his Honour at ſtake upon the Carrying of it, he bethought himſelf how he might Enflame the Courage of his Men by ſome Extraordinary Propoſal of Honour and Reward; and by that Incentive to kindle an Emulation among his People, who ſhould do beſt: David paſs'd his Royal Word, that he that firſt Mounted the Wall, and made good his Station, ſhould have the Command of the Army. Hereupon the Hebrews joyned in a fierce Attaque, and a Generous Contention who ſhould go furtheſt. It fell to Joab's Lot to Win the Prize; ſo that from the Top of the Battlement, he called-out to David, to make good his Promiſe.

CHAP. III.

Jeruſalem call'd the City of David; who takes the Town, Fortifies, Adorns it, and keeps his Court there. The King of Tyre ſeeks his Friendſhip, and Allyance. David's Wives and Children.

WHen they had clear'd the Caſtle, of the Jebuſites, and repair'd the Town, the King gave to Jeruſalem the Name of The City of David; and made it his Place of Reſidence, during his Reign. This was after he had ruled Seven Years and Six Months over the Tribe of Judah in Hebron. Upon the Eſtabliſhment of his Court at Jeruſalem, Matters went every Day better and better with him: For God in his Providence deſigning it for a Seat of Glory, had a Peculiar Kindneſs for the Place.

Jeruſalem called The City of David.

About this Time, Hiram the King of Tyre ſent an Embaſſy to David, upon a Treaty of Friendſhip and Allyance; and Preſents likewiſe along with it, of Cedar-Wood; Builders, and Maſter-Workmen, toward the Erecting of a Palace for him at Jeruſalem. David fortify'd the Upper-Town, and laid that and the Cittadel both in One,

Hiram propounds an Allyance with him.

David fortifies the Place, and gives the Command of it to Joab.

with a Wall about them; and gave the Command of it to Joab. David was the First that chang'd the Name of it, and it was after the casting-out of the Jebusites; for in the Days of our Father Abraham, it was called Solyma; and some will have it that Homer pointed at this City, when he speaks of the People of Solyma; for the Word Hieron, or Temple, signifies in the Hebrew, Security, or a Fortress. Now the whole Time of the War with the Philistins, from the Hebrews dividing their Lands, under the Command of Joshua, to the Day here spoken of, was reckon'd to be Five Hundred, and Fifteen Years: But the Barbarians kept the Possession of Jerusalem all along, till they were beaten out by David.

Jerusalem of old called Solyma.

Now there was among the Jebusites a very Rich Man; One Orphan, that had done many Good Offices for the Hebrews, and deserved Singularly well from David himself; as will be seen hereafter in its proper Place. This Man, upon the Sacking of the Town, was preserved by the King, in all the Heat, and Fury of the Soldiers, and his Name must not be pass'd over in Silence.

Orphan, a Jebusite, and a Particular Friend and Favourite of David's.

David took several Wives (beside Concubines) more then he had before: by whom he had Eleven Children: as Amnon, Ellus, Ebas, Nathan, Solomon, Jebar, Eliel, Phalna, Ennaphen, Jenas, Eliphal; and a Daughter, Thamar, that was the Sister of Absalem. Nine of the Sons were lawfully Begotten; but the Two last by Concubines.

CHAP. IV.

David's Signal Victories over the Philistins, and their Allyes. The Ark brought to Jerusalem. Uzzah struck Dead for touching it. David Sings, and Dances before it; and his Wife Michol ridicules him for it.

WHen the Philistins understood that David was made King of all Israel, they drew-out their Army, and Encamped in a Place call'd The Valley of the Gyants, not far from Jerusalem. Upon This Occasion, David, that would do nothing without Councel, and Direction from above, appointed the High-Priest to enform himself in the Way that God had prescribed, what might be the Event of this Battle. He received a Comfortable, and an Encouraging Answer, and so drew-out, and march'd immediately to Fight the Enemy. David so order'd the Matter, that upon the very Instant he fell by Surprise upon the Philistins, Front and Rear, and put them to a Total Rout; killing Multitudes upon the Place, and giving Chace to the rest.

The Philistins draw out against David, near Jerusalem.

David consults the High-Priest whether to fight or not, and receives Encouragement.

He fights the Enemy, and gives them a Total Rout.

This was a signal Victory, easily obtain'd, and without much Opposition; but it must not be therefore Inferr'd, that the Army of the Philistins was Inconsiderable, for either Numbers, or Soldiers; for Syria, and Phœnicia, and several other Warlike Nations were all engag'd in the Confederacy: It had been otherwise Impossible, after so many Defeats, and the Loss of so many Thousands, they should ever have brought an Army into the Field again. As for Example, upon this very Overthrow, they follow'd it with an Invasion of Thrice the Number they had before, and had the Confidence to Post themselves in the very same Place again.

The Philistins a Confederacy of several Nations.

After this Defeat they bring another Army into the Field of Thrice the Number.

David, upon This Juncture, consulted the Oracle as formerly, and received Order to lie still with his Army in a certain Wood, call'd The Grove of Mourning, not far from the Enemy; and from thence not to move, or to make any Attempt upon what Occasion soever, till he found the Branches of the Trees in an Agitation, as of their Own Accord, and without one Breath of Air stirring to cause That Motion. David kept Punctually to his Order; and so soon as ever the Providential Sign was given him, he marched-out That very Moment, as to a Certain, and a Predetermin'd Victory. The Philistins shrunk upon the First Push; but when they came to Handystrokes, they ran Outright, with the Hebrews at the Heels of them, and their Swords in their Reins; following the Chace, and doing Terrible Execution till they came to Gazer, a Town upon the Borders. Their next work was to pillage the Camp, where they made themselves Masters of a Prodigious Booty, with Little Trouble, or Hazzard; seizing their Idols among Other things, and breaking them to pieces.

David consults the Oracle again, and receives his Orders.

David charges the Enemy; puts them to the Rout; pursues them, and pillages the Camp.

The Danger of this War being Speedily, and Happily over, the King was pleas'd, by the Advice and Assent of his Great Counsel of Elders and Officers, to draw together the whole Force he was able to make, out of all the Tribes under his Jurisdiction: together with the Priests and Levites; and so to march with this Great Body directly to Kiriath-Jearim, and bring the Ark of God from thence to Jerusalem, being the Place designed for his Holy Worship, and for the Celebration of all Sacrifices, Ceremonies, and Religious Rites for the Time to come. If This Care had been taken taken in the Reign of Saul, it would have been much Better both for King and People.

The Tribes being met according to appointment, and all things in readineſs for the Removal of the Ark; David Himſelf alſo aſſiſting at the Solemnity, the Prieſts took it out of the Houſe of Aminadab; and laying it upon a New Wagon with Oxen to draw it, left the Ark in Charge with their Children and Relations, to take care of it. The King himſelf went foremoſt; and after him, follow'd a Multitude of People, glorifying God with Sacred Hymns, and Pſalms, and other Delightful Ayres, after the Faſhion of the Country; and dancing all along as they went, to the Sound of Harps, Cymbals, and Other Muſical Inſtruments: Conducting, after this manner, the Ark toward Jeruſalem. As they were upon the way at a Certain Place call'd The Thraſhing-Floor of Chidon, or Nachon; the Oxen ſtaggering with the Ark, Uzzah put forth his Hand to keep it from Overturning, and was immediately ſtruck Dead by a Divine Vengeance, not being in Holy Orders, for preſuming to Touch it. This Exemplary Death of Uzzah was a Great Affliction to David himſelf, and to All his People; and they called the Place Perez-Uzzah, or the Breach of Uzzah; which Name it beareth unto this Day. David was ſo ſtruck with the Dread of this Judgment, that, for fear Uzzah's Caſe might come to be his Own, if he ſhould receive the Ark into the City (his Fault being only the Temerity of Touching it) he ſuſpended the carrying of it to Jeruſalem, and turned-off with it upon the Way, into the Houſe of a Certain Good Man and a Levite, whoſe Name was Obed-Edom. There it lay depoſited for Three Whole Months; in which time it was Obſerv'd, that Every thing proſper'd in the Family, and that the Maſter of it grew Rich to Admiration. It was in every body's Mouth, in fine, how ſtrangely Obed-Edom was Emprov'd in his Fortune ſince he had the Ark under his Roof; and that of a very Poor Man before, he was now all on a Sudden look'd upon as a Man Well to paſs; and in ſo Good a Condition, that he was the Wonder, as well as the Envy of his Neighbours. The Rumour of This Change coming to the King's Ear, ſet David's Heart at reſt, as to any Danger from the Ark; ſo that he reſumed his Former Purpoſe of Tranſporting it to Jeruſalem; which was done after this Manner.

The Manner of Tranſporting the Ark.

The Prieſts had the Charge of carrying it, and Seven Quires of Singing-Men, according to the King's Appointment, Marching before it; David Himſelf bearing his Part in the Conſort, with Dancing and Singing to his Harp; which his Wife Michol (the Daughter of the Late King Saul) utterly diſliked, as an Action of too much Levity, and below the Dignity of David's Character. The Ark being brought to the City, it was diſpoſed of into the Tabernacle, which David had made on Purpoſe for it. Upon the Occaſion of this Feſtival-Meeting, there were Sacrifices, and Peace-Offerings in abundance, and Sufficient for the whole Multitude; for there was not a Man, Woman, or Child there, that had not a Cake, and a Dole of Fleſh given them: and when they had eaten their Full, David returned to his Palace.

The Removal of the Ark to Jeruſalem.

The Ark placed in a Tabernacle that David had made for it.

His Wife Michol met him upon the way, with a Thouſand Good Wiſhes and Bleſſings; but ſtill reproving him for Dancing and Jumping about, ſo Unlike a King, and for Uncovering himſelf in the Eyes of his Hand-Maids, and his Servants. David told her that he was not aſham'd of doing any thing that he knew was Acceptable to That God who advanced him to the Throne of Iſrael, in Preference to her Father, and all Other Pretenders; and that he would Sing and Dance again and again, without mattering it at all, how either ſhe, or her Hand-Maids took it. This Michol had no Children by David; but by her Other Husband, to whom Saul had given her in Marriage, upon taking her away from David, ſhe had Five Sons, of whom hereafter.

David was ſo ſenſible of God's Goodneſs towards him upon the Daily Succeſſes of whatever he took in hand, that he began to make it matter of Conſcience to Live in a Palace of Cedar himſelf, that was as Stately, and as Beautiful, as Art and Ornament could make it; and at the ſame time to Lodge the Ark in a Tabernacle; ſo that he reſolved to Erect and Dedicate a Temple to God's Honour and Worſhip; and according to the Prediction of Moſes. He communicated the Deſign to the Prophet Nathan; who upon Counſel and Advice, encourag'd him to proceed upon the Work; for he might be ſure of God's Special Favour and Providence along with him. Theſe words ſerved more and more to Animate and Confirm David in his Purpoſe and Deſign.

2 Sam. 7.

David propounds the Building of a Glorious Temple.

The Prophet Nathan encourages the Project.

In the Night following, the Word of the Lord came unto Nathan, ſaying, Go and tell David that I accept of his Good Will in being the Firſt Propoſer of Erecting a Temple unto my Service. Yet in regard that the Neceſſity of his Wars hath made him a Man of Bloud, I cannot Permit the doing of this Work in his Days; but let him know, that after a Long, and a Happy Life of his Own, he ſhall commit the Care of the Undertaking to his Son and Succeſſour Solomon; whom I ſhall be as Tender of, as a Father can be of his Own Child,

But Nathan tells him afterward that the Work was reſerv'd for his Son Solomon.

Child, and continue the Government in the Line of his Family: Or in case of his Committing Iniquity, I will only Punish the Transgression with Bodily Sickness, or Famine; not with a Total Rejection, as I did Saul. The Prophet, without any Delay, acquitted himself of his Commission; and it was so Welcome a Message to David, to see the Succession secur'd to his Posterity; and the Honour of his Family so Graciously provided for, that he betook himself immediately to the Ark of God; fell down upon his Face, and Worshipped. Lord, (says he) Thy Holy Name be prais'd for all Thy Benefits and Mercies! Thou that hast taken thy Servant from the Sheepfold, and advanced him to this Height of Dignity and Power! Lord, says he, I Bless thee for All This; for thy continu'd Providences to my self, and thy Promises to my Posterity: And for thy Multiply'd Deliverances and Protections, to thine Own People. With this Benediction, and a Hymn, he finished his Prayer, and departed.

Several Mighty Victories obtain'd by David against the Philistins, the Moabites, and the King of the Sophenians.

2 Sam. 8. David resolves upon a War with the Philistins, And marches with an Army into the Enemy's Country; Invades the Moabites; Overcomes them, and makes them Tributaries. And Totally destroys Adrazar the King of the Sophenians.

DAVID, that did not love to lye Idle, meditated a War not long after This, against the Philistins; being much Animated to This Enterprize by a Prediction, that he should Overcome all his Enemies, and leave his Kingdom in Peace to his Successour. In Order to This War, he appointed a Day and Place for a Rendezvous; Summon'd his Troups together; and when he was in Condition to March, made an Incursion into the Enemy's Country; took Possession of a good part of their Lands, and annexed them to the Jurisdiction of the Hebrews. He made War then upon the Moabites; destroy'd Two Thirds of their Army; took the rest, and made them Tributaries. After which, he Overthrew Adrazar, the Son of Arach, King of the Sophenians; whom he Encounter'd not far from Euphrates, and kill'd him Twenty Thousand Foot, and Five Thousand Horse; taking also a matter of a Thousand Chariots, of which he reserved only a Hundred, and burnt the rest.

CHAP. VI.

David Overthrows Adad; Subdues the Idumæans; Provides for Mephibosheth the Son of Jonathan, and makes War upon the King of the Ammonites.

Adad joyns his Friend Adrazar against David; Comes to a Battle near Euphrates, and receives a Total Overthrow. Nicholaus the Historian makes mention of this Adad.

ADAD, in the mean time, the King of Syria and Damascus, hearing that David had made War upon Adrazar, his singular Good Friend, and Ally; dispatch'd away a Considerable Army to his Succour, in hope to remove the Seat of the War; and after several Skirmishes, he came to a Battle with David near Euphrates; where he lost the greater part of his Army; Twenty Thousand cut-off, and the rest fled. Nicholaus makes mention of this same Adad, in the Fourth Book of his History, as follows. A long time after, says he, One Adad, a Valiant Man, and a Native of the Place, had the Command of Damascus, and Syria; Phœnicia only excepted. There happen'd to be a War betwixt this same Adad and David, the King of the Jews, and several Encounters between them; but in the End, Adad was Overcome at Euphrates, behaving himself with the Resolution of a Brave Prince and a Great Captain. And the same Author, treating further of his Posterity, says, that the Government was Handed down from Father to Son, to the Tenth Generation; the Successour still receiving the Father's Name with the Empire, as the Ptolomyes among the Ægyptians. The Third, in Order from this Adad, and the Greatest Man of the Family, out of a Generous Zeal, to repair the Honour that his Grandfather lost by this Defeat, pour'd-in an Army upon the Jews, and laid wast Samaria. And our Historian was not mistaken, in this part of his Relation; for this is the Adad that Invaded Samaria in the Reign of Ahab King of Israel, of whom we shall say somewhat further in due Time and Place.

Another Adad of the Family break-in upon Samaria.

David over-runs Damascus and Syria.

With this Victorious Army, David over-ran Damascus, and the rest of Syria; left Garrisons behind him where he saw Convenient; laid the Country under Contribution, and so went his way home again; carrying with him to Jerusalem the Golden Quivers, and other Rich Equipage that was taken from Adad's Guards; and dedicating the Spoil and Trophies to God, in Acknowledgment of the Victory he had obtain'd through his Favour and Protection. All this Precious Stuff, and a great deal more, was afterwards taken away by Sysack the King of Ægypt, upon the Sacking of Jerusalem, in his War with Reboboam the Son of Solomon. But we shall have Occasion to be more Particular upon this Subject elsewhere.

While

While David was in the Courſe of his Succeſſes, and God's ſpecial Direction and Aſſiſtance manifeſtly along with him, he made an Attaque upon Two of the moſt Conſiderable Cities that Adrazar had in his Dominions; Bettea, that is, and Machon; which he took by Aſſault, with Gold and Silver in them to an Ineſtimable Value; beſide a Great Quantity of a ſort of Braſs, which was more Eſteem'd of, even then Gold it ſelf. This was the Metal that Solomon afterward made uſe of for his Fair, and Beautiful Baſins, and a Huge Veſſel call'd the Sea, upon the Finiſhing and Adorning the Temple.

He takes Bettea, and Machon, with a mighty Pillage.

When [Toi] the King of Hamath came to Underſtand that Adrazar had left his whole Army, and was utterly Undone, he could not do better, he thought, (for fear his Own Turn might be next) then to Court David by a Voluntary Propoſal, into a Treaty of Friendſhip and Alliance. So he ſent his Son Joram to him, with a Complement of Congratulation for the Victory he had gain'd over their Common Enemy; (for ſo was Adrazar reputed) and with Inſtructions alſo to pray a League of Amity, and Fair Underſtanding betwixt them: not forgetting ſeveral Magnificent Preſents neither, in Veſſels of Gold, Silver, and Braſs, Antique, and Curious, to the Higheſt Degree of Excellency and Perfection. David accepted both of the Propoſals, and the Preſents, receiving and diſmiſſing the Ambaſſador, to the Honour and Satisfaction of both Parties: but ſtill Dedicating to God, all the Spoils of Gold and Silver, and Things Precious, that were taken from the Enemy, as to the Author of the Victory. Neither was David Succeſsful only in his Own Perſonal Adventures, and Undertakings; but God proſper'd him in all his Commiſſions alſo, though Executed by Deputies and Lieutenants: As in the Caſe of Abiſhai, Joab's Brother, who was ſent-out with an Army againſt the Idumæans; and by God's Aſſiſtance, not only ſubdu'd them, but after Eighteen Thouſand of them kill'd upon the Spot, he kept them in Awe with Garriſons, as a Check upon them; Charged the Land with a Contribution, and Taxed the People by the Head.

His Propoſals and Preſents are all accepted.

Abiſhai, Joab's Brother, kills 18000 Idumæans, and lays them under Contribution.

David was naturally a Lover of Juſtice, and had no other regard in all his Judgments, then to the Equity and Righteouſneſs of the Cauſe before him. He made Joab, the Son of Zerviah, his General, and Jehoſaphat, the Son of Ahilud, the Keeper of his Records. He choſe out of the Houſe of Phinehas, Abiathar, and Zadock, who were his Friends, to be his Prieſts; and Seraiah for Secretary. Benaia the Son of Jehoiada Commanded the Guards of his Perſon, and the King's Elder Sons were ſtill Incorporated into that Body.

David ſettles his Officers.

So ſoon as ever the King had put his Family-Affairs into ſome ſort of Order, he caſt his Thoughts upon his Old, and Dear Friend and Aſſociate, Jonathan, and upon the Solemn League of Mutual Amity that had paſs'd betwixt them: For he had this Virtue in Perfection, with many others, that he never forgot an Obligation to a Friend; but look'd upon an Arrier for paſt Benefits as the moſt Sacred of all Debts. Upon this Conſideration, he now laid-out to Inform himſelf, what Sons, Friends, or Relations, Jonathan had left behind him, that he might find matter for his Gratitude to work upon. In purſuance of this Enquiry, there was brought to him one [Ziba] formerly a Servant, and a Freeman of Saul's, as the moſt likely Perſon to reſolve that Queſtion. So the King ask'd him if he knew of any of Jonathan's Family yet Living, and where to find them; for he was Anſwerable for an Old Debt there, which he would gladly repay. Ziba made Anſwer, that he had a Son yet Alive, whoſe Name was Mephiboſheth; who by a Miſchance, happen'd to be Lame of a Leg. For upon the News of that Bloudy Battle, wherein his Grandfather, and his Father were Slain, the Nurſe took him-up in a Fright to run away with him; and ſtumbling for Haſte, let him fall out of her Arms, and hurt him. Upon further Examination, the King had Notice that he was brought-up with one Machir, in the City of [a] Lodeba, and that there he was at preſent: Whereupon he was immediately brought-up, and preſented to David; Proſtrating himſelf at the King's Feet, and doing him Reverence. The King bad him be of good Cheer, and hope for Better Days; aſſuring him of all the Comfort he could wiſh for from the Favour of his Prince. So he appointed him preſently to be put in Poſſeſſion of his Father's and his Grandfather's Houſe and Eſtate, and of all that belonged to them; took him home to him as his Particular Gueſt, and order'd that he ſhould Eat every Day at his Own Table. The Young Man was highly ſenſible of this Exceſſive Grace and Bounty; and when he had made a Dutiful Acknowledgment of it, in ſuch manner as became him: David then called for Ziba; and telling him how he had beſtow'd upon Mephiboſheth, his Father's, and Grandfather's Eſtate, gave him in Charge to look after, and take Care of the Grounds, and from time to time to receive the Profits, and bring them to Jeruſalem. Mephiboſheth, after this, Lived in the King's Houſe, ſate conſtantly at the ſame Table with him, and David gave him Ziba, and Fifteen Sons that he had, with

But the Son of Jonathan continu'd ſtill at Jeruſalem with David, and was Treated in all reſpects as a Child of the Family; ſo Great a Tenderneſs had David for any thing that had a Relation to Jonathan. Thus it was with Mephiboſheth, to whom was born a Son, whoſe Name was Micha.

Mephiboſheth's Son, Micha.

About this Time dy'd Nahaſh, the King of the Ammonites; a Friend, and Ally of David's; and Hanun, his Son, ſucceeded him. David upon this Revolution, ſent him a Condoling Civility to comfort him in his Affliction, and to aſſure him of the ſame Friendſhip and Reſpect to himſelf, that had been formerly paid to his Father. The Heads of the Ammonites made a Malicious Conſtruction of this Embaſſy, which the Good Faith and Candour of David did not deſerve at their Hands. They did all they could, in fine, to irritate their King, with Calumnies againſt David; and to put Jealouſies in his Head, that theſe Meſſengers of David's were not in truth Embaſſadors, but Spies; that under the Pretext of a Complement of State, were ſent to explore the Strength, and Condition of the Country; and that therefore, without giving any Heed to Fair Words, he ſhould do well to look about him betimes, before Things were gone beyond recovery. Hanun was over-rul'd by his Counſel, how contrary ſoever to the True Reaſon of the Caſe; and ſo ſent the Embaſſadors back again with all the Indignities of Scorn and Courſe Uſage Imaginable. They cut-off one half of their Beards, and one half of their Veſts, and ſo diſmiſs'd them in that Dreſs, with a Contumely of Action, inſtead of Words at length, for an Anſwer. David took it ſo Heinouſly to be thus Treated, and to ſee his Embaſſadors ſo Barbarouſly Affronted, contrary to the Laws of Nations, Honour, Hoſpitality, and Good Manners, that immediately he declar'd his Reſolution publiquely to Right himſelf upon the Ammonites by an Open War, and to call their King to an Account for what he had done. The Principals, and Allyes of the Ammonites, were ſo Conſcious to themſelves, that their Perfidy, and Breach of Faith, together with the Scandalous Manner of it, was wholly Unpardonable; that upon the Firſt News of David's Determination to vindicate himſelf by Arms, they found themſelves neceſſitated, in their own Defence, to encounter Force with Force, and ſo prepar'd for a War. They ſent their Embaſſadors to Syrus, the King of Meſopotamia, with a Thouſand Talents, to bring him into the Allyance; which he accepted of, and engaged alſo the King of Zoba. Theſe Two Kings had betwixt them ſome Twenty Thouſand Foot. They likewiſe purchaſed the Aſſiſtance of the King of Maacah, and of Iſhtob, who had Two and Twenty Thouſand Men in Arms.

THis Preparation of the Ammonites, in Conjunction with ſo many Confederate Princes, made no Impreſſion at all upon the Courage of David: He knew he had a Gracious God to truſt to; his Cauſe was Good; and the Injury he had received Intolerable. Wherefore he was reſolved to caſt himſelf upon God's Providence, and the Juſtice of his Arms, for Satisfaction: ſo that he committed the Menage of the War to Joab, and ſent him away with the Choiceſt of his Troups againſt the Enemy. He marched directly towards their Capital City, [called Rabbath] and Encamped before it. The Enemy marched forth out of the Town, and divided into Two Bodies; the One conſiſting of Auxiliaries, which they drew-up in the Open Field; the Other being compoſed only of Ammonites, ranged themſelves before the Port that look'd toward the Hebrews. Joab conſidering this Diſpoſition of the Enemy's Army, diſpoſed of his Troups likewiſe in the ſame Order; and in the Head of the Beſt Men he had, He himſelf preparing to charge Syrus, and the Confederate Kings, with one Diviſion, gave his Brother Abiſhai the Command of the Other, with Orders to attaque the Ammonites; having agreed upon it beforehand betwixt themſelves, that in caſe Syrus ſhould get the Better of Joab, Abiſhai ſhould come-in to his Relief; and Joab to ſecond Abiſhai, if he ſhould be preſs'd by the Ammonites. Joab hereupon diſmiſs'd his Brother, encouraging him to behave himſelf like a Man of Honour, and to make good the Reputation both of the Cauſe, and of the Action. Joab made the On-ſet upon Syrus, who ſtood very Bravely at firſt; but ſo many of his Men falling, the reſt fled; and the Ammonites upon the very ſight of their Diſorder, der, betook themſelves likewiſe to their Heels, after the Example of their Fellows, without ſtaying for the coming up of Abiſhai, and ran away into the Town. So that Joab, after a Dreadful Execution done upon the Enemy, returned to Jeruſalem with his Victorious Army.

This Rout, and Confuſion of the Ammonites, how Unequal a Match ſoever they were found to be to the Hebrews, was not enough yet to keep them Quiet for the Future; but they ſent to [a] Balama, a King of the Syrians beyond Euphrates, and agreed with him for and Auxiliary Army at ſuch a Price. Shobach was his Lieutenant General, over an Army of Eighty Thouſand Foot, and Ten Thouſand Horſe. David being given to Underſtand the Mighty Strength of the Ammonites, did not find it Convenient to make War any longer by his Deputies: ſo that he himſelf paſs'd the River Jordan with the whole Army, and Joyning Battle with the Enemy, Kill'd them Forty Thouſand Foot and Seven Thouſand Horſe, and came-off a Conqueror; Shobach himſelf, the General of Chalama, receiving a Wound in this Battel, of which he died. The People of Meſopotamia, upon the miſerable Event of this Overthrow, ſent forthwith their Embaſſadors, with Preſents and Addreſſes, to David, and deliver'd-up themſelves: And the Action being over, David returned again ſafe to Jeruſalem.

The Winter drawing on, Joab was again Diſpatched away to proſecute the War againſt the Ammonites, where he laid their Country Waſt; drove the People into Rabbah, their Metropolis, and laid Siege to the Place. David was undoubtedly a Juſt, and a Pious man, and one that had a Scrupulous Reverence for the Laws of his Country; but yet at this Time, and upon this occaſion, he fell into a Grievous Sin, (to ſhew us the Frailty of Fleſh and Bloud, when we are left to our Selves.)

Joab order'd to Proſecute the War againſt the Ammonites; and he lays Siege to Rabbath.

As he was refreſhing himſelf One Day toward the Cool of the Evening upon his Terrace, he had the hap to diſcover a Woman Bathing her ſelf in her Own Houſe, within Ken of the Place; a Perſon of a moſt Exquiſite Shape and Beauty, and her Name was Bath-ſheba. He fell in love with her at Sight; and under the Impotence of a Paſſionate Appetite, had her brought to his Bed. Soon after This, ſhe found her ſelf with Child: and defired the King to conſider of ſome way for the Concealment of it; for Otherwiſe ſhe muſt ſuffer Death by the Laws of the Country. Uriah, the Husband of this Woman, and Joab's Armour-bearer, was hereupon call'd away from the Camp, and David ask'd him ſeveral Queſtions about the State of the Army; How the Siege went forward, and the like. He told the King, that things went as well as he could wiſh. So David gave him part of his Own Supper, and bad him go Home for the preſent to his Wife; but finding afterwards that he had paſs'd away that Night in the Palace, and among his Guards, ask'd him how it came to paſs, that having been ſo long away from his Wife, he ſhould not rather go Home, then Trifle away his Time Elſewhere, ſo contrary to the Practice of all Other Men under his Circumſtances. Sir (ſays he) I did not think it Fair and Honourable to indulge my ſelf in the Arms of my Wife, at the ſame time when my General, and my Fellow-Soldiers lye in an Enemy's Country upon the Ground. So the King told him: he ſhould now ſtay there one Night more, and the Next Day he would ſend him back again to the Army. When the King went to Supper, Uriah was call'd-in, and he ply'd him with ſo many Healths one after another, that though he hardly knew what he did, he never thought of his Wife all this while yet; but ſpent that Night again, in the Court, as he had done the Former. This put David in Wrath: inſomuch that he wrote to Joab, that he was much Diſſatisfy'd with Uriah, and he would have him Puniſh'd according to his Deſert: and ſo put him in a Way how to bring it about, without giving any Suſpicion that it was done by his Order; and the Contrivance was this. David appointed Joab to command him upon the Firſt Dangerous Attaque, where his Companions might leave him in the lurch to be certainly cut-off. This Letter he gave to Uriah under his own Hand and Seal, to be deliver'd to Joab; who, upon the Receit, follow'd the King's Direction, and put Uriah upon a Deſperate Forlorn, with ſeveral Brave Men to back him, for the Countenance of the Deſign; Joab promiſing to Second him with the whole Army, upon the Leaſt Breach, or poſſibility of Entrance into the Town: Joab recommending it Earneſtly to him, to maintain the Reputation he had already acquir'd with the King, and with the Army, by acquitting himſelf Frankly and Bravely upon this Occaſion. Uriah, with Great Chearfulneſs, and Aſſurance, undertook the Poſt, while Joab gave his Companions Private Orders to withdraw, and leave him, ſo ſoon as they found themſelves in any Danger. The Hebrews preſſing hard upon the Wall, put the Ammonites in a Dreadful Apprehenſion that they would force the Town: whereupon they threw Open their Gates, and made a Deſperate Sally; which was as good as a Signal to Thoſe with Uriah, according to their Orders from Joab, to abandon their Leader: which they did as with one Conſent, upon that Critical Point of Time, and left Uriah to be cut to pieces. He did all the Execution that was poſſible to be done by by a Single Man againſt Numbers; and after ſeveral Wounds receiv'd, fell like a Man of Honour, with his Face to the Enemy: ſome few of his Friends, that were not made Privy to the Plot, innocently falling with him.

Joab writes David the News of a Repulſe upon an Aſſault at Rabbah.

The Action being now over, Joab diſpatch'd away an Expreſs forthwith to David, giving an Account, that to make ſhort Work of a Siege that was otherwiſe likely to be Tedious, he had given an Aſſault to the Town; loſt Men in the Attempt; and was at laſt beaten-off, and forced back again to the Camp. Now ſays Joab to the Meſſenger; If you find David troubled at the News you carry him; tell him withal, that Poor Uriah fell in the Attaque. David, upon the hearing of this Story was mightily Unſatisfy'd. What! ſays he, For Men with their Naked Bodies to think of Storming Stone-Walls? Why did they not rather make uſe of Mines, or Engines? One would think they might have Taken the Domeſtique Example of Abimelech the Son of Gideon for a Warning; that was ſlain at Thebes by a Piece of a Millſtone, thrown down upon his Head by an Old Woman from the Battlements. The Man was otherwiſe very Brave; but his Temerity brought him to a Scandalous End: For in all theſe Caſes, Caution is as Neceſſary as Courage; and the ſafeſt Counſells are the beſt. All People, in the Bus'neſs of War, ſhould do well to conſult Hiſtory and Experience; what has generally ſucceeded well, and what otherwiſe, and to conſider upon what Point the Streſs lies, either of the One, or of the Other, and to act accordingly. When the King had fretted a while, and was come afterwards to pauſe upon it, the Meſſenger took an Occaſion to tell him of the Death of Uriah, as a Thing by the By. Well! ſays David, Theſe are common Accidents; the Chance of War is various, and Soldiers muſt content themſelves to take the Beſt and the Worſt by Turns. Do you tell Joab *what I ſay; but tell him moreover, that for the future, I would rather have him do the Bus'neſs by caſting-up Works, or by Machines, then by Open Force. Upon the News of Uriah's Death, Bathſheba, for ſeveral Days, made her ſelf a kind of a Recluſe, in the Condition of a Cloſe Mourner; but ſo ſoon as the Ceremony of the Sorrow was over, David took her to Wife, and had by her a Male-Child not long after. This Match was ſo far from being agreeable to God, that he was highly Offended at it, and gave the Prophet Nathan to underſtand as much in a Dream; blaming David exceedingly for what he had done. Now Nathan, that was a Man of a diverting Humour and Addreſs; well conſidering how little regard Princes commonly have in the Carrier of their Paſſions, to the Right or Wrong of things, rather apply'd himſelf to David's Conſcience by a Side-Wind, then in a Point-blank Narration of what God had ſaid to him in the Viſion; bringing-in what he had to deliver, after this Manner.

2 Sam. 12. Nathan, by the Alluſion of a Fable, brings David to a ſight of his Sin.

There were Two Men, ſays he, that lived in the ſame City; the one had an Abundance of Flocks and Herds of all ſorts of Cattle; Oxen, Sheep, and the like; and was, in fine, a very Rich Man: The other a Poor Wretch, that had but one only Lamb. He brought it up, and fed it with his Children, and lov'd it as his Daughter. The Rich Man had a Stranger came to his Houſe, whom he was bound in Hoſpitality and in Honour to Entertain; but rather then treat him out of his own Store, he ſent and forced away the Poor Man's only Lamb for the Stranger's Supper. A Villain, ſays the King, in a Paſſion, to do ſo Baſe, and ſo Unjuſt a Thing. I would have him make Four-fold Satisfaction, and Die for it beſides. Why then, ſays Nathan immediately, Thou thy ſelf art the Man, and out of thy own Mouth haſt Pronounc'd Judgment upon thy ſelf. The Prophet, after This, gave him an Account of his Viſion, and of God's High Diſpleaſure againſt him; minding him of his Ingratitude to that Providence that had made him King of Iſrael, and given him the Command of all the Neighbouring Nations thereabouts: deliver'd him ſeveral times out of Saul's Hands, &c. and for Him, now that had ſo many Lawful Wives allow'd him, to take away another Man's Wife, in Defyance of God and Man, and to betray her Husband to the Enemy, and to Death; What could he expect after all this but to be overtaken with a Divine Vengeance! The Prophet then predicting to him, that he ſhould live to ſee his Women Raviſh'd by one of his Own Sons, and that Son to enter into a Practice upon the Life of his Father: And in a Word, that for this Secret Sin of his, he ſhould be brought to open Shame and Puniſhment; concluding with This Preſage, that the Son of his Unlawful Love ſhould be very ſhort-Liv'd. This Denouncing of the Prophet put David into a Quaking Terror and Confuſion, and drew from him a Penitential Confeſſion with Tears, that he had ſinned againſt God. Now David being a Righteous Man, and beyond all exception, ſaving only in the Bus'neſs of Uriah, God was pleaſed to accept of his True Repentance, and took him into his Favour again, and promis'd to ſecure him in the Enjoyment both of his Kingdom, and of his Life.

Nathan foretells the ſeveral Calamities to befal David.

David Confeſſes, and Repents.

When

When Nathan had given David This Proſpect of things to come, he returned to his Habitation; and was no ſooner gone, but the Lord ſtruck the Child that Uriah's Wife bare unto David, with a Grievous Sickneſs, which went ſo near the Heart of the Father, that he took his Chamber upon it, and for Seven Days together lay Groveling upon the Ground in Sackcloth, and Mourning, without receiving any Suſtenance; beſeeching Almighty God to ſpare the Life of the Child, having the Greateſt Tenderneſs for the Mother Imaginable. Upon the Seventh Day the Child dy'd; but the People of the Family durſt not ſpeak a Word of it to the King; for he, they thought, that was ſo given-up to Sorrow, as to deny himſelf the moſt Neceſſary Comforts and Refreſhments of Life, when the Child was only Sick, would be tranſported out of the Government of himſelf, if he ſhould know it to be Dead. David obſerved ſuch a Diſorder in the Countenances of his Family, that he took it for certain there was ſomething Extraordinary in the Caſe, that they durſt not tell him; which he concluded could be nothing elſe but the Death of the Child; and upon Sifting one of his Servants about it, he found it ſo to be. David, upon this preſently got-up; waſh'd himſelf; changed his Cloths, and ſo went his way directly to the Tabernacle to Worſhip; commanding his Servants, after this, to ſet his Supper upon the Table. His Kindred, and Domeſtiques were all in Admiration, and Aſtoniſhment at a Change of Humour ſo unexpected: for while the Child was but Dangerouſly Ill, there was Nothing but Paſſion and Extravagance; and now it was taken to be irrecoverably Dead, the Father came to himſelf again. This was their Deſcant; but they had yet a Curioſity to know what might be the true Reaſon of it: wherein David was very Free with them upon a Decent Intimation of the Deſire they had to be Better Enform'd. While the Child was yet living, ſays he, and not quite out of hope of Recovery, I omitted no Opportunity of Application to God for the Life of the poor Creature, but when I ſaw it was Dead, it would have been a Fooliſh thing to Torment my ſelf any further to no manner of purpoſe. The Prudence of this Reſolution was highly commended by all that heard him. Bathſheba, after this, in her due Time, according to the Courſe of Nature, brought David a Son; who, by the Direction of the Prophet Nathan, gave him the Name of Solomon.

Joab, by this time had preſs'd ſo hard upon the Ammonites, by cuting-off their Water, and all other Proviſions from them, that they were now well nigh Reduced to the laſt Extremity of Hunger and Thirſt; for they had only One little Spring left them, which they were fain to husband by ſhort Allowances, for fear of Drawing it Dry, and Loſing that too. Joab ſent David a Particular Account of the State of the Siege; deſiring the Honour of his Preſence there in Perſon, to put the laſt Hand himſelf to the Deſtruction of the City, as an Action Worthy to be found upon the Roll in the Hiſtory of his other Heroical Exploits. David was ſo fully Satisfy'd with the Wiſdom, Faith, and Zeal of his General, that he put himſelf preſently in the Head of his Army, and marched to the Aſſault of Rabbah; took it by Storm, and gave the Pillage of it to the Soldiers; taking only for Himſelf a Golden Crown of the Kings, of a Talent-Weight, and a Rich Sardonix upon it; which David wore conſtantly upon his Head afterward for an Ornament. To ſay nothing of an Infinite Variety of other Rich Booty that was found in that City. The Men were put to death by exquiſite Torments; and all the reſt of the Ammonite-Cityes that ſtood-out, as this did, were ſerved after the ſame manner.

All put to Death by Torment; and ſo the reſt of the Ammonite Cities that ſtand out.

The Glory of this Victory was follow'd ſoon after with a Mortification that took-off much of the Reliſh of it. David had a Daughter that was as yet a Virgin, and Incomparably the moſt Agreeable, Lovely Beauty of the Age ſhe liv'd in. Her Name was Thamer; and ſhe, and Abſalom had one Mother. Amnon, the Eldeſt Son of David, fell deſperately in love with her; and finding that, betwixt her own modeſty, and the Watch ſhe had upon her, there was no Hope of Succeeding, he pin'd away into a Kind of Languiſhing Conſumption. One Jonathan, his Friend and Kinſman, and a Perſon withal, of very good Senſe and Judgment, taking notice of this Change in Amnon, and that he grew every Day Worſe and Worſe, went to him, and ask'd him what he ail'd; and in ſhort, if he was not in Love: for he had a Suſpicion of it. Amnon, without any Difficulty, Own'd himſelf to have a Violent Paſſion for his Own Siſter; the Other putting a Phancy in his Head how he might compaſs his End. Do but you, ſays Jonathan, counterfeit your ſelf Sick; and the Firſt Viſit your Father gives you, make it your Requeſt that he would ſend your Siſter to you; upon an Opinion, you may ſay, that her Care and Aſſiſtance would much Contribute toward your Recovery. Amnon follow'd his Counſel; deſiring his Father, accordingly, upon his Firſt Viſit, to ſend his Siſter to him; which he did immediately; and nothing would ſerve Amnon then, but he muſt have ſome Cakes of his Siſter's making: for he could not eat any thing elſe. So ſhe took the Flour, Kneaded it; Rais'd, and Bak'd it, all in her Brother's Sight; and in Concluſion, offer'd him ſome to Eat; which he would not ſo much as Taſte of; but called-out to his Servants immediately to withdraw, and let no Body come-in to Trouble him, for he would lay himſelf to Reſt. So ſoon as the Room was cleard of the Waiters, he deſir'd his Siſter to carry the Curioſities ſhe had made him, into an Inner Chamber there; which ſhe did, and her Brother taking Advantage of that Privacy laid hold of her; and by the uttermoſt Importunity of a violent Paſſion, Preſs'd and Courted her to the Gratifying of his Brutal Luſt: the Innocent Virgin crying-out, and exclaiming all the while to him, for Shame, for Shame, not to offer at ſo Impious, and ſo Scandalous a Baſeneſs, as it would be to Sacrifice the Honour of Himſelf, and his whole Family to the Outrage of a Beaſtly Appetite. Let me go, ſays ſhe, for the Love of God, and keep your Exorbitant Deſires within the Compaſs of Law, Honeſty, and Religion: Or, if you cannot Maſter them, try if you can get your Father's Good-Will, and never think of extorting a Kindneſs from me by Violence. But there was no Reaſoning, ſhe found, with an Impetuous Raging Paſſion. She thought however to put him-off at preſent; but it would not do; for in deſpite of all ſhe could ſay or do, either to Hinder, or to Divert him, he gain'd his End upon her by Force.

Amnon Raviſhes his Siſter.

No ſooner had he committed the Villany, and laid the Fury of his Burning Luſt, but in the ſame Inſtant, his extravagant Love was Degenerated into the Contrary Extreme, of an Implacable Hatred: inſomuch that he call'd-out fiercely to her to quit his Lodgings, and be gone. What? ſays ſhe, Now you have Whor'd me, am I to be expos'd too? and ſent away by Day-light with all this Confuſion and Horror upon me, to tell the World how Barbarouſly you have uſed me? Nay, ſays ſhe, This Treatment in Cold Bloud is yet Worſe, if Worſe can be, even then the Accurſed Act it ſelf, under the Impotency of an Ungovernable Paſſion to alleviate the Crime. But Reaſoning and Struggling was all in vain, for go ſhe muſt; and Amnon, without any more ado, commanded his Servants to turn her out of the Houſe. Away ſhe goes upon this into the Street, with Aſhes on her Head, and her Veſt (ſuch as was then in Faſhion for Perſons of her Quality) Diſorder'd and Torn; and ſo thorough the City; crying-out and complaining how ſhe had been Abus'd and Raviſh'd. Her Brother Abſalom had the Fortune to meet her in this Diſtraction and Dreſs; and asking her what was the Matter, ſhe told him the whole Story of her Brother, and the Brutal Indignity that he had put upon her. Abſalom told her, to Pacify her, that the Diſhonour however was not ſo great, conſidering it was the Act of her own Brother; which for the preſent put ſome Reſpite to her Clamour. After this, ſhe liv'd a pretty while Single in the Houſe of her Brother Abſalom. Upon the carrying of this Story to David, he was infinitely troubled at it; but Amnon being his Eldeſt, and his Beloved Son, he was yet loth to put him to Extremities. Abſalom, all this while, bare him a Mortal Grudge, and waited only a fair Opportunity for a Revenge. At the End of Two Years after the Rape of Thamar, Abſalom having appointed a Sheep-ſhearing at [a] Baal-Hazor, a City in the Tribe of Ephraim, invited his Father, and his Brothers to the Meeting. His Father excus'd himſelf, upon the Trouble and Expence it would be to him: ſo that Abſalom deſir'd leave only for his Brothers; which being obtained, he gave his Domeſtiques this Order; that upon his giving them the Sign, when Amnon ſhould be in his Cups, they ſhould fall upon him, and Kill him.

After this Brutal Act, he turns her violently out of Doors.

Thamar expoſtulates the Matter with Amnon.

Thamar makes Proclamation in the Streets, how ſhe had been Abuſed.

The Death of Amnon frights the Brothers. Abſalom flies to Geſhur. Joab gets leave for him to return. He goes to Hebron upon a Pretended Vow, and enveigles the People to declare him King. Achitophel joyns with him. David quits Jeruſalem. Abſalom commits a horrible Wickedneſs at the Inſtance of Achitophel.

ABSALOM's People took their Time, and put their Maſter's Order in Execution. This Violence upon Amnon ſtruck ſuch a Dread and Confuſion into the reſt of the Brothers, that they immediately took Horſe upon it, and Poſted away to their Father, taking for granted that there was a Plot upon the whole Company. In this Nick of Time comes a Forerunner to David, with News, that Abſalom had put all his Brothers to death. This was ſo terrible a Surprize to David, to hear of the Loſs of ſo many of his Sons, and by the Hand of their own Brother too, that he Abandon'd himſelf (as well he might) to an Inconſolable Deſperation: And without any further Enquiry into the Matter, or waiting for a Confirmation of the Report, (though a Wickedneſs almoſt Incredible) he gave himſelf-up to an Inſupportable Anguiſh of Thought; Tearing his Garments, and caſting himſelf Proſtrate upon the Ground, Amnon kill'd by Abſalom's Order.

Ground, lamenting not only the Murder'd, but the Murderer himſelf. But Jonadab the Son of Shimei, David's Brother, deſir'd David only to ruminate upon the Matter a little with Temper and Moderation. I cannot believe, ſays he, that your Sons are all Kill'd, becauſe I ſee no Colour of a Reaſon for it. But for Amnon's Part, it is not Unlikely, ſays Jonadab, that Abſalom may have taken his Revenge upon him for the Affront he put upon his Siſter. While they were in Diſcourſe, they heard the Trampling of Horſes, and the Hurry of People running up and down: and what was all this, but the King's Sons that had made their Eſcape from the Meeting at the Houſe of their Brother.

Jonadab adviſes David to Patience, till he can hear further.

In this Interim, David's Sons come over to their Father.

The Greeting of the Father and his Sons was not without Tears on both ſides: the Father ſurpriz'd at the Sight of them Living, whom he took to be Dead; the Sons lamenting the Loſs of their Brother, and the Father deploring the Barbarous Murder of a Son: ſo that there was Subject abundantly every way for Grief and Lamentation in all reſpects. Abſalom, in the mean time, retir'd to Geſhur, where he was a matter of Three Years in the Houſe of his Mother's Father, a Perſon of Eminent Authority in that Country.

A tender Greeting on both ſides.

Abſalom retires to the Houſe of his Mother's Father in Geſhur.

David had by this time a good Mind to recall Abſalom, not to Puniſh him, but to have him Home again; for the Severity of his Diſpleaſure was now well nigh over: And theſe Charitable Inclinations were Dext'rouſly enough Menaged to Abſalom's Advantage, by the Friendſhip of Joab, who was ſtill at David's Elbow. In Order to this End, he dealt with an Ancient Woman that was to put her ſelf in Mourning, as a Perſon in Great Diſtreſs, and as an Humble Supplicant, to Preſent the King with her Caſe to this Effect: i. e. That Two of her Sons in the Country had had an unhappy Quarrel; which grew to that Animoſity, that they fought upon it, and one of them was Kill'd. Some of his Friends that was Slain, demand Juſtice upon him that Kill'd him. So ſhe was to beg of his Majeſty the Life of her Son, as the only Hope, and Stay of her Old Age. She had no Proſpect of Relief, but in his Majeſty's Clemency; for her Sons Enemies were ſo Malicious, that nothing leſs could ſatisfy them then the Interpoſition of the King's Authority. She performed her Part, and the King granted her Requeſt; whereupon, with a Dutiful Acknowledgment of the King's Grace and Favour to an Ancient Woman, and the Mother of one only Child; She pray'd one further Inſtance, and Aſſurance, that ſhe might enjoy the Fruit of his Royal Goodneſs. Her Suit was that the King would, in the Firſt Place, be pleaſed to Pardon his Own Son Abſalom: For in beginning with a Compaſſion to him, it would be effectually the ratifying of her Son's Caſe, in his own Family. It would be very hard, ſhe ſaid, for a Father to loſe one Son by Miſadventure, and to Kill another Himſelf.

2 Sam. 14. Joab does all Good Offices of Mediation for Abſalom.

An Invention of Joab's in Abſalom's Favour.

The King had it preſently in the Wind, that this was a Phancy and Project of Joab's; and upon Diſcourſing the Woman, it was found ſo to be: Upon which Diſcovery, David call'd for Joab, and told him that he had gain'd his Point, and was now at Liberty to bring Abſalom back again, when he thought fit; for his Anger was over, and he had freely forgiven him. Joab was very glad to hear it; did his Reverence to the King, and ſo haſtned away to Geſhur, and brought Abſalom back with him to Jeruſalem. The King being told of his coming, ſent him word, that Matters were not as yet in ſo good a Diſpoſition, as that it would be proper for him to appear in his Preſence. So that Abſalom kept himſelf out of the King's Sight, within his own Walls, and with his Private Family. He had gone thorough a great deal of Care, and Trouble; and his Entertainment of late had been rather Courſe then Delicate; and, in ſhort, not ſuitable to the State and Curioſity of a Prince of the Bloud. But he ſtill kept up the Beauty yet, and the Gracefulneſs of his Perſon to the higheſt Degree of Humane Perfection. He cut his Hair every Eight Months; in the Compaſs of which time, it grew up to the Weight of Two Hundred Shekels; That is to ſay, to Five Pound-Weight.

David forgives Abſalom upon Joab's Interceſſion.

Joab fetches Abſalom from Geſhur to Jeruſalem:

But Abſalom not as yet admitted into the King's Sight.

He paſs'd away ſome Two Years in Jeruſalem, in this Private way of Living, and had Children; Three Sons, and One Daughter, which prov'd to be a Miracle of a Beauty. She was Married afterward to Rehoboam, the Son of Solomon; and had a Son by him, whoſe Name was Abia. Abſalom finding himſelf Uneaſy under his Preſent Circumſtances, ſent to Joab to ſpeak a Good Word for him to his Father: that he might only be admitted to the Honour of ſeeing him; and in ſhort, to the Comfort of a Thorough Reconciliation. He waited a while for an Anſwer; but receiving no Satisfaction upon this Meſſage, he ſent ſome of his People to a Neighbouring Field of Joab's, to burn his Corn as it ſtood there upon the Ground. Joab came to him about it; told him he took it Ill at his Hands, and ask'd him the Meaning of it: Why, ſays Abſalom, I had no way of getting you to me but that. I wrote to you about interceding for me to my Father, and you have done nothing in it I perceive. Pray will you try if you can Pacify him; for at this rate, if he goes-on ſtill to be Inexorable, I am in a worſe Condition at Home, then I was in my Baniſhment. Joab took pity of him upon this Diſcourſe, and ply'd the King ſo Artificially, and ſo Luckily, on his Behalf, that his Heart relented, and Abſalom was immediately ſent for to attend his Father. He caſt himſelf at the Kings Feet upon his firſt Entrance into the Room, and begg'd Pardon for all his Miſ-Doings: Whereupon David with his Right Hand took him up again, with the Aſſurance of a Solemn Promiſe, that all ill Things gone and paſt, ſhould be for ever Bury'd, and Forgotten.

Joab obtains Leave for Abſalom to wait upon his Father. 2 Sam. 15.

Abſalom came in a ſhort time to be ſo well Eſtabliſh'd in the Good Opinion, and Eſteem of his Father, that he ſtruck-up all on a ſudden into a ſplendid Equipage, with his Chariots, and his Horſes; a Numerous Train, and Retinue of Servants and Followers, and no leſs then Fifty Men to attend him as the Guard of his Body. He was the Firſt Man ſtill at the King's Levee; not forgetting, on the other Hand, to take all Occaſions alſo to Cajole the Multitude, and to keep Fair with the People. If any Man had a Cauſe to be heard, and came for Juſtice, he would be asking him in a Familiar, Affable way: Friend (ſays he) What's thy Name; What Country-Man, What Bus'neſs? Can I do thee any Good, and the like? When he found People out of Humour, and Malecontent, for a croſs Verdict, or a hard Judgment, (as they pretended:) Why this 'tis, ſays he again, The King has very ill Men about him. Yes, Yes, and God help him, miſtakes the Point Himſelf ſometimes, as well as another. Well! and ſo God ſpeed ye my Friends: If I had been in ſome Body's Place, Things ſhould never have gone at this rate. This was his Method of Way-laying the Affections of the People, and Moulding them for his Deſign; and the Humour ripen'd apace too.

Abſalom ſets up with a ſplendid Train and Equipage: And makes Court to the People.

Abſalom's way of Ingratiating himſelf with the Multitude.

When he found himſelf pretty well aſſur'd of the Strength and Intereſt of his Party, he went and Addreſs'd himſelf to David in the Fourth Year after his Reconciliation, for Leave to go to Hebron to perform a Vow which he had made in the time of his Baniſhment: Which Leave he eaſily Obtain'd, and took a Prodigious Multitude; ſome that he invited, and others that came Trouping in Throngs, along with him. Among the reſt was Achitophel, the Gilonite, David's Prime Miniſter, with Two Hundred Men of Jeruſalem, that came thither to Sacrifice, without the leaſt Imagination of a Conſpiracy. But to make ſhort of the Matter, the Plot took; and Abſalom, by the common Voice of the People was Proclaimed King.

Abſalom gets Leave of his Father to go pay a Vow at Hebron.

He gets Himſelf proclaimed King.

David was ſo ſurpriz'd at the News of a Rebellious Uſurpation, that he ſo little dreamt of, that he ſtood Confounded, as if he had been Planet-ſtruck, upon the very Thought of the Impudence and Ingratitude of a Perfidious Son: A Wretch, that could ſo ſoon forget his own late Guilt, and his Father's Mercy, as to Revolt into a Second Apoſtacy, ſo much more Flagitious then the Former: for he was firſt to lay violent Hands upon his Father's Kingdom, though he himſelf knew it to be the ſpecial Gift of God: and after that, to practice upon his very Life too. Now David being in this Streight, bethought himſelf of Paſſing the River Jordan into ſome Place of more Security; and ſo, with the Advice of ſome of his Intimate Friends, what courſe to take in this Seditious Juncture, he reſolved to leave the Care of his Palace to Ten of his Concubines; Quit Jeruſalem, and commit the Iſſue to God. He accordingly departed with great Multitudes of People that chearfully ſtuck to him, and liſted themſelves in his Train; eſpecially his old ſix Hundred Friends, that kept ſo cloſe to him when he was Hunted up and down by Saul, from one Hiding-Place to Another. The High-Prieſts, Abiathar, and Zadock, and all the Levites there, were for going with him too, and taking the Ark along with them; but upon very Good Reaſons he prevail'd with them to ſtay; telling them that God's Providence was ſufficient for his Preſervation, without any Neceſſity of the Holy Ark being upon the Place. The laſt Thing he ſaid to them was, that they ſhould make ſure of ſome Private way of Intelligence to let him Underſtand from time to time of whatever paſs'd that might concern him to know; and they acquitted themſelves of that Commiſſion with great Faith and Induſtry: That is to ſay; Ahimaaz the Son of Zadock, and Jonathan the Son of Abiathar. Ittai the Gittite, had ſo great a Zeal for his Own Perſonal Duty, and the Service of his Maſter, that he forced himſelf along with him, though he preſs'd him Earneſtly againſt it.

This Perfidious ſhameleſs Ingratitude ſurprizes David.

David leaves his Palace to his Concubines, and ſo quits Jeruſalem.

The High-Prieſts and Levites preſs to go with him; but he oppoſes it.

David ſettles a ſecret Correſpondence with them.

As David was going Barefoot up Mount-Olivet, and all the People in Tears round about him, there came to him a Meſſenger with the Tidings that Achitophel was gone over to the Faction of Abſalom, which was one of the moſt ſenſible Diſappointments had as yet befall'n him. Wherefore David pray'd to God to Infatuate him, and to turn his Wiſdom into Fooliſhneſs. He was a Crafty, and a Clear-ſighted Man in Bus'neſs, and there was nothing David ſo much dreaded, as the Policy of his Advice. When he was up the Mountain, he look'd back upon the City, all in Tears, with Ejaculations, as one that was now taking his laſt Leave of his Government: And whom ſhould he meet there, but his try'd Friend, and Faithful Subject, Huſhai, with his Garments

News brought to David that Achitophel was gone over to Abſalom.

David prays to God to Infatuate Achitophel.

David caſts a Heavy-look from the Mountain Olivet, as taking his laſt Leave of the City.

Garments torn, and Aſhes upon his Head, Lamenting the Tranſitory State, and Fortune of all things below the Sun. David bad him be of Good Chear, and bear the Preſent with Reſignation and Patience; and urged him finally with Great Earneſtneſs to go back again to Jeruſalem, where he might behave himſelf like one of Abſalom's Party; pry into his Counſels, and Deſigns, and by thwarting Architophel's Counſence of Things, do his Maſter Infinitely better Service, then by ſtaying with him. Huſhai ſuffer'd himſelf to be Over-rul'd; and ſo taking his Leave of David, returned to Jeruſalem; Abſalom himſelf coming thither not long after. David in the mean while paſſing forward, met with Ziba, the Servant of Mephiboſheth, to whom he had committed the Menage of the Eſtate he had beſtow'd upon the Son of his Dear Friend Jonathan. He was driving two Aſſes before him, and offer'd David, and his Men to take what they pleas'd of what he had, if there were any thing they lik'd. The Queſtion was put to Ziba upon this Occaſion, What was become of his Maſter. He left him at Jeruſalem, he ſaid, in hope that upon the Preſent Broiles, the People, in Honour to the Memory of Saul might be prevail'd upon to chuſe Him King. David had ſuch an Indignation for this Ingratitude, that he took away the Lands back again from Mephiboſheth, and gave them to Ziba, as the more Deſerving Perſon of the Two. This was an Expreſſion, and a Bounty, that were both very Acceptable to Ziba.

2 Sam. 16. He meets his Truſty Servant Huſhai. David ſends him back again to watch Abſalom in Jeruſalem.

David meets Ziba;

Who tells him, that Mephiboſheth ſtays at Jeruſalem, in hopes to be Choſen King. David, upon This, takes away the Lands from Mephiboſheth, and gives them to Ziba.

David was ſtill advancing, and as he paſs'd near Bahurim, there came out a Kinſman of Saul's, whoſe Name was Shimei, the Son of Gera, and aſſaulted him with Curſes, and with Stones; and the more David's Friends took his part on the one ſide, the more Foul and Scandalous was the Ribaldry on the Other. Shimei call'd David a Bloud-Sucker; the Cauſe of all their Miſeries, and bad him be gone out of the Country like an Inſolent Wretch as he was: Giving God Thanks for that Retaliation upon him, by his Son, for the Indignities that he had formerly put upon his Lord and Father. Theſe Rude and Barbarous Outrages Stirr'd the Bloud of every Body that heard them; and Abiſhai had certainly Kill'd him for it, if David had not interpoſed, and prevented it. Pray hold your Hand, ſays David, and do not add Miſchief to Miſchief. Things are bad enough already, and do not you make them Worſe. I look upon all the Clamours of this Clown, as I do upon the Bawling of a Mad Dog, that God had let looſe upon me; and his Holy will be done. Why ſhould you wonder at the Unmannerly Revilings of a Scoundrel? When at the ſame time, I am worſe treated by my own Ungracious Son. But there is a Merciful God above, that in the End will deliver the Innocent out of the Hands of their Oppreſſors, and give us Victory over all our Enemies. Wherefore in the Name, and under the Protection of That God, let us go forward in our Journy: and ſo as David advanced Temperately on one ſide of the Mountain, Shimei ran Railing and Curſing over againſt him on the other. They came at laſt, after a long, and a weariſom March, to the Bank of the River where David Muſter'd, and Refreſhed his Troups.

Shimei reviles David.

Abiſhai would have kill'd Shimei, if David had not hinder'd him.

Abſalom, and his Great Councellor Achitophel, were by this time come to Jeruſalem, where they were received with Shouts and Acclamations by a vaſt Concourſe of People, and among the reſt, by David's Friend Huſhai, with a God ſave the King, and the Wiſhes to him of a long, and a happy Reign. Abſalom, upon This Encounter, ask'd Huſhai how it came to paſs that he that was look'd upon to be ſo Eminent, and Faithful a Servant to his Father, ſhould now Deſert his former Maſter, and come over to Him? Huſhai anſwer'd him diſcreetly enough, that there was no Contending with the Will of God, and the Conſent of the People; and ſo long as you have Them on your ſide, you may be ſure of my Fidelity. It is from God that you have receiv'd your Kingdom; and if you can think me Worthy of a Place in the Number of thoſe you will vouchſafe to own, you ſhall find me as true to your ſelf, as ever I was to your Father. No Man is to account the Preſent State of Things uneaſie, ſo long as the Government continues in the ſame Line, and a Son of the ſame Family ſucceeds to the Throne. Theſe Words of Huſhai to Abſalom, put an End to all Jealouſies.

Abſalom comes to Jeruſalem, And Huſhai welcomes him with a God ſave the King, as well as the reſt.

The Thing they had now before them was, to Reſolve what ſhould be done next, and Achitophel was preſently call'd-in, to adviſe about it. The Counſel he gave them was, for Abſalom to go in and lye with all his Father's Concubines; for this, ſays he, will fix the People, and make them ſo much the bolder, and Firmer to the Preſent State, when they ſhall ſee the Breach advanced beyond all poſſibility of Reconciliation; for as Matters now ſtand, People will be apt to ſay, Why the Father and the Son may come to an Agreement yet for ought we know; and if they ſhould chance to clap up a Peace in the Concluſion, Where are We! So that it will be dangerous to Declare, under ſuch an Uncertainty. Abſalom, in ſhort, took Achitophel's Counſel, and commanded his Servants to Erect him a Tent in the Palace, where he lay with his Father's Concubines in the ſight of the People. This was no more, in fine, then what the Prophet Nathan foretold would befall David.

Abſalom calls a Council, what to do. Achitophel adviſes him to lie with all his Father's Concubines.

Abſalom took his Advice, and committed that Indignity in the ſight of the People.

Achitophel's Counsel for the Destroying of David. Hushai opposes it, and carries it against him. Achitophel hangs himself upon the Disappointment. Absalom makes Amaza his General; fights a Battel with his Father, and loses the Day. A Bough takes up Absalom by the Hair of the Head in his Flight, and Joab runs him through with his Javelin.

2 Sam. 17.

Achitophel demands 10000 Men, upon Condition either to bring David's Head, or Forfeit his own.

Absalom is for having Hushai's Opinion too.

Hushai Opposes and overrules Achitophel's Advice with great Art and Eloquence.

After the Execution of this Counsel of Achitophel's, the next Question was, What they were first to do in Prosecution of the War? His Answer was this. Give me the Command of Ten Thousand choice Men; and let me answer for't with my Own Head, if I do not bring you the Head of David: and the taking away of his Life will secure the Publique Peace to the People, and the Government to Absalom, Both in One. Absalom was much of Achitophel's Opinion; but willing however to have Hushai's yet, over and above; and so put it to Him, What He thought on't. Hushai (that was David's True Friend, and ever so Reputed) finding the Advice to be Shrewd and Dangerous, did what he could to divert Absalom from it by giving his Judgment Another way, after this fashion. Sir, says he, I need not tell you that your Father is a valiant Man, and that he hath a great many Brave Men about him; with whom in all Encounters he hath ever come-off Victorious. You know him to be a Soldier too, and a Man of Stratagem, as well as of Courage. He will most infallibly have Advice of our Approach; and in some Valley, Wood, or behind some Rock perhaps, lye ready upon the Catch for us with an Ambush: Or suppose we should attempt to Engage them, they will Order the Matter so as to menage their Retreat by little and little till they have drawn us into the Snare, and David's whole Body to fall-in upon us before we know where we are. Now I submit my self to your Judgment, betwixt the Consternation it will cause on the One Hand, and the Encouragement it will give on the Other, what a Confusion this way of Proceeding will create among us: And now you have heard Both Opinions, you may follow either Achitophel's, or Mine, which is most to your Liking. But having given you my Thoughts thus far now, what we are Not to do; I must crave Leave to tell you what I think Advisable under our Circumstances to be done. Let the whole Nation of the Hebrews be summon'd to appear with all their Troups at some certain Time and Place, to make War against David: And when they are met, do you your self (says he to Absalom) take the Command of the Whole into your own Hand, without Trusting to Deputies. When this is done, David must either expose himself in the Plain Field, or otherwise fly to Fastnesses, strong Holds, wall'd Towns, and the like. If he keep the Plains, you will have enow to eat him up; and I do not speak of your Numbers only, but of a World of Publique spirited Patriots too, that value themselves upon their Zeal and Ambition to serve their Prince, and their Country: so that this way you have him sure. Or if he shall go the other way to work, of Hiding and Skulking up and down, to keep upon the Defensive, there are Twenty ways, by Mining, Battering, Starving and the like, that will certainly Reduce him. They were all so unanimously for His Advice, that Absalom Himself gave his Voice for him, even in Reference to the Counsel of Achitophel. But it is to be noted, that the Hand of God was in all This.

Hushai proposes to Encounter David with the whole Strength of the Nation, and Absalom Himself to Head them.

Hushai carries it against Achitophel.

Hushai communicates This immediately to the High Priests Zadock and Abiathar.

Hushai, upon this Result, made all possible Haste to the High-Priests, Zadock, and Abiathar, with the Story of what had pass'd at the Counsel betwixt Achitophel and Himself, and how Things were carry'd; desiring them to dispatch an Express immediately away with it to David, with a Caution, by All means to pass the River Jordan that very Night; for if they should either get Intelligence where he was, or change their Minds, they might fall-in upon him before he could get over.

Messengers sent to David with Directions to pass the Jordan that very Night.

The Messengers are discover'd, and order'd to be taken up.

They take a By-way to Bahurim.

A Woman conveys them into a Well.

A Hue and Cry after 'em.

The Woman owns that Two such Men drank at the Gate.

The High-Priests had provided Lodgings for their Sons out of the Town, and a Faithful maid Servant at hand to carry them the Intelligence, which they were to transmit forthwith to David. Upon the Receit of this Information, they speeded away with it as became Dutiful and Faithful Servants: but in the Execution of their Master's Command. But by the Time they were advanced some two Furlongs upon their Way, they were discover'd by Certain Horse-Men? and Absalom having notice of it, gave Order presently for the taking of them up. The Messengers were quickly aware of their Danger, and so turn'd out of the way towards Bahurim, a Small Village near Jerusalem; where they met with a Woman who was so Charitable as to Conceal them, by letting them down into a Well, and throwing some Skins of Beasts over the mouth of it. This Matter was no sooner Ordered, but into the Yard comes a Hue and Cry after them, that Examined the Woman, very strictly if she had seen any such Men or not. She could not deny, she said that two such Men drank at the Gate just now, and so went their way; but, says she, if you make haste after them, they may Easily be Overtaken. When they had Hunted up and down a long time after them to no manner of Purpoſe, they returned to their Quarters with their Labour for their Pains. So ſoon as the Woman ſaw that all was ſafe, and the Coaſt Clear, ſhe drew the Young Men out of the Well; and they Proſecuted their Journy time enough to give David a ſeaſonable Account what Abſalom was a doing. It was late before they got thither, but David however got his People over the Water the ſame Night.

The Officers hunt up and down to no purpoſe, and ſo come back again.

The Meſſengers purſue their Journey, and get time enough to David.

It ſtuck in Achitophel's Stomach, that Abſalom ſhould reject His Counſel, and at the ſame time Entertain Huſhai's: ſo that he mounted his Aſs, and went home to Galmon, where he called his Family together, and told them the Advice he had given Abſalom; but that he would not follow it; and that in a ſhort time, That Refuſal would be his Ruine; for David would certainly baffle him, and ſoon after Recover his Kingdom. Now it is more Honourable for me, ſays he, to Dye Aſſerting my Liberty like a Man, then to wait Sneaking till David comes in again, and to be Flay'd at laſt for the Services I have done the Son againſt the Father. With theſe Words he withdrew into a Private Apartment in his Houſe, and hang'd himſelf, in the Conſcience of a Self-Condemnation: His Relations afterward taking Care for his Funeral.

Achitophel lays it to Heart to ſee Huſhai's Counſel taken, and His Rejected.

Achitophel goes Home, and Hangs himſelf.

David, being now over the River Jordan, as aforeſaid, came to [a] Mahanaim, the Faireſt, and the Strongeſt City in that Tract of Land: where he was Treated by the Principal Perſons of the whole Country, with the Higheſt Inſtances of Generoſity and Good Will imaginable; partly out of Humanity, with a regard to the Neceſſities of his Preſent Condition, and partly out of a Reverence to the Memory of his Former State. There was Siphar, a Prince of Ammon: Barzillai, and Machir, Two Principal Men of Gilead, &c. Theſe Generous Perſons took ſuch Care of David, and his People, that they wanted neither Beds, Bread, Wine, Fleſh, nor any thing elſe that might be needful, either for their Suſtenance, or for their Refreſhment.

David paſſes the Jordan, and ſo to Mahanaim.

Siphar, a Prince of Ammon; Barzillai, and Machir, two eminent Men of Gilead, treat David.

Abſalom, in the mean time, was gotten over the River with a Mighty Army againſt his Father, and Encamped not far from Mahanaim, a Town of Gilead, having made his Kinſman Amaſa General, in the Place of Joab: Amaſa being the Son of Jothar by Abigail. Now Abigail, and Zerviah, the Mother of Joab, were David's Siſters.

2 Sam. 18.

Abſalom Encamps with a Mighty Army near his Father, commanded by Amaſa the Son of Jothar by Abigail.

The King took a Review of his Men, and found himſelf upon the Muſter to be only Four Thouſand Strong; but yet with this Pittance of an Army, he choſe rather to act the Part of an Aggreſſor, then to lie ſtill upon his Guard till Abſalom ſhould give the Attaque. So that he preſently Conſtituted his Officers, and divided the little Body of his Army into three Parts: Joab had the Firſt Diviſion; Abiſhai, the Second; and his Old Friend Ittai the Gittite, the Third. David would needs have gone himſelf in Perſon; but his Friends, for very Good Reaſons, Oppoſed it; for, ſaid they, if we ſhould be Beaten, and you your ſelf in the Field, the whole Cauſe would be loſt without any Hope of Reſource: But Otherwiſe, if one Diviſion ſhould have the ill hap to be Worſted, the reſt (they told David) might Repair to himſelf, and probably find ſome means of Recruit: Beſide, that the King's not being upon the Spot, would poſſeſs the Enemy with an Apprehenſion, that he had Another Freſh Army in Reſerve. This Motive carry'd it, and the King was prevail'd upon to ſtay at Mahanaim. David then Adjur'd his Friends by all the Tyes of Honour, Gratitude, and Conſcience, to acquit themſelves of their Duty; and in caſe God ſhould give them a Victory, to ſpare the life of the Young Man; for he Durſt not truſt himſelf with his Own Life after the Death of Abſalom. This was follow'd with a Thouſand Bleſſings, and Good Wiſhes, and ſo he diſpatched them to the Army.

David Officers his little Army of 4000 Men. He divides them into Three Bodies, under Joab, Abiſhai, and Ittai the Gittite.

David would have Engag'd in Perſon; but Reaſons are given againſt it.

David ſtays at Mahanaim; adjuring his Officers and Friends to ſpare Abſalom.

When Abſalom ſaw that Joab had drawn up his Diviſion upon a Plain, with a Wood at his Back, he diſpos'd of his Own Troups likewiſe into the ſame Form, over againſt the Other. When the two Bodies came to ſhock, there was Great Bravery ſhew'd on Both ſides. The One contending for the Recovery of what David had loſt; and the Other for the Defence and Maintenance of what Abſalom had got; and there was nothing that David's Men were not reſolv'd either to Do, or Suffer; ſo they might but avenge the Father upon the Apoſtacy of a Rebellious Son. Abſalom's Men fought a good while upon a Point of Honour, and to avoid the Infamy of being Worſted by ſo Inconſiderable a Party. David's Men, on the Other hand, for the Glory of Routing ſo many Thouſands of the Enemy upon ſuch a Diſproportion. In the Concluſion, David's Veterans did bravely, and like themſelves; for they brake the Enemy's Order, and put them to a Total Rout, getting the Chace of them, over Woods, Mountains and Craggs, which way ſoever they fled: ſome they kill'd; ſome they took; and More loſt in the Purſuit, then in the Battle. They reckon'd upon ſome Twenty Thouſand Men ſlain in that Day's Action. Now Abſalom was ſo Singular, both for his Beauty, and his Stature, that he was Every Body's Mark. So that for fear of being taken alive, he ran away upon the Fleeteſt Mule he could lay Hands of, as faſt as her Heels could carry him. But in her Courſe, upon the whiſling of the Air, a ſnagged Bough of a Tree took hold of his Hair; and the Mule running forward from under him, left him Dangling in the Air, and continu'd her Speed, as if ſhe had had her Rider ſtill upon her back. One of David's Soldiers ſaw this, and carry'd the Tidings off to Joab, who bad him go quickly, and Diſpatch him, and he ſhould have Fifty Shekels of Silver for his Pains. No, ſays the Soldier, I would not do ſuch a Thing to the Son of my Lord and Maſter for Two Thouſand: eſpecially conſidering the Charge the King gave in your Hearing, not to touch the Life of the Young Man. Why then, ſays Joab, where was it that you ſaw him? In ſhort, he found him out at laſt, and gave him his Death's-Wound through the Heart with his Javelin. His Armour-bearers that were then preſent, took down the Body from the Tree, and caſt it into a Dark Deep Hole, Piling a Great Heap of Stones upon it, in the Form of a Sepulchre. This being done, Joab ſounded a Retreat to take his Men off from the Chace, and ſave the Effuſion of more Bloud in a Civil War. Abſalom had already Erected a Marble Column, with an Inſcription upon it, in a place call'd the King's Vally, ſome Two Furlongs from Jeruſalem; which he called by the Name of The Hand of Abſalom, to perpetuate his Memory, as he ſaid, even if he ſhould leave no Children behind him. He had Three Sons, and One Daughter, which was Marry'd to Rehoboam the Son of Solomon, by whom he had Abia, his next immediate Succeſſor; but of this we ſhall ſay more hereafter.

Joab ſtrikes Abſalom Dead with his Javelin.

David's Grief for Abſalom: and Joab's Plain-dealing with him. Shimei pardon'd. The Tribe of Judah goes-out to receive David; and the Reſt fall-off at the Inſtigation of Sheba. David ſends Amaſa after Sheba. Joab meets him, and Treacherouſly kills him; and then follows Sheba, and brings his Head to David, *Himſelf. Ahimaaz preſſes to carry David the Firſt News of the Victory.

ABSALOM being now Dead, his People ſlipt away by Stealth, Every Man to his own Home: Ahimaaz, the Son of Zadock the High-Prieſt making it his ſuit to Joab, that he might be the Man to carry David the Firſt News of the Victory, as being the Work of God's Power and Providence. Joab gave him this Anſwer, that it would not look well, for him that had been always heretofore the Meſſenger of Good News to the King, to be now the Firſt Man to tell him of his Son's Death. So Joab call'd to Chuſi, and ſent him on the Errand, and that he ſhould tell the King what he himſelf had ſeen. Ahimaaz was at Joab a Second time, to let him carry the Tidings; for, ſays he, the King's Thoughts will be ſo Intent upon the Main, that he'll never Trouble his Head about the Death of Abſalom. Joab, upon this Importunity, gave him leave, and he knowing the neareſt Way better then the other, got thither before him. David was at this time ſitting at the Gate in a Longing Expectation to know the Event of the Battle, when a Scout brought him Word, that he ſaw one come running that Way, but he was too far off to diſcern who it was. The King looked upon it as a good Omen, and the Scout immediately upon this, told the King that he diſcover'd Another, which gave him ſtill more Hope then before. The Meſſenger being now come within diſtance, was found to be Ahimaaz the Son of Zadock, the High-Prieſt, who came Poſting away in a Chariot. Well! ſays David; This is the Man that moſt certainly brings me Good Tidings. The Words were hardly paſt his Lips, when Ahimaaz caſt himſelf at David's Feet to do him Reverence; who asking him what News from the Army? Great Succeſs, he ſaid, and Victory. David ask'd him then, what was become of Abſalom? Ahimaaz anſwer'd him, that ſo ſoon as ever he ſaw the Enemy Routed, he came away immediately with the Intelligence; but that he heard a mighty Clamour and Shouting all the while, upon the Purſuit of Abſalom; and Joab ſent him away in ſuch haſt, that his Orders were only to carry the News of the Victory, without any Mention of Abſalom. By this time, Cuſhi was at the King's Feet, with the Tidings of a Victory; and the King putting the ſame Queſtion to him as to the Other, i. e. What was become of Abſalom? May it be, ſays Cuſhi, with all the Enemies of my Lord the King as it is with Abſalom. Theſe Words turn'd a Day of Joy and Triumph into a Day of Mourning. It prov'd ſo to the King, for the Loſs of Abſalom; and to the People, [to ſee their Sovereign ſo Tranſported, notwithſtanding ſuch a Victory and Deliverance, when his Life and Crown were at ſtake, for the Death of a Rebel.] But ſo it was that he withdrew himſelf upon it, out of Sight and Hearing, to the Top of one of the higheſt Turrets about the City, beating his Breaſt and Tearing his Hair, with Cries and Exclamations, Ah my Son Abſalom, my Son, Abſalom, Ah that I my ſelf could have but dy'd with Thee

Joab rather ſends Chuſi.

Ahimaaz trys Joab a Second time to let him go, and Joab gives him leave.

Ahimaaz tells David only of the Victory.

Cuſhi, after him, tells David both of the Victory, and of the Death of Abſalom.

A Day of Triumph turn'd into a Day of Mourning.

David's Paſſionate Tranſports for the Death of his Son.

Thee, My Son! Now David was in his Nature Soft and Tender, and his Love for Abſalom was the Weak Side of that Inclination. This put Joab, and the Army quite out of Countenance; for them to come into the Town Triumphant, and the King to appear drown'd in ſorrow for the Succeſs: ſo that they look'd rather like Fugitives then Conquerors, and Men that had loſt the Battle rather then won it. David, in ſhort, went on ſo far in this Way of an Abandon'd Dejection, that Joab without any more ado, brake-in upon him in the very Agony of his Paſſion, to Reaſon, and Expoſtulate the Matter with him. 2 Sam. 19.

Sir, ſays he, Do you know what you do? Are you aware of the Diſhonour you bring upon your ſelf by this Willful and Effeminate Way of Impotent Lamentations? Why, it makes you look as if you had a Hatred for your Friends, that have ſav'd your Life at the Hazzard of their Own; nay, for your ſelf, and your Family too: and at the ſame time, as great a Kindneſs even for thoſe of your Enemies, which Divine Juſtice hath taken away in your Favour, by the ſtroke of a moſt Righteous Vengeance. If Abſalom had carry'd the Day, and ſettled himſelf in his Uſurpation, Who do you think Sir, would have bemoaned, either your Fate, or ours, in ſuch a Caſe? for we ſhould moſt certainly have been cut to Pieces, every Creature of us. Nay you your ſelf, and your Children ſhould have led the Dance. No no Sir, your Enemies would have Rejoyc'd and Glory'd in your Ruine, and it would have been Death for any Man to have but ſo much as pity'd us. Pray Sir, does not your Conſcience as well as your Honour check you for this Intemperate Tenderneſs, for the Memory of ſo Implacable an Enemy. He was your Son, 'tis True, but a moſt Ungracious one; and you cannot be juſt to God's Providence, without acknowledging the Bleſſing of his being taken away. Pray ſhew your ſelf chearfully to your People, and tell them, that it is to their Loyalty, and Bravery, next under God, that you are Indebted for the Honour of this Day. For if you go-on as you have begun, your Kingdom and your Army will moſt infallibly be put into other Hands; and you will then find ſomething elſe to Cry for. Joab's Bold and Generous way of Plain-dealing with David.

This Bold and Blunt Liberty of Joab brought David in ſome Meaſure to himſelf again; and to take Care of his Government, and People. So that he ſhew'd himſelf at the Gate, in a more Popular way of Addreſs, and with more of Satisfaction in his Countenance. This Change of Humour wrought ſo Effectually upon the Multitude, that they came flocking-in to him from all Parts to pay him their Reverence. Joab's Blunt Liberty brings David to himſelf again.

While Matters were in this Diſpoſition, Abſalom's Men that fled from the late Battle, and were got home again, ſent Meſſengers up and down, from Place to Place, to mind their Friends of the Infinite Obligations they had to David upon all Accounts, and particularly for the Toils, and Hazzards he had undergone in his own Perſon, for the Vindication of their Liberty; how ungratefully they had behav'd themſelves in their Revolt, &c. and what had they more to do now, then to lay themſelves at his Feet; beg his Pardon, and beſeech him once again to receive them into his Care and Protection, as formerly: Eſpecially the Perſon being now gone, whom they had moſt Injuriouſly ſet-up in his Stead. The King had Addreſſes of this kind ſent him in Abundance, which he ſtill communicated by Letters to the High-Prieſts, Zadock and Abiathar, with certain Hints, how they were to Menage the Heads of the Tribe of Judah toward his Reſtauration. And they inſinuated accordingly, how Great a Shame it would be for them to ſtand looking-on, and let others go before them, in doing a Common Right to a Prince ſo Generous, and of their Own Tribe and Extraction. This way of Proceeding created an Emulation among them, who ſhould be Foremoſt. They were likewiſe to expoſtulate the Matter with Amaſa, the Enemy's General, how it came to paſs that he ~~himſelf~~, the Nephew of David by his own Siſter, ſhould not diſpoſe the Army to a Senſe of their Duty, and the Reſtoring of the Government to the Right Owner. They told Amaſa, that for what was paſt, he might be ſure of his Pardon; and they doubted not but he might have the ſame Command under David that he had under Abſalom. Abſalom's make People Publique Acknowledgments, and Addreſſes to David. Zadock and Abiathar menage all to David's Advantage. They expoſtulate the Matter with Amaſa the General.

The High-Prieſts dealt after This Manner with the Principals of the Tribe, and upon the aforeſaid Aſſurance brought Amaſa over to David. The Tribe of Judah were the Firſt (and they did it eaſily too) that ſent their Commiſſioners to Invite the King back to the Exerciſe of his Government: And betwixt the Influence of this Example, and the Credit of Amaſa, they were all to attend, and receive the King at Jeruſalem. The Tribe of Judah were Remarkably the Forwardeſt of the whole Body, and the moſt Officious in their Reſpects; for they went to the very Bank of the River Jordan to meet him. There was Shimei the Son of Gera, for one, at the head of a Thouſand Benjamites; and there was Ziba alſo, Saul's Freeman, with his Fifteen Children, and Twenty Servants; who, together with the Tribe of Judah, laid a Bridge over the River, for the more Commodious Paſſage of David and his Troups. Amaſa comes over to the Intereſt of David. The Tribe of Judah leads the way.

Upon his coming to the River, the Tribe of Judah were the Firſt that ſaluted him; and Shimei then advancing to the Bridge, threw himſelf at David's Feet, begging Shimei begs David's Pardon.

ging his Pardon for the Indignities he had put upon him: Beſeeching him to paſs it all over, and that it might never Riſe in Judgment againſt him when he ſhould come into his Kingdom: deſiring moreover, that his Early Repentance, and Return to his Allegeance might Atone for his paſt Faults. Well! ſays Abiſhai, Joab's Brother, (who was then within diſtance of hearing and ſeeing all that paſs'd) and do you think to come off ſo eaſily, that could have the Face to Blaſpheme the King that God hath ſet over you, at ſo Unpardonable a Rate? Be Quiet, you Sons of Zerviah; pray be Quiet, ſays David, without blowing the Coal, and ſtirring up New Broils. For I would have you look upon this as the Firſt Day of my Reign, and to take notice of what I do now declare upon my Oath: I do freely forgive all the World, and I do promiſe that no Creature ſhall ſuffer for any thing done againſt Me, or againſt any Body elſe for My ſake, of what Kind, or Quality ſoever: ſo that you may ſet your Heart at reſt, Shimei, your Life is in no Danger. Upon which Aſſurance, he made his Reverence, and went his Way.

After him came Mephiboſheth, Saul's Nephew, in as Forlorn, and Uncouth an Appearance, as one could well Imagine; for upon the King's being forc'd away from his Palace, this good Man; reckoning the King's Calamity as his Own, bound himſelf by a Vow, upon David's being driven away, never to cut his Hair, or change his Clothes till it might pleaſe God to reſtore him. Ziba took this Opportunity of Traducing his Maſter to the King; for upon David's asking him how he came to leave him when he was under Perſecution; he laid the Fault upon Ziba, for not Obeying his Orders; but, on the contrary, treating him like a Slave, notwithſtanding the Expreſs Charge he had given him to have all Neceſſaries in readineſs for his Journey. But Sir, ſays he, if I had had the uſe of my Legs, as other People have, This ſhould not have hinder'd me neither. Nay Sir, ſays he, and which is more, he has not only diſappointed me in the Exerciſe of my Duty; but I perceive he has done me ſpiteful Offices to your ſelf alſo: But Sir, you are ſo juſt, and ſo great a Lover of God and of Truth, that I am ſure your Generoſity and your Wiſdom will never entertain a Calumny to my Prejudice. Our Family have had the Experience of your Piety, Modeſty and Goodneſs, to a degree never to be forgotten, in Paſſing over, and Pardoning the Innumerable Hazzards and Perſecutions that you were Expoſed unto in the Days, and by the Contrivance of my Grandfather; when all our Lives were forfeited, and in your Power, and at Mercy: But then after all This Gracious Tenderneſs, your ſuperadding the Honour of taking me to your Table as a Friend, and as a Gueſt, and a Perſon likewiſe ſo Obnoxious, in regard of my Relations, nothing could be either Greater, or more Obliging. David heard all This without either Animadverting upon Mephiboſheth, or putting Ziba's Credit to the Teſt: but he told him, that having given the whole Eſtate to Ziba, he would order him the one half of it back again: Nay Sir, ſays Mephiboſheth, ſo long as I have the Satisfaction of ſeeing my Lord the King upon his Throne again, even let Ziba take the Whole and Welcome.

Mephibosheth traduced to the King by Ziba.

The Loyalty and Gratitude of Mephibosheth.

Barzillai always Faithful to the King.

King David, in the time of the War, had been much beholden for ſeveral Good Offices to Barzillai, the Gileadite; a Great Man to all Good and Honourable Purpoſes: And this Barzillai would needs bring the King Onward of his Way to the River Jordan. The King preſs'd him with great Earneſtneſs to go through with him to Jeruſalem, promiſing that he would be as good as a Father to him, and that he ſhould want nothing that might be a Relief, and a Refreſhment to his Old Age. But he excus'd himſelf, that he ſhould be more at Eaſe in a Private way of Life, then in the Splendour, and Luxury of a Palace. He was now Eighty Years of Age, he ſaid, and paſt the Reliſh of Court-Pleaſures; having no other Buſineſs in the World then to prepare for Death, and to give Orders for his Funeral. Wherefore he begg'd his Majeſty's Leave to retire Home again, where he might more Conveniently Govern himſelf after his Own Faſhion. His Taſt was now gone, as to the Satisfactions of Delicious Meat and Drink; and ſo for the Delights of Singing, Dancing, Revels, Harmonious Conſorts of Inſtruments, or Voices, and the like. His Hearing was Deaded, and Loſt (he ſaid,) and he had no longer any ſenſe of theſe Entertainments. The King, in fine, was prevail'd upon at length, to part with him; but upon Condition, ſays he, that your Son [a] Chimham ſhall go along with me, and take his Part in the beſt Offices I can do him. Barzillai, with all Dutiful Acknowledgments, left his Son with the King; and taking his leave, with the moſt Paſſionate Wiſhes of a Long and a Proſperous Reign to him, he went back to his Own Home.

David's Kind Invitation to him.

Barzillai excuſes himſelf from a Court-Life.

The King takes Barzillai's Son Chimham along with him.

When David came to Gilgal, he had one Half of the Whole Nation with him, and the Tribe of Judah entire. There came to him ſeveral of the Prime Men of the Country with a vaſt Multitude of People at their Heels, and charg'd the Tribe of Judah with taking too much upon them in going to the King, without Conſulting their Brethren; whereas they ought unanimouſly to have gone together. The Heads of the Tribe of Judah deſired the reſt not to take any thing amiſs in Their going before; for they look'd upon it as a Duty incumbent on them for Kindred-ſake; which made them the more Earneſt, and Officious, upon that Conſideration. They did not propoſe poſe any Advantage to Themſelves (they ſaid) by being ſo Forward; neither had they given any Cauſe of Offence by their Earlineſs, to thoſe that came after them. The Heads of the other Tribes were not at all pleas'd with this way of Reaſoning. Pray how come You, they cry'd, to Engroſs the King to your ſelves, as if he were not Our King as well as Yours? For he is by God's Providence indifferently the Governour of us All: So that if we are Eleven Parts of the Whole, and you but One, and conſequently valuable in Compariſon according to That Proportion, you have certainly done very Ill in ſtealing away to the King by your ſelves, without acquainting us. While the Great Men were at Hard Words upon This Controverſy, up ſtood Sheba, the Son of Bicri, a Benjamite, (a Man of a Factious and Turbulent Spirit) and call'd-out with a loud Voice in the Middle of the Crowd; What do they talk to us for, of a Part in David; or what have we to do with the Son of Jeſſe? So he cauſed the Trumpet to be ſounded, with a kind of a Proclamation for the People to depart to their Tents, and thereupon a War was Denounced againſt David. The Multitude fell-off into the Party and Intereſt of Sheba, ſaving only the Tribe of Judah, who ſtood by the King, and Conducted him to Jeruſalem. The Firſt Thing he did there, was to clear his Palace of his Concubines, which his Son Abſalom had Proſtituted in the ſight of the People; but he had them provided for elſewhere, with all Fairneſs of Reſpect, as before; though He himſelf had never more to do with them. He made Amaſa his General, in the Place of Joab, giving him Orders to draw what Troups he could get together out of the Tribe of Judah, and bring them to him in Three Days, that he might be ready to March out with them againſt the Son of Bicri. Amaſa went about his Bus'neſs; but finding more Work to do then he Expected, and out-ſtaying his Time, David, upon the Third Day diſcours'd the Matter to Joab. This Bus'neſs of Sheba, ſays he, is a Thing not to be trifled with; wherefore do you immediately take what Forces you have at hand, with the Six Hundred Veterans, and ſo without any Delay, take your Brother Abiſhai along with you, and march directly away after the Son of Bicri: Fight him, whereſoever you find him, before he draws his Party into a Body; for if we let him Alone, he will gather like a Snow-Ball; ſtrengthen himſelf, and when he has gotten into ſome Strong Hold, or Fortify'd Town, he will give us more Trouble perhaps then Abſalom did, before we get him out again. Joab, in the ſame Inſtant, Poſted forward with his Brother, and the Troups that were Aſſigned him to ſearch for Sheba. At his coming to Gibeon, a Village ſome Forty Furlongs from Jeruſalem, he met Amaſa upon his March in the Head of a Gallant Army. Amaſa advancing toward him to embrace him, Joab, with a Breaſt-Plate upon his Body, and his Sword girt to him, dropt his Sword out of the Scabbard, going to meet him, and preſently catcht it up again, with one Hand, while he took Amaſa by the Beard with the other, as if it had been to have kiſs'd him; but ſtabb'd him into the Guts, and he dy'd upon the Place. Now what was the Provocation all this while to ſo Impious, and execrable an Outrage upon ſo Good a Youth; nay, and his Kinſman too; but a Diabolical Envy of his Preferment, and a Jealouſie of his being too great in the King's Favour. It was much upon the ſame Ground that he had already Murder'd Abner; and much after the ſame Treacherous Manner, that he did it too. 'Tis true, that in the former Caſe, he might appear to have ſome ſpecious Colour for it in the Revenge of his Brother Hazael: But for this Second Aſſaſſinate he had not a Word to ſay.

Upon the Death of Amaſa, Joab proſecuted his March to look-out Sheba; leaving only one Man with the General's Body, with Order to make Proclamation thorough the Army, that he was an ill Man, and but ſerv'd according to his Deſert, deſiring all thoſe that were for the King to follow Joab, and his Brother Abiſhai. While the Body lay expoſed in the way, there were Multitudes gather'd together, as is uſual in ſuch Caſes, ſtaring at it: So that he that had it in Charge, got it out of the Way to a Villiage, where he Hous'd it, with a Coat thrown over it; and ſo ſoon as the Wonderment was removed, the Soldiers March'd forward after their Commanders. Joab had by this Time almoſt quite run thorough the Land of Iſrael; and getting Intelligence at laſt, that Sheba had ſhelter'd himſelf in a ſtrong Town call'd Abel-Maacha, Joab order'd the Place to be preſently beſieg'd, and a Trench caſt-up about it; and at the ſame time to have it ply'd with Mines and Batteries; being reſolved to deſtroy it, even for the Affront of ſhutting their Gates againſt him.

While theſe Preparations were a-Foot for the gaining of the Town, a Good and a Prudent Woman, out of a Zeal for the Service of her Country in that Extremity, Mounted the Wall, and call'd-out to Joab from the Battlements, to ſpeak a Word with him out of the Hearing of the Soldiers. Joab did as ſhe deſired, and the Diſcourſe ſhe made him was to this Purpoſe. Whereas God, ſays ſhe, has given us Kings and Governours to Protect us againſt our Enemies, and to Maintain and Preſerve us in Peace and Unity one with Another, here are you come, without any Injury, or Provocation, to Ruin

Upon this Promiſe, and Declaration, the Woman call'd out to Joab, only to have a little Patience, and Sheba's Head ſhould be thrown down to him over the Wall. She went back upon this, to the Citizens, to reaſon the Matter with them. Are you then reſolved, ſays ſhe, like a company of Wicked Men, and for the ſake of a Wicked Wretch, and a meer Stranger to you, to Sacrifice your Habitations, your Wives, and your Children, and all in ſo Wicked a Manner too? What has Sheba done for you, to Ballance the Obligations you have to David? Or ſetting aſide all other Arguments, are you able, do you think, to defend your City againſt this Army? The Reaſon of the Thing was ſo Plain, and Evident, that they cut-off Sheba's Head by Conſent, for a Compoſition, and caſt it over the Wall: Whereupon, the Siege was forthwith rais'd; and the People returning to Jeruſalem, David declared Joab General of all his Troups. Benaiah had the Command given him of all the Guards of the Body, and the Six Hundred Veterans. Adoram was the Treaſurer. Sabathes and Achilaus were the Recorders; Suſa the Secretary; Zadock and Abiathar continuing in the Prieſthood.

Sheba's Head's cut off and thrown over the Wall. The Siege rais'd.

Joab declar'd General.

Some time after this, there was a Famine in the Land, and David earneſtly beſought God to reveal unto him in Mercy, both the Provoking Cauſe of that Grievous Judgment, and how it might be remov'd. Anſwer was returned by the Prophets, that the Bloud of the Gibeonites, which Saul had moſt perfidiouſly cauſed to be ſhed, cry'd to Heaven for Vengeance; as an Action not only contrary to the Oath and Promiſe of Joſhua, and Ratify'd alſo by the Elders; but againſt Conſcience, and Common Juſtice: Wherefore, ſaid they, let the King give ſuch Satisfaction to the Gibeonites as they ſhall require for the loſs of their Slaughter'd Citizens, and the Iſraelites may expect that God will be Gracious to them, in a Deliverance from their Preſent Calamity. When David came to underſtand this from the Prophets themſelves, he ſent to the Gibeonites, and ask'd them what Satisfaction would content them. So they demanded that ſeven of Saul's Sons, or of his Race, might be deliver'd-up to Juſtice. The King order'd to have ſeven of them found out, and put into the Hands of the Gibeonites, to do with them as they pleaſed: But ſtill excepting Mephiboſheth out of the Number, for the ſake of Jonathan his Father. The Gibeonites accepted of this as a Compoſition, and Puniſh'd them, as they thought fit themſelves: in which Inſtant God ſent them Rain, and ſo kindly a Continuance of it, that the Earth in due time came to it ſelf again, Freſh and Flouriſhing, as formerly, and bringing forth Fruits in their Seaſon.

It was not long after this, that David Marched out with his Army againſt the Philiſtins; Fought, and Routed them; but following the Chace too Eagerly, and too far, Achmon the Son of Araph, one of the Race of the Giants, (whoſe Arming was a Coat of Mail, a Launce weighing Three Hundred Shekels, and his Sword by his ſide) ſeeing David Alone, and quite ſpent, turned ſhort upon him, and ſtruck him down, and had certainly ſlain him, if Abiſhai, Joab's Brother, had not in that Preciſe Moment come to his Relief; beſtriding David, and not only Protecting the King, but killing his Enemy. The whole Army was ſo ſenſible of the Danger the King's Life was in, and of the Providence of his Deliverance, that the Commanders bound him by an Oath never to hazzard his Royal Perſon any more in a Battle; for being naturally Brave, and Forward, he laid himſelf too Open to the Common Chances of War; and if he ſhould Miſcarry, it would be an Irreparable loſs to the Nation, to be depriv'd of the Bleſſings they enjoy'd under his Adminiſtration.

David overthrows the Philiſtins. Achmon ſtrikes David to the ground.

This Battle had not been long over, before the Philiſtins, Rally'd again, and came to a Rendezvous at Gaza. David having Notice of it, diſpatch'd away an Army immediately againſt them. In this Expedition Sobach the Hittite (one of the braveſt Men in the whole Body) got himſelf great Reputation by cutting-off ſeveral of the Race of the Giants, and Men of a Prodigious Bulk and Strength too, with his own Hand. He had in ſhort the Honour of a Great ſhare in that Day's Succeſs. The Philiſtins, after This, brought yet Another Army into the Field, and the King ſent out his Troups to Encounter them. Nephan, David's Kinſman did Wonders, for he ſlew Hand to Hand, in a ſingle Combate, one of the boldeſt Men the Philiſtins had in their Party: The reſt turned their Backs upon it, and loſt Great Numbers in that Action. But the Philiſtins in a ſhort time Recruited yet once again, after all their Loſs, and Encamped at a Certain Town not far from the Borders of the Hebrews. The Philiſtins had in their Camp a Man Six Cubits-High; Six Fingers on a Hand, and Six Toes on Each Foot, and one that valu'd himſelf upon his Deſcent from the Stock of the Giants.

Jonathan

Jonathan the Son of Shimei had the Honour to kill this Over-grown Monster in a single Combat, and at the Head of his Troups, which was a great Stroke in the Victory of the Day; beside the Glorious Character he acquir'd by it, of a Valiant Man. This was the Last Battel the Israelites had with the Philistins; for from That time forward, they never had the Heart to look them any more in the Face.

David having now made his way thorough all the Toyls and Dangers of War, into the Quiet of a Profound Peace, gave himself wholly up to the Composing of Divine Hymns, and Psalms, to the Glory of God; in variety of Measures; as, Trimeters, Pentameters, and the like. These Ayres he order'd to be sung by the Levites upon the Sabbaths, and Other Festivals, in company with Musical Instruments provided for that Purpose: As they had an Instrument with Ten Strings, to be touch'd with a Quill; the Psaltery with Twelve Strings, to be play'd upon with the Fingers; and large Cymbals of Brass. But this is enough said as to the General Understanding of the Nature of These Instruments. The King had about him, Men of Honour and Valour in abundance; but for Worthies of the First Rate, he reckon'd only Eight and Thirty who had made themselves Signal for their Exploits; and Men of such Force and Resolution, as if they had been made for Great Enterprizes, and the Carrying of the World before them. Of these Eight and Thirty, I shall only name Five, as a Measure to judge of the rest by.

David being now at Peace, gives himself up to the Composing of Divine Hymns and Psalms for God's Holy Worship. 2 Sam. 23. King David had about him 38 Worthies. Five of them were as follows.

The First was [a] Issem, the Son of [b] Achem, that brake several times into the Body of the Enemy, and Kill'd Nine Hundred of them upon One Encounter, with his Own Hand. 1. Issem.

After him comes Eleazar, the [c] Son of Dodo, that was with the King in [d] Arasam. It was his Fortune to be in a Battel, where the Israelites finding themselves mightily over-power'd with Numbers, gave way and fled, leaving him Alone in his own Person to make good his Ground; which he did so effectually, that he gave a Stand to the Whole Army, Killing and Wounding Great Numbers of them; so that his Sword was in a manner glew'd to his Right-hand with the Bloud. The Example of This Bravery put Courage into the Fugitives, and brought them on again; pressing so hard upon the Adversaries Troups, that they recover'd the Day, and Crowned it with a Wonderful, and a most Illustrious Victory: Eleazar running them down all this while, and the Common Soldiers stripping them. 2. Eleazar.

The Third was [e] Sebas, the Son of Ilus; who at a Place called the Jaw, upon Another Engagement with the Philistins, finding the Israelites shrinking, and giving way, Opposed his single Body to the Whole Force of the Enemy; did Great Execution upon them; brake their Order; put them to Flight, and gave them Chace with a Great Overthrow. In these Three Instances we read the Bravery of these Three Heroical Adventurers, in the Plain Field, and in the Face of an Enemy. 3. Sebas.

At another time, when the King was at Jerusalem, and the Philistins Encamped before it, in the Great Valley that stretches out as far as Bethlem, a matter of Twenty Furlongs from the Town; David went up to a High Tower to ask Counsel and Direction of God, about the Government, and Event of the War: And speaking among his Friends of the Delicious Water that was in his Country, and especially of the Well at Bethlem that was next the Gate, What would I give, says he, for a Soup of that Water! These Three Men over-hearing him, went their way immediately, brake through the Camp of the Philistins, and fetch'd of the Water from the Well it self, and came back with it the same way they went: The Barbarians standing at Gaze all the while, at the Hardiness of the Undertaking; and not daring, though so few of them, to give them any Interruption in their Return. Upon their presenting of This Water to the King, he gave God Thanks for the Safety of them that brought it; but it would not become him, he said, to drink it, for it was the Price of Bloud: And so he poured it upon the Ground as an Offering to the Lord.

In the Fourth Place may be reckon'd Abishai, the Brother of Joab, that in one Day slew Five Hundred of the Enemy. 4. Abishai.

The Fifth, and the Last of these Worthy Champions, shall be Benaiah, a Man of a Sacerdotal Family; who fought, upon a Challenge, with two Brothers, Men of eminent Fame for Feats of Arms among the Moabites, and kill'd them both. He fought again with an Ægyptian, of a monstrous Force and Size; and closing with him, though Himself Naked, and his Adversary Arm'd at all Points; he forced his Spear out of his Hands, and Dispatch'd him with his own Weapon. And for his Greater Honour still, he disarm'd him while he was yet Living. He did Another thing too, that for the Stoutness and the Stomach of it, may be accounted Equal, if not Superiour to all the rest. There was a Lyon dropt into a Pitfall: The Snow drove into the Hole, and cover'd the Mouth of it: so that the Beast finding no way to get out again, set up a 5. Benaiah.

Roaring.

Roaring. It was Benaiah's Hap to pass by That way, within Hearing of this Out-cry. He went to the Place, and so into the Pit, and with a Cudgel Stagger'd and Kill'd the Lyon. These were Five Great Men; and the other Three and Thirty not Inferiour to them.

2 Sam. 24. David had now a Phancy come into his Head of taking an Account how many Thousand Men he could Muster-out of the People of Israel, forgetting the Old Precept of Moses, that so oft as there should be Occasion to Number the People, there should be an Oblation of Half a Shekel by the Head to the Lord: But he sent to Joab however to take the Account. He excus'd himself upon it, as a thing that was Needless; but David would not be said Nay, and therefore Positively commanded him to go about it, and let it be the First thing he did, Joab upon this, Summoned the Scribes, and the Heads of the Tribes to Advise with all, and so went through the whole Land of the Israelites to make-up this Computation. After Nine Months and Twenty Days, Joab returned to Jerusalem, and told the King upon the whole matter, that beside the Tribes of Benjamin and of Levi, which he had not as yet taken an Account of, he found the Number of the rest of the Israelites to amount to Nine Hundred Thousand Men that were able to draw the Sword. In the Tribe of Judah alone he reckon'd upon Four Hundred Thousand.

David commands Joab positively to Number the People.

David computes them to be 900000 Men, beside the Tribes of Benjamin and Levi.

David, while this was in hand, repented himself of what he had done, and was told by the Prophets also, that God was highly Offended at him; whereupon he betook himself to a True Repentance, begging Pardon of Almighty God, with Prayers and Supplications, and obtaining it. Presently after This, God sent the Prophet Gad to him with an Offer of three things to his Choice: That is to say; either a Seven-Years Famine: or to Fly Three Months before an Enemy, or a Three Days Pestilence; and to demand a Present Resolution from him, which of the Three he would take. David found himself in a Great Streight, which to chuse: If the Famine, says he to himself, it would look as if I had more care of my Self, then of my People; for probably I can never want Bread. If to lie at the Mercy of an Enemy, it looks the same way still; for I have Strong Holds and Castles to Repair to for my Own Safety. But for the Third, it is a Calamity that threatens Governours in common with their Subjects. As he was turning his Thoughts upon this Deliberation, the Prophet press'd him to an Immediate Answer; to which he made this Return, that he would rather fall into the Hands of God, then of Man; and therefore submitting himself to God's Pleasure and Goodness, he Chose the Pestilence. The Prophet had no sooner received, and reported David's Answer, but the Israelites were presently seized with a most Unaccountable Distemper, that was still attended with Certain Death, and accompany'd with Accidents that baffled all the Doctors, either to find a Remedy, or Reason. But they dy'd, in fine, One upon the Neck of Another, and no body knew How. Some went-off with Gripes and Torments that dispatch'd them in a Trice; some with Incurable Faintnesses and Languours, in despite of the Physicians. Others with Vertigo's; Dimness of Sight, Suffocations, &c. Some again expir'd, themselves, in the very Office of Mourning for the Death of Others. The Mortality was so Great, in fine, that betwixt Break of Day, and Dinner-time, there were Swept away by this Pestilence Seventy Thousand Persons. The Destroying-Angel was now going to Jerusalem upon the same Commission; but the King putting on Sackcloth, and humbly supplicating God with Prayers and Tears, to remove This Dreadful Judgment; in the Middle of his Ejaculations, he lifted-up his Eyes, and discover'd an Angel, with a Drawn Sword, moving toward Jerusalem. Upon this Apparition, he brake-out into Fresh and more Passionate Exclamations. Lord, says he, Punish the Shepherd; but Alass! What have these Sheep done? Pour down thy Wrath rather upon Me, and My Family; but spare the Innocent People I beseech thee.

David's Prayers were heard, and God immediately put a Stop to the Pestilence; Ordering the King, by the Mouth of the Prophet Gad, to go-up without delay to the Thrashing Floor of Araunah, and there to Erect an Altar, and offer Sacrifice upon it. David went away to the Place according to his Direction, where he found Araunah Thrashing his Corn; who no sooner saw David, and his Sons, coming towards him, but he ran-out with Infinite Reverence to Receive them. Now this Araunah was a Jebusite, and so Particular a Friend of David's, that he Protected, and Secured him from All Damage upon the very taking of the City, as has been formerly Observ'd.

God puts a stop to the Pesti-lence.

An Altar Erected at the Thrashing-Floor of Arau-nah.

Araunah, a try'd Friend of David's.

Well, says Araunah, is there any thing now that my Lord will be pleas'd to Command of his Servant? I come says David, to buy Your Thrashing Floor, and to Raise an Altar to God upon it, and to Offer Sacrifice. Nay, says Araunah, not only my Thrashing-Floor, but my Ploughs, my Oxen, and Burnt-Offerings, are all at my Lord's Service Gratis: and I beseech that God to look Graciously down upon Your Worship and Sacrifice. The King

King was exceedingly pleas'd with the Candour and Greatneſs of This Good Man's Mind; but told him, that it muſt be a Purchaſe, not a Gift; for it would not be Fair to offer a Sacrifice that ſhould coſt him nothing. So Araunah remitted himſelf to David, who gave him Fifty Shekels of Silver for the Floor; offer'd Sacrifices, and Burnt-Offerings, and Peace-offerings likewiſe upon it. After this Solemnity, David was Reinſtated in God's Grace and Favour. This was the Place that Abraham brought his Son Iſaac to, when he ſhould have been Offer'd-up himſelf for a Sacrifice, if a Ram had not been preſented in his Stead, when the Knife was ready for the Execution. But we have ſpoken of this in Another Place.

David buys Araunah's Thraſhing-Floor, and Sacrifices upon it.

When David found that his Prayers were Granted, and his Sacrifice Accepted, he reſolved to call the Whole Place by the Name of The People's Altar, or The Iſraelites Altar; and to Build a Temple there, which Purpoſe of His was afterward Ratify'd by God himſelf, who ſoon after ſent his Prophet to him with a Prediction, that his Succeſſour ſhould there build a Temple. David employ'd People upon This, to take an account how many Strangers he had in his Dominions, which were reckon'd to amount to about One Hundred and Eighty Thouſand Perſons. Out of theſe he choſe Eighty Thouſand to work in Stone: the reſt to be employ'd in carrying all ſorts of Materials; out of which he appointed Thirty Five Thouſand to Overſee the Workmen. There was gotten together a Mighty Maſs of Iron and Braſs; a Prodigious Quantity of Cedar, which he had from Tyre and Sidon; the Largeſt and the Faireſt Trees that were to be got. David would be telling his Familiar Friends all this while, that theſe Materials were only to lie ready for Uſe, when his Son ſhould have Occaſion for them; which would ſave Time, and Trouble, and Expedite the Work: But that as yet, his Son was too Young and Unexperienc'd, to menage ſuch a Province.

THis was the Face of things when David called his Son Solomon to him, and gave him in Special Charge, that ſo ſoon as ever he came to the Throne, he ſhould immediately Enter upon the Building of a Temple, for the Honour and Worſhip of God. I would have done it my ſelf, ſays he, but being frequently in War, and Conſequently a Man of Blood, I was forbidden by an Expreſs Command from Heaven, and the Work reſerved by Providence for my Youngeſt Son; who, according to the Prediction, was to be call'd Solomon, who ſhould be a Prince of Peace; of whom it was foretold, that God would take him with a Paternal Affection into his own Care, and that the Whole People of Iſrael ſhould be Happy under his Adminiſtration; and Enjoy, not only a Peace (the Greateſt of all Temporal Bleſſings) with Forreigners, but live Free from any Civil or Inteſtine Diviſions among themſelves. Now, ſays David, ſince You are Deſign'd to be a King, even before you were Born, do your Endeavour to behave your ſelf, as a Man Otherwiſe Worthy of that Providence. Govern your ſelf according to the Meaſures of Piety, Juſtice, and True Fortitude: Pay a Reverence to the Precepts, Laws and Traditions of Moſes: Obſerve them Religiouſly your ſelf, and do not ſuffer any Violation of them in Others. As for the Temple, that God hath appointed to be built in your Reign, be ſure to attend it as you ought to do, and let not the Difficulty of the Work Diſcourage you; for it ſhall be my Care to have all the Materials in readineſs for you to begin withall, upon your Firſt Entrance into the Government. I have made a Proviſion of Ten Thouſand Talents of Gold; One Hundred Thouſand of Silver; Braſs and Iron to a Quantity not to be imagin'd, beſide Timber and Stone in a vaſt Abundance. You ſhall have alſo many Thouſands of Carpenters, and Maſons, and the means of ſupplying your ſelf with what you want. Attend your Bus'neſs with Care and Diſpatch; for upon the Finiſhing of this Undertaking, you may aſſure your ſelf of the Perpetual Favour, and Protection of Almighty God.

David gives excellent Advice to Solomon;

And promiſes to provide the Materials for the Temple in His Reign.

After this, he recommended it to the Princes of the People to Aſſiſt his Son in this Fabrick; and without being Sollicitous upon any Other Account, to attend the Bus'neſs of Religion in the Firſt Place; for that alone would be ſufficient to ſecure the Peace and Welfare of the Commonwealth, which are the never failing Rewards of Righteouſneſs and Juſtice. He appointed alſo that, upon the Finiſhing of the Temple, the Ark ſhould be Placed in it, with all the Holy Veſſels and Utenſils thereunto belonging, which he told them ſhould have been there Depoſited long ſince; if their Forefathers had minded the Injunction God laid upon them, of raiſing a Temple to him him immediately upon their coming into the Land of Promiſe. Theſe Counſels and Exhortations of David were Addreſs'd indifferently, both to his Son, and to the Princes.

David orders the Ark, and all the Holy Utenſils to be Depoſited in the Temple upon the Finiſhing of it.

David is now Cold, and worn-out with Age. 1 Kings 2.

David was now but Seventy Years of Age, and yet ſo Worn-out, and ſpent with the Infirmities of Old Age; and his Bloud ſo chill'd, that all the Coverings and Blankets they could throw over him would hardly keep Life and Soul together: ſo that a Counſel of Phiſicians was called upon it; who gave their Opinion, one and all, that the Beſt Thing in the World for a Man under thoſe Decays, was a Fair, Young Bed-fellow; for the Warmth being Gentle and Kindly, would relieve Nature without Force. They found-out upon this, a Delicate ſweet Creature there in the Town, that came up to the Nicety of the Preſcription, and put her to Bed to him. Her Name was Abiſhag, and her Bus'neſs only to lie by him; Hugg him, and Comfort him; which ſhe might Safely and Innocently do, the King being now paſt the Temptations of all irregular Diſpoſitions: But of this Virgin, we ſhall have Occaſion to ſpeak further hereafter.

David advi ſed to make uſe of a Warm Young Bedfellow.

Abiſhag is the Perſon to ſupply the Office.

David's Fourth Son Adonijah,

David had a Fourth Son, whoſe Name was Adonijah; born to him by Haggith, and the next after Abſalom. As to his Beauty, Stature, and the Graciouſneſs of his Perſon; nay and in his Ambition too, he was not much unlike his Elder Brother.

Claims to the Government by Succeſſion.

This Adonijah, Abſalom being Dead, puts up a Claim to the Government, as the Next in Succeſſion: ſetting all his Friends at Work, by Intereſt, and Popularity, to aſſiſt him toward the Gaining of his Point. He puts himſelf into a Pompous Equipage of Chariots, Horſes, Guards, and the like; while the Good Man his Father Innocently lets him go on, without the leaſt Check, or Caution; nay or ſo much as a Queſtion of Curioſity, what all this Splendor and Parade tended to. His chief Complices were Joab the General, and the High-Prieſt Abiathar; but Zadock, the High-Prieſt, and the Prophet Nathan, Benaiah the Captain of the Guards, Shimei the King's Friend, and the Generality of the Sword-Men were all for David.

Adonijah makes a mighty Entertainment.

Adonijah prepared a Mighty Treat in the Suburbs of Jeruſalem near the Fountain in the King's Gardens. To this Entertainment, he invited all his Brothers, ſave only Solomon; and there was Joab alſo, and Abiathar; and the Chiefs of the Tribe of Judah: But for Zadock, Nathan, and Benaiah, and others of that Intereſt, there was not a Man of them ſent to. The Prophet Nathan took notice of this, and told the Story of it to Bathſheba, the Mother of Solomon. Look ye, ſays he, here's Adonijah Kinging of it already, and David knows nothing of what's done: Wherefore let it be your Care, as well for your Son's Sake, as for your Own, to look after this Affair. Go you to David, ſays the Prophet, and when you have him alone, mind him of his Oath, that Solomon ſhould Reign after him; and yet here's Adonijah, (you may tell him) as good as upon the Throne already. While you are Diſcourſing this Matter with the King, I may come into the Chamber to you, and ſecond your Enformation. Bathſheba follow'd the Prophets Advice, and went-in to the King, where ſhe made her Reverence; and after Leave given her to deliver ſomewhat ſhe had to ſay, ſhe gave David an Account of the Affair in the very Words the Prophet had put into her Mouth: Telling him the Circumſtances of Adonijah's Entertainment; whom he invited, and whom he left out: Adding withall, that the People were in a ſuſpence what to do till he ſhould declare his Succeſſor, and that her own Life and her Sons were both at ſtake upon the Iſſue. While this Diſcourſe was a-foot, the Servants brought David word, that the Prophet Nathan was at the Door to wait upon him. He was immediately call'd in, and upon the very Inſtant of entring the Preſence, he asked David, in ſome Confuſion, whether or no he had that Day Transferred his Government to Adonijah, and declared him his Succeſſor; for he has made, ſays he, a mighty Feaſt yonder; Invited ſuch and ſuch to't; left out ſuch and ſuch Others; and there are they Eating, Drinking, and making Merry, with Healths and Acclamations to the Honour of their New King Adonijah: But for Myſelf, Zadock the High-Prieſt, and Benaiah the Captain of the Guards; We are all Strangers to the Matter. Now it would be well, ſaid he, to let the World underſtand, whether this be done with your Privity and Approbation, or Not. Bathſheba withdrew when the Prophet came in, and was now by the King's Order call'd for back again. She was accordingly brought to David, and he ſpake to her after this Manner. Well! ſays he to Bathſheba, The Thing that I have Sworn formerly, I do now Swear over again, in the Preſence of the Great God. Your Son Solomon ſhall Reign after me, and ſit upon my Throne; and you ſhall ſee it done this very Day: Upon which Declaration, and Aſſurance, ſhe ſubmiſſively took her leave, wiſhing the King a long Life.

Nathan adviſes Bathſheba to ſpeak of it to David.

Bathſheba tells David as Nathan directed her.

As Bathſheba is telling her Story, Nathan comes to the Door.

Nathan asks David if he had made Adonijah his Succeſſor.

Adonijah's Gueſts were Feaſting and Drinking Healths to their New King.

Bathſheba being withdrawn was called in again.

David by an Oath declares, that Solomon ſhall ſit upon the Throne that Day.

David, upon this Reſolution, ſent for Zadock and Benaiah, and bad them take the Prophet Nathan, and the Royal Guards along with them; Mount Solomon upon the King's Mule, and carry him out of the City to the Fountain that is called Gihon, there to Anoint him with Holy Oyl, and Proclaim him King. This Office being aſſigned to the High-Prieſt, and the Prophet, Command was further given, that they ſhould conduct him

David commands Zadock and Benaiah to Anoint Solomon, King:

thorough

thorough the Heart of the City with Trumpets ſounding before him, and Multitudes of Troups following with Shouts and Rejoycings, crying, [Long Live King Solomon:] to the End, that the whole Nation might take notice of it, that his Father had declared him his Succeſſor. David, for a Concluſion, gave Solomon in Charge to be ſure to Govern, not only the Tribe of Judah, but the whole Nation of the Hebrews, according to the ſtricteſt Rules and Meaſures of Piety and Juſtice.

And ſo to Conduct him with Shouts and Trumpets through the City.

Benaiah, after this, with an Affectionate Ejaculation for God's Bleſſing upon Solomon, and the whole Proceeding, went inſtantly away with the reſt of the Company, according to their Order, and about their Bus'neſs. They Mounted Solomon upon the King's Mule; Conducted him out of the City to the Fountain; Anointed him with Holy Oyl, and then brought him back again attended with Acclamations, and the Unanimous Wiſhes of a Long and a Happy Reign. They brought him afterward to the Palace, and Placed him upon his Father's Throne. This Solemnity being over, the People gave-up Themſelves to Jollity, and Feaſting, Muſique, Dancing, and all other Chearful Diverſions, to ſuch a degree of Tranſport and Shouting, that Heaven and Earth rang of it. The Clamour of this Extravagant Joy coming to the Ears of Adonijah and his Gueſts, did not a little ſurpriſe them; Joab himſelf declaring that the Noiſe he heard of Shouts and Trumpets, did not at all pleaſe him. In one Word, they forſook their Meat upon it; and as they lay Thoughtful, and Muſing what ſhould be the Matter, in comes running to them Jonathan the Son of Abiathar the High-Prieſt, whom Adonijah was very glad to ſee, upon a miſtaken Opinion that he brought Good News with him. So Jonathan gave them the whole Relation of the King's Orders, and the Proceeding concerning Solomon; which they had no ſooner heard, but every Man ſlipt away from the Banquet to his own Home. Only Adonijah being Conſcious to himſelf of an Indignity too great to be Forgiven, he fled for Sanctuary to the Horns of the Altar, and there begg'd for Pardon. When Solomon came to underſtand how it was with Adonijah; and that he inſiſted upon ſome Security to be given him for an Indemnity and Oblivion, Solomon with as much Prudence, as Clemency, granted him a Pardon for what was paſt; but with a Precaution, to have a Care how he behav'd himſelf for the Future; for if he ſhould ever be found in any ſuch Practice again for the time to come, his Deſtruction ſhould lie at his own Door. So Solomon order'd him to be brought to him from his Place of Refuge, and when he had paid his Duty and Reverence to the New King, he bad him go to his own Houſe again in Peace, and to behave himſelf thence-forward like a Good Man; which it was highly his own Intereſt to do.

They place Solomon upon his Father's Throne, and cloſe the Ceremony with Joy and Acclamations.

The Noiſe of Shouts and Trumpets ſtartles Adonijah and his Gueſts.

Jonathan comes in, and tells them the whole Story.

The Company ſlinks away.

Adonijah flies for Sanctuary to the Altar, and begs Pardon.

Solomon forgives him for what was Paſt.

It was David's Intention to have Solomon Declared, and Recognized the King of the whole Nation of Iſrael: in Order to which End, he Summon'd all the Princes to Jeruſalem, together with the Prieſts, and Levites; and he found upon the Roll Thirty Eight Thouſand Men among them, that were above Thirty Years of Age; out of which Number there were Twenty Three Thouſand to attend the Building of the Temple: Judges and their Clerks Six Thouſand; Four Thouſand Porters belonging to the Houſe of God, and as many Singers, and Muſicians, or Players upon Inſtruments; of which we have ſaid ſomewhat already. Theſe he divided into Families; and upon ſeperating the Prieſts from the reſt of the Tribe, he found Four and Twenty of of them: That is to ſay, ſixteen deſcended from Eleazar, and Eight from Ithamar; appointing every Family to Officiate Eight Days, or from Sabbaoth to Sabbaoth, and ſo to do Duty one after another. The Lots of the whole were all caſt in the Preſence of David, and of the High-Prieſts, Zadock and Abiathar, together with the Heads of the Tribes. The Lot that came out Firſt being enter'd upon the Roll [The Firſt Family] and ſo the Second, and the Third, &c. to the Four and Twentyeth, in Order as it happen'd, which way of Diſtributiou continues in Uſe to this Day. He divided the Tribe of Levi alſo into Twenty Four Parts, to ſucceed one after another, according to the Chance of the Lot, in the ſame manner with the Prieſts. But the Preference was ſtill given to the Poſterity of Moſes; to whom was committed the Truſt and Cuſtody of the Holy Treaſure, and the Bounties and Donations of Princes and Royal Benefactors. He likewiſe order'd the whole Tribe of Levi, and the Prieſts, to attend the Service of God, Day and Night in their Turns, according to the Primitive Preſcription and Inſtitution of Moſes.

A Summons of all the Princes to Jeruſalem, with the Prieſts, and Levites.

The Prieſts apart from the reſt of the Tribe make 24 Families: 16 from Eleazar, and 8 from Ithamar.

They caſt Lots, and the Firſt that comes out, is called, The Firſt Family, and ſo in order to the Laſt.

The Tribe of Levi is divided alſo into 24 Parts, to ſucceed in Order, as the Prieſts; but with a Preference to the Poſterity of Moſes.

In the next place he made a Diſtribution of the whole Army into Twelve Diviſions, with their Commanders in Chief, Tribunes, Centurions, and their Subordinates. Every Diviſion to conſiſt of Twenty Four Thouſand Men, and each of thoſe Diviſions to do a Month's Duty in their reſpective Courſes, upon the Guard of Solomon's Palace, together with their Tribunes, and Centurions: Every Part to have its Diſtinct Officer, or Judge; and he to be a Perſon of a Try'd Integrity and Juſtice. He appointed alſo Overſeers of the King's Income, Vineyards, Lands, Husbandry, Flocks, and and Herds, &c. whom it would be needleſs to name in this Place. When David had order'd Matters as above, he call'd a General Aſſembly of the Hebrew Magiſtrates, the Princes of the Tribes, the Officers of the Army, and the Menagers of the Revenue; and then raiſing himſelf upon an Eminence, ſpake to the People from his Throne to the following Effect.

David calls a General Aſſembly, and ſpeaks to them from his Throne, upon the Subject of the Temple.

I am now to give you to underſtand, ſays he, my Country-men and Brethren, that I have had it a long time in my Thought to erect a Temple to the Lord, and I Treaſur'd-up a Mighty Maſs of Gold, and a Hundred Thouſand Talents of Silver toward the Charge of the Undertaking; but it hath pleaſed God in his Providence, by the Mouth of the Prophet Nathan to put a ſtop to my Deſign; upon this Conſideration, that he would not have the Foundation of his holy Houſe laid by Hands that had been dipt in Bloud, which Mine have inevitably been, though in the Bloud of your Enemies, by reaſon of the Wars I have been forced upon, in the Righteous and Neceſſary Defence and Vindication of your Liberties. But the Prophet told me further, that God would tranſmit the Care of it to my Son and Succeſſor, both to begin, and finiſh the Work. You know very well, ſays David, that our Father Jacob had Twelve Sons; and that Judah was yet choſen by Common Conſent to be Ruler of all the reſt. You know likewiſe that I my ſelf, though there were Six Brothers of us, was advanced by God, to the Government, and that none of the reſt thought themſelves Injur'd, wherefore I muſt now require in like manner of you, and of all my Sons, that you ſubmit Chearfully, and Dutifully, to my Son Solomon; and that you do it without any Grumbling, Faction, or Civil Diſſention; for it is from God's immediate Command and Commiſſion that he derives his Authority. Make it the Caſe now that God ſhould have ſet a Stranger over you, how great a Folly and Wickedneſs would it have been for you to Murmur at it: But how Thankful ought you now to be for the Choice of ſo near a Relation, when you your ſelves are Partakers of the Honour that is done to your Brother. There is nothing I ſo much long for as to ſee God's Gracious Promiſes take a ſpeedy Effect; and the whole People without any more Delay put into a Full and Laſting Poſſeſſion of the Bleſſings they are to enjoy under the Reign of Solomon. All This, my Dear Son, will be made good, ſays David, and every thing ſucceed to your wiſh, ſo long as you Govern according to Piety and Juſtice, with a reſpect to your Duty both to God and Man, upholding a Reverence to the Laws, and Treading in the Steps of your Forefathers: But whenever you paſs theſe Bounds, there is nothing but Miſery and Ruin to be expected.

David enjoins a Dutiful Obedience to Solomon.

Upon the Finiſhing of this Diſcourſe and Charge, David gave his Son, in the ſight of all his People, a Draught of the Form, and Model of the Temple from Top to Bottom; the Foundation and the Superſtructure; the Height, and Breadth of the Fabrick; the Private Cells, their Number, and Dimenſions; what Veſſels of Gold and Silver were to be Provided, with Directions for their Preciſe weight: David preſſing his Son alſo, with all Diligence and Application, to go in hand with the Building, calling in the Princes, and the Tribe of Levi to his Aſſiſtance; not only in regard of his Youth, and want of Experience, but out of a Reverence alſo to his Divine Commiſſion, which both entitled him to the Government, and likewiſe Authoriz'd, and Predetermin'd him to this Province. And, ſays David, it will not be a work of any Great Difficulty neither; for the Materials are provided to your Hand: ſo many Talents of God; more of Silver; Stone, and Timber; Carpenters, Stone-Cutters, and other Workmen; a Great Treaſure in Emeralds, and other Precious Stones over and above: Beſide a further Supply of Three Thouſand Talents of the Pureſt Gold, out of my Own Store, for the Adorning of the Holy Place, and the Chariot of God, and the Cherubims that are to cover the Ark.

David delivers to Solomon a Draught and Model of the Temple; with Directions for Utenſils, and Holy Veſſels.

The Materials and Workmen are provided beforehand.

This Speech of David's was entertain'd with Great Chearfulneſs, both by Princes, Prieſts, and Levites, who were all zealous for the Forwarding of the Work, every one in his Proportion. They offer'd, among them, to bring-in Five Thouſand Talents of Gold, a Hundred Thouſand of Silver, Ten Thouſand Shekels, and a Maſs of Iron not to be imagin'd. They that had Precious-Stones brought them into the Treaſury, where they were Depoſited in the Cuſtody of one Jalus, of the Race of Moſes. The People were infinitely pleas'd upon the whole Matter, and David above all the reſt, to ſee ſo Unanimous an Agreement in a Common Satisfaction, at the Frankneſs, and Good Faith of the whole Proceeding; Bleſſing God all the while with a loud Voice, in the Style of The Father, and Creator of Heaven and Earth; The Governour and Protector of the Hebrews, and the Bleſſed Fountain of Happyneſs to the People committed to his Charge; Concluding his Devotions with a Fervent Prayer for the Comfort and Happineſs of the Nation; and with Particular Wiſhes of Peace of Conſcience, and the Bleſſing of an Unſpotted Innocence and Integrity, to his Son. He called then upon the People to Joyn with him in their Thanks to Almighty God for all his Mercies, who fell upon their Faces and Worſhipped; and coming after this, to David, made their Acknowledgments for all the Benefits, and Advantages they had enjoy'd under his Reign. The Day following was a Great Day of Sacrifices; a Thouſand Calves, a Thousand Rams, and a Thousand Lambs, for a Burnt-Offering, and afterward, several Victims more for Peace-Offerings. It was a Day, in fine, Dedicated to Feasting and Jollity, both by King and People. Solomon was now a Second Time Anointed, and Declared, and Owned by the People, for their Lawful King; and Zadock, by the Voice of the Whole Multitude, designed for their High-Priest. Solomon was now Conducted to the Palace, and Placed upon his Father's Throne; from which Day forward, the People pay'd him their true Allegeance.

CHAP. XII.

David's Last Charge, Prayer, and Farewel to his Son Solomon. His Death and Burial.

DAVID was now sinking apace, under the Double Weight, of Age, and Sickness; and finding himself near his End, he called for his Son Solomon to give him his Counsel, and his Blessing, and so to take his last Leave of him. Son, says he, I am now going to my Fathers; and You that I leave behind me, are in due time to come to Me: which is no more than the paying of a Common Debt to Nature. There's no returning from the Grave; and when we are once gone, we have done with This World for ever: wherefore, while I am yet among the Living, and before it be too late, pray let me mind you of the same Things once again, that I have so often Inculcated over and over to you heretofore: Govern your Subjects according to Justice. Worship that God, from whom you have receiv'd your Dignity as well as your Being, as you are bound to do: Observe his Precepts, and keep his Laws, as they have been Handed down to you from Moses; and have a Care that you never forsake them, either for Fear, Flattery, or any other Passion or Interest whatsoever: for otherwise, you can never pretend to hope for the Blessings of God's Favour and Providence: But if you behave your self with Reverence and Submission towards God, as you ought to do, and as I wish you may do, your Kingdom will be Establish'd to your self, and the Succession of it continu'd to your Family, from Generation to Generation. 1 Kings 2.

David's last Leave to his Son Solomon.

It is Religion and Justice that supports Government.

Let me now Mind you of the Iniquity of Joab, in the Assassinate of Abner the Son of Ner, and of Amasa the Son of Ithra; Two Great Captains, and worthy Good Men; and all This purely out of a Malicious Spite and Envy. You may do by him as you think fit. The Truth of it is, I had Punish'd him my self, but that he was so Popular, I durst not meddle with him. As for the Sons of Barzillai the Gileadite, I must desire you for my sake to be very kind to them, and to do them All the Good Offices you can: not as an Obligation, but in Requital of the Generous Friendships I received from their Father in the time of my Banishment; which I reckon as a Debt Incumbent upon our Whole Family. For the Son of Gera, Shimei the Benjamite, that hunted me with such Bitterness of Cursing and Reviling in the Days of my Persecution, at Bahurim; and afterward meeting me at the River Jordan, Obtain'd my Pardon for it, you may take some Warrantable Occasion to reckon yet with him for That Affront.

David minds Solomon of the Horrid Murder of Abner, and Amasa, by Joab: and most Generously recommends to his Son Solomon, the Care of Barzillai's Family. David has pardon'd Shimei; but leaves him at Mercy, if he transgresses again.

So soon as David had finish'd This Discourse to his Son about his Government, the Requiting of his Friends, and the Punishing of his Enemies, he gave-up the Ghost; in the seventieth Year of his Age, after he had Reign'd seven Years and Six Months over the Tribe of Judah at Hebron; and Thirty three Years more over All Israel, at Jerusalem. He was a Man of Wonderful Goodness, and endued with all the Royal Excellencies that might Qualify a Prince for the Discharge of so great a Trust. He was Valiant, no Man more; and Himself Personally in the Head of all Dangers, for the Protection, and Defence of his People. He did more with his Soldiers by his Example, then by any Imperiousness of Command. He was a Judicious Prince in the Choice of his Counsels; of a singular Presence of Mind, to make the Best of what he had before him; and of as sharp a Foresight for the Improving of All Advantages, and the Obviating of Difficulties to Come. To all This, he was Temperate and Sober; Affable to All; Tender toward People in Distress; Righteous, and Humane; which are all Princely Virtues. He was a Prince, in short, that never made an Ill Use of his Power, saving only in the Case of the Wife of Uriah. He left a Treasure to his Successour greater then ever any other Prince whatsoever left before him: And he was Bury'd at Jerusalem, with a Solemnity of Royal Pomp and Magnificence, that was Glorious to the Highest Degree: And over and above the Splendour of the Ceremony, his Son Solomon deposited in his Monument an Inestimable Treasure, which David finishes his Discourse upon Reward and Punishment, and so departs this Life.

David, the best of Princes, and of Men.

David was a Ruler without Exception, save only the matter of Uriah. He dy'd Rich, and was Buried at Jerusalem.

Solomon Depoſited a migh-ty Treaſure in David's Monu-ment.

which a Body may give ſome tolerable Gueſs at from That which I have further to ſay.

Antiochus laid Siege to Jeruſalem.

A matter of Thirteen Hundred Years after This Revolution, Hyrcanus the High-Prieſt was Beſieged in Jeruſalem, by Antiochus, ſirnamed The Pious, and the Son of Demetrius. They came to a Treaty, and Antiochus offer'd for a certain Sum of Mo-ney, to raiſe the Siege, and draw-off his Army. Hyrcanus had no way to raiſe it, Hyrcanus compounds to Raiſe the Siege for 3000 Talents.

but by the Opening of David's Monument, and thence he took Three Thouſand Ta-lents; out of which he paid Antiochus the Sum agreed upon for a Compoſition, and ſo ſet the Town at Liberty, as we have ſhew'd elſewhere. It was King Herod's For-tune, many Years after this, to diſcover another Cell of hidden Treaſure, which he took away, to a Prodigious Value, but neither of them were come yet to the ſecret place where the King's Aſhes lay; That Privacy being ſo artificially Contriv'd, and ſo far under-ground, that there was hardly any coming at it; but here's as much ſaid already as needs, upon This Point.

BOOK THE EIGHTH.

[From the Year of the World 2931, to 3048.]

CHAP. I.

Solomon comes to the Throne with an Universal Joy; only Adonijah Tampers underhand with Bathsheba. Solomon causes Adonijah, Joab, and Shimei to be put to death; and Deposes Abiathar from the High-Priesthood.

WE have Treated in the Last Foregoing Book, of the Life and Character of David; his Piety, and his Conversation; the Great Services, and the many Good Offices he render'd to his Country; the Terrible Wars and Combats that he underwent, with the History of his Victories and Successes; and we have brought him to his End at last, full of Years, and Honour, to Sleep with his Fathers. Solomon, his Son and Successor, came Young to the Government; but by the Over-ruling Will and Appointment of God however, and not without the Solemn and Declaratory Consent and Approbation also of his Father. When he was once advanced to the Throne, the People came all running-in to him, as is Usual upon such Changes, with Congratulatory Acclamations, and Multiply'd Wishes of Long Life, and a Happy Reign. 1 Kings 2.

Solomon enters upon the Government with universal Joy.

Only Adonijah, who had formerly made an Attempt upon the Government in the Life-time of his Father, apply'd himself in a Fawning Way of Address to Bathsheba, the King's Mother. She received him with Great Courtesy, and with Large Assurances of her Assistance, if there were any thing in her Power that she could serve him in. Upon this Encouragement, he came presently to his Point, Great Princes (says he) I shall not need to tell you, that if I were dispos'd to be Troublesome upon this Turn of Governnent, the Right of Priority, and the Good Will of the People would be on my side. But (says he) since it has pleased God to devolve it upon your Son Solomon, I am the King's most Humble Servant, and shall very well content my self within the Bounds of my Present Condition. I have only One Boon to beg of you; which is, that you will be pleas'd to Use your Interest with your Son, on my Behalf, that I may be permitted, with his Good Leave, to take Abishag to Wife. She lay by David's side only to keep him Warm in his Extreme Decay of Heat, and undoubtedly he left her as good a Virgin as he found her. Bathsheba promis'd him the Uttermost of what she could do in the Matter, and Encourag'd him to hope well of the Issue; for Solomon, she doubted not, would most readily agree to Gratify the Joint-Request of his Brother and his Mother, in a Greater Matter then this appear'd to be. This was a Word of Comfort to Adonijah, and so away went Bathsheba, directly to her Son, upon This Errand. Solomon went out to meet his Mother; and receiving her in his Arms, conducted her to his Bed-Chamber, where he Plac'd her on his Right Hand upon a Chair of State next to his Own. Bathsheba was no sooner seated, but she Enter'd presently upon her Bus'ness. Son, says she, I have an humble Suit to you, and it would go to the very Heart of me if you should refuse it. Pray what is it? says Solomon, not without some Uneasiness at such a Preface, as if there were any thing for her to ask, which a Dutiful Child could deny to his Own Mother. So Solomon entreated her to go-on, and to depend upon his Readiness to Comply with her in any thing he could do. Well Son! says Bathsheba, I make it my Request then, that you will give Abishag in Marriage to your Brother Adonijah. The King started-up at that Proposal, in a Surprize, and Dismiss'd his Mother. No No, says Solomon, Adonijah has Another Freak in his Head beside Adonijah makes an Interest with Bathsheba, for his own Ends: and under the Appearance of a seeming Resignation.

He begs Bathsheba's Good Word to her Son, for Leave to Marry Abishag.

Bathsheba promises him her Interest.

Bathsheba moves Solomon to give Abishag to Adonijah.

Solomon starts up at the Motion, and discharges his Mother.

beside the Marrying of Abishag. Why does he not speak Plain rather, and put-in his Claim to the Kingdom, as Elder Brother; which he might every jot as Honestly do, and as good Cheap. First, he desires Abishag in Marriage; and then he has Fortify'd himself with Great Friends and Interest to Back his Pretensions: as Joab, the General for One; Abiathar the High-Priest, for Another, and the like. Solomon at this rate deliberating and computing upon the Present State of things, sent Benaiah, the Captain of his Guards, forthwith to make away his Brother; and then calling for Abiathar, the High-Priest, he told him, that though he had deserv'd to Dye, yet in regard of the Services he had done his Father, and of the Hand he had in bringing back the Ark, his Punishment should be this. Go your ways (says he) immediately from This Place, and let my Eyes never see you more. Get you gone to your own Home; take up your Habitation in the Country, and there continue to the Day of your Death. You have been False to me in Joyning with Adonijah, and for that Fault, This is your Sentence. You have made your Self Unworthy of the Honour of the Priesthood, and from this time forward you shall Exercise the Function no more.

Solomon orders Benaiah to put Adonijah to death:

and banishes Abiathar from his Presence:

and Deposes him from the Pontificate for joyning with Adonijah.

The Sacerdotal Dignity translated from the House of Ithamar to That of Phinehas, as was foretold to Eli.

This was the Cause of Translating the Sacerdotal Dignity from the House of Ithamar (as God had foretold to Eli; the Grandfather of Abiathar) into the Family of Phinehas, to Zadock. During the Continuance of the Pontificate in the House of Ithamar, reckoning from Eli; the First that executed that Office. There were of the Family of Phinehas, that led Private Lives, Boccias, the Son of Joseph; Jonathan, of Boccias; Maræoth, of Jonathan; Aropha, of Maræoth; Achitob, of Aropha; and Zadock, the Son of Achitob, who was the First High-Priest that was erected under David.

The Line of Zadock.

Joab hearing of Adonijah's Death,

flies to the Altar.

When Joab heard of the Death of Adonijah, being Conscious to himself of a Conspiracy with him against his Master, and that he himself deserv'd to dye every jot as well as his Principal, he took up a very Reasonable Apprehension that his Own Turn would be next, and so fled for Sanctuary to the Altar; not doubting but that the Veneration the King had for God, and for Holy things, would be a Protection to him.

Solomon cites him to a Court of Justice.

When Solomon came to understand that Joab had taken Sanctuary; he sent Benaiah to cite him to a Court of Justice to Answer for what he had done; but Joab would not be got out of the Chappel, declaring, that if Perish he must, he would rather dye there then in Another Place.

Benaiah brings the King word of Joab's Refusal to appear.

Benaiah gave the King an Account of Joab's Behaviour, in what he both said and did; who presently Order'd him to Cut off his Head where he was, as a Just Punishment upon him for the Detestable Murders of Abner and Amasa, against all the Measures of Honour, Humanity, and Justice: But the King gave it in Charge to Benaiah, to see his Body Bury'd, for a Memorial to Posterity of so Execrable a Wickedness, and likewise to Acquit both Himself and his Father, of any Rigour in the Death of Joab.

Solomon orders Joab's Head to be cut off where he was, for the Murders of Abner and Amasa.

Benaiah, upon the Execution of this Commission, was made General in Joab's Place; and upon the Remove of Abiathar the High-Priest, the King Assigned Zadock to succeed him.

Solomon makes Benaiah Generalissimo in Joab's place, and Zadock High-Priest in Abiathar's.

Solomon, at the same time, appointed Shimei to Build himself a House at Jerusalem, and not to stir out of it, or pass the River Kebron, upon the Peril of his Life: Neither was this Menace sufficient, without an Oath, over and above, to perform what he had promis'd. Shimei seem'd very well satisfy'd with the Conditions, and gave his Oath for the Observance of them. Hereupon, he quitted his Own Country, and went his way, and dwelt at Jerusalem. It happen'd a matter of Three Years after this, that Two of Shimei's Servants ran away from him; and the Master hearing that they were at Gath, made a Step over to fetch them back again. Upon his Return with his Servants, the King it seems got Notice of it, and took the Double Contempt so Heinously, first of the Command, and then of the Oath, that he call'd Shimei to a Severe Account for the Misdemeanour. Didst not thou swear to me, says Solomon, that thou wouldst never stir out of This Town into any Other, to the day of thy Death? And like a False Wretch, as thou art, thou hast now broken That Sacred Oath, and for that Perjury thou shalt Dye. Take this for thy Instruction too, that Divine Vengeance, sooner or later, finds out the Delinquent; and that forbearance is so far from an Acquittal, that it Enflames the reckoning. The Hand of God is in This Judgment upon thee, not only for thy Late Perjury, but for thy Sins of Ancient Date: I mean thy Ribaldry and Insolences against my Dear Father of Blessed Memory, in the Depth of his Distresses. Think of it, says Solomon, for God is Just: and so Benaiah put Shimei to Death by the King's Order.

Solomon makes Benaiah Generalissimo in Joab's place, and Zadock High-Priest in Abiathar's. Solomon appoints Shimei a House in Jerusalem; confines him to it, upon Pain of Death; and under an Oath, never to stir out of it over the River.

Shimei crosses the River.

And Benaiah puts Shimei to Death, according to his Order.

Solomon Marries the Daughter of the King of Ægypt, and repairs the Walls of Jeruſalem. *He's endu'd with the Gift of Wiſdom. The Names of his Great Officers. SOLOMON had by this time all his Enemies at his Feet; His Throne eſtabliſh'd; the Minds of the People ſettled, and his Government conſequently made Eaſy to him. In this Interval of a Profound Peace, both at Home and Abroad, he took to Wife the Daughter of the King of Ægypt; fell to work upon Rebuilding the Walls of Jeruſalem, which he made much Larger, and Stronger then they were before, and ſo apply'd himſelf to the Office of his Publique Adminiſtration. He was very Young, 'tis True, but want of Years was never any Hindrance, or Excuſe to him in the doing of Juſtice, or in the Execution of the Laws, or in the paying of a Religious Reverence to the Authority and Doctrine of his Dying Father's Precepts: For, in one Word, ſuch was the Pregnancy, even of his Early Youth, that he Rul'd, and Men-ag'd every Thing with a Judgment that might have become the Gravity of a moſt Conſummated Experience.

Now finding himſelf in this State of Quiet and Freedom, he thought he could not do better then to Addreſs himſelf to God by Prayer and Sacrifice in Acknowledgment of theſe Mercies: And upon that Motion, he went to Hebron, where he offer'd upon Moſes's Brazen Altar, long ſince Erected there, a Thouſand Victims for a Burnt-Offering. This Piety and Zeal was ſo Acceptable to God, that the very Night following he appear'd unto him in a Dream; and to ſhew him that the Services of his Heart and Good-Will ſhould not go unrewarded, he bad him ask what he would, and it ſhould be granted him. Solomon pitch'd upon the Greateſt, and the moſt valuable Thing he could think of, and that, which he concluded would be moſt Agreeable to the Liking of the Giver, and at the ſame time moſt Advantageous to the Receiver. It was not Silver, nor Gold, nor any of thoſe Vulgar Satisfactions, that Young Men, and the miſtaken Part of the World commonly ſet their Hearts upon, as the only things worth Asking: This, I ſay, was not Solomon's Wiſh; But Lord, ſays he, Grant me a Right Apprehenſion of Matters, and a Sound Judgment, that may Enable me to Govern this People according to Truth and Juſtice. This Choice of Solomon's was ſo Acceptable to God, that he not only promis'd him what he deſir'd, but Riches, and Glory, over and above: And in the Firſt Place, ſuch a Degree of Underſtanding, and of Practical Wiſdom, as no Man, either Publique or Private, could ever pretend to before him; with a further Promiſe that, upon Condition of his Continuing Juſt to the World, Obedient in all Things to God, and Treading in the Steps, and imitating the Eminent Virtues of his Father, the Government ſhould remain in his Family for many Ages. Upon theſe Words, Solomon awak'd; leapt out of his Bed, Worſhip'd, and gave Thanks, and ſo returned to Jeruſalem, where he Sacrificed to God before the Tabernacle, and Feaſted all his People.

Solomon makes a Journy to Hebron, and there Sacrifices upon Moſes's Bazen Altar. God bids Solomon in a Dream, ask what he will, it ſhall be Granted him. Solomon asks neither Silver nor Gold; But a Right Underſtanding and a Sound Judgment. God is ſo well pleas'd with his Choice, that he gives him Riches and Glory, over and above. Solomon awakes, gets up, Worſhips, and gives Thanks; goes back to Jeruſalem, Sacrifices, and Feaſts with the People.

About this time there was a Difficult Caſe brought before him, which I ſhall give the Reader a Particular Account of, partly for the Nicety of it, and partly for the Uſe it may be of to Others, in exciting the like Induſtry of Search and Scrutiny, upon the like Occaſion. There came to the King Two Common Mercenary Proſtitutes, for Juſtice. The Plaintiff told her Tale Firſt, and it was to this Effect. This Woman, ſays ſhe, and I liv'd both in a Lodging, and it was our Fortune to be deliver'd Each of us of a Male-Child on the ſame Day and Hour. Within a Matter of Three Days, this Woman having Overlaid her Own Child, and Smother'd it, took mine ſoftly out of my Arms as I was aſleep, and laid Her's in the Place of it. Early the next Morning, when I was thinking to ſuckle my Own Poor Infant, the Child was not to be found, but a Dead one laid in the Place; for I know my own Child by moſt Infallible Marks. I have preſs'd her for my Child; but ſhe keeps it from me, and bears me down that it is her Child ſtill, and I have no Witneſs to prove the Contrary. Now Sir, Says the Woman, I humbly beſeech your Majeſty to ſee Right done betwixt us. Well! ſays the King to the other Woman, and what have you now to ſay for your ſelf? She laid no ſuch Child there, ſhe ſaid, but the Living Child was her own, and ſo ſtood upon her Juſtification. People were all in the Dark what Judgment to make of it, for want of Competent Proofs; till Solomon bethought himſelf of this Expedient. He order'd the Two Children, One Living, and the other Dead, to be brought, and

One of his Guards to take his Sword, and cut them both in Halves, juſt in the Middle, and ſo divide them betwixt the Two Pretended Mothers, Half of the One, and Half of the Other, to Either of them. This was look'd upon to be a kind of a Childiſh Sentence at firſt; but one of the Women crying-out earneſtly, and begging that her Companion might rather have the Child, and paſs for the Mother of it, provided only that the Life of it might be ſpar'd; and ſhe her ſelf have the Comfort of ſeeing it yet amongſt the Living. This was all ſhe had to ask, ſhe ſaid: the other Woman all this while quietly ſubmitting to the Judgment, and not without ſome ſeeming Satisfaction at the Calamity of her Neighbour; a Cruel, certainly, and a Hard-Hearted Pleaſure! The King, in fine, Adjudg'd the Child to the Right Woman, upon the Evidence of her Tenderneſs, and Natural Affection; Highly Condemning the Wickedneſs of the other, that, after ſhe had Kill'd her Own Child, did what ſhe could to deſtroy that of her Friend's too. This was ſo Signal an Inſtance of the King's Wiſdom, Sagacity and Conduct, that from that Day forward, the People Honour'd, and Obey'd him, as a Prince that Acted by the Guidance and Direction of a Divine Impulſe.

Solomon's Governours, and Great Officers. 1 Kings 4.

He had his Governours and Great Officers in all his Provinces. There was Uri the Son of Hur in the Tribe of Ephraim, including Bethlehem. The Son of Aminadab, Son-in-Law to Solomon, had the Command of Dora, and the Sea-Coaſt. The Great Plain was under Baana, the Son of Achil, and ſo as far as to the River of Jordan. The Son of Geber had the Government of the Gileadites, and the Gaulonites, as far as Mount Libanus; within which Command there were Sixty Large and well-fortify'd Cities. Ahinadab that Marry'd Baſima, Another of Solomon's Daughters, had the Government of all Galilee up to Sydon. Under Baanah, was the Government of the Sea-Coaſt about Aſher. Jehoſaphat Commanded the Mountains Ittabyr, and Carmel, and all the Lower-Galilee, to the Further ſide of Jordan. The whole Country of the Benjamites was under the Government of [a] Shimei: and the Land beyond Jordan was under [b] Tabar. Theſe were Solomon's Governours, and he had one Lieutenant General to ſuperintend them all.

The People ſettled in a State of Peace. They apply themſelves to Husbandry and Trade.

So ſoon as the People found themſelves ſettled in a State of Peace and Plenty, and out of Fear of any Diſtractions by War or Tumult, they gave themſelves up to Huſbandry, and Emprovements, and in a ſhort time advanc'd their Fortunes and Poſſeſſions (the Tribe of Judah eſpecially) to a Miracle. The King had likewiſe other Officers, beſide thoſe before-mentioned, over the Syrians, and other Barbarous Nations, between Ægypt and Euphrates, to whom he committed the Care of his Receits; Thoſe People being his Tributaries. The daily Proportion of Proviſions that theſe People furniſh'd every day for the King's own Table and Entertainment, was Thirty Meaſures of fine Flour, Threeſcore Meaſures of Meal; Ten Fat Oxen; Twenty Oxen out of the Paſtures, and a Hundred Fat Lambs, beſide Deer, Birds, Fiſhes, and other contingent Curioſities of the Chace. He had ſo Prodigious a Number of Chariots, that there were Forty Thouſand Stalls provided for the Horſes that belonged to them, over and above Twelve Thouſand Horſmen that were of his Guards; the one Half being Quarter'd in Jeruſalem, near his Perſon, and the other Half diſtributed into Out-Villages near the City. And the ſame Officer that was Commiſſary for the Expence of the King's Table, was appointed alſo to provide Neceſſarys for the King's Horſe, which way ſoever he mov'd.

Vaſt Proviſions for the King's Own Table and Entertainments.

The Wiſdom, in fine, and Knowledge of Solomon, being a Divine Infuſion, was ſo far beyond the Philoſophy and Underſtanding of the Ancients, that the Ægyptians themſelves, though reputed the Wiſeſt of Men, fell infinitely ſhort of him: And ſo did the great Men of his Age among the Hebrews, how highly ſoever Celebrated and Eſteem'd; As for Example, there was Athan, and Heman, and Calcol, and Dodan, the Sons of Hemahon. This Wonderful Prince compos'd Fifteen Hundred Books of Odes, and Poems; Three Thouſand Books of Parables, and Simile's. He wrote the Hiſtory of Plants, from the Cedar to the Hyſop; and ſo of Cattle, and Beaſts of the Earth; Water-Fowl, and the Birds of the Air: for he underſtood the Nature of all theſe Creatures; Study'd, and Philoſophiz'd upon it, and upon their Reſpective Proprieties and Diſpoſitions. And he did not only know, and underſtand; (by a Gift from above) but likewiſe emprove his Knowledge and Underſtanding of theſe Things, for the Help and Benefit of Mankind, even to the Confuſion of the Devils Themſelves; for he compos'd Charms and Incantations, for the Cure of Diſeaſes, and left behind him Forms of Conjuration, in Writing, ſo Effectual againſt Evil Spirits, that they fly before them, without ever Daring to return: which way of Remedy is much in Requeſt with our People to this Day. I ſaw one [d] Eleazar, a Country Man of Mine, Diſpoſſeſſing of People in the Preſence of Veſpaſian, and his Sons, Officers, and Soldiers: and his way was this; he applied a Ring to the Noſtrils of the Perſon Poſſeſt, with a Piece of a Root convey'd under the Seal of it, being a Secret of Solomon's. The Demoniack did but ſmell to't, and the Devil was drawn out by the Noſe. The Spirit threw the Man down; but Eleazar adjur'd it never to trouble him any more: making frequent mention of Solomon's Name in the time of the Operation, and reciting Charms and Incantations of his Invention. Eleazar, after This, was willing to ſhew the Company a Maſterpiece: So he ſet a Cup, or a Baſin of Water, at a little diſtance from a Man that was Poſſeſs'd, and adjur'd the Devil to overturn This Baſin at his leaving the Man, as a Token to the Company that he had Quitted him. This being done, no Body doubted of the admirable Knowledge and Wiſdom of Solomon. I have thought fit to inſert This Narration, for the Honour of This King's Wonderful Talent, and to ſhew how much he was in God's Favour, and how Eminent in all manner of Excellencies.

Upon the Death of David, and the Succeſſion of Solomon to the Throne, Hiram the King of Tyre, that ever had a Great Affection for the Father, ſent a Gratulatory Embaſſy to the Son, upon the News of his Acceſſion to the Government, Expreſſing Great Joy to ſee it continu'd in the Family. Upon the Return of theſe Embaſſadors, Solomon laid hold of the Occaſion, and wrote a Letter to Hiram in theſe Terms.

1 Kings 5. Hiram the King of Tyre ſends a Gratulatory Embaſſy to Solomon.

King Solomon to King Hiram, Greeting.

Be it known unto thee, O King, that my Father David had it a long time in his mind and purpoſe to Erect a Temple to the Lord; but being perpetually in War, in His Days, and under a Neceſſity of Clearing his Hands of his Enemies, and making them all his Tributaries, before he could attend this Great, and Holy Work: he hath left it to me in a Time of Peace, both to begin, and to Finiſh it; according to the Direction, as well as the Prediction, of Almighty God. Bleſſed be his Great Name for the Preſent Tranquillity of my Dominions! and by his Gracious Aſſiſtance, I ſhall now Dedicate the Beſt Improvements of this Liberty and Leiſure to his Honour and Worſhip. Wherefore I make it my Requeſt, that you will let ſome of your own People go along with ſome Servants of mine to Mount Libanus, to aſſiſt them in cutting down Materials toward this Building; for the Sydonians underſtand it much Better then we do. As for the Workmen's Reward, or Wages, whatever you think Reaſonable ſhall be Punctually paid them.

K Solomon's Letter to K. Hiram, about the Building of the Temple.

Hiram was Wonderfully pleas'd with this Letter of Solomon's, and returned him this Anſwer.

King Hiram to King Solomon.

Nothing could have been more Welcome to me, then to underſtand that the Government of your Bleſſed Father is Devolved by God's Providence into the Hands of ſo Excellent, ſo Wiſe, and ſo Virtuous a Succeſſour: His Holy Name be praiſed for it. That which you write for, ſhall be done with all Care and Good Will. For I will give Order to cut down, and to export ſuch Quantities of the Faireſt Cedars and Cypreſs-Trees, as you ſhall have Occaſion for. My People ſhall bring them to the Sea-ſide for you; and from thence Ship them away to what Port you pleaſe, where they may lye ready for your Own men to Tranſport them to Jeruſalem. It would be a Great Obligation, after all this, to allow us ſuch a Proviſion of Corn in Exchange, as may ſtand with your Convenience; for that is the Commodity we Iſlanders want moſt.

Hiram's Anſwer to the Letter Above, much to Solomon's Satisfaction.

The Duplicates of theſe Letters are Extant to this Day, both in our Own, and in the Tyrian Records: and they that have a mind to be better Satisfy'd in the Truth of this, let them only conſult the Keepers of theſe Regiſtries, and they ſhall find the matter of Fact in thoſe Papers to be juſt as we deliver it. I write this to acquit my ſelf to the Reader, by way of Precaution, that I do not Intermix any Inventions of my Own, or things Curious, or but barely Probable, for the Ornament of the Relation; but that I am willing to put Every thing that I deliver, to the ſtreſs of the Uttermoſt Scrutiny; and in truth, there can be no Prevaricating in a Subject of this Quality without Extreme Impiety, and Scandal: and I ſhall not take it Ill to be Blaſted for the Worſt of Falſaries, if there ſhall be any thing found in my Papers that will not abide the Uttermoſt Teſt.

The Duplicates of theſe Letters are ſtill extant.

Upon the Receipt of Hiram's Letter, Solomon was wonderfully pleas'd with the Frankneſs, and Humanity of the Proceeding: ſo that in return for his Goodneſs and Reſpect, he Order'd him a Yearly Preſent of Two Thouſand Meaſures of Wheat, and likewiſe of Two Thouſand Veſſels of Oyl, and as many of Wine, of Seventy Two Quarts a-piece. This was the Firſt Earneſt of a Friendſhip betwixt theſe Two Kings; and it went-on Encreaſing to the Laſt, every Day Firmer, and Greater then Other.

Solomon orders Hiram a Yearly Preſent of Wheat, Oyl, and Wine.

The King Order'd his People to Provide him Thirty Thouſand Workmen, which he diſpos'd of in ſuch Eaſy Wayes and Methods of Diſtribution, that their Labour ſhould not be Grievous to them. The Number of them was Thrice Ten Thouſand; and their Poſt was to do Duty for one Month by Ten Thouſand at a time, in Cutting down Wood upon Mount-Libanus; and to be Reliev'd at the Month's End by the Second Ten Thouſand; And the Second, after Another Month, by the Third: So that they had Two Month's Liberty to be at their Own Homes; and ſo thus in a Circle, Every Fourth Month, Each Ten Thouſand to take their turn over again.

Adoniram the Overſeer.

Their Inſpector General, or Superintendent, was Adoniram. Beſide theſe, there were Seventy Thouſand Forreigners, formerly deſigned by David, for the carrying of Stones, and other Materials: Eighty Thouſand Stone-Cutters and Maſons; and Thirty Two Thouſand Overſeers of the Work. Their Order was to make Uſe of the Largeſt Stones they could get for the Foundation, and to have them Squar'd, and ready Wrought upon the Mountains where they Grew, and thence to be carry'd Whole to Jeruſalem. In which Injunction, Hiram's Men were concern'd as well as any of the reſt.

The Time when Solomon began the Building of the Temple. 1 Kings 6.

Solomon was now in the Fourth Year of his Reign, when he began this Mighty Work; and of that Year, the Second Month, which the Macedonians call Artemiſius; and the Hebrews, Jar: Five Hundred Ninety Two Years from the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt: A Thouſand and Twenty Years from Abraham's coming out of Meſopotamia into the Land of Canaan; Fourteen Hundred and Forty from the Deluge; and from the Creation of the World, Three Thouſand One Hundred and Two. It was alſo in the Eleventh Year of Hiram, the King of Tyre; and Two Hundred Year after the Building of that City.

The Foundation of it.

The Foundation was laid prodigiouſly Deep; and the Stones not only of the Largeſt Size, but Hard, and Firm enough to Endure all Weathers; and Proof againſt the Worm: Beſide, that they were ſo Mortiſſed one into another, and Wedg'd into the Rock, that the Strength and Curioſity of the Baſis was not leſs Admirable then the Bulk and Ornament of the Intended Superſtructure: and the One every way Anſwerable to the Beauty and Magnificence of the Other. The Walls were all of a White Stone from the Ground to the Cieling. The Height of the Building was Sixty Cubits; the Length as much; and the Breadth, Twenty; over which there was Another Stage of the ſame Dimenſions: So that the Whole Height of the Building, from Bottom to Top, was a Hundred and Twenty Cubits, and it look'd toward the Eaſt. The Porch, or Court next to the Entrance, was Twenty Cubits in Length, to Anſwer the Temple Ten in Breadth, and a Hundred and Twenty Cubits in Height. There was built round about it, and againſt the outward Walls, like ſo many Buttreſſes, to ſupport it, Thirty Cells, or Little Houſes in the Form of Galleries, opening one into another. The Length and Breadth of Theſe Cells was Five Cubits Each; and the Height, Twenty: and there were Two Other Floors over this, of the ſame Make, and Proportions; amounting all together to the Juſt Height of the Lower part of the Fabrick, which we have been Speaking of; for Theſe Cells or Galleries, went no Higher then the Top of the Firſt Story. They were all Ciel'd with Cedar, and every Partition had it's Covering apart, independent one of another; but they were all Coupled and Faſten'd together, by long and large Beams, in ſuch a Faſhion, that they look'd but like One Piece, and as if the very Walls were the Stronger for them. Under Theſe Beams were ſeveral Curious Varietics of Carving, Fret-work, Guilding, &c. the Walls all Wainſcoted with Cedar, and ſo Illuſtrated with Works in Gold, that the Dazling Splendour made every thing about it look Glorious. The Whole Frame, in fine, was rais'd upon Stones, Poliſh'd to the Higheſt Degree of Perfection; and ſo Artificially put together, that there was no Joynt to be diſcerned, nor the Leaſt Sign of a Hammer, or of any Working Tool that had ever come upon it: All things being ſo Adjuſted and Accommodated, One piece to Another beforehand, that upon the Whole matter it look'd liker the Work of Providence, and Nature, then the Product of Art, or Humane Invention.

The Curioſity in the putting of it together.

Now in regard that the Second Story had not a Large Door to it at the Eaſt End of it, as the Lower had; but only ſome Small Doors to go-in at, from the Sides above; Solomon contriv'd a pair of Winding Stairs to be cut-out through the Thickneſs of the Wall, for a Paſſage to the Upper-part. The Inſide of the Temple was all Lin'd with Cedar; and the Cramping of the Timbers together with Strong Irons, was a Great Strength, and Security to the Building. The King cauſed it to be laid in Two Diviſions; That is to ſay, the Inner-part, or Holy of Holies, of Twenty Cubits Square, which was Inacceſſible; and the Other of Forty Cubits, which was aſſigned to the Uſe and Service of the Prieſt. In the Partition-Wall, betwixt the Inner and the Outward part of the Temple, he built Large Cedar-Doors, which were richly Gilt, and delicately Carved; beſide Choice-Curioſities of Phancy and Hiſtory, Embroider'd upon a hanging Veil before it, of Rich Silks and Fine Linnen, Interwoven with Beautiful Flowers; ſome Purple, ſome Scarlet, and the Colours all in Perfection.

Solomon

Solomon cauſed alſo to be made Two Cherubims of maſſy Gold, which he Dedicated to God in the Holy place; Both of a Size; being Each of them Five Cubits High, and Two Wings, Each of them of Five Cubits Length; which being Stretched out, One touched the South-ſide, and the other the North; and with their Other Two Wings, they met one another, over-ſpreading the Holy Ark, in the Middle. It is not for any Man to deſcribe, or ſo much as to Imagine a Deſcription of theſe Cherubims. And then the very Floor of the Temple was over-lay'd with beaten-Gold; the Doors very Large, and proportion'd to the Height of the Walls, Twenty Cubits-Broad, and ſtill Gold upon Gold. To ſpeak all in a Word, it was Gold all over, and Nothing wanting, either within or without, that might Contribute to the Glory and Magnificence of the Work. There was a Curious Curtain, or Hanging, put up at this Gate, as at the Other; but None at the Entrance into the Porch.

The very Floor, and the Doors, all Rich and Glorious, with Gold upon Gold.

Solomon had heard of a Famous Man in Tyre for working in Gold, Silver, and Other Metals: His Name was Chiram. He was an Eminent Architect, over and above. His Mother was of the Tribe of Naphthali; and his Father, by Extraction, an Iſraelite. He ſent for this Man to Tyre, and employ'd him in his Buſineſs; and whereſoever Solomon had any thing to do that was Difficult, or Curious, Chiram was the Doer of it. He caſt him Two Brazen Hollow Pillars of Four-fingers-thick in the Metal, Eighteen Cubits-High, and Twelve in Circumference: Two Chapters of Braſs on the Tops of the Two Pillars, five Cubits Each. Theſe were cover'd with a kind of Braſs Net-Work; and below them, were Flowers, or Lilly-work of the ſame Contrivance, with Two Rows of Pomgranates hanging down, a hundred in Each row. Theſe Two Pillars he placed in the Entrance of the Porch; one on the Right-hand, which he called Jachin; and the Other on the Left, which he called Boaz.

1 Kings 7.

Several Curioſities of Hiram's making.

He made a Veſſel alſo of Molten Braſs; ſomewhat after the Figure of a Globe Cut-off in the Middle; which for the Largeneſs of it, he call'd his Sea. It was made Goblet-Faſhion; the Diameter Ten Cubits from ſide to ſide, Four Fingers-Thick; with a Twiſted Pillar of one Cubit over, under the Middle of it for a Supporter. Around This Pillar were Placed the Figures of Twelve Bulls, or Oxen; Facing, by Three and Three, the Four Principal Quarters of Eaſt, Weſt, North and South. They ſtood in a Poſition lower Behind then Before; which was both an Eaſing to the Weight, and kept it Firm and Steady. This Sea, or Veſſel, held Three Thouſand Baths, reckoning Every Bath at about Ten Engliſh Pottles.

The Figure of the Brazen-Sea.

Chiram made alſo Ten Baſes of Braſs of an Oblong Square, and all of the ſame Form and Dimenſions: That is to ſay, Five Cubits in Length Each of them; Four in Breadth: and Six in Height. The Several Pieces were caſt apart, and then put together after this Manner. There were Four Pillars, or Underſetters; One to the Corner of Every Baſe, which were ſo Incorporated with the reſt of the Work, that they ſerved not only to Uphold the Weight, but to keep the Sides Tight one to another. Upon the Squares, were the Figures of a Lyon, a Bull, an Eagle, &c. and the like Images alſo upon the Pillars, and upon the Plates of the Borders. The Whole Work was mounted upon Four Wheels, a Cubit and a Half over, all of Caſt-Work; Nave, Spokes, and every thing that belonged to it: and it was a Wonderful thing to ſee how True, and Accurately every Inch of it was wrought. The Angles were made Good with Emboſſed Work, of Shoulders, Hands, Paws of Lyons, Talons of Eagles; with Reſts, or Ledges of Raile upon them to Receive the Laver; but ſo Artificially fitted to the Figures of thoſe Creatures, as they were there repreſented upon the Pannels, together with Branches of Palm-Trees intermixed upon the ſame Piece, that every thing look'd as Natural as if it had been to the Life.

Ten Baſes of Braſs for as many Lavers.

This was the Structure of the Ten Baſes; and to theſe Baſes he made Ten Lavers of the ſame Metal, and of a Roundiſh Conchous Form, Each containing Forty Baths; the Height, Four Cubits, and the Diameter as much. Theſe Ten Lavers were ſet upon as many Baſes, which in their Language they called Mechenoth. They were all placed in the Temple: Five of them on the Left-Hand, at the North-ſide; and the Other Five, at the South-ſide, on the Right, looking toward the Eaſt. In the ſame Place ſtood likewiſe the Brazen-Sea. They were all fill'd with Water: The Sea for the Uſe of the Prieſts to waſh their Hands and Feet with, upon Entring the Sanctuary, before they went-up to the Altar; and the reſt of the Lavers for Cleanſing of the Inwards, and other Parts of the Burnt Offerings.

All placed in the Temple, and fill'd with Water.

He Erected Moreover a Brazen Altar of Twenty Cubits in Length, as many over, and Ten in depth, for the Service of the Holocauſts: providing All the Veſſels thereunto belonging, of the ſame Stuff; as Boylers, Water-Pots, Fleſh-Hooks, &c. He Dedicated alſo a World of Tables, and one of Pure Gold for the Shew-Bread, larger then the reſt. But there were a great many others yet of Several makes and Sizes, not much Inferiour to that for the Shew-Bread, and Sufficient to hold Twenty Thousand Golden Cups and Vessels, and twice the Number of Silver ones. He made a Provision likewise of Twelve Thousand Candlesticks, according to the Appointment of Moses; and one of them to be apply'd by a Peculiar Dedication to the Service of the Temple, and there to be kept with Lights in them Burning Day and Night, after the Direction of the Law. The Table for the Shew-Bread was placed on the North-side, over against the Candle-stick, which stood on the South. Betwixt these Two was the Golden Altar. This was all in the Fore-part of the Temple of Forty Cubits, and a Partition-Veil betwixt that and the Holy of Holies, where the Ark of the Covenant was to be kept.

A Brazen Altar, and Veſſels belonging to it.

The Golden Altar.

The King caused to be made likewise, Fourscore Thousand Wine-Cups; and Ten Thousand Golden Vessels, and Goblets of Other Sorts and Fashions, and Twice as many Silver ones. Plates and Dishes of Gold to steep the Flour in, upon the Altar Eighty Thousand: and of Silver, Double the Number. Golden Measures, such as the Mosaical Hin, and Asseron Twenty Thousand; and as many more of Silver. Golden Censers for Incense Twenty Thousand, and Fifty Thousand other Censers to carry Fire from the Great Altar to the Little one within the Temple.

This Mighty Prince made a Provision also of a Thousand Priests-Habits; as Robes, Ephods, Suits of Precious Stones, &c. only there was but one Crown with Moses's Inscription of God upon it, which is yet to be seen to this very Day. There were also Silken Vests, and Purple Girdles for the Priests: Ten Thousand of Each; Two Hundred Thousand Trumpets, according to the Institution of Moses, and as many Silken-Stoles for the Levites that Chanted the Holy Hymns: Beside Four Hundred Thousand Musical Instruments; as Harps, Psalteries, and the like, which were made of a mixt Metal betwixt Gold and Silver, to accompany the Voyces.

Priests Habits, Robes, Ephods, Precious Stones.

Silken Vests, Purple Girdles for the Priests. Trumpets, and Silken Stoles for the Levites.

Musical Instruments to accompany Voices.

There was nothing wanting, in fine, of Industry, Magnificence, or Expence toward the Advancing of this Glorious Work, that might either Express the Zeal of the Founder Himself for the Honour of God, or Stir-up the like Affections in Others. When the Preparatory Part was over, the Church-stuff was Deposited in the Holy Treasury, and set apart for Religious Uses. The Temple it self was Fenced with an Enclosure of Three Foot in Height (in Hebrew, Gison) to keep out the Laiety from Entring into a Place where only the Priests were to be admitted. Beyond this Partition, was Another Square-Court, or Building, with Large Portico's or Galleries about it, and Four Stately Gates, that Open'd East, West, North and South: The Doors all Plated and Inlaid with Gold. This Place was Common to all People, provided they came thither with That Purity of Preparation, and Legal Qualification, which the Law required.

The Church-stuff is Deposited in the Holy Treasury.

Fences and Partitions in and about the Temple.

The erecting of this outward Building was so Stupendious an Undertaking, that no Tongue can Express the Difficulties of Raising it; and a Man would have much ado to believe his Own very Eyes that saw it: Such Hollows, such Depths to be fill'd-up, as a Body could hardly have look'd upon, or but so much as Phancy'd, without turning his Brain: Four Hundred Cubits to be brought up to a Level with the Top of the Mountain; only to make the Work Regular, and the Ground even. This Port was Encompass'd again with a kind of Double Cloyster, and two Rows of Pillars; to support it; Every Pillar being cut Whole out of the Rock. The Doors were all Silver-Work: The Roof Fret-Work, and the Wainscotting all of Cedar.

A horrid Depth of a Valley to be fill'd up, and levell'd for the Erecting of this Fabrick.

1 Kings 8.

This Admirable Structure was but Seven Years in Hand, and it is hard to say, considering the Magnitude, the Curiosity, the Expence, and the Ornament, on the one hand; and the Dispatch of it on the other; whether was the more Wonderful of the Two. For it was Effectually the Bus'ness of many Ages drawn into the Compass of a very Few Years.

This Wonderful Structure was but seven years a Building.

Solomon Summons the Elders and Heads of the Tribes up to Jerusalem: to See the Temple, and Transport the Ark thither.

This Mighty Undertaking being now brought to Perfection, Solomon wrote to all the Elders of Israel, and the Heads of the Tribes to summon the People-up to Jerusalem to see the Temple, and to assist in Transporting thither the Ark of the Covenant. The Resolution was duly Notify'd, and in the Seventh Month, which we call Thuri, and the Macedonians Hyperberetæus, with much ado they got together. In this Month was the Feast of Tabernacles, which among the Hebrews was accounted the most sacred and solemn of their Festivals: So the Priests took up the Ark, and Moses's Tabernacle, with the Holy Vessels belonging to the Altar, and carry'd them all into the Temple. The King, and the Whole Congregation, with the Levites, Marching before them, with their Sacrifices and Oblations, sprinkling the Ground, as they pass'd, with their Bloud, and perfuming the Air with the Fragrancy of Incense, and Sweet Odours; to such a Degree, that People were sensible of it at a distance; and reflected upon the Delicacy of the Breath they drew, as no less then a Celestial Influence: Inferring from That Agreeable Alteration, that God Himself had descended from Heaven to Consecrate crate the Temple that was newly Built, and Dedicated to Himſelf, and therein to take up his Abode: For though the whole Congregation came Singing, and Dancing all the Way to the Temple, they went on Freſh, and Chearfully to their Journy's End. This was the Manner of their Tranſporting the Ark.

The Ark depoſited in the Holy of Holies, and placed under the Two Cherubims.

When they were now come to the Holy of Holies where it was to be Depoſited, the People withdrew, and the Prieſts only that brought it, carry'd it-in to the Oracle, and there plac'd it under the Figure of the Two Cherubims, that were Repreſented with the Points of their Wings touching one another; which look'd like a kind of Cover, and Protection to the Ark that was juſt under them. There was nothing more in it then the Two Stone-Tables with the Ten Commandments Engraven upon them, as God Deliver'd them upon Mount Sinai. The Candleſtick, Table, and Golden Altar, ſtood in the ſame Order now in the Sanctuary, as they did at firſt in the Tabernacle, when they offer'd their daily Sacrifices. The Brazen Altar was Placed directly againſt the Door, for the better View of the Magnificence of the Worſhip on the other Side: And then for the reſt of the Holy Utenſils and Veſſels, they were all laid-up together in the Temple.

Nothing in it but the Two Tables with the Ten Commandments Engraven upon them, which were deliver'd in Mount Sinai.

After the Placing of the Ark, a Cloud Deſcends;

in Token of God's Approbation.

The Ark being now diſpos'd of into his Proper Place, with all Decency and Reverence, and the Prieſts withdrawn, there deſcended a Cloud, which ſo fill'd and darken'd the Place, that they could hardly ſee one another thorough it: not like an Angry Winter's Cloud, big with Foul Weather; but only ſuch a Temperate, Breathing Diffuſion, as by the Benignity of the Appearance, and Operation, was look'd upon to be rather a Token of God's ſpecial Approbation, and Acceptance of the Work they were upon, and of his coming down to dwell among them in that Temple as in his Own Houſe, then the Effect of any Natural Cauſe.

Solomon's Prayer for a Bleſſing upon the Work.

While the Peoples Heads were Working upon this Thought, Solomon ſtood-up; and with a Grace and Majeſty becoming the Dignity of the Subject, and Occaſion, addreſſing himſelf in a ſhort Prayer to Almighty God in Words to this Effect; Lord! (ſays he) Thou that Inhabiteſt Eternity, and haſt raiſed out of Nothing the Mighty Fabrick of this Univerſe; the Heavens; the Air; the Earth, and the Sea: Thou that filleſt the whole, and Every Thing that is in it; and art thy ſelf Unbounded, and Incomprehenſible, look down Graciouſly upon thy Servants that have preſumed to Erect a Temple here to the Honour of thy Great Name. Lord! hear our Prayers, and receive our Sacrifices: Thou that art Every-where, Vouchſafe alſo to be with us; Thou that ſeeſt and heareſt all things, look down from thy Throne in Heaven, and give Ear to our Supplications in This Place. Thou that never faileſt to aſſiſt thoſe that call upon thee Night and Day, and Love and Serve thee as they ought to do, have Mercy upon us.

Solomon's Diſcourſe to the People, upon God's Power and Providence.

Upon the Finiſhing of this Prayer, Solomon made a Diſcourſe to the People upon the Subject of God's Power and Providence: telling them, what Wonderful Things had been Revealed to his Father David, in Dreams and Viſions; ſome already paſt, and others as yet to come, concerning Himſelf, his Name, his Succeſſion to the Throne, his Building of the Temple, the Eſtabliſhment of the Family, and the Well-being, and Proſperity of the Nation. Now, ſays Solomon, a Great part of theſe Predictions being already verify'd, you are to thank God, not only for the Comforts you enjoy; but for the Good Things alſo that are further Promiſed, and to look upon the Former, only as the Earneſt of Greater Bleſſings.

Solomon's Ejaculation upon the Goodneſs of God.

After the ſpeaking of theſe Words, The King turn'd his Eye again toward the Temple; and with his Hand advanced, Lord! ſays he, What are the moſt Glorious Works of Man, in Ballance, even with the ſmalleſt of thy Benefits and Mercies? Or what can we that have nothing to give, pretend to do for thee that Wanteſt Nothing? When the very leaſt of thy Bounties are Above, and Beyond all Requital? We can only render thee Praiſe, Acknowledgment, and Thanksgiving; and that indeed is a Prerogative-Faculty, that thou haſt Vouchſafed to Mankind above all other Creatures: So that this I am not only Allow'd, but Obliged to do, in the Name of my ſelf, and my Family, and the whole People of Iſrael, for all thy Multiply'd Favours, and Infinite Goodneſs toward us. Now having no other Way of Expreſſing our Duty and Affections, then by the means of bare empty Words, that are only ſo much Air drawn-in, and breath'd out again: be pleaſed to Accept of our Humble Gratitude in that Humane Capacity; Firſt, for thy Gracious Goodneſs to my Dear Father, in raiſing him from a Shepherd's Crook to an Imperial Scepter: and in the Second place, for making good to thy Servant Solomon all thy Promiſes, and Predictions in his Favour. Lord! continue thy Bounties to us, as to thy choſen People; Preſerve, Proſper, and Perpetuate the Government to our Family, by a conſtant Train of Succeſſions from Generation to Generation, according to thy Promiſes to my Father, Living and Dying. Lord! Grant us all This; and to all mine, the Virtues and the Graces that may make them Acceptable in thy Sight. I do further moſt Humbly beſeech thee, to let thy Holy Spirit deſcend upon this Temple, in the Bleſſing of thy Peculiar Preſence. Heaven and Earth I know are too little for thy Majeſty and Glo- ry; and much More, the Workmanſhip of Men's Hands, in a Fabrick of Wood and Stone: And yet I cannot but preſume to implore thy Providence, and Protection over it: Lord! Preſerve it from the Power and Rage of Enemies; and be pleaſed to take care of it, as of thy Own Propriety and Poſſeſſion. And if at any time hereafter thou ſhalt be mov'd in thy Juſt Diſpleaſure to Puniſh This People for their Tranſgreſſions, with Famine, Peſtilence, or any other Judgment whatſoever Anſwerable to the Degree of the Wickedneſs: Lord! be pleaſed upon their Humble Supplications to thee in thine Own Houſe, with Prayers and Tears, for Mercy and Forgiveneſs, to accept of their True Repentance, and to Remove thy Judgments. This I beſeech thee, not for the Hebrews alone; but for the Relief indifferently of all People whatſoever, that ſhall offer up their Petitions to thee in this thy Holy Place. By This means it will appear to the whole World, that this is thy Houſe, and We thy People: and that the Hebrews are not ſo Inhumane, as to Envy Strangers the Common Diſpenſations of the Author and Fountain of all our Happineſs.

Solomon proſtrates himſelf, and Worſhips: Riſes-up and Sacrifices.

With theſe Words, Solomon caſt himſelf upon the Ground, and after a little Pauſe in That Act and Poſture of Adoration, he roſe and Offered Sacrifices in abundance; having the Satisfaction alſo of an Aſſurance, by a Token effectually from God, that his Oblations were Accepted; for there fell a Flaſh of Fire from above, that ſhot through the Air directly down to the Altar, and conſum'd the Offerings. This Prodigy being ſeen by the whole Multitude, they all look'd upon it as a Certain Sign of God's Owning, both the Worſhip, and the Temple; which put them into ſuch an Extaſy of Joy, that they all fell down together, and Joyn'd in the Adoration. Solomon went-on upon the Point of Praiſes and Thankſgivings, Perſuading, and Encouraging the Multitude to do the like, in the Contemplation of ſo clear an Evidence of God's ſpecial Favour toward them. The King Charged the People to be Inſtant with God in Prayer, for the Continuance of his Goodneſs and Graces to them, that they might live in Holineſs and Righteouſneſs, without any Spot, or Blemiſh, and walk in the Steps, and according to the Divine Traditions of Moſes, to their Live's End: This being the Sure and the Only way to render the Hebrews the happieſt People of all Mortals. He minded them alſo that their Felicity was no way to be Secured, and Augmented, but by the Means by which it was Acquir'd; as being not only the Effect, but the Reward of Piety and Juſtice. He told them further, that it was much eaſier to get what they wanted, then to keep what they had got; and bad them have a Care, not to Forfeit by any Miſdemeanour, what they had Gain'd by their Virtue.

Solomon diſmiſſes the Aſſembly.

The King made an End of ſpeaking here, and Diſcharg'd the Aſſembly; having firſt offered-up in Sacrifices for Himſelf and his People, Twelve Thouſand Calves, and a Hundred and Twenty Thouſand Lambs. This was the firſt Bloud that was ſpilt in the Temple; and the Iſraelites, with their Wives and Children were all Feaſted at it. There was Celebrated at the ſame time before the Temple, beſide this Solemnity, the Feaſt of Tabernacles, which laſted Fourteen Days at the King's Expence, with great Jollity, Magnificence, and Splendour.

The Feaſt of Tabernacles and the Dedication of the Temple happen'd together. The Ceremony being now over, the People returned to their own Homes.

The Noiſe and Pomp of Things was now over, and all Imaginable Right done to the Honour and Piety of the Occaſion: So that every Man was now returning to his Own Habitation, but not without Infinite Acknowlegments of the King's Wiſdom, Care and Bounty in all reſpects; and Prayers for the Long Life of Solomon, and the Long Continuance of the People under the Bleſſing of his Government. They went back, in fine, Singing, Rejoycing, and giving Glory to God; with all things ſo much to their Heart's Content, that betwixt Joy and Good Company, the Time paſs'd away Chearfully and Eaſily, without any Senſe of Tedioufneſs, or Trouble in the Journy.

1 Kings 9.

A voice tells Solomon from Heaven that his Prayers are Heard and Granted; upon Condition that he walk in the Steps of his Father. But if ever he or his Subjects go over to ſtrange Gods, they ſhall be no longer a People; but be ſcatter'd over the Face of the Earth, like Vagabonds;

The Ark being now brought into, and Depoſited in the Temple; the Beauty and the Magnificence of that Glorious Structure, with all Due Ceremony and Solemnity Expoſed; the Congregation diſperſed, and ſo went Home again. God appeared now a ſecond time to Solomon, in his Sleep; and a Voice told him, that God had accepted his Sacrifices, and heard his Prayers; that he would preſerve his Temple, and make it the Houſe of his Dwelling: That is to ſay, ſo long as He Himſelf, and his Poſterity and People ſhould continue to walk before him, as David his Father did, in Pureneſs of Heart: promiſing him, upon that Condition, to advance him to the Higheſt Degree of earthly Bliſs; to Perpetuate the Throne of Iſrael to his Family; ſo that there ſhould never want a Prince of that Line, and of the Tribe of Judah, to Wield that Scepter. But on the other hand, if ever they ſhould Betray, and depart from, or forget the Worſhip they poſſeſs'd, and run after Strange Gods, they ſhould be quite rooted out from off the Face of the Earth, and Iſrael be no longer a People; but after being torn to pieces, and broken with Wars, and other Calamities at Home, be forced away to Shift for themſelves in the wide World, as Vagabonds, and Exiles. The Voice told him further, that in caſe of ſuch an Apoſtacy, his New Erected Fabrick ſhould, with divine permiſſion, come to be Suck'd and

We have forſaken our God; we have abandon'd the Religion of our Forefathers, and of our Country, and all this is juſtly befall'n us for our Sins.* This was the Subſtance of Solomon's Dream, or Viſion, as we find it tranſmitted to us in Holy Writ.

their Temple Sackt and Burnt by Barbarians, and Jeruſalem laid in the Duſt.

After the Finiſhing of this Temple; which, as we have ſaid already, was ſeven Years in Hand, Solomon enter'd upon the Building of a Royal Palace for Himſelf, which was full Thirteen Years more a-perfecting. He was not ſo Sollicitous and Intent upon the Latter, as the Former, which in truth was Great and Artificial to a Miracle; and without God's Peculiar Bleſſing, and Aſſiſtance, could not have been Compleated within that Compaſs of Years. Solomon's Court indeed was in appearance much Inferiour to the Majeſty of his Temple, not only for want of time to provide his Materials; but the One was deſigned only for the Honour and Convenience of a Temporal Prince, and the Other Dedicated to the King of Kings: So that the thing was the Longer a doing. It was however ſufficient to Anſwer the End it was deſign'd for; being a Work that redounded much to the Glory, both of Prince and People. But it will be Worth the While to ſay ſomewhat more Particularly of the Model, and Diſpoſition of this Majeſtical Fabrick, for the Reader's better Underſtanding of the Whole, as well as for his Curioſity and Satisfaction.

Solomon erects a Royal Palace, which was 13 Years a Finiſhing. 1 Sam. 7.

There was erected, upon ſeveral Rows of Pillars, a Fair, ſpacious Pile of Building, in the Nature, and after the Manner of a Common-Hall for the Hearing of Cauſes. It was a Hundred Cubits in Length, Fifty in Breadth, and the Depth Thirty: Nor could it well be leſs, to receive the vaſt Multitudes that came Thronging thither from all Parts, for Juſtice. It was ſupported by Sixteen Square-Columns, cover'd with Corinthian Work, in Cedar, and Fortify'd with Double-Doors curiouſly wrought, that ſerved both for the Security, and the Ornament of the Place. In the middle of this Court, or Hall, was Another Edifice of Thirty Cubits-Square, and under-ſet with Strong Pillars: in which Quarter was a Throne of State, where the King Himſelf uſed to ſit Perſonally in Judgment. Next adjoyning to this Royal Court of Juſtice, was the Queen's Houſe, and other Apartments thereabouts, for Diverſion, and Retreat, after the Fatigue of Cares, and Bus'neſs: All fitted-up with Cedar, and Raiſed upon Huge Stones of Ten Cubits-Square, which were partly Plain, and part over-laid with the moſt Precious Marble, after the Faſhion of the moſt Magnificent of Palaces or Temples. The Rooms were hung with Three Depths of Rich Hangings, and Beautify'd with Images, in Sculpture, of Trees, Plants, Branches, Leaves, &c; and all ſo Miraculouſly wrought, that they appear'd to the Eye to be all in Motion. As to the Remainder of the Space up to the Cieling, it was all ſet-out with delicate Parti-colour'd Figures, upon a Ground of White. And then beſide all Theſe, there was a Great variety of other Chambers too, for Retirement, or Delight; Long and Large Galleries; vaſt Rooms of State, and others for Feaſting and Entertainment, ſet-out as Rich as Rich could be, with Coſtly Furniture, and Gildings: Beſide that all the Services for the King's Table were of Pure Gold. But it would be an endleſs Work to give a Particular Survey of this Mighty Maſs of Buildings: So many Courts, and other Contrivances; ſuch an Infinite Diverſity of Chambers, and Offices, Great and Little: Some under-ground, others Above; as Vaults, Turrets, and the like. In a Word, the Whole Houſe was in a Manner made-up from top to bottom, of White Marble, Cedar, Gold and Silver; with Precious Stones here and there Intermingled upon the Walls, or Cielings, after the Manner of the Adorning of the Temple. There was alſo Erected a very Fair, Large, Ivory Throne, with Delicate Carved Work, and Engraving upon it, after the Faſhion of a Tribunal. There were Six Steps that led-up to it; the Figure of a Lyon at Each End of Every Step, and Two Lyons more Above: That is to ſay, One on either hand of the State. As the King reſted upon his Throne, there were Arms put forth, as in a readyneſs to take Care of him, and to Receive him; and the Figure of a Bullock placed in a Proper Poſture under him, for his Support: the Whole Piece being cover'd all over with Gold.

Solomon's Throne. 1 Kings 10.

Theſe Two Magnificent Structures were Twenty Years a Finiſhing; and it was a Huge Maſs of Gold, and a Greater of Silver; beſide a Mighty Proviſion of Cedar and Cyprus, that Hiram the King of Tyre contributed to the Perfecting of the Work. And Solomon was not behind-hand with him Neither, in his Acknowledgments, and Preſents: for he ſent him every Year, Great Quantities of Corn, and Wine, and Oyl, as a Supply that Hiram, being an Iſlander, ſtood moſt in need of; as has been Obſerv'd heretofore. He beſtow'd upon him Moreover, Twenty Cities upon the Borders of Galilee, not far from Tyre; which, upon View, and Conſideration (not being much to his Liking) he fairly declin'd, with a Reſpectful Excuſe to Solomon, that he had no need of thoſe Cities. From this Refuſal, that part of the Country was called [a] Chabalon: which with the Phœnicians is as much as to ſay, It does not pleaſe me.

Many Good Offices betwixt Solomon and Hiram.

Mænander makes mention of theſe two Princes.

Hiram had ſo Great a Veneration for the Wiſdom of Solomon, that ſtill as he found himſelf Gravell'd for the Underſtanding of any Difficulty, or Myſterious Queſtion, he apply'd himſelf to this Wiſe Prince for the Solution of it; who never fail'd of Anſwering him to his Satisfaction, according to the True Reaſon, and Nature of the Matter in hand. The Hiſtorian Mænander, that turn'd the Tyrian Annals out of the Philiſtin Tongue into Greek, makes Mention of theſe Two Princes, as follows. Hiram, ſays he, the Son of Abibale, ſucceeded his Father in the Kingdom of Tyre. He liv'd Three and Fifty Years, and Reigned Four and Thirty. He annex'd a Piece of Forced Ground, called the Great Field, to the Iſland, and Dedicated a Golden Pillar to Jupiter in his Temple. He cut down Materials alſo in abundance upon the Mount Libanus for the Covering of Holy Places; and Demoliſhing Ancient Temples, he Built New ones, to Hercules and Aſtarte. He Erected a Statue for Hercules, in the Month of Peritius: And then in an Expedition againſt the Eyceans, for not paying the Duty of a Tribute, as they ought to have done, he overcame them, and went home again. In his Dayes, there was One Abdemonus, a Young Man that took upon him to give Solomon, the King of Jeruſalem, a Reſolution upon all Dark and Myſterious Queſtions that you ſhould put to him. Dius writes alſo to this Effect. Abibale being now Dead, Hiram his Son Succeeded him; who, by filling-up Void Places on the Eaſt-Quarter of the Town, enlarged the Borders, and brought the Temple of Olympian Jupiter, that before ſtood apart, and at a diſtance, into the Compaſs of the City; Enriching, and Adorning it with Golden Offerings to a very Great Value: After which, he Order'd the Cutting down of Cedars upon Mount Libanus for the Uſe of Holy Places. He tells further, That Solomon, the King of Jeruſalem, would be often ſending Problems, and Riddles to Hiram, upon the Forfeiture of a Great Sum of Mony, if he fail'd of Expounding them. Thoſe Difficult Caſes were afterward, not only Unriddled by Abdemonus, a Tyrian, but New Propoſitions Started by him; and Solomon Himſelf too Incur'd a Great Forfeiture, if he did not Uncypher them. Thus far goes Dius.

And Dius ſpeaks of Hiram too.

The Walls of Jeruſalem were not at this time in a Condition either for the Defence, or Reputation, of ſo Famous a City: So that Solomon Repair'd, and Enlarged them, with the Addition of ſuch Towers and Other Fortifications, as he found Requiſite for the Securing of the Place. He built Several Cities alſo of Conſiderable Note, as Aſor, Magedon, and Gazara, in the Land of the Philiſtins; which Pharaoh the King of Egypt had formerly taken by Aſſault; and Raſing it to the Ground, put Every Creature in it to the Sword; giving it afterward to his Daughter upon the Match with Solomon. This City the King Rebuilt, for the Strength of it's Situation, and the Uſe it might be of to the Government, as well in War as Peace. He built likewiſe, not far from thence, Betachora and Baleth, beſide other Places of Pleaſure, in reſpect of the Temperature of the Climate, the Delicacy of the Fruits, and the Conveniencies of Excellent Air and Water. He poſſeſs'd himſelf after this, of the Entrance into the Deſert that lyes towards Syria; where he Built a very Fair City, Two days Journy from the Upper Syria, one from Euphrates, and Six from Babylon. Now the Reaſon of Erecting a City here at ſuch a diſtance from the Habitable parts of Syria, was this; that it might Serve for a Watering Place, (there being ſeveral Springs and Fountains in it) to thoſe that Travell'd through that Deſert. This Town being Built, Wall'd, and Strongly Fortify'd, was called Thadamora, which Name it bears among the Syrians to this Day. The Greeks call it Palmira. And let this Suffice for the Hiſtory of Solomon thus far.

Solomon Repairs, Fortifies, and Enlarges the Walls.

He Builds Five Cities alſo, beſide other Places of Pleaſure.

A Fair City called Thadamora,

All the Kings of Ægypt, from Memphis to the Days of Solomon, were called Pharaoh's.

Now in regard that I find many People Inquiſitive how it comes to paſs that the Kings of Egypt, from Minæus the Firſt Founder of Memphis it ſelf, which was long before our Father Abraham, to the Days of Solomon, being upward of thirteen Hundred Years, ſhould be all called by the Name of Pharaoh; and from what Original they took their Denomination, I ſhall give this Plain, and Short Account of it, for their Satisfaction. Pharaoh, in the Egyptian Language, ſounds as much as King. My Opinion is that they were brought-up by Other Names; and that upon coming to the Exerciſe of a Publique Character, they exchang'd the Diſtinction of the Family for the Common Name of Power. It was the ſame thing with the Kings of Alexandria, that were Educated by One Name, and Govern'd by Another; being all call'd Ptolemeys, from the Firſt of their Kings: and ſo it is with the Roman Emperours too; who in Caſe of ſuch an Elevation, drop their Private and Hereditary Names, and are all call'd Cæſars, with a Reſpect to the Character of a Sovereign Power. This was it,

Pharaoh, in Ægyptian, ſignifies King; and ſo the Name denotes Office:

perhaps, that made Herodotus of Halycarnaſſus, in his account of the Succeſſors to Minæus, the Firſt King of Memphis, to reckon upon Three Hundred Thirty Kings, referring to the Number without Mentioning their Names, Pharaoh being one Common Name to them All. Now upon the coming of a Woman afterwards to the Government, he ſpeaketh of her by the Particular Name of Nicaulis: the Appellation of Pharaoh being only proper to the other Sex. Neither do I find in the whole Hiſtory of our Affairs, that after Pharaoh, the Father-in-Law of Solomon, there was ever any Other King of Ægypt known by that Name. I am alſo well aſſured that this Nicaulis was the Queen of Ægypt, and Æthiopia, that came afterward to Solomon: But of this, more hereafter. I have been the Larger upon theſe Particulars, to ſhew the Agreement betwixt our Memorials, and thoſe of the Ægyptians.

There were ſome ſtubborn Canaanites that refus'd Allegiance to the Iſraelites. Solomon at length makes them Tributaries, upon Condition of furniſhing ſo many Slaves for Drudgery.

There was ſtill a Stubborn Remainder of the Canaanites, betwixt Mount Libanus, and the City Amathe, that for ſome time diſputed their Allegiance to the Kings of Iſrael, till Solomon at laſt made them his Tributaries; upon Condition of furniſhing him Yearly with ſuch a Certain Number of Slaves, as was agreed upon, to be Employ'd upon Tilling the Land and other ſorts of Drudgery: For the Hebrews were not upon any Work that was Courſe and Servile; neither would it have been Reaſonable, when God had ſubdu'd ſo many Nations to his Power, for the Conquerors to Deſcend to do the Bus'neſs of their Captives. As to the Iſraelites, their Genius lay more toward Arms, Chariots, Horſes, Exploits of War, and Military Exerciſes. The Canaanites in the mean time were held to their Labour, and Six Hundred Officers of the Kings put over them, to appoint them their Tasks, and keep them to their Work.

Solomon builds a Fleet of Ships. Hiram aſſiſts him to Rigg them, and ſet them out; and ſupplies them with Guides to the Land of Ophir.

The King built a Fleet of Ships alſo in Ezon-Geber, an Ægyptian Bay upon the Red-Sea. The Port is now call'd Berenice, not far from the City of Elan, which in thoſe Days was reckon'd to be under the Juriſdiction of the Hebrews. In the Building, Fitting and Rigging-out of this Navy, Solomon was highly Obliged to King Hiram for his Generous Aſſiſtance; for he ſent him as many Expert Pilots, and Skilful Mariners, as he had Occaſion for, that ſerv'd the King's Officers for Guides to the Land of Ophir, ſince called India, or the Golden Land, where they got together Four Hundred Talents of Gold, and went back with it to the King.

Solomon's Fame coming to the Queen of Ægypt and Æthiopia. 1 Kings 10.

The Fame of Solomon's Virtue and Wiſdom was ſo Advantageouſly repreſented, upon this Occaſion, to Nicaulis the Queen of Ægypt aud Æthiopia, that being a Princeſs of Wonderful Underſtanding her ſelf, and a Perſon every way Extraordinary, the very Glory of the Character gave her a Longing Impatience to Hear and ſee the Original: for, ſays ſhe to herſelf, what ſignifies all this Hear-ſay, without Experimental Proof? Illuſtrious Rumours ſpeak but the Senſe or Affection of the Reporter: and after all their Splendid Pretenſions, fall flat perhaps, and come to nothing in the Concluſion. When ſhe had been Ballancing a while upon theſe Thoughts, ſhe took-up a Reſolution, in contempt of all the Riſques and Difficulties of a Long Voyage, to give him an Honourable Viſit, for the Satisfaction even of her Curioſity, as well as of her Inclination and Judgment; and to Enjoy the Fruit, and Comfort of that Wiſdom ſhe had heard ſuch Wonders of. In this Determination, ſhe ſet forward toward Jeruſalem, with a Train and Equipage Suitable to her Royal Dignity; taking along with her a Number of Camels, laden with Gold; Variety of Rich Perfumes, and of Precious Stones. Upon her Arrival, the King receiv'd her with all poſſible Honour, Courteſy, and Reſpect; and with ſo much Eaſe and Clearneſs ſolved all the Difficulties ſhe Propos'd, that it put her into an Amazement to find his Excellencies, in Truth, and Effect, ſo much beyond what ſhe had heard of them in Fame and Report. She ſtood in Great Admiration at the Majeſty and Curioſity of his Palace; the Order, and Diſpoſition of the Building, and at the King's Incomparable Prudence upon the Main, through the whole Contrivance and Conduct: But ſhe was mov'd at nothing more then at the Maſter-piece of that Fabrick call'd The Grove of Libanon: The Magnificent, and the Regular Courſe of his Entertainments; The Diſcipline and Oeconomy of the Family, and the doing Every thing with ſo Peculiar a Grace. She was likewiſe infinitely pleaſed with the Spectacle of the Daily Sacrifices, and to ſee with what Application, Care and Veneration, the Prieſts and Levites perform'd their Part in the Worſhip. The Conſtant Courſe and Practice of this Orderly Reverence ran in her Head Day and Night, and her Heart was ſo ſet upon it, that the more ſhe Conſider'd it, the more ſhe found it to be ſtill her Wonder and Delight: Nor did ſhe make any Difficulty of Owning as much to the King Himſelf.

She takes-up a Reſolution of giving him a Viſit.

The Queen ſets forward for Jeruſalem with a Royal Train, and with Magnificent Preſents.

Her Reception is ſuitable to the Quality, and Occaſion.

She finds the King's Wiſdom much above the Fame of it.

The Queen looks upon the Grove of Libanon as the Maſter-piece of the whole Fabrick: But the Daily Sacrifices, and the Order of God's Worſhip tranſports her beyond all the reſt.

The Queen's Addreſs to Solomon.

Great Prince, ſays ſhe, the Credit of Reports is ſo Doubtful and Uncertain, that without a Demonſtrative and Experimental Confirmation of the Truth of what we hear, we are forced to Suſpend our Aſſent for want of Knowing what to believe: eſpecially where the Fame of things Byaſſes toward either Extreme of Good or Evil: But in the Queſtion of your Incomparable Faculties and Greatneſs; That is to ſay, the Internal Advantages of the Mind in a Superlative degree of Knowledge and Underſtanding, and the Glory of your Outward State; the Rumour has been ſo far from Partial, that it falls ſhort, even of a Common Juſtice: For though Common Fame ſaid as much to your Honour as could be put in Words, I have yet the Happineſs at this preſent to ſee much more then I heard. Bleſſed are the Hebrews: Bleſſed the Friends and People of Solomon, that ſtand ever before him, and Hear his Wiſdom; and Bleſſed be God for his Goodneſs to this Land and Nation, in Placing them under the Government of ſo Excellent a Prince.

Having proceeded thus far, This Generous Princeſs did not Stop here at Words and Profeſſions, but follow'd her Speech with more Subſtantial Effects as a Further Inſtance of the High Reſpect ſhe had for the King. She made him a Preſent of Twenty Talents of Gold, Aromatical Spices, Rich Perfumes, and Precious Stones, to a Prodigious Value. They ſpeak alſo of a Root of Balſam that ſhe brought with her, which (according to a Tradition we have) was the Firſt Plant of the Kind that ever came into Judæa, where it hath Propagated ſo Wonderfully ever ſince. Neither was Solomon wanting, on the Other hand, in a Suitable Return of whatever he thought might be to the Queen's Liking, and Satisfaction; for he deny'd her Nothing, and was much readier to Give then ſhe to Ask, even to the Preventing of her Askings. After this Reciprocal Interchange of Preſents, Given and Taken, the Queen went back again into her Own Country.

Rich and Curious Preſents.

About this time came Solomon's Return-ſhips from Ophir, (otherwiſe called the Land of Gold) with Stones for Jewels, and Pine-Wood in abundance; the Latter was made Uſe of, partly for Pillars, and Supporters to the King's Temple and Palace, partly for Muſical Inſtruments; as Harps, Cymbals, Pſalteries and the like, for the Levites to Glorify God upon in Company with their Voices. It is to be noted, that for Size and Beauty, Solomon had never ſeen any of this ſort of Wood Comparable to it before. This was none of the Wood that paſſes commonly upon the World for Pine, in the way of Trade, betwixt Buyer and Seller. This has ſomewhat of the Grain of a Fig-Tree, only a little Whiter, and more Gloſſy. I thought it not amiſs to advertiſe the Reader of a Common Miſtake; Eſpecially being a Queſtion that falls ſo Naturally upon this Occaſion into Solomon's Story.

Soon after this Interview the Queen returns. The Arrival of Solomon's Return-Ships from Ophir.

This Plate-Fleet brought the King Six Hundred Sixty Six Talents of Gold, over and above the Merchants Adventure, and what the Governours, and Kings of Arabia ſent him for Preſents. Of this Gold he cauſed to be caſt Two Hundred Targets, weighing Six Hundred Shekels of Gold Each; and theſe were all hung-up in the great Hall of the Grove of Libanon. His Drinking Cups were all of Beaten Gold too, Garniſh'd with Precious Stones, and wrought with all the Curioſity Imaginable; and in ſhort, the reſt of his Utenſils were of the ſame Metal. There was no Trading with Mony in this Caſe; for the King had his Ships in the Sea of Tarſus that dealt upon the Truck with Forreign Nations; and in Exchange for Commodities of his own, return'd him Gold and Silver; Great Quantities of Ivory, Blacks, Apes, &c. Going and Coming, they reckon'd upon this Expedition as a Three Years Voyage.

The Cargo of this Plate-Fleet. beſide the Merchants Adventures, and what his Governours and the Kings of Arabia ſend him for Preſents. His vaſt Returns of Gold and Silver coſt him Nothing more then Commodity for Commodity.

The Reputation of Solomon's Greatneſs and Wiſdom was by this time ſpread Far and Near, inſomuch that ſeveral Great Kings, for their Own Satisfaction ſake, were Enflam'd with a Longing Deſire to ſee him; and laid hold of all Occaſions, by their Munificence, and other Good Offices, to ſhew the Deſire they had to ſerve him. They ſent him Gold and Silver-Plate; Purple Robes, Spices and Perfumes of all ſorts; Horſes, Chariots and Mules for Burdens, ſuch as for Strength and Beauty they thought might be moſt Acceptable to the King: So that he had now an Addition of Four Hundred Chariots to what he had before: That is to ſay, a Thouſand Chariots, and [a] Twenty Thouſand Horſes, that for Beauty and Speed were beyond all Others: and for the Better Grace of the Spectacle, they had the Flower of the Youth to Ride and Manage them. They were all Proper Goodly Perſons, in [b] Purple Veſts; Their Hair Diſchevel'd and Flowing, to the Great Advantage of their Motion, and ſuch an Intermixture of Golden Threads with their Locks, that the Sun playing upon them, Irradiated their Heads with a kind of Glory. This was the Guard, which with their Arms and Quivers, attended the King's Chariot; (Himſelf mounted in it Clothed in White) to a Houſe of Pleaſure he had at Ethan, not far from the City; which for the Delicate Gardens, Walks and Fountains, and the Fruitfulneſs of the Place, he took Great Delight in.

Divers Great Princes preſent him with Gold, Silver, Purple Robes, Spices, Perfumes, Horſes, Chariots, Mules, &c. The Royal Magnificence of Solomon's Guards.

This Prince had it in his Nature to be Neat and Curious, and his Providence looked ſo far, that there was hardly any thing ſo Minute as not to fall under his Care. He provided for the very Paving of the High-ways that led to his Palace at Jeruſalem, partly for the Convenience of Comers and Goers, and in part for the Honour of his Own Magnificence. He kept not many Chariots about his Perſons, but Diſpoſed of them here and there at ſo many in a Town upon Free Quarter: and theſe Places were called his Chariot-Towns. Silver was as Plentiful in Jeruſalem, as Stones; and Cedars, which had never been ſeen in Judæa before, were now as Common as Mulberry-Trees. He gave Commiſſion alſo to his Ægyptian Merchants to buy him a Proſion of Chariots with Two Horſes, at the Price of Six Hundred Silver Drachmas a piece; and theſe were to be ſent way to the Kings of Syria, and beyond Euphrates.

His Providence deſcends from the Building of Palaces to the Care of the High-ways.

Now as it is without Controverſy, that this King was hitherto the moſt Glorious, Pious, and Incomparably the moſt Wiſe, and Powerful Prince that ever ſat upon that Throne; ſo is it no leſs Certain, that he made the Latter part of his Life a Scandal to the Former, by departing from the Precepts of Moſes, and the Laws and Religion of his Forefathers; and Blaſting ſo Hopeful a Beginning with ſo Foul an End. The Raging Impotency of his Luſt after Women, made him Stark mad, and the Women of his own Country would not ſerve his turn neither; for he took indifferently Women of all Nations; Sidonians, Tyrians, Ammonites, Idumæans, &c. quite contrary to the Inſtitution of Moſes, that Barr'd the Hebrews marrying with Strangers; Wiſely foreſeeing that Strange Women would Inveigle Men over to Strange Gods too. And this was the True Reaſon of the Precaution againſt ſuch Marriages; for the Violation of One Law, is but a Step toward the breaking of Another; and the taking of a Prohibited Wife does naturally lead to the Embracing of a Prohibited Religion. But Solomon's Senſual Appetite was Deaf to all Counſels of Sobriety and Reaſon. He had no fewer then Seven Hundred Wives, that were Princeſſes; (the Daughter of the King of Ægypt for one) and Three Hundred Concubines; and the Paſſion he had for the Charms of their Converſation tranſported him into Compliances with them in the Impiety of their Practices and Opinions, as the moſt Effectual Earneſt he could give them of his Unchangeable Tenderneſs and Affection. As he came further into years, he felt the Decay of Age in his Mind, as well as in his Body, and ſtill as he grew more and more Careleſs and Remiſs in the Exerciſe of the true Worſhip, he was the more Eaſily prevail'd upon to joyn with the Women in a Falſe one: Not that this was the Firſt Breach of the Law that he was Guilty of; for he had Tranſgreſs'd the Rule, in the very Figures of his Bulls under his Brazen Sea, and in the Lyons afterward that were ſet as a Guard upon his Throne: which was all directly againſt a Poſitive Inſtitution. He had at the ſame time in his Own Family the moſt Glorious Preſident for Honour and Virtue, that was any where to be found, in the Example of his Bleſſed Father; whoſe Piety and Practice was ſo expreſly recommended to his Imitation, that God inulcated the Charge over and over to him in his Sleep; and upon the pain of his Uttermoſt Diſpleaſure, to be ſure to tread in his Father's Steps. This he neglected to do, and came, in the Concluſion, to an Ignominious End.

Never a more Glorious, Wiſe, and Powerful Prince.

The Latter part of his Life blaſted the Former.

1 Kings 11.

His Luſt made him mad upon Women.

Strange Women brought him to ſtrange Practices and Opinions.

As he grew Careleſs of the True Religion, he was more apt to Embrace a Falſe one.

His Bulls under the Brazen Sea, was a Breach alſo of the Law.

The Word of the Lord came after this, to Solomon, by the Mouth of a Prophet, telling him that his Wickedneſs was no Secret, and he ſhould not paſs long Unpuniſh'd: But in regard of a Promiſe from Heaven, to his Father, that he ſhould have no other Succeſſor, the Prophet told him that his Government ſhould not be taken from him, while he was Living; and that after his Death, his Son ſhould ſuffer for the Iniquities of his Father: Not that there ſhould be an Univerſal Defection; but that Ten Tribes only ſhould Revolt, and the other Two continue in their Allegiance to the Son of Solomon for his Grandfather's ſake, and for the ſake of the Temple at Jeruſalem, which God had made Choice of for the Place of his Habitation. Theſe Words Wounded Solomon to the very Soul, to ſee himſelf Caſt down in a Moment from the Higheſt Pitch of all Sublunary Comforts, and Temporal Glory, into the very Depth of the Contrary Extreme.

God foretold Solomon by the Mouth of a Prophet; that after his Death, his Son ſhould be Puniſh'd for the Father's ſake, by a Revolt of Ten Tribes.

Some ſhort time after this Denouncing Meſſage by the Prophet, God Stirred-up a Bitter Enemy againſt Solomon, whoſe Name was Adad, an Idumæan by Birth, and a Branch of the Royal Family; the Ground of his Animoſity being as follows. When the Hebrews over-ran the Country of Idumæa under the Command of Joab, who at that time was David's General; Joab having ſubdu'd the People, put to the Sword all the Males he could find in the Province, that were able to bear Arms; and This Execution continu'd for ſix Months. This ſame Adad, who in thoſe Days was but a Child, made his Eſcape to Pharaoh, the King of Ægypt; who not only receiv-ed him with Great Humanity, but very Generouſly gave him Houſes, Lands, and Revenues for his Entertainment, and took ſuch an Affection further for him, upon his growing up into the World, that he Maryr'd him to his own Wife's Siſter, whoſe Name Taphines; who bare him a Son, that was train'd-up with the Children of Pharaoh. In Proceſs of time News was brought into Ægypt, that David and Joab were both Dead; and Adad upon theſe Tidings deſir'd Pharaoh's Leave to return into his Own Country. The King took him up ſhort, and Ask'd him what he wanted, or what he meant by that Earneſtneſs to part with the Beſt Friend he had in the World? For he preſs'd it over and over, but could not as yet prevail.

Adad a ſpiteful Enemy to Solomon.

When Joab over ran Idumæa, he put all the Males to Death that were able to bear Arms.

Adad, then a Child, fled to Pharaoh; who gave him Maintenance and Protection, and Marry'd him to Taphines.

Upon David's and Joab's Death, Adad deſir'd Leave to go back.

Solomon was now Declining.

Solomon being now in a Declining Condition, and the Meaſure of his Iniquity well nigh full and Ripe for Judgment, God put it into Pharaoh's Heart, whom he had hitherto Reſtrain'd, to let Adad go: So that away he went forthwith to Idumæa, with a Deſign to Stir-up the People to a Rebellion againſt Solomon: But finding the Garriſons ſo Strong, and the Country in ſuch a Poſture that there was no Good to be done by a Surprize, he took New Meaſures, and went from thence into Syria; where he joyn'd Intereſts with One [a] Rezon, a Fugitive from his Maſter [b] Adadezer the King of Zobah, and a Famous Captain of a Body of Banditti that made Spoil and Ravage up and down at pleaſure. Adad ſtruck a League with this Man; and with his Aſſiſtance, maſter'd that Part of Syria, where he got himſelf to be Declared King, and made ſo many Inroads upon the Land of the Iſraelites, that all things were in a Confuſion with Bloud and Pillage, even while Solomon himſelf was yet Living.

Pharaoh gives Adad Leave to Return, who goes to Idumæa, to ſtir-up the People againſt Solomon.

Adad finding no Good to be done that way, he goes for Syria.

Adad and Rezon Maſter'd that part of Syria.

Adad is declared King, and breaks-in upon the Iſraelites, Solomon yet Living.

And it was not All neither, for the King to ſuffer theſe Affronts, and Indignities from a Stranger, without a more Dangerous Conſpiracy againſt him at the ſame time, in his own Bowels: meaning that of Jeroboam, the Son of Nebat; a Man of a Turbulent, and Ambitious Spirit, and one that had taken-up a Conceit long ſince from an Old Prophecy, of a ſtrange Part that he was to play in the Overturning of the Government. Jeroboam being left by his Father, very Young, and under the Tuition of his Mother, Solomon took notice of him as he grew-up towards Man's Eſtate, for a Youth of a Frank Generous Humour, and made him Overſeer of his Works, being at that time Repairing and Rebuilding the Walls of Jeruſalem. He acquitted himſelf ſo well in that Commiſſion, that Solomon gave him the Military Command of the Tribe of Joſeph, as a Conſideration for his Induſtry and Service. As he was one Day Travelling out of Jeruſalem about his Bus'neſs, the Prophet Ahijah the Shilonite, met him upon the way; and after the Formality of a Salute, took him aſide, out of all Sight and Hearing, and there laid hold of a Garment he had on, and rent it into Twelve Pieces, bidding him take Ten of them to Himſelf; for it was God's Will and Order, that it ſhould be ſo; for he is Reſolved, ſaid the Prophet, to Tear the Government from Solomon; and for his Promiſe-ſake, to give the Two Contiguous Tribes to the Son of Solomon, and the other Ten to you, as a Juſt Puniſhment for giving-up himſelf to Strange Women, and to Strange Gods. Wherefore ſince you ſee the Ground of his Rejection, let Solomon's Miſerable Caſe be a Warning to you, not to do the ſame things your ſelf that Ruin'd Him. Be Juſt to all Men; Obſerve and Protect the Laws; Imitate David's Virtues of Piety and Religion, and you may promiſe your ſelf the Comfort of David's Reward.

Adad and Rezon Maſter'd that part of Syria.

Adad is declared King, and breaks-in upon the Iſraelites, Solomon yet Living.

Another Conſpiracy Headed by Jeroboam, the Son of Nebat, upon the Encouragment of a Prophecy.

Solomon finding Jeroboam a Frank Forward Youth, makes him Overſeer of his Works at Jeruſalem: and gives him afterward the Command of the Tribes of Joſeph.

The Prophet Ahijah meeting him upon the Way, takes him aſide, and Tears his Garment into Twelve Pieces, bidding him take Ten of them to himſelf: For the Government would be taken from Solomon, and Jeroboam ſhall have Ten of the Tribes; and Solomon's Son the other Two.

This Prophetical Prediction ran in his Head.

A Plot laid to take-up Jeroboam, and Diſpatch him; but he eſcapes.

Jeroboam was not a little Elevated with theſe Words of the Prophet; and being Naturally Hot, and Haughty over and above, every little thing that Gratify'd his Ambition, made him Reſtleſs and Unquiet. The Prophetical Prediction would not out of his Head, and the Firſt thing he did, after he came to the Army, was to Tamper the People againſt their Severaign, and to ſet-up for himſelf: But Solomon all this while was no Stranger to the Malice and Practice of his Deſigns; and there was a Train laid to take him-up, and Diſpatch him: but the Plot was diſcover'd, and Jeroboam ſlipt away to Shiſhack, the King of Ægypt; where he waited the Death of Solomon, for a Fair Opportunity to Revive his Pretenſion.

Solomon's Reign, Life, Death, and Burial.

SOLOMON, in fine, liv'd to a great Age. He Reign'd Eighty Years, Dy'd at Ninety Four, and was Bury'd at Jeruſalem; the Wiſeſt and the Richeſt Prince that ever was heard of; and in all other Reſpects the Happieſt, bating only the Sin of his Ungovernable Paſſion for Women, and of thoſe Dotages that he was led into in his Declining State, by their Arts: Of which Miſdemeanours, and the Miſchiefs that Enſu'd upon them, I ſhall ſay more hereafter.

Rehoboam ſucceeds him. 1 Kings 12.

Jeroboam has Notice in Ægypt of Solomon's Death.

He comes from thence to Sichem, and Rehoboam comes thither alſo.

Solomon being now Dead, and Rehoboam his Son (by Naama an Ammonitiſh Woman) ſucceeding in courſe to the Throne, ſome of the Great-ones ſent out of hand into Ægypt, to inform Jeroboam how Matters ſtood, and to Recall him. He came preſently, upon Notice, to Sichem; and Rehoboam came thither alſo, propoſing to himſelf the calling of an Aſſembly, and ſo to enter upon the Government by the Common Declaration and Conſent of the People. Upon this Occaſion, divers of the Princes and Leading Men, together with Jeroboam himſelf, went to Rehoboam, and made him a Diſcourſe, by the Way of Advice and Reſpect, how his Father had born a little too Hard upon his Subjects, and that they were in hope they ſhould find him Eaſier; for it was his Own Intereſt and Security ſo to be, and rather to make himſelf Belov'd than Fear'd. They recommended this humbly to his Thought; and Rehoboam took Three Days time to conſider of it. The Delay of his Anſwer gave them ſome Jealouſy what would be the Reſult: eſpecially in a Caſe (as They underſtood it) ſo Eaſy, and ſo Neceſſary to be Reſolv'd immediately; and ſo well-becoming the Years and Circumſtance of a Young Prince to appear Forward and Obliging in. But they were not however quite out of Hope yet; the Put-off being only a Suſpenſion, not a Repulſe.

Some Great Men with Jeroboam adviſe Rehoboam not to bear ſo hard upon his People as his Father did. He takes Three Days time to conſider of it.

While this was a doing, Rehoboam adviſes with his Father's Friends and Counſellors, what Anſwer to return them; who being both well affected to the Publique, and well ſeen in the Humour and Diſpoſition of the Common People, adviſed him by all means to Treat them with Courteſy and Deſcenſion; for he would gain much more upon them by a Popular Freedom, they told him, then by ſtanding ſtiff upon his Points, in the Formalities of Majeſty and State; there being no ſuch Charm upon the Hearts of the People, as Graciouſneſs and Humility in the Prince. Nothing could have been ſaid more to the Purpoſe in General, or more eſpecially to his Purpoſe in Particular; having a Kingdom in his Eye: But his Underſtanding was taken away by a Judicial Infatuation, to ſuch a degree, that he rejected the Counſel; call'd a Cabal to him of his own Humour and Years; told them what had paſs'd, and demanded their Opinion upon the Whole Affair. They took the Point into Debate, and whether for want of Experience and Foreſight, or that God had Blinded them, they came all to This Agreement upon the Queſtion. Rehoboam was to tell them, That ſince they Complain'd of his Predeceſſor, they ſhould find his Little-finger heavier then his Father's Loins. If they thought themſelves Ill-uſed formerly, they muſt expect to have him Harder upon them: and, That if his Father had Chaſtiſed them with Whips, He Himſelf was reſolved to Chaſtiſe them with Scorpions. The King was ſo Delighted with the miſtaken Majeſty and Dignity of This Huffing Anſwer, that upon the Third Day, when the People were gather'd together in the greateſt Anxiety imaginable, betwixt Hope and Fear of the Doom they were to receive; ſome phancying One thing, ſome Another; the King appear'd, and paſſing over the Opinion of his Father's Counſellors, gave the People for Anſwer the very Syllables that the Young-Men had put in his Mouth: the Providence of God having ſo Order'd it, that the Prophecy of the Prophet Ahijah might be fulfilled. Theſe Words were ſo many Blows to them, and no leſs Terrible in the Hearing, then the Dreadful Things they Threaten'd would have been in the Execution: Inſomuch, that they all cry'd-out in a Rage, as with One Voice, What have we to do with the Houſe of David? Let him take to himſelf the Temple that his Father Built: And the Uproar look'd like a Prologue to a General Revolt. The Sedition was ſo Outrageous, that Adoram, one of the King's Officers in the Treaſury, being ſent-out to Pacify them by laying the Blame upon the Intemperance of ſome Hot-headed Young-Men, the People Ston'd him to Death, without ſo much as Hearing him. Rehoboam look'd upon the Malice of This Violence to be Levell'd at Himſelf rather then againſt his Officer; and he was much in the Right: So that he preſently Mounted his Chariot in a Fright; and in a Hurry poſted away to Jeruſalem, to get out of the Reach of the Mutineers. The Tribes of Juda and Benjamin, all as one Man, ſtuck to him, and Proclaim'd Him for their King; but all the reſt of the People went over to Jeroboam, and from that Day forward would have nothing to do with the Houſe of David. Rehoboam had ſo great an Indignation at the Thought of This Revolt, that he Summon'd a full Convention of the Two Tribes that ſtood firm to their Allegiance, and drew out One Hundred and Eighty Thouſand Soldiers upon the Muſter; propoſing to Himſelf, with this Body of Men to reduce the Other Ten Tribes to their Duty by Force. While he was preparing for this Enterprize, he was admoniſhed by a Prophet from God not to engage himſelf in a Civil War; eſpecially where the Deſertion was in ſome meaſure the Work of a Divine Direction.

We ſhall now in the Firſt place give ſome Account of the Actions of Jeroboam, the King of the Iſraelites, and proceed from thence to the Hiſtory of Rehoboam, and the Two Tribes, according to the Order of the Narration.

Jeroboam built himſelf a Palace at Sichem, which he made his Place of Reſidence; and for Variety ſake, he built Another at Penuel. This was a little before the Feaſt of Tabernacles, which was the thing that put theſe Thoughts into his Head. If, ſays he, I ſhall now ſuffer the People to go-up to Jeruſalem, and leave them at liberty for the Celebration of that Feſtival, they'll be ſo taken with the Shews and Ceremonies of the Place, and of the Religion, that they'll be in Danger of changing their Minds perhaps, and of going back to their Old King again, as well as to their Old way; which may lead to the Extreme is a Town Situate at the Head of the Lesser Jordan. These Images were consecrated in Both Places, and Indicting an Assembly of the Ten Tribes under his Command, he made a Discourse to them to this Purpose.

Jeroboam's Plausible way of Seducing the Multitude.
I need not tell you, my Countrymen, that God is every where, and not Confin'd to any Certain Place; but wherever we are, he hears our Prayers, and Accepts our Worship, in one place, as well as in Another; and therefore, I am not at all of Opinion for your going-up to Jerusalem at this Time, to a People that Hate you. 'Tis a Long Tedious Journy, and all this only for the sake of Religion. He that built that Temple was but a Man, as every one here is: and the Golden Calves that I have Provided for you, the one in Bethel, the other in Dan, are Consecrated as well as that Temple, and brought so much nearer you, on purpose for the Convenience of your Worship; where you may pay your Duty to God in such manner as best pleases him. As for Priests and Levites, I shall make such a Provision for you, that you shall have no Want, either of the Tribe of Levi, or of the Race of Aaron. Let him that has a Mind to enter into the Sacerdotal Function, Initiate himself into the Priesthood by the Sacrifice of a Calf and a Ram, according to the Institution of Aaron; who was the First of that Order and only so Qualify'd. This was Jeroboam's way of Seducing the Multitude into an Apostacy from the Laws of their God, and of their Country; and he himself consequently the Capital Cause and Author of all those Calamities that afterwards befel the Hebrews; as Foreign Wars, Routs, Captivity, and the like: Of which hereafter in their Due Time and Place.

Jeroboam sets-up a Worship at Bethel.
1 Kings 13.
He does the High-Priest's Parts himself.
The Festival of the Seventh Month was now drawing-on, and Jeroboam took up a Resolution to worship the same way at Bethel that the Two Tribes did at Jerusalem. There was an Altar Erected before the Golden Calf: He Himself Personated the High-Priest, and went-up with his Own Priests after the Manner of the Temple-Worship. But as he was preparing to put Fire to the Offering in the Sight of all the People, there came a Prophet from Jerusalem in that very Point of time, whose Name was Jadon. He was sent by God, and being advanc'd into the Middle of the Croud, he addres's'd himself in the King's Hearing to the Altar, in Words to this Purpose. Altar, Altar, says he, Thus saith the Lord, there shall Arise one out of the House of Juda, whose name shall be Josiah; who upon Thee shall put to death the False Prophets, Seducers, and Impostors of Those times, and upon Thee shall burn their Bones: and to the End that no Creature may doubt the Truth of this Prediction, the Authority of it shall be now Confirmed by a Prodigy. The Altar shall fall to pieces, and the Fat of the Sacrifices upon it shall be Spilt upon the Ground. The King was so Enflam'd upon these Words of the Prophet, that he Lifted-up his Hand against him, and Commanded aloud that some Body should lay hold of him; but his Arm was immediately so Benumm'd, and Blasted, that it was like a Dead Limb, and he could not draw it back again. The Altar fell to pieces, as was Presag'd, and the Fat of the Sacrifices was thrown upon the Ground, as the Prophet had foretold. The King, finding by what Spirit the Man Spake, and that he was no Counterfeit, besought him to pray to God on his behalf for the Restoring of his Wither'd Arm: which being done, and the Miracle Wrought, Jeroboam thankfully acknowledg'd the Benefit of the Cure, and Earnestly pres's'd the Prophet to stay Dinner with him, who Excused himself upon an Injunction that God had laid upon him, not so much as to Tast either Bread or Wine in that City, nor to return the same Way he came. This Reserve and Sobriety of the Prophet, made the King give more heed to what he said, then otherwise he should have done; so that he grew very Uneasy upon it in his Forebodings concerning himself.

The Withering of Jeroboam's Arm.
The Wither'd-Hand Restor'd.

There was in that Town a Certain False Prophet, that was much in Jeroboam's good Graces; not for the Truth, (for he was an Arrant Juggler) but for the Time-serving Pleasingness of the Things he foretold. This Man was Old, and Crazy; and as he lay at this Instant Dozing upon his Bed, his Sons brought him News of a Famous Prophet that was come from Jerusalem, and what Wonders he had done: with the Story of Jeroboam's Wither'd Arm, and the Recovery of it at the Prophet's Intercession to God for him, and how he was now gone back again, and which way he went. The Fame of this Stranger put such a Jelousy in the Sick Man's Head for fear of being Supplanted in his Master's Favour: that he presently Order'd his Sons to fetch his Ass, which was immediately done, and the Man Mounted, and away, to seek after the Strange Prophet. He follow'd him upon the Heel, till he came up to him at length, as he was resting himself under the Shadow of a Large Well-spread Oak. After the Formality of the First Salute, the False Prophet fell to Expostulating with the Other, why he would not be so kind as to call at his House, and do him the Honour to take a Collation with him. The Stranger told him it could not be; for God had Positively forbidden him either to Eat or Drink in that City. Nay, says the Other, I can absolve you in this Point my self; for I am a Prophet as well as you, and we are both Servants to the same God: And it is by That God's Expres Command, that I am come hither now to invite you to Dinner with me. Jadon gave Credit to this False Wretch; Accepted of his Invitation, and so went along with him. While they were yet at Dinner and in the Freedom of Table-Discourse, God appeared to Jadon, and told him that he would not only Punish him for his Disobedience, but the very manner of his Punishment: which was, that he should be torn to pieces upon the way, by a Lyon, and that his Body should not be laid in the Sepulchre of his Forefathers. It fell-out accordingly, and perhaps God Order'd it so, for the Hardening of Jeroboam's Heart, into a Disbelief of Jadon, upon so Remarkable a Miscarriage; for in his Way back to Jerusalem, a Lyon tore him off from his Ass and Kill'd him; the Ass Untouch'd and standing still, the Lyon Couching by the Carcass, like a Guard to Both. The Relation of this Disaster being brought to the False Prophet, by some Travellers that pass'd that way, he appointed his Sons to fetch the Body into the City; which being done, he gave it a Magnificent Burial; Charging his Sons, whenever he dy'd, to see his own Body laid in the same Monument; for, said he, whatever This Good Man has spoken concerning the City, the Altar, the Priests, and the False Prophets, it is all True. Now when I am Dead, says he, and my Bones Deposited with his, I am safe; for who shall know his Bones from Mine?

Jadon Excuses himself; for he was forbidden either to Eat or Drink in that City.
The False Prophet tells him that he came from God to Invite him.
Jadon goes along with him:
and God foretells him that a Lyon shall meet him by the way, and Tear him to pieces; which fell out accordingly.
The False Prophet sends his Sons for the Body, and gives it a Magnificent Burial; being convinc'd of the Truth of his Predictions.

So soon as Jadon's Funeral-Rites were well over, and the Sons Competently Instructed, away goes their Wicked Father to Jeroboam; who finding him Exceedingly disturb'd, ask'd him, What he meant to Trouble his Head at that rate, for the Words of a Mad-Man? Well but, says the Other, what do you think of the Prodigy of the Altar; and the Miraculous Loss and Recovery of my Arm? (telling him both the Stories at length.) The Man, says he, is certainly a Man of God, and a True Prophet, he could never do all this else. The Other in the mean time, Shuffles-off Every Thing with Plausible Glosses, and Distinctions; doing all he could, in short, to disguise the Truth. As to the Bus'ness of your Hand, says he, you had overwrought your self, it may be with Lugging Sacrifices to the Altar. The very Weariness made it Numb at first perhaps, but after a little rest, you see, it came to it self again. And so for the Altar, it was New Built; and not being thoroughly setled, it sunk under the Weight of an Insupportable Burden of Sacrifices that were laid upon it. And what was your Holy Man's End at last? why, he was Kill'd by a Lyon: and here's not the Least Sign or Token of a Prophet all this while, that I can find, either in Word, Life or Death. The King was so Poyson'd and Corrupted with the Vanity and Mockery of these Loose Insinuations, that from thence-forward he had no longer any Thought of God, or Goodness; but on the Contrary, abandon'd himself Wholly to the Love, Study and Practice of all manner of Wickedness: And to such a degree too, that he did effectually bid Defiance to all that was Sacred, either in Heaven, or Earth; making it his Bus'ness to find out New Sins, and in the event to out-do himself. But I shall pass now to Rehoboam, according to the Order of the Relation.

The Impostor shuffles them off, and Ridiculs them.

Jeroboam so abandon'd, that he never thought of God after.

Rehoboam, being King all this while of the Two Tribes before-mention'd, Built and Fortify'd several Strong and Fair Cities, as Bethlehem, Etan, Tekoa, Beth-zar, Shoco, Adullam, Ipa, Maresha, Ziph, Adoraim, Lachish, Azekah, Zorah, Ajalon, and Hebron, all in the Tribe of Judah; beside other Towns, no less considerable, in the Lot of Benjamin: which he provided with good Garrisons and Governours, and with Corn, Wine, Oyl, and other Necessaries in abundance, for their Maintenance and Defence; beside Shields and Lances many Thousands. While Rehoboam continu'd at Jerusalem, there came-up from All Parts, great Numbers of Priests and Levites, and so many of the Layety too, as made any Conscience of their Ways, to Worship there; quitting their Countries to attend the Duties of their Religion. They were all sick of Jeroboam's Tyranny, and to see themselves forc'd to the Worshipping of His Calves, to the Dishonour of the True God. The Discontent, in fine, was so great, that in three years time, the Power and Interest of Rehoboam was mightily Encreas'd. This King's First Wife was his Kinswoman, by whom he had Three Children, and he afterward Marry'd Maacah, the Daughter of Thamar, who was the Daughter of Absalom, by whom he had Abiah, and she was a-kin to him too. He had several Wives beside, and Children by them; but none so Dear to him as Maacah. He had Eighteen Wives Legitimate, and Thirty Concubines, by whom he had Eight and Twenty Sons, and Sixty Daughters: But Abiah the Son of Maacah was the Person he design'd for his Successor, Committing his Treasure and Strong Holds all to his Trust. But it fell out to be with Rehoboam, as it fares commonly with other Mortals; Prosperity puff'd him up; up, and in time Ruin'd him; for the Greater he grew in the World, the more Liberty he took to be Wicked; and he did not only turn his Back upon God, and his Holy Commandments himself; but made his People as Wicked too, out of a kind of Reverence to his Example. It is but according to the Nature of Humane Affairs, for Subjects to be Deprav'd by the Exemplary Ill Manners of their Superiors; for the Virtue, or the Iniquity of the Governour is, generally speaking, some sort of Rule for the People to Walk by; and it has the Reputation of a kind of Political Virtue, to Imitate the very Vices of Rulers. Not to do as they do, is tacitly to Condemn their Doings; as it hapned under Rehoboam, where the People were Wicked and Licentious, for fear of Displeasing the King.

A Dissolute Prince makes a Licentious People.

CHAP. IV.

Shishak King of Ægypt lays Siege to Jerusalem. King Rehoboam meanly gives it-up; and the Temple is Pillag'd. Rehoboam dyes, and Abias his Son Succeeds him: Jeroboam is foretold by the Prophet Achias, of the Utter Ruine of Himself, and his whole Family.

GOD avenged himself upon Rehoboam by the Hand of [a] Shishak the King of Ægypt, (not by Sesostris, as [b] Herodotus mistakes the Matter.) This same Shishak, in the Fifth Year of Rehoboam's Reign, marched against him with a Vast Army. They reckon'd 1200 Chariots, 60000 Horse, and 400000 Foot; the Soldiers being most of them Africans, and Æthiopians. With this Army, Shishak brake in upon the Hebrews, and took into his Protection several of their strong Towns, that Render'd, on their own Accord. In all which Places he left Garrisons, and Marched afterwards directly up to Jerusalem, where Rehoboam and his People were Block'd-up in the Town. The King, in this Streight, betook himself to Prayers and Supplications, for Victory over his Enemies; but could not prevail for an Answer, to his Satisfaction: And thereupon Sameas the Prophet told him, for his Greater Terror, that God threatned to Forsake all those that forsake him first; Which Frighted them All into an Acknowledgment of their Wickedness, and of God's Just Judgment upon them for their Apostacy and Disobedience. Being now brought to the uttermost Extremity of Despair, the Prophet told the King once again, that God was pleased so far to Accept of their Humiliation, and Repentance, that they should not be utterly Destroy'd and Cut-off; but only Deliver'd-up in Subjection and Slavery to the Ægyptians, that they may learn upon Experience, whether it be Better to Serve God or Man. In this Panick Dread, Rehoboam deliver'd-up Jerusalem to Shishak, upon certain Conditions; but without any Regard to Faith, or Honour, he Brake his Articles; Pillag'd the Temple; took away all the Plate and Treasure, as well God's, as the King's: Gold and Silver to an Inestimable Value, without leaving so much as One Grain behind him. He carry'd away the Golden Shields and Bucklers of Solomon's, with the Golden Quivers that David took from the King of [c] Sophena, and Dedicated to the Adorning of the Temple. After which, Shishak went back again with a Prodigious Booty. Herodotus of Halycarnassus takes notice of this Expedition, only mistaking the Name, where he speaks of the King of Ægypt's March thorough several other Countries, and of Subduing the Palestine-Syria without striking a Stroke. Now this can only be understood of the Conquest of our Country by the Ægyptians; for he tells of several Pillars Erected, and left there, with the Images of Men Cut upon them, with the Privy Parts of Women; as an Emblematical way of Stigmatizing the Men for giving-up their Country without a Blow. Now this Rehoboam was undoubtedly our King that gave up All for the Asking. He says likewise, that the Æthiopians took up the Custom of Circumcising from the Ægyptians. Now it is agreed at all Hands, that the Philistins, and the Palestine-Syrians had it from thence: And it is as Clear, that there are no other People in Palestine-Syria Circumcised, but our selves. But of this, every Man has the Freedom of his own Thought.

Shishak marches against Rehoboam with a mighty Army; Garrisons several Towns, and Besieges Rehoboam in Jerusalem.

The King in his Distress has Recourse to Prayers for Victory.

The prophet tells him, as he had forsaken God, God would forsake him.

Rehoboam delivers up Jerusalem to Shishak: and Shishak breaks his Articles; And carries away Pillage to an Inestimable Value.

Herodotus Halycarnassus makes mention of this Expedition.

After the Departure of Shishak into Ægypt, Rehoboam Repair'd the Loss of the Golden Shields and Bucklers, with the same Number of Brass, and Committed the Care of them to his Proper Officers and Guards: And so he liv'd-on, in a Private, Quiet Way, without any Considerable Adventure, or Undertaking; his Fear being a continual Check upon him, in regard of the everlasting Feud betwixt Jeroboam and himself. He liv'd Seven and Fifty Years; Seventeen of them in a Station of Sovereign Power. He was a Man Weak and Arrogant, and lost Himself, his Government, and his Reputation, by Refusing Wise Counsel when it was given him. He was Bury'd at Jeruſalem among the Kings. His Son Abias Succeeded him, in the Eighteenth Year of Jeroboam's Reign over the Ten Tribes.

Rehoboam was Bury'd at Jeruſalem, and his Son Abias Succeeded him. 1 Kings 14.

And now we have ſpoken of the End of this King, it remains in the Next Place to ſee what became of Jeroboam. He was a Worker of Iniquity out of all Bounds and Meaſure. He was Every Day ſetting-up and Multiplying Altars in the High-Places; and raiſing Prieſts to Officiate, out of the Dregs of the People; which Indignities, and Affronts, God, in his Righteous Judgment, avenged upon Himſelf and his Family. It happen'd at that time, that Obimes, his Son, fell Sick, and he bad his Wife put her ſelf into the Diſguiſe of a Private Perſon, and go to Achias the Prophet, being a Man that had the Spirit of Prediction, and the Perſon who told him formerly that he himſelf ſhould come to be King. Go you, ſays he, to this Prophet, and Ask him, if the Boy ſhall Recover or no. She dreſs'd her ſelf according to her Husband's Order, and ſo went to Shilo where Achias at that time Liv'd. As ſhe was upon the way toward the Houſe, a Voice from Heaven ſpake to the Prophet (who was now Dim-Sighted with Age) and told him that the Wife of Jeroboam was then coming to him; told him likewiſe her Buſ'neſs, what Queſtions ſhe would ask him, and what he ſhould Anſwer. Upon her coming to the Door in the Dreſs of an Ordinary Gueſt, the Prophet call'd her to him by the Name of Jeroboam's Wife. Come-in, ſays he, and never Diſguiſe your ſelf for the matter; for he that told me who you are, and put the Words in my Month that I am to ſay to you, is not to be Impos'd upon. Go therefore to your Husband from me, and tell him that Thus ſaith the Lord God; As it was I that rais'd thee out of a Low Condition to the Dignity of a Throne; and Cutting-off the Family of David from the Kingdom, gave it to thee: ſo, on the other hand, in return for all theſe Bounties and Benefits, thou haſt now moſt Ungratefully caſt-off him that Exalted thee, and ſet-up Gods of thine Own Phancy, and of the Founders making, in preference to the Creator of Heaven and Earth, and in Contempt of my Majeſty and Power. Wherefore, I will now forthwith Raſe thee and thy Family out of the Roll of Mankind; give your Carcaſſes to the Dogs, and to the Fowls of the Air, and ſet-up Another King over my People, that ſhall not leave One Living Man of the Houſe of Jeroboam upon the Face of the Earth; and the very Multitude ſhall not Eſcape the Stroke of Divine Juſtice neither; for they ſhall be Exterminated out of the Good Land they were poſſeſs'd of, and Driven away and Diſperſt beyond Euphrates, for being Wicked after their King's Example, in Adoring His Gods, to the Contempt of me and my Commandments. Woman, be gone to your Husband now, and make Haſte, and tell him, as I have told you: And for what concerns your Child, you ſhall find it Dead when you come back; for the very Moment you Enter the City he ſhall Breathe his Laſt. He ſhall be Lamented, and bury'd with the Solemnity of a Publique Mourning, as the only Creature of Jeroboam's Family that had any thing of Good in it. The Woman haſten'd away in a Fright, upon what ſhe had heard; and miſerably bewailing the Loſs of her Poor Boy all the way ſhe paſs'd; went ſtreight to her Husband; and the more Haſte ſhe made, the ſooner the Child Dy'd; for being come to her Journy's End, ſhe found the Child Dead, as the Prophet foretold her, and ſo gave her Husband an Account at length of the Diſmal Story ſhe had in charge from the Prophet.

Jeroboam was a Worker of Iniquity, Setting up Altars in the High-Places, and making Prieſts of the Scum of the People.

Jeroboam, in Defiance of all theſe Judgments, made Great Levies ſtill, and Marched out with an Army againſt Abias the Son of Rehoboam, who was then King of the Two Tribes in the Right of his Father; making Little doubt of his Succeſs, againſt a Prince of ſo Little Experience, either in Government, or Arms: But Abias was ſo far from being Terrify'd at this Preparation, that beyond all Expectation from a Perſon of His Years, he preſently drew together an Army out of the Two Tribes, and Advanced with it toward Jeroboam, in a Certain Place they call'd the Mount Samaron; and there Encamping himſelf, he made ready for a Battle. He had in his Army Four Hundred Thouſand Men, and Jeroboam double the Number. As the Two Armies were Both drawn-up, and ready to Engage, Abias advanced to a Little Eminence upon a Riſing Ground, and from thence held up his hand to beſpeak a Silence, and an Attention to what he had to ſay; which was preſently agreed to, and the Sum of his Diſcourſe was this.

But he is not long to Enjoy the Fruit of his Wickedness; for God Will call him to a Severe Account for his Iniquities, and put an End to this Course of Rapine and Oppression; which he himself is so far from doing, that he makes it his Daily Bus'ness to Continue, and to Enflame a most Impious Sedition: And what was the True Ground and Reason now at last of this Defection? My Father never did you any Injury; only by the Advice of Evil Counsel,* Jeroboam Himself being in the Bottom of it, he let fall an Unlucky Word or Two; and upon this, you all went-off in a Huff, Abandoning your Duty not only to my Father; but to God Himself, and to his Laws, and all things that are Sacred. You should have Weigh'd Matters with Allowances for Humane Frailty. You should have Consider'd that my Father was a Young Man, and one that does not set up for an Orator. You should have Consider'd him again as the Son of Solomon too, your Royal Patron and Benefactor. Now all this together might have Aton'd, methinks, for a Wry Word or Two; and it would have been but Reason, to have born a little with the Son, for the Father's sake. But these are Thoughts never came near Your Heart, I perceive; nor truly are they ever like to do, if a body may Judge by the Army that is advancing against us. And what is it you have to trust to at Last? If your Golden Calves, your Altars, and your High-Places; 'tis not your Religion that you depend upon, but your Wickedness: Besides that you have the Laws of God and Man to Contend withal. Piety and Justice will have the Better of you in the Conclusion: and you do manifestly Fight against Both in this Cause, and in Fighting against us, who have constantly Asserted the Worship, and the Reverence that we Owe to the True God; not a God of Wood, or Stone, or the Imposture of a Wicked King upon a Credulous Multitude, but God the Maker of all things and of all things that are made, the Beginning, and the End. Wherefore let me Advise you to Repent of your Past Sins and Follies, and to betake your selves to Sounder Counsels for the future: Or if you must needs be Contending, let it be for the Defence of, and not in Opposition to those Laws that have made you so Great and Happy.

Jeroboam's Violence and Usurpation.

Rehoboam's Want of years and Experience.

Reflections upon the Golden Calves, Altars, and High-Places.

While Abias was upon his Harangue, a Detachment of Jeroboam's Army had slipt away by Stealth, and gotten upon the King's Rear so Unexpectedly, that his People were not a little Startled at the Surprize, till he himself Hearten'd them up, and bad them cast themselves upon God; for the Cause, he told them, was his, who was not to be Over-reach'd by Stratagem and Trick. These Words of the King's brought them to themselves again, and so they went presently to their Prayers; till at last the Priest sounding a Charge, they fell-on, with a Mighty Clamour, and so Victoriously upon the Enemy, that, with the Help of God, they put them to a Total, Absolute Rout, and made such a Slaughter, as no Story, either Greek, or Barbarous, ever came-up to. There were Five Hundred Thousand Men Slain upon the Place; a Victory never to be forgotten: Their Strongest Towns Taken and Rifled; Bethel, and Ithen, with their Dependancies. After this Blow, Jeroboam was so Broken, that he was never able to make any further Attempt so long as Abias was Living; who dy'd not long after in the Third Year of his Reign, and was Bury'd at Jerusalem, in the Sepulchre of his Ancestors. He left Two and Twenty Sons behind him, and Sixteen Daughters; which he had all by fourteen Women. Asa his Son succeeded him, whose Mother's Name was Maacha; and under his Government, the Israelites Enjoy'd a Ten-Years Peace.

In this Interim Jeroboam slips-of a Detachment to fall upon the King's Rear, whereupon they go to their Prayers. The Priests sound a Charge; fall-on, and give the Enemy an Absolute Rout: 500000 Men Kill'd upon the Place; and their strong Towns Taken. Abias Dies, and his Son Asa succeeds to the Government.

This is all that we find Written of Abias; and after him dy'd Jeroboam, the King of the Ten Tribes, in the Second year of the Reign of Asa, and the Two and Twentieth of his Own. His Son Nadab Succeeded him, and liv'd in a kind of Competition for Malice and Impiety, with the Character of his Father, and Reigned only Two Years: In which time he led-out an Army against Gabathon a City of the Philistins upon an Opinion that he might take it by a Siege; but in the mean time, he was Cut-off by the Treachery of a Familiar Friend, whose Name was Baasha, the Son of Machel; who Siez'd upon the Government, and destroy'd the Whole Family; which made good the Words of the Prophet, That the Dogs should Eat him of Jeroboam's Stock that Dy'd in the City, and that the Fowls of the Air should eat him that dy'd in the Field. This was the End of Jeroboam, and his Family; and the Judgment was Just upon them for their Impious Apostacy.

The End of Jeroboam, and his Family.

CHAP. VI.

Asa the King of Judæa was an Excellent Person. He gave a very Great Overthrow to Zaræus the King of Æthiopia. The King of Damascus joyns against Baasha the King of Israel, who is Murder'd by Creon; and Elah, his Son and Successor, Assassinated by Zimri.

ASA, the King of Jerusalem, was a Man so conscientiously strict, both in his Religion, and in his Morals, that he led a Life, in Word, Thought, and Deed, in a most Scrupulous Conformity to the Laws of God and Nature. He Rectify'd All that he found amiss in his Government; Purg'd his Dominions from All Extravagant Lusts, and Foreign Abominations. He had a select Body of Men armed with Lances and Shields, to the Number of Three Hundred Thousand, of the Tribe of Judah; and of the Tribe of Benjamin he had Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand with Bows and Bucklers. In the Tenth Year of his Reign, Zaræus, a King of Æthiopia, marched against him with an Army of Nine Hundred Thousand Foot, One Hundred Thousand Horse, and Three Hundred Chariots. When he was Advanc'd as far as Maresa, a City in the Dependancy of Judah, Asa went out to meet him, and Rang'd his Army not far from the City, in a certain Valley called Saphatha. Upon the Sight of so prodigious a Multitude of Men, Asa called out to God for his Assistance, and that he would vouchsafe to Prosper his Arms, and give him Victory over so formidable an Enemy: for it was wholly in a Dependance upon his Divine Goodness that he had now undertaken This Enterprize; concluding with an Ejaculation, that he wholly Resign'd Himself to his Blessed Pleasure, whose Power was more than sufficient to supply the Want either of Strength or Number. Upon this Prayer of Asa's, God was pleased to Encourage him with a Token and Assurance of Victory.

A Promise and Assurance of Victory.

In this Confidence, Asa Charg'd the Enemy, and with so great Bravery, that with a mighty Slaughter, and a total Rout, he pursu'd them to the Plain of Gerar: And there quitting the Pursuit, he Took, and Rifled Gerar it self, and likewise the Enemy's Camp, with a vast Booty in Gold, Camels, Flocks and Herds. Upon Gaining this Mighty Victory, through the Goodness of Divine Providence, the King Returned with his Army to Jerusalem, laden with the Spoil. As they were upon the Way, not far from the Place, the Prophet Azariah call'd to them to make a Stand, and then told them as follows. God hath been pleased, says he, to bless you with this Glorious Victory, in Consideration of your Justice, your Piety, and your Obedience to his Will and Commandments; and if you go-on as you have begun, you may expect the same Providential Advantages and Successes in all your Affairs for the Time to come. But if ever you Falter in your Religion, you will find in all respects the clear contrary; and that the Time will come, wherein there shall not be a True Prophet among you, nor a Priest answerable to the Dignity of his Function. Your Cities shall be laid level with the Ground; your Nation scatter'd like Vagabonds over the Earth, without any Seat or Habitation that they can call their Own. Wherefore, says he, let me advise you while you have Time, to apply your selves to the Study and Practice of Virtue: and finally, to joyn with Thanksgiving in the Acknowledgment and Enjoyment of the Blessings of God's Favour. These Words of the Prophet were a great Rejoycing to the Hearts both of King and People; who thereupon made it their express Business, publick and private, One and All, to keep their Religion Sacred, and Inviolate, in the Observance of the Laws: In order to which End, the King had his Commissioners every where up and down thorough his Dominions, to attend that Care and Duty.

A Discourse upon the Blessings of Obedience, and the Danger of Faltering in Matters of Religion.

This was the Posture of Asa's Affairs, the King of the Two Tribes. I shall now return to Baasha, the King of the Israelites: He, that when he had Kill'd Nadab the Son of Jeroboam, seiz'd the Kingdom to his own Use. This Prince Reigned Four Years, and his Palace was in Tarshish: a Man, that for all sorts of Lewdness and Impiety, went beyond either Jeroboam, or his Son; a Tyrannical Oppressor of his People, and of a Stubborn and Contumacious Spirit toward God himself: Insomuch that the Word of the Lord came to Gimon the Prophet, commanding him to tell Baasha, that God had fully determin'd to Root out him and his Family from off the Earth, as he had done Jeroboam before him, for his Ingratitude to That Power and Goodness that raised him to the Throne; and for his Tyranny and Impiety in the Exercise of his Government, without any regard to Righteousness, or Justice: Two Virtues that are above all others, the most acceptable to God, and profitable to the People; telling him further, that since he thought fit to make Jeroboam his Example for all manner of Iniquity, it was but reasonable to have him as Exemplary in his Misery and Punishment. Baasha, after all these frightful Denouncings, stood his Ground, as if it had been a Point of Honour to Affront his Maker; and as if the Prophet had rather promiſed him a Reward for his Wickedneſs, then Threaten'd him with the ſtroke of ſo dreadful a Vengeance. So that he went-on ſtill, heaping Sins upon Sins, and every day worſe then other, without any Care or Thought how to Avert the Judgment, and Reconcile himſelf to God: nay without the leaſt Motion, or Diſpoſition toward Amendment, or Repentance. In the Concluſion, he march'd with an Army to Ramath, a Place of ſome Note, and a matter of ſome Forty Furlongs from Jeruſalem. He Took it, and Fortify'd it, with an Intent to make it the Seat of the War, as a commodious Station for the Advantage of making Inroads into the Dominions of Aſa. Now Aſa was not without ſome Apprehenſion of the Quality of his Deſign; and computing with himſelf how Great a Danger the Neighbourhood of ſo powerful an Army might bring upon his Country, he ſent Embaſſadors preſently to the King of Damaſcus, with Mony and Preſents, inviting him over to his Allyance, out of a Reſpect to the former Friendſhip that had been betwixt thoſe Two Families. This King receiv'd the Mony and Preſents; brake-off with Baaſha, and enter'd into a League with Aſa; ſending an Army ſome ſhort time after, into the Territory of Baaſha; fell upon his Towns and Strong Holds in That Hurry; Burning ſome, and Rifling others, as Achion, Dan, and Abelmaen. Upon the News of this Incurſion, the King of the Iſraelites quitted Ramath, and went back to look to himſelf nearer Home: but Aſa Erected Two Strong Towns there out of the Materials that Baaſha left behind him; calling the one Gaba, and the other Maſpha. This was the laſt of Baaſha's Military Adventures; for he was cut-off by Creon, and bury'd in the City of Arſanes; his Son Elah ſucceeding him: He himſelf being afterward Treacherouſly ſlain by Zimri, the Maſter of one Diviſion of his Horſe, in the Second Year of his Reign, as he was Drinking with Oſa, the Steward of his Houſe; a Troup of Horſe breaking in upon him, in the Abſence of his Guards and Officers, who were then abroad at the Siege of Gabathon, a City of the Philiſtins.

ZIMRI, after this Exploit, advanced himſelf from Maſter of the Horſe, to the Throne; and according to the Prediction of Gimon, totally extinguiſhed the Whole Race of Baaſha; which was utterly Rooted-out for their Wickedneſs, after the Method of the Deſtruction that befel Jeroboam. The News of the King's Death coming to Gabathon when the Army was before the Town, and that Zimri, the Aſſaſſin, had taken the Government to himſelf, the Army preſently choſe Omri, the Captain of the Guards, for their King; who Raiſes the Siege, and immediately goes away to Tirzah, and takes it by Storm. Zimri finding the City without a Guard, withdraws himſelf into a Private Apartment in the Palace; gives Fire to't, and Burns himſelf and the Houſe together. This was in the Seventh Day of his Reign. All things were now in a Confuſion, and the People immediately divided into two Factions; the One was for Thaman, and the other for Omri: but the Latter Carry'd it; for Thaman was ſlain, and Omri had the whole Government to himſelf. This was in the Thirtieth Year of the Reign of Aſa; and Omri Govern'd Twelve Years; Six at Tirzah, and the reſt at Mareon; which the Greeks call Samaria. He gave it the Name of Samareon, from Samar, the Man's Name that ſold the Mountain whereupon it was Built. He differ'd little from the Former Kings, but in the degree of being ſtill Worſe; for they All made it their Bus'neſs to Alienate the People's Hearts from the Love and Service of God, by the Repeated Practices of Daily Wickedneſs: Wherefore God in his Wrath made uſe of them Succeſſively for the Deſtruction one of another; till in the End, the whole Race was Extinct. This Prince dy'd at Samaria, and Ahab his Son Reigned in his ſtead. In the Courſe of this Reſolution, we are given to Underſtand how the Wiſdom and Providence of God interpoſes in Humane Affairs, and in Show'ring down Bleſſings upon the Righteous, and in the Utter Extirpation of the Wicked. For the Kings of the Iſraelites were in a ſhort time Cut-off, with their Whole Families, by the Hands of one another: only Aſa the King of Jeruſalem, and of the Two Tribes, liv'd happily, and in the Favour of God, to a Great Age, in Conſideration of his Piety and Juſtice; and after a Reign of One and Forty Years, Departed this Life with Comfort. Ahab Rul'd 22 Years. His Abode at Samaria.

A Punctual Imitator of Jeroboam.

Ahab, the King of the Iſraelites, took-up his Abode at Samaria, where he Ruled Two and Twenty Years, without any Innovation in the Government, ſaving only where he made things Worſe then he found them. He was a Faithful Imitator of the worſt of his Predeceſſors in the worſt of things, and moſt particularly of Jeroboam: not only in the Worſhiping of his Golden Calves, but in the multiplying and ſuperadding of other Heinous Offences. He took to Wife Jezebel, the Daughter of Eth-baal then King of Tyre and Sidon, who drew him over to the Idolatry of Worſhipping her Country-Gods. She was a Woman of a Raſh, Enterprizing Humour; and of ſo Impetuous, and Ungovernable a Spirit, that ſhe had the Confidence to Erect a Temple to Baal, the God of the Tyrians; to Plant Groves for Superſtition, of all ſorts of Trees, and to appoint her Prieſts and Falſe Prophets Expreſly for that Idolatrous Service. Now theſe were a ſort of People that the King was well enough pleas'd to have about him; being a Man Violently bent upon any Daring or Malicious Wickedneſs, beyond all that ever went before him. There came to Ahab, about that Time, a Certain Prophet. He was a Tiſhbite, and born in the City of Gilead. His Meſſage was to tell the King, that from the time of his going away, there ſhould not be one Drop of Rain, or ſo much as the Leaſt Sign of a Dew in that Province, till he came back again; confirming his Prediction with a ſtrong Aſſeveration, that ſo it ſhould be. So ſoon as he had deliver'd his Errand, he went away to the Southward, till he came to a Torrent, where he might Supply himſelf with Water, and there he ſtop'd for the Preſent; the Ravens, time after time, bringing him Meat. The Drought Continuing and Encreaſing, the Channel was dry'd-up; whereupon God warned the Prophet to Remove to Sareptha, which is a Town betwixt Tyre and Sidon: a Voice from Heaven foretelling him, that he ſhould find a Widow-Woman there that would feed and provide for him. He follow'd his Order, and being come almoſt to the End of his Journy, ſpy'd a Poor Woman gathering of Sticks, not far from the Port, which Woman he underſtood by a Divine Impulſe, was to be his Nurſe: So he call'd to her to give him a little Water to drink; and as ſhe was going to Fetch it, he ſpake to her again to bring him a little Bread too. The Woman ſolemnly proteſted to him, that ſhe had nothing in the Houſe, but one Handful of Meal, and a little Oyl, and that ſhe was now getting a Few Sticks for a Fire to bake a Cake of it for her ſelf, and her Son; and when that was Eaten, they muſt even Starve; for ſhe had not One Bit more in the World. Well! ſays the Prophet, Good Woman go thy ways with a good Heart, and Hope for Better things, and bring me a Piece of it when it is ready; for I do aſſure thee that when we have all Eaten our Fill, thy Barrel ſhall never be without Meal nor thy Cruiſe without Oyl, till God ſhall ſend Rain upon the Earth. The Woman did as the Prophet bad her, and found his Words to be True; for they had all Three their Bellies-full, and the Proviſion was ſtill Recruited again as it Waſted, till This Miſerable Drought was over. Menander ſpeaks of it in the Hiſtory of Eth-baal a King of the Tyrians. In his Time, ſays he, there was an extreme Drought for want of Rain, that laſted from the Month of Hyperberetæus, till the ſame Month again next Year. There were Prayers indeed put up for the Averting of the Judgment, which were follow'd with Mighty Claps of Thunder. This Prince built Botrys in Phœnicia, and Auzates in Africa. This was undoubtedly the Drought under Ahab; for it was in his Reign that Eth-baal was King of Tyre, as Menander has it in his Commentaries.

At, or about this time, the Woman's Son of the Houſe fell deſperately ſick; and the Mother, in a paſſionate Extravagance of Raging and Exclaiming for the Loſs of her Boy, laid the Blame upon the Prophet. This Man, ſays ſhe, that I have entertain'd, hath diſcover'd my Sins, and now brought this Judgment upon me. The Child being abſolutely given over for Dead, the Prophet bad the Woman comfort her ſelf, and deliver-up her Son into his Arms; with an Aſſurance that he would ſuddenly Reſtore him to her Alive again. He took him up, and carry'd him into his Chamber; laid him upon his Bed, and Offer'd-up a Prayer to God for him. Lord! (ſays he) This will look like an Ill Requital to my Preſerver, to have her Son taken from her while I am in the Family: Be Pleaſed in thy Infinite Goodneſs to Reſtore this Innocent Creature to Life again. God was pleaſed upon the Prophet's Supplication, beyond all Thoughts, or Expectation, to call the Child to Life again, that the Poor Woman might not have any Misfortune to complain of while the Prophet was in the Family. The Child, upon this Prayer, was Reviv'd, and the Woman with Great Thankfulneſs to the Prophet, found her ſelf now fully Convinc'd, ſhe ſaid, that he was Authoriz'd and Directed by the Spirit of God.

The Prophet tells Ahab, there ſhall be ſuddenly Rain. 1 Kings 18.

The Prophet, a While after this was ſent to Ahab to tell him, that there ſhould Suddenly be Rain. The Famine was now ſo pinching all over the Country, and ſo General a Scarcity of all Neceſſaries for Life, that not only the People were ready to Starve for want of Bread; but the very Cattel alſo, and other Animals upon the Point of Periſhing, for want of Food and Forage; ſo Parching was the Drought every where. In this Diſtreſs, the King ſent for Obadiah, the Overſeer of his Stables and his Grounds, to come to him, and to ſearch every where about the Brooks and Rivers for Graſs for his Horſes and Herds; Charging him by all means to get Elias the Prophet to him; whom they had been looking up and down for, but could not find him: So the King walk'd-on, and Bad his Bayliff follow him; and when they had gone a while together, the King ſtruck-off into one way, and Obadiah into Another. This Obadiah was a very Good and Holy Man; and at the time when Queen Jezebel was in the Heat of her Bloudy Perſecution againſt the Prophets, he Conceal-ed and Protected a Hundred of them in Caves, and fed them with Bread and Water. The King and Obadiah were no ſooner Parted, but the Latter met Elias upon the way; and finding who he was, by his Anſwer to the Queſtion, he did him Reve-rence. The Prophet after a while, deſir'd Obadiah to go to the King and tell him that he was a-coming. Why what have I done, ſays Obadiah, to be ſent of ſuch an Er-rand, to a Perſon that is at this time looking after you to put you to Death? And there is no Torment you are not to Expect whenever he Catches you. But what now, when I go to the King, if the Spirit that Governs you as it pleaſes, ſhould carry you Another way; and when you are not to be found, my Head lies at ſtake to Anſwer for you? Pray be not ſo Indifferent in a caſe where my Life is in ſo much Danger. You may aſſure your ſelf, I do not want Affection for your Party, that ran the Riſque of Preſerving a Hundred of your Prophets from the Rage of Jezebel, and to this Day maintain them in Caves upon my own Account. Well, ſays the Prophet, Fear nothing; but go to the King, upon my ſolemn Oath, and Promiſe that I will come to him. So ſoon as Ahab underſtood that Elias was there, he mended his Pace, and in Haſte and Indignation, Marching toward him, call'd out: Are you, ſays he, at this day the Troubler of Iſrael? Are you the Occa-ſion of this Drought, and Famine? Elias told him, with Liberty and Aſſurance, that it was Ahab himſelf, and his Family, and their bringing-in of Foreign and Falſe Gods; and the Suppreſſing of the True Religion; that was the Cauſe of all their Miſery. Pray, ſays the Prophet, will you give Order for All the People to meet in a Congregation upon Mount Carmel, and let your Own, and your Wife's Prophets be there alſo; (expreſſing the very Number of them.) Summon likewiſe the Prophets of your Groves, (about Four Hun-dred more or leſs.) The King Summoned them, and they met accordingly: Elias ſtanding in the Middle of the Throng, and calling out to them after this Manner. How long, ſays he, will you ſtand Wavering betwixt Two Opinions. If you believe Ours to be the True and the only God, Obey him, and keep his Commandments; or if you are rather of Opinion for the Worſhipping of Strange Gods, take what you like. The People ma-king no Anſwer to what he ſaid, Elias went-on, and proceeded to this Challenge. If, ſays he, you have a mind to be Certainly Aſſur'd which Worſhip is the Right, Yours or Ours; Here do I ſtand a Single Prophet on the One ſide, to defend the Cauſe againſt Three Hundred on the Other. I will take an Oxe and lay it upon a Pile of Wood, without put-ting any Fire to it: Let them do the ſame thing, and call upon their God's to ſet their Pile in a Flame. By this means you will be able to diſtinguiſh the True from the Falſe. The People were well enough pleas'd with the Experiment, and Elias bad Ahab's Prophets take an Oxe, as is ſaid before, and call upon their Gods by their Names, giving them the Precedency of being the Firſt to offer up the Sacrifice. When they had Pray'd, and call'd a good while, and without any Effect, Elias turn'd their Superſtition to Ridicule, and bad them Cry out Louder; for their Gods might poſſibly be upon a Journey, or Aſleep perhaps. At This rate they went on, with Out-cries and Exclamations, from Morning till Noon, cutting and lancing their Bodies, after the Cuſtom of their Way of Worſhipping; and all to no manner of purpoſe. Now when it came to the Other's Turn to Sacrifice, and theſe Phanatical Oblations were taken away, Elias ſpake to the Multitude to draw nearer, and to ſpy every where if they could find any Fire that was ſecretly convey'd there. Upon their Coming-up, Elias took Twelve Stones to anſwer the Number of the Twelve Tribes, and Erected an Altar out of them, cutting a deep Ditch about it. The Wood was Fitted, and laid upon the Altar; the Sacrifice upon the Pile, and Four Veſſels of Fountain-Water caſt upon the Altar; ſo that it ran-off, and fill'd the Trenches. When every Thing was ready, Eli-as call'd upon God, and beſought him to ſhew his Power now for the Conviction of a Miſta-ken and Unbelieving People. While the Words were yet between his Lips, there fell a Fire, as from Heaven, down upon the Altar, that in the ſight of the People Con-ſum'd the Sacrifice, and dry'd-up all the Water, about the Altar, and in the Ditch.

Elias Orders the 400 Prophets to be put to Death.

When the King was gone, Elias went up to the Top of Carmel; where he sat down upon the Ground, and laying his Head upon his Knees, order'd his Servant to get-up to a Rock toward the Sea, and look about him, if he could see ever a Cloud. He went up again and again; but still saw nothing: at last, after the Seventh Time, looking about him, he said he saw something Blackish in the Air about the Bigness of a Man's Hand. So soon as Elias heard That, he sent away immediately to Ahab, to make Haste to the City; for he would be taken in a very great Shower else: and by the time he was come to the City of Jezreel, the whole Air was dark and overcast, and there fell immediately a pouring Rain. The Prophet, in the mean time, by the special Assistance of God, ran before Ahab's Chariot, till he came to Jezreel.

1 Kings 19. Jezebel threatens Elias for the Death of her Prophets. Elias flies to Beersheba.

When it came to the Ear of Jezebel, the Wife of Ahab, what Wonders Elias had done, and how he had kill'd all her Prophets, she sent him Threat'ning Messages, that His Life should answer for Theirs. Elias, upon these Menaces, fled to Beersheba, which is in the farthest Part of Judæa, and bordering upon Idumæa: in which place he left his Servant, and so went away into the Wilderness, where he laid himself down, as a Man weary of Life, and calling for Death. Lord! says he, I am not better then those that are gone before me; and I find no Temptations left me to the Desire of longer Life. So he laid himself down under a Tree, and there fell asleep, till some thing or some body waken'd him, he knew not How, nor for What; and upon Raising himself, he found Meat and Drink set before him, which he fed heartily upon, and in the strength of That Refreshment he went forward to Mount Sinai, the Place where, according to our Tradition, God deliver'd the Law to Moses. There was a large convenient Cave there, which he enter'd into, with some Thought of taking it up for his Habitation. While he was there, the Question was put to him, how he came to leave the City, and wander thus in the Desert. He heard the Voice distinctly; but whence it came he knew not. His Answer was, that, upon the Killing of the False Prophets, and Preaching the Doctrine to the People of only One God, and That God only to be Worshiped, the Queen for this Crime Threaten'd to have him put to Death. He was Commanded after this, by the same Voice, to quit the Cavern the next Day, and receive his Instructions how to Govern himself for the Future. The Day following, he came out from his Retreat; and immediately upon it, there was a Great Earthquake, and after the Earthquake, the Appearance in the Air of a Blazing Fire; which Fire was follow'd with a little Pause of Silence, and after That a still Voice, bidding him fear Nothing, for his Enemies should not prevail against him; and so Commanded him back again, by the Way of Damascus, and there to Anoint Hazael King of Aram: And Jehu the Son of Nimshi King over Israel; and to Anoint Elisha also, of Abel, Prophet in his room: for that God was Resolved to Root out all the Wicked from the Land by the Stroke of Divine Justice; and those that scap'd the Sword of Jehu, to fall by that of Hazael. Upon these Words Elias presently return'd according to his Order, and found Elisha the Son of Shaphat ploughing, in company of others, with Twelve Yoke of Oxen. He went to him, and Casting his Cloak over him, Elisha immediately began to Prophecy; quitted his Oxen, and Presented himself to follow him: only desiring to take leave of his Father and Mother before he departed for good and all. This was granted him, and upon his Return from his Parents, he became thenceforward a Disciple and Companion to Elias: which shall suffice at present for the State of his Affairs.

The Doctrine of one God is the Crime laid to the Charge of Elias.

It happen'd that one Naboth of [a] Jezreel had a Vineyard near the Palace of Ahab, the King of Samaria, which lay contiguous to the King's Grounds. Ahab had a mighty Mind to take this Parcel of Land into his own Gardens, and so was often at Naboth to let him have it, either in Exchange for some Equivalent in another Place, or otherwise for a Sum of Mony. Naboth excus'd himself, that it was his Inheritance, and in so particular a manner the Gift of Providence, that he could not part with it, either for Mony, or otherwise. This Disappointment upon another Man's Estate, was as much to Ahab, as if he had lost his own: insomuch that he fell sad, and sick upon it; refusing to Bathe as he used to do, and forsaking his Meat. Jezebel, upon This Change, became very Sollicitous and Inquisitive to know the true Reason of so wonderful an Alteration, that her Husband should all on a sudden give over Washing as he us'd to do, and forsake his Meat: So that upon her Importunity, he told her the Story of Naboth, and how Brutishly and sawcily he had behav'd himself. I gave him, says Ahab, the Best Words in the World, and in truth treated him, even below the Majesty jeſty of a King. I ſpeak him Fair, in fine, and all I got by't was to be put-off at laſt with a Repulſe. The Queen, on the other ſide, hearten'd him up to come to Himſelf again, and bad him never Trouble his Head further in the Caſe; for ſhe would undertake to bring it about Herſelf, and Naboth ſhould never carry-off this Affront Gratis. Hereupon ſhe wrote Letters in Ahab's Name to the Elders and Chief Men of Jezreel, to this Purpoſe; That they ſhould Proclaim a Faſt, call an Aſſembly, and aſſign Naboth a Place there among the Principal Men of the People: That they ſhould have Three Witneſſes ready, that would Swear any thing, to give Evidence againſt him, for ſpeaking Blaſphemy againſt God and the King; upon which Teſtimony he ſhould ſtand Convict, and receive Sentence to be ſton'd to Death by the People. Every thing was done according to the Queen's Direction, and Naboth Convict, Sentenc'd, and Ston'd. Jezebel inſtantly upon the News of this Succeſs, went her way to the King, and told him that Naboth's Work was now done, and that he might take Poſſeſſion of the Vineyard when he pleas'd, without beating any more Bargains for the Price. Ahab was ſo Overjoy'd at what Jezebel told him, that the Firſt thing he did was to take a Journy to his new Purchaſe; but God ſent Elias to him in his Wrath, to Charge him with the Murther of the True Owner of that Vineyard, and the Iniquity of his Uſurping upon the Poſſeſſion. When Ahab ſaw the Prophet coming toward him, he went to him of himſelf with a Confeſſion in his Mouth, and a Tender of any Satisfaction the Prophet ſhould require. This he did to prevent the Other's beginning with him. Elias told him, by the Direction, and in the Name of God, that where the Dogs licked the Blood of Naboth, they ſhould lick alſo the Blood of Ahab and Jezebel; and that the Whole Race ſhould be Rooted out for this Flagitious Cruelty, in taking away the Life of an Innocent Man by Calumny and Subornation. Theſe Words of the Prophet brought Ahab to the Senſe of a True, and of a Sincere Repentance. He mortify'd himſelf in Sackcloth and Faſting, going Bare-foot, and giving all Manifeſtation of a Hearty Sorrow for his Sins. So that God ſent the Prophet once again to him with Another Meſſage; and to let him know, that in regard of his Penitence and Humiliation, the Judgment Denounced ſhould not be Executed in his Days; but in the Days of his Son, it ſhould All come to paſs. Upon theſe Words the Prophet went his way.

Adad beſieges Ahab in Samaria, and is beaten-off. He is Worſted again the Next Year, and flies to Ahab for Mercy; who treats him Kindly, and Diſmiſſes him; which the Prophet reproves him for.

1 Kings 20.

WHile Matters went thus with Ahab, Adad the King of Syria and Damaſcus levy'd a Mighty Army out of his Whole Kingdom; and being Joyned by Two and Thirty Confederate Kings beyond the Euphrates, he Marched with this Mighty Force againſt Ahab, who did not think it Reaſonable upon ſo Vaſt an Odds of Number to Venture a Battle in the Plain Field; but choſe rather to draw his Military Men out of the Open Country into Strong Holds, and Fortify'd Towns; and to keep themſelves upon the Defenſive. He himſelf made Choice of Samaria for his Capital, which he reſolved to make good. The Place was Strong by Situation, Good Walls, and Good Works about it, and a Good Gariſon to maintain it. The Syrian brought his Army before it, and began in Form to make his Attacques, ſending a Herald to Ahab at the ſame time, for Licenſe to Diſpatch Embaſſadors to him, with Inſtructions to Propoſe what he ſhould demand. This was Granted, and the Embaſſadors ſent, and Receiv'd; having a Commiſſion, as they ſaid, to tell him, that his Treaſure, his Wives and his Children were all at Adad's Mercy; and that if he would Acknowledge as much, and permit the Other to take what he thought fit out of them, he would inſtantly Quit the Siege, and withdraw his Army. Ahab ſent the Embaſſadors back with this Anſwer; that he himſelf, and all he had was at their Maſter's Service. The Syrian, after This Demand and Return, ſent yet Another Embaſſy; which was, that upon ſending his Officers, and Servants to him next Morning, they ſhould have Free Liberty to ſearch all his Own Lodgings, with the Houſes, and Apartments of all his Relations, and Domeſtiques, and to take away with them whatever they ſhould think Worth the While; and for the Remainder, Ahab might keep it to himſelf.

This Meſſage was the leſs troubleſome to Ahab, becauſe it gave him a fair Occaſion of calling a Council, and furniſh'd him with Matter for a very plauſible and ſeaſonable Debate. Look you Friends, ſays he, I have had two Propoſals ſent me from Adad;

Ahab calls a Council upon't.

the former for an Acknowledgment that my Self, my Wives, and Children, are all at his mercy; and upon the Terms of ſuch a Confeſſion, he was to Raiſe the Siege. Now all this I yielded to, as I would part with any thing of my own Intereſt for the ſake of the Publique Peace, and the Common Good of my People: but they are now come-up to Inſiſt upon a General Search and Riſle; out of a meer captious Humour, to pick a Quarrel with us: and Nothing leſs, they ſay, will do. They began at firſt with my own particular Concerns, out of an Opinion I would have ſtuck there: but I am now to Deliver-up my Country and my People alſo, which they know I will never do; and ſo That muſt be the Riſe of a War. But I am ready and reſolv'd at laſt to do only what you ſhall adviſe me to. The Council cry'd out upon the Inſolency of this Barbarian, with all the Contempt imaginable; and gave their Voices unanimouſly for a downright War: So the Embaſſadors were ſent away with this Anſwer, That the King would yet agree to their firſt Demands; but that for the Security and Honour of the Citizens, he would never Conſent to the Other. Adad was ſo nettled at this Anſwer, that he ſent a third Embaſſy, which was much more peremptory and menacing then the former. Tell their King, ſays Adad, that he values himſelf upon the Strength and Security of his Walls; but that I will, before he is aware, caſt-up Works that ſhall over-top them; and that it will be but every Soldier a Handful of Earth to do his Buſ'neſs; giving to underſtand the Incredible Number of his People: To which Ahab reply'd, that Men of Honour were to Diſpute with their Swords, not with their Tongues. Adad happen'd to be at Supper with his Two and Thirty Confederate Kings, upon the Embaſſador's Arrival with this Anſwer: and he gave Orders in the ſame moment for the Siege, and the Works; and for the doing of every thing, in fine, that might conduce to the Taking of the Town. Ahad in the mean while, and his Party, were as much down, and hopeleſs, as Men could well be, till a certain Prophet came to him and rouz'd him with an Aſſurance from God, that he ſhould prevail againſt that Prodigious Army. Ahab was now deſirous to know by what Hands This Victory ſhould be Obtain'd. By the Sons, ſays he, of the Nobility, and You your ſelf in the Head of them. So the King call'd them together to the Number of Two Hundred Thirty Two: and Ahad having Information that the Syrian was in the height of his Cups and Luxury, the Gates were thrown open of a ſudden, and theſe Heroes made a Sally. The Information of This was no ſooner brought to Adad, but he forthwith ſent out a Party toward them with Orders, that whether they came to Fight or to Treat, they ſhould bring them Bound to him. Ahab in the mean time had the reſt of his Army in readineſs within the Walls, to iſſue out upon Occaſion. Theſe Great Officer's Sons firſt Engag'd with the Guards, Kill'd a great many of them, and Purſu'd the reſt up to their Tents. When the King of Iſrael found that they ſucceeded thus far ſo well, he iſſu'd-out with the Remainder of the Army, and made a Furious Charge upon the Syrians; Took them at unawares, and Routed them without any Difficulty, having only Men in Drink, and without Arms, to deal withal: So that they were forc'd to run for their Lives; Adad himſelf getting-off only by the Swiftneſs of his Horſe. They had, in ſhort, the Chaſe of them a great way, killing thoſe they overtook; and ſo with a mighty rich Booty of Gold, Silver, and Equipages that they took in the Tents, and the very Chariots and Horſes of Adad, they March'd back again to the City. The Prophet however adviſed the King after all this, to have an Army in Readineſs to take the Field next Spring; for Adad would give him Occaſion for it. So Ahab prepares vigorouſly for it on the one hand; and Adad calls his Friends together on the other, with the Remains of his broken Army, to adviſe how to manage it. Adad's Friends were againſt his Fighting any more in the Mountains; for the Iſraelites God, they ſaid, was the God of the Mountains: but if they had fought upon the Plains, the Iſraelites would have been worſted. They gave Counſel alſo for the Diſcharging of the Confederate Princes from any further Perſonal Service and Attendance; only their Troops to ſtay, and be ſupply'd with good Officers in the Head of them; and in the Mean Time, their Commanders might be Levying Recruits of Horſe and Foot to fill-up their ſhatter'd Companies. The King was well enough pleas'd with this Advice, and ſo apply'd himſelf to his Preparations. The Spring being now at hand, he march'd his Army againſt the Hebrews, and pitch'd his Camp in a large Plain, according to the Advice of his Prophets, not far from the City of Apheca. Ahad in the mean time, with his Troups, advanced, and drew-up juſt over-againſt him, though many Thouſands ſhort of the Number of the Syrians. While they were Facing one another, the Prophet came to the Hebrews, with an Aſſurance from God, that they ſhould be Victorious, and that the Enemies ſhould find the God of the Mountains to be the God of the Valleys too. The Armies continu'd for Six Days in the ſame Station without Moving; and upon the Seventh they Advanc'd on both ſides in a Line, and ſtruck the Battle. It was hard fought at firſt; but when the Syrians found that they were not able to ſtand the Shock any longer, they Betwixt thoſe, in fine, that were Slain upon the Purſuit, and thoſe that Periſh'd by Miſadventure in the Confuſion of their Flight, by their own Chariots and Men; ſome torn to pieces, others trampled upon, and trod to Death, the Calamity was very great. Thoſe that got into Apheca, the only Place they had to fly to, were not many, conſidering ſo mighty a Body of Men; and then they reckon about Seven and Twenty Thouſand Bury'd under the Ruins of the Walls; beſide a matter of a Hundred Thouſand that were Slain in the Battle.

Adad, with ſome of his Truſtieſt Officers and Servants, got into a Cave and hid himſelf, where ſome of thoſe about him took-up a Diſcourſe of the Natural Humanity and Good Nature of the Hebrews; and upon the Iſſue, adviſed their Maſter to caſt himſelf at Ahab's Feet for Mercy, in Confidence that upon ſuch an Application and Submiſſion, it would not be refus'd him. The King agreed to try the Experiment, and thereupon ſo many of his Train were immediately dreſs'd-up in the Guiſe and Habit of Supplicants and Captives, clothed in Sackcloth, and Halters about their Necks, according to the Cuſtom of the Country in ſuch Caſes, and ſent to Ahab with a Commiſſion to tell him that Adad was his Priſoner, and would ever own himſelf ſo to be; and that they came in his Name, only to Implore his Grace toward him for the ſaving of his Life. Well, ſays Ahab, I am glad he is ſafe; and you may aſſure him, that he ſhall be as Welcome to me, as if he were my own Brother.

The Meſſengers, upon the Solemnity of a Sacred Oath that no Violence ſhould be offer'd to his Perſon, went away preſently to their Maſter in the Cellar, and brought him out to the King of Iſrael; who was at that Time in his Chariot. So ſoon as the Priſoner had made his Obeiſance, Ahab bow'd himſelf to receive him, taking him up to him with his Right Hand, and Kiſſing him, giving him his Faith and Honour alſo for his Abſolute Security and Freedom. Adad, on the other ſide, returning as large Acknowledgments, with repeated Proteſtations, that This Generoſity and Goodneſs ſhould never be forgotten: And in the mean time, he ſaid, he would Reſtore again to the Hebrews all the Cities and Lands that had been Taken from them; and that Ahab ſhould be as Free at Damaſcus, as ever the Other's Father had been at Samaria. Upon this, they proceeded to the Signing and Sealing of a League, and the Reciprocal Interchange of Oaths for the Performance of Covenants; and ſo Adad was Diſmiſs'd, not without magnificent Preſents.

After this Blow given to the Syrians, a certain Prophet, whoſe Name was Micaiah, came to an Iſraelite, and bad him ſtrike him over the Head; telling him withal, that it was God's Will to have it ſo: But the Man refuſing to do it, the Prophet told him, he ſhould pay dear for his Diſobedience; for he would come to be worried by a Lyon. This fell-out accordingly; and the Prophet, with the ſame Words in his Mouth, went afterwards to Another; who immediately gave him a Blow that drew Bloud of him. Upon this, he bound up his Head, and went to the King with this Story, That he was a Soldier, and a certain Officer had deliver'd him a Priſoner to keep, who had made his Eſcape, and he himſelf was now forc'd to fly for't; for fear the Officer that committed him to his Cuſtody, ſhould put him to Extremities now for letting him go. Well, ſays Ahab, and he ſhould ſerve you but Right neither: Upon which Words, the Prophet unbound his Head, to give Ahab to underſtand that he that told him this Story was Micaiah. He made uſe of this way of Parable to Faſten the Deeper Impreſſion upon him; telling him in the End, that God would call him to a ſevere Account, for letting go ſo Impious and Blaſphemous a Wretch as Adad, when he had him in his Power; for the Time will come, ſays the Prophet, when This very Adad that you have now ſpar'd, ſhall be the Death of you your ſelf, and the Deſtruction of your Army. Ahab was highly Exaſperated at this Liberty of the Prophet, and order'd him to be Impriſon'd; but he went home however with a heavy Heart, for this diſmal Prediction would not out of his Head.

CHAP. IX.

The Piety, Good Fortune, and Power of Jehoſhaphat. His Son Joram Marries the Daughter of the King of Iſrael, and joyns in a War with Ahab againſt Adad.

TO Return now from the Story of Ahab, and his Matters, to Jehoſhaphat King of Jeruſalem; This Prince had not only Enlarged his Territory, and put Gariſons into all the Cities under his Juriſdiction: but he had put Men and Governours into Thoſe alſo in the Land of Ephraim, that his Grandfather Abias had taken from Jeroboam, the King of the Ten Tribes. This King never fail'd of God's Bleſſing and Protection in any of his Undertakings; for he was a juſt and a pious Man, and not a Day paſs'd over his Head without doing ſome good Thing or other that was Acceptable to God. This Integrity of his Life and Manners gave him a very high Reputation among all the Neighbouring Kings, as appeared by the Frequency and Munificence of their Preſents; which not a little contributed to the Advancing even of his Fortune, as well as of his Fame. 2 Chron. 18. Jehoſhaphat a Pious Prince.

In the third Year of his Reign, he called together the Elders, and the Prieſts that were under his Juriſdiction, and gave them Orders to have Commiſſioners ſent from Town to Town, wherever he had to do, to attend the Care of God's Worſhip, and to ſee that Moſes's Laws might be duly Executed and Obſerved. This Care of his for the Preſervation of their Religion, was ſo great a Satisfaction to All his Subjects, that they were at Strife amongſt themſelves, who ſhould be Foremoſt in the Promoting of ſo Excellent a Work. And the Princes everywhere about him all this while, had ſo great a Reverence for him, that they liv'd in a fair Underſtanding one with another, and an Inviolate Peace. The Philiſtins pay'd their Ordinary Tribute with Punctual Juſtice; and the Arabians, their Annuity of Six Hundred and Thirty Lambs, and the like Number of Kids. Jehoſhaphat alſo Fortify'd his Great and Strong Towns, and kept in Conſtant Pay a Well-diſciplin'd Army, to be ever in readineſs upon occaſion. Of the Tribe of Judah, there were Three Hundred Thouſand Shield-bearers, under the Command of Edra; Two Hundred Thouſand under Johanan; and of the Tribe of Benjamin Two Hundred Thouſand Archers, under the ſame Officers. There was another Captain alſo, by Name Ochobat, that Commanded A Hundred and Eighty Thouſand Men Armed with Bucklers: Beſide the Soldiers that were diſpers'd into Towns and Gariſons. He marry'd his Son Jehoram, in fine, to Gotholia the Daughter of Ahab, King of the Ten Tribes: and when he had an Occaſion to go to Samaria, he was moſt magnificently received by Ahab; he, and all his Military Men about him, with Corn, Wine, Fleſh, and other Proviſions; and upon Ahab's Entreaty, joyn'd with him in a War upon the King of Syria for the Recovery of Ramath-Gilead, which had been Taken, and was Detained from him by that Prince. Jehoſhaphat having an Army of his Own, not inferiour to the Others, promis'd him his Aſſiſtance, and ſent for his Troups from Jeruſalem to Samaria; where both the Kings went out of the Town, and each of them ſitting upon his Throne, apart, took a Review of their Forces, and Pay'd the Army. Jehoſhaphat, upon this occaſion, was of Opinion, if any of the Prophets were within Call, to adviſe with them in this Expedition againſt the Syrian, whether or no it might be a War at that time to be Undertaken; for there had been a Three-Years Peace now betwixt thoſe two Kings, ſince the Syrian was Taken.

Jehoſhaphat Orders Commiſſioners from Town to Town, to take Care of God's Worſhip.

Jehoſhaphat highly Eſteemed both at Home and Abroad.

CHAP. X.

The Prophets Conſulted about the War with Adad. Zedekijah tells Ahab that he ſhall be Victorious. Michaiah the Contrary. It comes to a Battle, and Ahab the only Man that falls in it; and Ahaziah his Son ſucceeds him in the Government.

AHAB call'd his Prophets together about him, to the Number of ſome Four Hundred, and order'd them to enquire, whether or no they ſhould be Victorious in this War againſt Adad, and carry the City, which was the main Point in Queſtion. The Prophets were altogether for the War; for the Syrians, they ſaid, ſhould be Overcome, and Made a Priſoner, as before. Jehoſhaphat ſuſpected a Double-meaning in the Words, and that they were Falſe Prophets: So that for more Certainty ſake, he asked Ahab what other Prophets there were, that he might have Recourſe to; who made Anſwer, that there was one indeed, (one Michaiah, the Son of Imli) but he Hated the Man, for he could never get a Good Word of him: inſomuch that he would:

Ahab conſults his Prophets about the War with Adad. Ahab's Prophets promiſe him Victory, and Adab a Second time a Priſoner.

would have perſuaded him into a Phancy, that he was to loſe his Life in this Action againſt the King of Syria; ſo that he had now laid him in a Jayl for his pains. But Jehoſhaphat would needs have him ſent for however; and an Eunuch, one of the Bed-Chamber Waiters, was Diſpatch'd preſently to fetch him. This Meſſenger was telling Michaiah, as they were upon the Way together, what the reſt of the Prophets ſaid, and how they were all agreed upon't, that Ahab ſhould be Victorious. Well! ſays the other, I muſt not Prevaricate with him that made me; but by the Grace of God, what Meſſage ſoever he ſhall think fit to put in my Mouth, ſhall be moſt Faithfully Reported to the King. Upon the Prophet's Arrival, Ahab adjur'd him to ſpeak the very Truth of the Matter, as he found it, without making it either More or Leſs. Why then ſays Michaiah, I ſaw all Iſrael Scatter'd and Flying, and the Syrians purſuing them, as Sheep that had no Shepherd; by which Repreſentation, God hath given to Underſtand, that all the reſt of the People ſhall return Safe, and Ahab only fall in the Battle. The King upon theſe Words, turning to Jehoſhaphat: Well! ſays he, and do not you find it to be true now as I told you, that this Man is my Enemy? No, ſays Michaiah, the Words that I deliver are according to the Expeſs Direction and Command of God; but you ſuffer your ſelf to be Flatter'd by your Falſe Prophets into a War, upon the Hope of Victory, when you your ſelf are to fall in't. This Firmneſs and Reſolution of the Prophet made the King very Uneaſy.

Jehoſhaphat ſend for the Prophet Michaiah.

Upon Michaiah's Arrival, Ahab adjures him to ſpeak the Truth. Michaiah anſwers him by an Alluſion.

One of the Falſe Prophets, whoſe Name was Zedekijah, ſtept out upon this Occaſion, and in Contempt of Michaiah, adviſed the King not to give any heed to what that Prating Fellow ſaid, for there was not one Word of Truth in it; and there needed no other Proof of his being an Impoſtor then the Prediction of Elias who undoubtedly ſaw further into things to come then he did, for he had foretold, that in the Place where Dogs licked the Bloud of Naboth, who was Ston'd to death by his Procurement, in the Field of Naboth, Dogs ſhould lick the King's Bloud alſo. Now this is a moſt Palpable Falſity in Contradiction to the Foretelling of a Prophet of much Great Authority then himſelf; for he will have it, that within the Compaſs of Three Days the King is to fall in the Battle; but it ſhall be quickly ſeen, ſays the Prophet, by what Spirit this Man Speaks. I will now give him a Box on the Ear, and let my hand wither upon doing of it, as Jeroboam's did upon Lifting-up his hand againſt Jadon, when he would have had the Prophet taken into Cuſtody; if what he delivers to you be from Heaven. I take it for granted that you have heard of the Story. Upon the ſaying of theſe Words, he Struck the Prophet; and Ahab finding that no Judgment or Miſchief follow'd upon it, was Harden'd in his Reſolution upon this War, by the Strange Force of a Fatality, that made him give more Credit to Falſe Prophets, then to True ones; and ſo diſpos'd of Cauſes, that they might be follow'd with Suitable Events. Zedekijah then made him Horns of Iron; and, ſays he, under the Figure of theſe Horns, is Signify'd by God, the Puſhing, and the Breaking of all Syria: Michaiah, on the other Hand, telling the Falſe Prophet, that in a very ſhort time he ſhould be call'd to an Account for the Vanity and Falſity of his Pretenſions, and be driven from one hiding-Place to Another to ſave himſelf. Ahab was ſo Exaſperated at this Liberty, that he appointed [a] Apion the Governour of the City to take him into Strict Cuſtody, and to feed him with only Bread and Water, till he ſhould return.

The Credit of the Two Prophets put to the Teſt.

Zedekijah preſages Victory to Ahab; Michaiah, the Contrary.

The Two Kings, upon this, advanced with their Troups toward Ramath, and the King of Syria Hearing of it, went out to meet them. It was agreed upon betwixt them, that Ahab ſhould put himſelf that day into the Diſguiſe of a Private Habit, and, a Native of Jeruſalem Repreſent the Perſon of the King in his Royal Robes, the better to Evade the Dint of the Prophet's Preſage: But a Providential Fatality found-out the King, though without any Diſtinguiſhing Marks about him of his Regality; for Adad gave a Strict Charge to his Officers and Commanders to fight neither with Small nor Great, but with the King of Iſrael. The Syrians, upon the Firſt Puſh, ſeeing Jehoſhaphat in the Head of the Army, immediately preſs upon him, taking him for Ahab; but when they found their Error, they went-off and Left him. They kept the Field from Morning to Night, the one Flying, and the other Purſuing, but not one Drop of Bloud Spilt all this While; only Hunting after Ahab, and ſtill not finding him. But in the End, one of Adad's Domeſtiques, Aman by Name, drew an Arrow at a Venture, that ſtruck the King through the Joints of his Armour into his very Lungs. Ahab was willing to keep it Private for fear of Diſcouraging his Men; and ſo ſpake to his Charioteer to carry him a little out of the Army; for he was mortally wounded. He kept his Chariot however till about Sun-ſetting, though in Miſerable Fortune, and then betwixt Agony, and Weakneſs with the Loſs of Bloud, he departed this Life; and the Night coming on, the Syrians withdrew

He Dy'd at Ramath, according to the Prophecy of Michaiah: So that for the Greater Honour, and Authority of the Revelation, the Preſages of Both the Prophets were made good to the Eternal Shame and Confuſion of Fawning and Time-ſerving Impoſtors, that ſquare all their Judgments to their Profit; and inſtead of telling us from God what we are to Believe and Do, give us Effectually to underſtand what we are not to Believe, or Do. Upon this Occaſion, I cannot but Reflect upon the Inſuperable Neceſſity of our Fate; which is not in the World to be Avoided, even if it ſhould be Foreknown: But we ſuffer our ſelves to be Egg'd-on with Vain, and Fooliſh Hopes, till we are Hamper'd Irrecoverably in the Snare. This was the Ruin of Ahab: He would not believe thoſe that told him the Unpleaſant Truth of things; but loſt his Life by a Fatal Credulity toward thoſe that Betray'd, and Humour'd him. This was his End, and Ahaziah his Son Reigned in his Stead.

Jehoshaphat gets a Great Victory over the Moabites, Ammonites, and Arabians. The Wickedness and Death of Ahaziah, as Elias had foretold it. Jehoram his Brother, Succeeds him; who with the Assistance of Jehoshaphat, and the King of Idumæa, Overthrows the King of the Moabites. The Death of Jehoshaphat.

Jehu rebukes Jehoshaphat for siding with Ahab. 2 Chron. 19.

UPon Jehoshaphat's Return to Jerusalem, after his Joyning with Ahab against Adad, the Prophet Jehu met him, and gave him a Rebuke for Espousing the Quarrel of so Impious, and Flagatious a Wretch as Ahab. He told him how Highly he had Offended God in that Alliance; but yet that he was Graciously pleased, for the Good that was in him, to pass over what he had done amiss, and to Deliver him out of the hands of his Enemies. Upon this Admonition, the King reconcil'd himself to God by Prayers and Sacrifices; appointed a General Visitation through all his Dominions, with Orders for Instructing the People in the Laws of Moses, and in the Religion of their Forefathers. He also Erected Magistrates in all their Great Towns and Places, giving them Charge to Administer Justice to all Men Indifferently, the Poor as well as the Rich, without any Respect to Profit, Favour, or Affection; and, in fine, to Discharge their Duties, as in the Sight of an All-Seeing God, that knew the very Thoughts of their Hearts. When he had taken Care for the Establishment of Good Order and Manners in the Several Cities of the Two Tribes, he returned to Jerusalem; where he Constituted Judges out of the most Considerable of the Priests and Levites; Enjoyning them, by the way of Precaution, to do Justice Impartially to all the People: Or if there should arise any Controversies of more Weight then Ordinary in any of their Neighbour-Cities, that should be brought to them for Judgment, that they should not pass Sentence, without all possible Care and Consideration; for it would be a most Scandalous and Dishonourable thing not to do Punctual, and Accurate Justice in a City where God had Establish'd his Temple; and the King, his Palace. He Chose the Chief Magistrates out of the Number of his Own Friends; as [a] Ahaziah the Priest, [for the Matters of the Lord;] and Zebediah, of the House of Judah [for the Kings Affairs.]

Upon Jehoshaphat's Repentance, God Pardons him.

He settles Religion: Constitutes Magistrates.

He appoints Amaziah for Holy Matters, and Zebediah for Civil.

It was at this time, that the Moabites and Ammonites, with the People of Aram, made War upon Jehoshaphat with a Mighty Army of Mercenaries, and Encamped at Engedi, a City near the Lake of Asphaltites, some Three Hundred Furlongs from Jerusalem, and a Place famous for Balsam and Palm-Trees. When Jehoshaphat understood that they had pass'd the Lake, and broken into his Country, he was not a little startled at the Surprize, and presently order'd an Assembly to be call'd; and then standing before the Temple, he betook himself to his Prayers, for God's Blessing upon his Arms against so Powerful an Invader: which was but according to the Form and Practice of our Forefathers, upon the first Institution of That Holy Place; who, whenever they found themselves in danger of being Over-run by a Foreign Enemy, caused all the People to meet in a full Congregation to implore God's Assistance toward the Repelling of That Violence, and for the Maintenance of That Inheritance which the Lord in his Infinite Bounty had bestow'd upon them, and their Enemies would take away by Force. Jehoshaphat mingled his Prayers with Tears, and the joynt-Supplications of the whole Multitude, with their Wives and Children, went along with them.

As they were in the Fervour of their Devotions, there ſtarted-up a Certain Prophet in the Middle of them, whoſe Name was Jahaziel, crying out to the People, that God had heard their Prayers, and would Fight their Battle, in favour of the Religion they profeſs'd; appointing them, upon this, to be in Readineſs the next Day to March toward their Enemies, whom they ſhould find Encamped betwixt Jeruſalem and Engeddi, at a Certain Aſcent, known by the Name of Sis; which in Hebrew is as much as an Eminence: telling them further, that they ſhould not need to ſtrike a Stroke; but only to ſtand looking on, as Quiet Spectators of an Action wherein God would Fight for them. After This Declaration, both King and People fell proſtrate upon their Faces; gave Thanks, and Worſhip'd: the Levites in the mean while accompanying their Hymns with Muſical Inſtruments.

A Prophet ſtarts-up in the middle of their Devotions.

Victory promiſed them without ſtriking a Stroke.

The King, early next Morning, went into the Deſert under the City of Tekoa, where he admoniſhed the Multitude to put their Truſt in God according to the Prediction of the Prophet, and that there was no need of Ranging themſelves in Form of Battle; but only to ſet the Prieſts with their Trumpets in the Firſt Line, and the Levites with their Singers, and ſo to move chearfully forward, with Muſick and Thankſgiving, as upon a Day of Victory, or Deliverance from a Common Enemy. They were all highly ſatisfy'd with the King's Advice, and ſoon after they put it in Execution; for God ſtruck the Ammonites, and their Allies, with ſuch a Panick Terror and Conſternation, that falling foul one upon another, the Outrage was ſo Furious againſt their own People, that of ſo many Thouſands of Combatants, there was not One Man left alive. When Jehoſhaphat came to take a View of the Valley where the Enemy was Encamped, he found it all Cover'd with Dead Bodies: never ſo Eaſie and ſo Abſolute a Victory, gain'd without either Sweat or Blood: So that Jehoſhaphat, in a Tranſport of Joy for ſo Unexpected a Bleſſing, gave his Soldiers the Pillage of the Camp, and the Spoil of the Dead; which was ſo exceſſively great, that it coſt them full Three Days to carry-off the Booty.

A Victory obtain'd without Blood.

The Booty ſo great, that it coſt 3 days to carry it off.

On the Fourth Day, all the People gather'd together in a deep, craggy Valley, called the Valley of Beracha; where they Praiſed and Bleſſed God for all the Works of his Power and Mercy. From hence it was that the Valley took its Name; which is as much as to ſay, The Valley of Bleſſings: and it is ſo called to this very Day. The King led his Army from thence to Jeruſalem, where he paſs'd ſeveral Days in Sacrifice and Feaſting. The Fame of this miraculous Victory poſſeſs'd all Foreign Princes and Nations wherever it came, with ſuch a Reverence for the Sanctity and Piety of Jehoſhaphat, that they look'd upon him as a Perſon for whom God had a peculiar Kindneſs; and kept-up the ſame Opinion of him to his Dying-day. But he was yet a Friend all this while to [Ahaziah] the Son of Ahad, King of Iſrael, and went Shares with him in the ſetting out of Ships for the Gold-Trade: but the Deſign miſcarry'd, to their very great Expence and Damage; for the Veſſels were not of a Make and Size for Thoſe Seas: So that, in ſhort, what with One thing and Another, whether through Ill Conduct, or Foul Weather, they were all caſt away, and ſo the Project fell to the Ground, and was never afterwards Revived. Let This ſuffice for the Hiſtory of Jehoſhaphat.

This Action mightily advances the Reputation of Jehoſhaphat.

Jehoſhaphat a conſtant Friend to Ahaziah.

Ahaziah the Son of Ahab, and the King of Iſrael, had his Royal Palace in Samaria. He was a Peſtilent, Wicked Man, and the very Picture of his Father and Mother, and all that was Naught: beſide a Certain Emulation that he had to out-do Jeroboam himſelf, the Capital Seducer of Iſrael. In the Second Year of his Reign, the King of the Moabites fell off, and abſolutely refuſed to be any longer Subject to the Tribute he had formerly paid to his Father. It happen'd that Ahaziah got a Terrible Fall down-Stairs one Day, as he was paſſing from an Upper Chamber that Endanger'd his Life: He was very ill upon it, and ſent to the God of the Accaronites, or the Fly (as they call'd him) to know whether he ſhould Live or Die. Upon this Occaſion, the God of the Hebrews Commanded the Prophet Elias to go preſently and meet the Meſſengers, and to ask them whether the Iſraelites had not a God of their Own; and if ſo, there was no need of Conſulting a Strange God in the Caſe: and therefore, they had e'en beſt go back again to the King, and tell him that he ſhould not Recover. The Meſſengers immediately took their Errand from Elias, and Poſted away with it to the King; who was in Great Admiration to ſee them ſo ſoon back again; and Enquiring further into the Matter, they told of a Man they met, that bad them go no further, and withal Charging them to tell their King in the Name of the God of the Iſraelites, that his Illneſs was Mortal. The King Was very Earneſt, and Particular with them to Deſcribe the Man: So they told him, it was a Hairy Man, with a Leathern Girdle about him. By this Deſcription, the King preſently concluded cluded this Perſon to be Elias, and ſo Diſpatch'd away an Officer with Fifty Soldiers to take him into Cuſtody. The Commander found him upon the Top of a Mountain, and ſo call'd him down to go along with him to the King; for that was his Order, he ſaid: and if he would not go by Fair Means, he would make him go by foul. Elias told him, that to ſhew him the Difference betwixt a True Prophet and a Falſe, he would now Convince him by a Prodigy that he was no Impoſtor. If I am a Man of God, ſays he, let Fire come down from Heaven, and devour Thee and thy Fifty: upon which Prayer, a Fire Deſcended, and Conſumed them all. The Tidings of this Dreadful Judgment came no ſooner to the King's Ear; but in a Rage, he ſent Another Officer with the ſame Number of Men, and upon the ſame Errand. The Captain ſaid the ſame Things over again; uſed the ſame Menaces, and they were All deſtroy'd after the ſame manner. After This, the King ſent yet again a Third Officer with his Party. Now the Man being a Candid Good-natur'd Perſon, when he came up to Elias, ſaluted him with Reſpect. I need not tell you (ſays he) that I am under Command; that I come upon This Errand unwillingly, as they did likewiſe who came before me: wherefore I beſeech you be pleas'd out of Pity to Me, and my Soldiers about Me, to come down willingly, and follow us to the King. Elias was ſo much mov'd with the Modeſty and Civility of the Man, that he went down, and followʼd him. When they had brought him into the King's Preſence, the Spirit of God came upon him, and he Freely told the King, Thus ſaith the Lord: Since you have an Opinion of Me that I am no God, nor able to foretel what will be the Iſſue of your Diſtemper; and that you have rather choſen to ſend to your God Accaron for your Satisfaction, take Notice that it will be your Death.

A Second Officer ſent on the ſame Errand, and deſtroy'd after the ſame manner.

A Third Officer was ſent.

and tells the King that this Illneſs will be his Death.

In ſome ſhort time, This Prophecy was fulfill'd; and Ahaziah dying without Iſſue, Jehoram his Brother Reigned in his ſtead; a Man no way inferiour to Ahab for a Vicious, and an Impious Courſe of Life: for he deliver'd himſelf up wholly to Strange Gods, to the Scandal and the Diſhonour of the Religion of his Forefathers, though otherwiſe a Man of Senſe, and well enough Qualify'd for Buſineſs.

Ahaziah dies without Iſſue, and leaves the Kingdom to his Brother Jehoram, an Impious Prince.

It was in his time, that Elias was taken away from the Converſation of Men, and no manner of Account given what became of him even to this Day; but he left Eliſha, his Diſciple, behind him, of whom we have ſpoken already. We find in Holy Writ the ſame thing Atteſted of Enoch before the Floud, as well as of Elias here, and that they were Both taken away; but no Mention made of the Death of Either of them.

Elias is Tranſlated like Enoch.

No Account of Elias's Death.

Upon Jehoram's coming to the Throne after his Brother, he Reſolved to make War upon Meſha the King of the Moabites, for Refuſing to pay the Tribute of Two Hundred Thouſand Unſhorn Sheep a-Year, upon the Account of what was formerly pay'd to his Father Ahab. Wherefore he began with Levying an Army at Home; and after that, pray'd the Aſſiſtance of Jehoſhaphat (for Ancient Kindneſs ſake betwixt the Two Fathers) to joyn with him; who not only promis'd for himſelf, but Undertook likewiſe to Engage the King of Idumæa, having ſome Tye upon him, in the Party. When Jehoram came to Underſtand how well he was like to be Seconded, he went forthwith to Jeruſalem, where he was Splendidly Receiv'd and Treated by the King of the Place. Being there in Council, the Ways and Method of the Expedition were taken into Debate, and a Vote paſs'd by Common Conſent for the Army to ſteer their Courſe through the Deſert of Idumæa, where the Enemy would be leaſt aware of the Deſign. The Three Kings; that is to ſay, of Jeruſalem, Iſrael, and Idumæa, put themſelves upon their March according to the Reſolution of the Council; and when they had wander'd up and down for the ſpace of Seven Days, they fell into a Great Diſtreſs for want of Water, both for Man and Beaſt, till they were all within a very little of the Uttermoſt Extremity of Deſpair. Jehoram Eſpecially, who called out to God in an Expoſtulatory way of Impatience, What have theſe Three Kings done, ſays he, to be deliver'd up Captives to the King of the Moabites without a Stroke? Jehoſhaphat, on the other hand, as became a Pious Man, ſpake Comfortable Words to Jehoram; adviſing him to Enquire, if there were ever a Prophet in the Army to ask Counſel of God what was to be done under their Circumſtances. A Servant within hearing, told them that he had ſeen Eliſha the Son of Shaphat there, the Diſciple of Elias; and upon this Information, the Three Kings upon the Propoſal of Jehoſhaphat, went and found him out. When they came to his Tent, which was a little out of the Camp, they ask'd him what would become of this Army; Jehoram Eſpecially was the moſt Inquiſitive. Why, ſays Eliſha to him, you ſhould have gone to your Father's and your Mother's Prophets for Satisfaction, without Troubling other People: they would have ſet you Right no doubt. Jehoram lay at him Still, begging and Praying for an Anſwer, if it were but for the Saving of ſo many Men's Lives that were ready to Periſh. Eliſha ſwore ſolemnly to Jehoram, horam, that if it were not for the ſake of Jehoſhaphat, who was a Good and a Pious Man, he ſhould have had no Anſwer from him at all. And upon this, he Order'd a Muſician to be call'd, and as he was ſinging, the Spirit of God came upon the Prophet; who ſpake to the Kings to make Several Ditches in the Channels of the Torrent; and, ſays Eliſha, you ſhall ſee them all Flowing with Water without either Wind or Rain: Water Sufficient for your ſelves, and your Cattle, to all Manner of Purpoſes: Beſide that henceforward you ſhall never feel any more Drought. And this is not all neither; for God will bleſs you yet further ſtill, for by his Grace and Help, you ſhall overcome your Enemies, and Scatter them, and Ruine their Plantations; lay their Country Waſt, and Choak-up their Rivers, and their Fountains. The Next Day before Sun-riſe, after theſe Words of the Prophet, there came down from Idumæa, Three Days Journy from the Place, an Impetuous Torrent upon a Mighty Fall of Rain, ſo that there was no longer any want of Drink, either for Horſe or Man.

Eliſha promiſes them Water and Victory.

Water ſupply'd by a Violent Torrent.

When the King of Moab underſtood that theſe Three Kings were advancing againſt him by the way of the Wilderneſs, he Raiſed all the Force he was able to make, to meet them upon the Borders, for fear of any Inroad upon him by Surprize. The Two Armies were by This time not far from the Land of Moab; when the Riſing Sun ſtriking upon the Torrent, made the Water look ſo Red, that the Moabites took it for Bloud; vainly imagining, that the Three Kings had fall'n to Cutting of Throats among Themſelves, in a Rage for want of Water, and that This Torrent was a Stream of Their Bloud. In this Confidence, they went to their King only for Liberty to Rifle the Enemy's Camp, giving for granted that it was All Abandon'd. Upon their Application, they Obtained Leave to break-in upon the Enemy's Pillage, and ſo ran Hand over Head in a Confuſion to the Enemy's Camp, as if there needed no more to the gaining of the Booty, then the taking of it up; but they quickly found their Miſtake, for they were ſet upon on all Hands in the Attempt; part kill'd, and the reſt ſo ſcatter'd, that they had much ado to make their Way home again. The Kings, in the mean while, made an Incurſion into the Land of the Moabites; deſtroy'd their Towns and Cities; drove away all their Cattel, and cover'd all the Turf with the Sand and Gravel of the Torrent; cut down the Beſt of their Woods and Trees; damm'd up the Springs and Fountains, and levell'd their Walls to the Ground: nay, the King himſelf was forc'd to take Sanctuary in a Town, where he was afterward Beſieged; and in ſuch Danger of Loſing it by Aſſault, that he Attempted a Sally with Seven Hundred Horſe upon the Enemy's Weakeſt Quarter, to break through their Body; but failing of his Puſh, he was forc'd into the Town Again, where he Enter'd upon the moſt Horrid, Barbarous Action that the uttermoſt Pinch of Neceſſity or Deſpair could put a Man upon. He took his Eldeſt Son, the next Heir to the Government, and Sacrific'd him to God upon the Walls, in the View of the Enemy's Army. The Kings reflecting upon the Force of an Abandon'd Deſperation, together with the Viciſſitude of Humane Affairs, were ſoften'd to ſuch a degree of Compaſſion, and making it their Own Caſe too, that they brake-up the Siege upon it, and every Man went back to his own Home. Jehoſhaphat was at Eaſe after This Expedition; but he did not long out-live it. He dy'd at Jeruſalem in the Sixtieth Year of his Age, and the Twenty Fifth of his Reign; and he had in That City a moſt magnificent Burial; ſuch a one, as might become the Imitator of David.

So the Prophet ask'd her what ſhe had in the Houſe; who ſaid ſhe had Nothing at all, but a little Oyl in a Cruiſe. The Prophet then bad her go borrow ſome empty Pots, or Veſſels, of her Neighbours, and keep her Chamber-door ſhut, and put Oyl into all thoſe Veſſels; for God would fill them all. The Widow did as ſhe was order'd; and after the Diſtributing of the Oyl, ſhe came back again to the Prophet, and gave him a particular Account of what ſhe had done; who adviſed her to ſell the Oyl, and diſcharge the Debt; for there would be ſomewhat remaining, after Satisfaction given to the Creditors, for the Relief of her Children. By this means ſhe deliver'd her ſelf from a troubleſome Obligation.

The Prophet one time having got Notice of a Conſpiracy againſt the Life of Jehoram, and that Adad had Treacherouſly planted an Ambuſh to ſurprize him, he gave the King Intelligence of it, with a Caution to have a Care of ſuch a certain Place, where the Syrians had laid a Plot to entrap him. This Precaution kept the King from going a Hunting, and diſappointed the Plot. But Adad was in ſuch a Rage when he found his malicious Contrivance defeated, that he fell to ſtorming and railing at his own Domeſtiques, for a Company of Traitors, threat'ning them with no leſs then Death it ſelf for diſcovering a Deſign that no other Creatures were privy to but Themſelves. Some body made Anſwer, that they had no need to look for Treaſon among his own Friends and Domeſtiques, and Thoſe that were of the Party to have done the Execution, ſo long as his Enemy had Eliſha for a Spy upon him, that lay perpetually prying into his Ways, and Actions, on his Maſter's Behalf; and he had the Faculty of Diving into the moſt ſecret of his Counſels. The King preſently ſent his Scouts abroad to enquire after Eliſha, and to learn where he was; and Word was brought him that he might be found at Dothan. Upon this Intelligence, he immediately diſpatch'd away Horſemen and Chariots to Apprehend him. They went and beſet the Town by Night, ſo that there was no paſſing either Out or In; and early the next Morning, a Servant of the Prophet's ran trembling to his Maſter to tell him the News, and how the Town was begirt with a Body of the Enemy that came to Take him. Eliſha bad him have a good Heart, and fear Nothing; for his Truſt and Confidence was in the Goodneſs and Power of an Over-ruling Providence, and ſo he Pray'd to God for ſome ſpecial Token of his Preſence and Protection, that might confirm his Servant in a Fearleſs Reſignation to his Holy Will and Pleaſure. The Prophet's Prayers were heard, and there appeared forthwith, in the ſight of the Servant, a Multitude of Horſes and Chariots round about Eliſha, as a Guard upon his Perſon. The Conſideration of this Succour, as the Servant underſtood it to be, put him out of all Fear of any further Danger for his Maſter.

Eliſha precautions Jehoram of a Plot upon him by Adad, and ſaves his Life.

Eliſha is beſet in Dothan.

Upon Eliſha's Prayer, a Band of Armed Men are ſeen in the Air, as a Guard upon his Perſon.

After This Viſion, the Prophet pray'd once again that God would caſt a Miſt before the Eyes of theſe People, and ſtrike them with ſuch a Blindneſs that they might not ſee him, ſo as to diſcern him from another Man. Upon the Granting of This Requeſt alſo, Eliſha caſt himſelf into the middle of their Troups, and ſo went from one to another, asking them for What, or Whom they ſought for. They told him, for Eliſha the Prophet. Well, ſays Eliſha, do but follow me to the Place where he is, and you ſhall have him: So theſe Men that were Blinded in their Underſtanding, as well as in their Eyes, went after him without any Difficulty or Scruple, till at laſt he brought them into Samaria. Upon their Entrance into the City, the Prophet bad Jehoram cauſe the Ports to be ſhut, and the Syrians to be ſurrounded. Eliſha, upon this Occaſion, betook himſelf to his Third Prayer; which was, that God would Reſtore the Syrians to their Sight again: whereupon the Syrians Eyes were opened; and to their great Aſtoniſhment and Admiration, they found themſelves coop'd-up in an Enemy's Town, and at Mercy in the hands of their Adverſaries.

Upon Eliſha's Second Prayer, Adad's Soldiers are ſtruck Blind.

The Soldiers ask Eliſha Himſelf where to find Eliſha.

Eliſha leads them into Samaria.

Upon Eliſha's Third Prayer the Syrians are reſtored to their Sight, and find themſelves in the Hands of their Enemies.

While the Syrians were at a Stand upon this unaccountable Surprize, and at their Wits end what to do next, the King propoſed to the Prophet the putting of them all to Death; which he abſolutely oppoſed, as a way of Proceeding that would not ſtand with his Honour and Juſtice; and only to be allow'd-of in Caſes where Men are Overcome in Battle. But theſe were People, he told him, that were Guilty of No Act of Hoſtility upon his Country, and only brought thither by the Will and Power of God, without any malicious Intention, or but ſo much as the bare Knowledge of what they did. And therefore the Prophet gave his Opinion for the Treating of them with Hoſpitality and Reſpect; and after ſuch a Generous Refreſhment, leaving them to their own Freedom. Jehoram took the Prophet's Advice; gave them a Splendid, and a Liberal Entertainment, and ſo ſent them back again Safe and Sound to their Maſter. They gave the King, at their Return ſo Particular an Account of this Wonderful Story, that his Conſcience was ſtruck, upon the Hearing of it, with a Conviction, that the Hand of God was manifeſtly in this Prodigy, and that what the Prophet deliver'd in the Name of God, was no other then the Dictate of a Divine Inſpiration. So that after This time, Adad never Enter'd into any under-hand Practice againſt the King of Iſrael; but reſolved however to make Open War upon him, in Confidence of his Greater Strength and Numbers.

Jehoram by Eliſha's Advice, leaves the Soldiers at liberty.

Upon the Taking of This Reſolution, Adad Rais'd a Mighty Army, and Marched with his whole Force, againſt Jehoram: who finding himſelf too weak to venture his All upon the Puſh of a Field-Battle, kept himſelf within the Walls of Samaria, where he had Good Works and Defences to Truſt to. It was a Strong Place, and Adad in ſome Doubt whether to Attempt it by Aſſault, or by Famine: But however, Siege was laid to the Town, and the Gariſon brought to ſo miſerable a Scarcity of Proviſions, that an Aſs's Head was Sold for Fourſcore Pieces of Silver, and a Pint of Pigeon's Dung (for Seaſoning) for Five Pieces. There was nothing the King feared ſo much in this Extremity, as leſt ſome Body or other ſhould Betray the Place to the Enemy under the Force and Neceſſity of an inſupportable Famine: So that Jehoram every day viſited the Walls, and the Guards, himſelf; took care that no Spies ſhould enter privately into the Town, and had a vigilant Eye upon all Motions and Underhand Practices whatſoever.

Ahad lays Siege to Samaria, and brings it to Great Extremity.

As the King was attending his Bus'neſs, there came a Woman crying to him for Help; and Jehoram ſuppoſing ſhe had come to beg of him, turn'd her off with a kind of angry Rebuke; I have no Barns, nor Wine-Preſſes, ſays he, and what have I left me to ſupply your Wants? The Woman told him ſhe did not come to beg his Meat, but to implore his Juſtice, and to deſire that he would do her Right in a Controverſy betwixt her Self and Another Woman. The King ask'd her what it was? and ſhe told him; Sir, ſays ſhe, a Certain Neighbour of Mine, and my Self, that were ready to die for want of Food, came to an Agreement betwixt our Selves, having each of us a little Male-Child, to eat our Children by Turns, barely to keep Life and Soul together. Mine was Kill'd and Dreſs'd Yeſterday, and ſhe had her part of it; and now I ſhould have my Part of her Child, ſhe breaks her Word with me, and has hid him. Jehoram, in a Raging Paſſion of Grief and Horror, rent his Garment, Raving and Crying out, that he never knew what it was to be Perfectly Miſerable, till That Inſtant: And all This might have been prevented, ſays he, for a Word ſpeaking, if the Prophet would but have interceded with God for me, on my Behalf: But, ſays he, I'll have his Blood for it; and in that Heat Diſpatch'd away an Officer to cut-off his Head, who in the ſame moment ſet forward upon That Commiſſion.

Two Women Covenant to Eat their Children by Turns.

Jehoram imputes this Miſery to Eliſha's not interceding for them.

Jehoram gives Order to Cut off Eliſha's Head.

This Outrageous Diſpleaſure of the King's was no Secret to Eliſha; who told his Diſciples as he was ſitting with them at Home, that Jehoram, That Son of a Murderer, had ſent a Party with an Officer, that was then upon his Way, to take-off his Head. Wherefore, ſays he, do you Watch and Obſerve them; and when they come near the Houſe, be you ſure to ſhut the Door upon them, only to put them to a little Stand till the King himſelf ſhall come up; who hath now chang'd his Mind, and is haſt'ning after his People to prevent Miſchief. They Watch'd, as they were Directed; ſhut the Door upon the Men when they came, and kept them out till Jehoram appeared Himſelf, who made all the Haſte that was poſſible for fear of being too late to Countermand the Execution of the Order, and to ſave the Life of the Prophet.

Jehoram changes his Mind.

Upon the King's Coming to Eliſha, he fell to Reproaching of him, that he could have the Heart to ſee Him and his People in ſo many Extremities of Diſtreſs, without putting-up One Prayer to God for their Relief. The Prophet gave him for Anſwer, this Promiſe and Aſſurance, that by the ſame Hour the next Day Samaria ſhould be ſo abundantly ſtored with all ſorts of Neceſſaries for Life, that a Meaſure of fine Flour ſhould be ſold Publiquely in the Market for One Shekel, and two Meaſures of Barly at the ſame Rate. The King and his Court made no doubt at all of the Truth of his Predictions, having had ſo many Proofs of their Authority and Credit: ſo that they comforted themſelves upon the Preſage, as if it had been a Thing already done, and made their preſent Difficulties eaſy to them in the Hope of what was to come; but a certain Favourite, and an Officer of the King's, that Commanded a Tertia of his Army, told the Prophet, as the King was leaning upon him, in a Familiar way:

The King goes to Eliſha.

Eliſha promiſes him Relief in 24 Hours.

1 Kings 7. Eliſha, ſays he, a body may as well believe, that it ſhall rain Flour and Barly from Heaven, as what you have now Foretold; for it ſeems to me Incredible, even to the Degree of Impoſſible. Well, ſays the Prophet, make no Queſtion of it; for you ſhall ſee it: but you ſhall only ſee it, without enjoying it: which Prediction was made good.

It was a Cuſtom among the Samaritans, that no Leprous Perſons ſhould be ſuffer'd to live within the Walls of the City: and at this time there were Four Lepers that had their Habitations without the Gates. The Famine in the City was ſo Extreme, that there was no Proviſion to be Expected from thence: So that whether they went back into the Town, or Stay'd where they were, they had Certain Death before them the One way as well as the Other. Upon this Deliberation, they took-up a Reſolution of Caſting themſelves upon the Enemy. If they ſpar'd them, they ſhould Live; or if they put them to death, it would be a Gentler way of Diſpatch. They agreed all Four in this Opinion, as the Beſt Expedient they had before them, and ſo ſlipt away by Night into the Enemies Camp; in which very Point of Time, it pleaſed God to Poſſeſs the Syrians with a Panick Terror upon the Imaginary Noiſe of Horſes, and Armed Men, breaking-in upon them; and in the Strength of this Phancy and Apprehenſion, they all ran thronging to Adad, and told him that Jehoram's Confederate Kings of Egypt, and of the Iſlands, were juſt at hand, and within hearing of the March of the Army. Adad gave the more Credit to the Deluſion, in regard that he himſelf labour'd under the ſame Falſe Imagination: So that in this Unaccountable Affright, the Whole Army brake-up in a Confuſion, and every man did what he could to Shift for himſelf, leaving their Horſes, Carriages, Baggage, and their whole Treaſure in the Camp, without any other Care in the World, then how to Save their Lives. When the Lepers came-up to the Syrians Tents, all things were in a Profound Silence, and ſo they went from place to place, Eating and Drinking what they pleas'd, and taking as much Gold and Rich Booty, as they could carry away without finding ſo much as one Perſon in the Field. They loaded themſelves Four times, and bury'd their Burdens in a Hole they digg'd for that Purpoſe without the Camp. They might now Reaſonably Conclude the Enemy to be drawn-off, and came upon this to blame themſelves for not giving Jehoram, and the Citizens an Account of this Wonderful Deſertion, upon the Firſt Diſcovery of it. Wherefore they made all poſſible Haſte back to Samaria, calling aloud to the Watch from under the Walls, that the Enemy had totally Abandon'd their Camp; and this Intelligence in the ſame Inſtant ſent by them to the King's Guards, Jehoram preſently called a Great Council upon it, of his Friends and Officers, and gave his Own Opinion, that he look'd upon it as a Trick to draw his People into an Ambuſh under that Pretence. They might, ſays he, perhaps deſpair of Starving us, and ſo bethought themſelves of this Invention to Surprize us; and if they could but draw us out to take Poſſeſſion of the Booty, they might make an Excurſion upon us from their Hiding-Places; cut our Men to pieces, and with Great Eaſe make themſelves Maſters of the City; and therefore, ſays the King, I am for providing againſt Treachery, and being the more Wary ſtill for this Pretence, I cannot think they are run away, and ſhould be loth to Venture the Main Chance upon the Credit of this Intelligence. One of the Council ſtood up, and with Great Reſpect to the King's Opinion, judg'd it to be the True Reaſon of the Caſe. But this notwithſtanding, ſays he, it might be Worth the While, I conceive, to ſend out Two Horſemen, upon the Scout for Diſcovery, as far as Jordan. If they ſhould happen to be Taken, it will ſerve for a Warning to Others however not to Expoſe themſelves too far; and then the Loſs would not be very Great; beſide that, if they ſcape the Sword, they are in Danger to die of the Famine. The King was much of this Counſellor's Mind, and ſent away his Scouts immediately for Intelligence; who returned ſoon after with this Report: that they had been ſo far, without ſeeing ſo much as One Enemy; but that they ſaw Arms, and Corn, and ſeveral Bundles of things upon the way that look'd as if the Syrians had thrown them there to Eaſe them in their Flight. The King, upon this Information, ſent out his People to the Rifling of Adad's Camp, where[a] they found a Wonderful Rich Booty, in Gold, Silver, Horſes, and Several ſorts of Beaſts; beſide ſuch an Incredible Proviſion of Grain, that it look'd liker a Dream then a Truth: ſo Vaſt a Quantity, in ſhort, that the People preſently forgot their Former Scarcity in this Superabundance; for Two Meaſures of Barly were ſold for One Shekel, and a Meaſure of Flour at the ſame Price too, according to the Prediction of Eliſha. Now this Meaſure contains about an Italian Buſhel and Half: only the Officer before ſpoken of, that Commanded the Tertia, had no Benefit by this Relief, being Poſted at the Gate by the King's Command to keep the People in Order that they ſhould not Croud one another to death upon the Sally they were to make. Adad ſtepps to Damaſcus. 2 Kings. 8.

Adad was by this time gotten ſafe back to Damaſcus; and when he came to underſtand that All theſe Alarums of Chariots and Horſemen that had given ſuch an irreparable Rout to Him and his Army, were, in truth, only judicial Impreſſions of Affright and Terror, without any other Foundation, he look'd upon it as a Declaration from Heaven againſt him: and the Anxiety of That Thought made him as ſick in his Body too as he was in his Mind. Eliſha went then toward Damaſcus; and Adad being informed where he was, ſent Hazael, his very Particular and Truſty Friend, with a Complement and Magnificent Preſents, to meet him, and to Enquire likewiſe of the Prophet, Whether the King ſhould Out-live This Diſeaſe or Not? and what would be the Iſſue of it. Hazael took Forty Camels, and loaded them with the choiceſt Curioſities that either the Court or the Country afforded; advanced with them toward Eliſha; and meeting him upon the way, ſaluted him with great Reverence, in the Name, and by the Order of King Adad; telling him, that he had in his Commiſſion to offer him thoſe Preſents, and likewiſe to adviſe with him about his Diſeaſe, whether or no he might hope for any Relief. The Prophet told Hazael, that the King was to Die; but charged the Meſſenger to ſay nothing of it to the King. This went to the Heart of Hazael; and Eliſha fell upon That into an Extreme Fit of Weeping in the Contemplation of the Miſeries the People were to endure after the Deceaſe of Adad. Hazael ask'd the Prophet what might be the Cauſe of that Exceſſive Grief? Why, ſays the Prophet, I cannot forbear Weeping to think of the Calamities that you your ſelf are to bring upon the Iſraelites. You ſhall put the Beſt of their Men to the Sword; Burn their Walled Cities; Daſh their Children to Death againſt the Stones, and Rip-up the Children out of the Bellies of their Mothers. Well, ſays Hazael, but how is it poſſible for me to compaſs all This Miſchief? Why, ſays the Prophet, it is declared to me by God, that you are to Reign in Syria: And upon this Diſcourſe, Hazael left him, and returned to his Maſter, with an Account, that he ſhould Recover of his Diſtemper. On the Day following, he made the King a Viſit; and taking his Opportunity, ſtrangled him with a wet Cloth, and took Poſſeſſion of his Palace and Government. He was a Man of great Intereſt and Reputation with the People of Syria and Damaſcus; inſomuch that to this Day, the Memory of Adad, and of Hazael his Succeſſor, is Celebrated among the Syrians with Divine Honours, not only for their Bounty and Generoſity in General; but in Particular, for the Pompous Magnificence of the Temples they Erected at Damaſcus, and the Care they took for the Honour and Ornament of the City. Their Images, in fine, are carry'd about in a dayly Proceſſion, as in an Oſtentation of their Antiquity; whereas, in truth, they were not of above Eleven Hundred Years ſtanding from their Original.

The Death of Adad ſet the Heart of Joram the King of Iſrael much at eaſe, as it gave him a Breathing-while from Wars and Broils, and the Comfort of ſeeing himſelf once again in a State of Peace. But Jehoram's Name-ſake (I mean the other Jehoram, the King of Juda) of whom I have ſpoken already, was no ſooner enter'd upon the Sovereignty, but for a Welcome to his Reign, he began with the Slaughter of his Brother's, and of his Father's Friends; and briefly, with ſuch Outrages, as if he had been upon a Competition with the Worſt of Former Kings, which ſhould be the Wickedeſt: having alſo at his Elbow his Wife Gotholiah, the Daughter of Ahab, an Excellent Inſtructreſs to all Impious Purpoſes; and the Inſtrument of his Idolatrous Defection from the True Worſhip to the Service of Strange Gods. Now though God would moſt certainly ſtand firm to the Promiſe he made to King David, that he would never utterly Extinguiſh the whole Race; Jehoram did all he could yet to Provoke a Total Extirpation, by a lewd, daily Courſe of freſh Impieties and Abominations. Idumæa at this time Revolted from Jehoram, and they made way to their Apoſtacy by the Murder of their King, who had ever been Faithful to [his Father] Jehoſhaphat, and by ſetting up Another in his Place. Upon the firſt Impreſſion of this Affront, the King made a running Incurſion by Night with a good Body of Horſe and Charioteers, into the Enemy's Quarters: but they were fain to content themſelves with Burning, and making a little Havock upon the Borders; and ſo falling-off again, without daring to Attempt any further Progreſs into the Country. This Expedition was ſo far from ſtriking any ſort of Terror, or Apprehenſion into the Deſerters, that, on the contrary, it ſerv'd for an Encouragement to others to follow the Example of their Leaders, and ſlipping their Necks out of the Collar, to fall-off for Company: Libnah Rebelling alſo at the ſame time. Such, in ſhort, was the Madneſs and Folly of Jehoram, that he forc'd the Iſraelites up to the Groves and High-Places upon the Mountains, and there to Worſhip Falſe Gods. He went-on for ſome time, in the Defiance and Contempt of Law and Religion, and all that could be Sacred either in Heaven or Earth,

This in ſhort was the Subſtance of the Writing that was deliver'd to Jehoram in the Name of Eliſha.

The King, after this Publique Calamity, fell into a Diſeaſe according to what the Prophet foretold him; which was ſuch a kind of Plague in the Guts, that all People looked upon it, as a Juſt Judgment of God upon him in his Diſpleaſure; his Bowels dropping daily out of his Belly before his own Eyes. The People inſulted over the Carcaſs, and drew Inferences from the Exemplary manner of his Puniſhment, to the degree of his Wickedneſs, and that the Warth of God was upon him. They would neither Vouchſafe him a Royal Funeral, nor a Place in his Father's Monument. He lived Forty Years. JEHORAM, the King of the Iſraelites, was in hope, after the Death of Adad, that he might Recover Ramoth of Gilead; and in that Proſpect, he Levy'd a Great Army, and Advanced towards it. In that Attempt, he received a Wound with an Arrow from the Bow of a Syrian. It was not Mortal; but yet, ſuch as it was, he was fain to withdraw to the City Jezreel for the Conveniencies of the Cure, leaving his Whole Army behind him at the Siege of Ramoth, under the Command of Jehu, the Son of Amaſis, who took the Town by Force. Jehoram propoſed upon his Recovery, to make War upon the Syrians; and in the mean time, Eliſha ſent one of his Diſciples with holy Oyl to Ramoth, there to Anoint and Declare Jehu King, and to do it in the Name of God, and by his Authority and Order. The Prophet gave him ſome Other things in Charge alſo, and Commanded him to Slip away as faſt as he could, and without making any Creature Privy to his Journy. When he came to the Town, he found Jehu ſitting with the Head-Officers of the Army, as was foretold him by Eliſha: So he went up to him, and gave him to Underſtand, that he deſir'd to have a Word or Two in Private with him. Jehu roſe up preſently, and the Meſſenger follow'd him into his Cabinet. So the Young Man took out his Oyl, and Poured it on his Head; telling him that God had Choſen him King for the Deſtruction of the Houſe of Ahab, and to Revenge the Bloud of the Prophets, that againſt all Right and Reaſon was ſpilt by Jezebel: and that as Jeroboam the Son of Nebat: and after him, the Family of Baaſha, were utterly Rooted-out, and Deſtroy'd for their Wickedneſs; ſo there ſhould be no Remainder left of the Wicked

So ſoon as he had Spoken theſe Words, he went his way out of the Cabinet in all Haſt; and as near as he could, ſo Privately, that no body ſhould ſee him: Jehu retnrning forthwith to his Place among the Commanders. The Officers had a Great mind to know what that Youth's Bus'neſs was; for he look'd (they ſaid) as if he were not Well in his Wits. Why you are not much Wide, ſays Jehu, for he did ſpeak Effectually the Words of a Mad-Man. This Suſpenſion did but make the Officers more and more Inquiſitive, what it was he came about: So Jehu told them in Plain Terms, that he came to him with a Meſſage from God to Pronounce him King. At the Hearing of theſe Words, the Commanders took Every Man his Cloak, and laid them one upon Another for Jehu to Sit down upon, in Lieu of a Throne; and when he had taken his Place, they all Saluted him King, with Acclamations, Benedictions, and the Sound of Horns and Trumpets, to Gratulate his Acceſſion to the Throne. Jehoram was now under the Surgeons Hands at Jezreel for the Wound he got at the Siege of Ramoth; and his Siſter's Son Ahaziah was there at the Same time too, upon a Kinſman's Viſit to him: So that Jehu took this Opportunity of Marching with his Army to Jezreel, where he might ſurprize them Both at once; Precautioning his Soldiers, as a Proof of their Fidelity to him, neither directly nor indirectly to give Jehoram any Knowledge, or Intimation of the Matter.

CHAP. V.

Jehu kills Jehoram and Ahaziah with his Own Hand.

THe Soldiers ply'd their Orders with Great Chearfulneſs, poſſeſſing themſelves of all the Paſſes, and Avenues to the Town, and keeping ſo Strict a Guard upon them, that it was Morally Impoſſible to get any Intelligence into the Place without Diſcovery. While this was adoing, Jehu mounts his Chariot, and with a Party of Choice-Men, advances in all haſt toward the City. The King had a Scout abroad to obſerve, what People paſſed that way, and this Scout finding John at the Head of the Troops, Poſted away Immediately to Jehoram with the Tidings of a Body of Horſe upon their March: The King upon this diſpatched away a Horſeman out of hand, with Inſtructions to go up towards the Party, and learn who they were. The Meſſenger went and did as he was Order'd, and Inquiring alſo into the State of the Army: for the King he ſaid had a Mind to know. Do not you trouble your Head, ſays Jehu with the Bus'neſs of the Army; but fall off into the Rear, and march along with them. The Man did ſo, and the Scout preſently gave the King Notice of it, that his Meſſenger had joyn'd the Troups. Jehoram, upon this, ſent once again yet with the ſame Inſtructions, and with the very ſame Succeſs; when receiving no Satisfaction upon the Main, he took his Chariot himſelf, and Ahaziah the King of Juda along with him: (his Kinſman, as I told you, that was upon a Viſit to him) So they went out together to meet Jehu; Who moved very leiſurely, and coming into the Field of Naboth, Jehoram asked Jehu how matters went in the Army, the Other Anſwering with a Bitter Reflexion upon the Whoredom and Witchcraft of his Mother. This gave Jehoram to Underſtand, that That was no Place for him to ſtay in: So he told Ahaziah that he was Betray'd; and as he was driving away to Shift for himſelf, Jehu ſhot him through the Heart with an Arrow, ſo that he dropt from his Chariot; and ſoon after Commanded Bidkar the Captain of a Tertia of the Army, to take the Carcaſs, and caſt it out into the Field of Naboth, which put him in mind of what the Prophet Elijah had formerly ſaid to his Father Ahab; to wit, that he and his Family were to Periſh in that Place: which he himſelf had heard, as he was ſitting in a Chariot behind Ahab; and every thing fell-out accordingly. Upon the Death of Jehoram, Ahaziah began to have an Apprehenſion of himſelf too, and ſo turn'd-off into a By-way, where he thought Jehu would not find him; but following him however to a Certain Bank, he wounded him with an Arrow, which made him preſently leave his Chariot, and take Horſe to ſave himſelf by Flight. He got-off to the City of Megiddo, where he lay a while for his Cure, and not long after Dy'd of his Wound: From thence he was carry'd to Jeruſalem, and there bury'd after he had Reigned One Year; and a wickeder Man by much then his Father.

Jehu Orders Jezebel to be put to death; with Ahab's Seventy Sons, and all his Relations; Forty Two Perſons of the Blood of Ahaziah, and all the Prieſts of the Tyrian-Baal: The Temple alſo to be Deſtroy'd, which Ahab Erected to the Honour of that Idol.

AS Jehu came in to Jezreel, Jezebel Planted her ſelf in a Turret-Window, ſet out Gloriouſly with Dreſs and Ornament, to ſee his Entry. As he was paſſing by, ſhe let fall this Ironical Conceit upon him: A Hopeful Servant, ſays ſhe, that Kills his Maſter. Jehu, both ſeeing the Woman, and hearing the Words, call'd out to her to know what ſhe was, and bad her come down; but not coming immediately, he commanded the Eunuchs that were then about her to caſt her down Headlong; which they did, and the Walls were Bloudy with the Daſhing of the Body in the Fall. As ſhe lay Dead upon the Ground, the Horſemen rode over the Carcaſs, and Trampled it to Dirt: Jehu and his Friends Marching forward to the Palace to refreſh themſelves. When they had been there a while, Jehu Order'd Jezebel's Servants, out of Reſpect to her Quality, to ſee their Miſtreſs Bury'd; for ſays he, ſhe was a Kings Daughter: but when they came to look for the Body, there was nothing to be found but a piece of the Skull, the Palms of her Hands, and the Soles of her Feet; the Dogs having Eaten up all the reſt. This Providence gave Jehu more and more Veneration ſtill for the Divine Spirit of Elijah, who had foretold, that Dogs ſhould Eat the Fleſh of Jezebel in the Field of Jezreel.

Jezebel is caſt down from a Window upon the Pavement:

The Dogs Eat Jezebel's Fleſh as was foretold 1 Kings 21.23. 2 Kings 10.

Ahab had Seventy Sons, and all at this time in Samaria, where they were brought up: So Jehu wrote thither Two Letters, one to their Governours, and the other to the Magiſtrates of the Place, wherein he gave them to underſtand, that being well provided of Horſes, Men, Arms, Chariots, and other Neceſſaries for War; beſide Fortify'd Towns, and Strong Holds, they ſhould do well to make Choice of one of the Fineſt, and the Braveſt Young Men they could pick out of the Whole Brood of Ahab, for their King, under whoſe Conduct they might Revenge the Death of their Lord and Maſter. He caſt out theſe Words among them, only to feel the Pulſe of the People, and to try how they ſtood affected to his Intereſt. The Perſons to whom theſe Letters were addreſs'd, read them over and over with Great Care and Conſideration; and agreeing upon the main, that it would not be Safe, under their Circumſtances, to oppoſe a Power that had already been too Hard for Two Great Kings, the Anſwer they reſolv'd upon was only in the way of a Sly and Civil Excuſe, to let him know, that they neither Did nor Would own any other Lord and Maſter then himſelf; and that they were to all Purpoſes at his Devotion. Jehu wrote them word back again, that if they meant Good Faith, they ſhould forthwith ſend him the Heads of all Ahab's Sons, as a Token and Teſtimony of their readineſs to ſerve him. The Magiſtrates and the Young Men's Tutors conferr'd together about it; and without any Scruple of Tenderneſs or Compaſſion, agreed among themſelves to cut-off all their Heads, and ſend them in Baskets to Jezreel, The King and his Friends were together at Supper, when the News was brought him that the Heads were come: So he Order'd them to be laid in Two Heaps before the Gate; on each ſide one; and the next Morning going-out to View them, turning his Speech to the People, I had a hand, ſays he, in the Death of my Maſter; but whoſe Doing is all this. His Bus'neſs was to Satisfy the People, that all this Rigour upon the Houſe of Ahab, was not only according to the Will of God; but Anſwerable to what God himſelf had foretold by the Mouth of the Prophet. He deſtroy'd as many, in ſhort, of the Family of Ahab as he could find, and returned afterward to Samaria. Falling into Company upon the Way with Several of the Kindred of Ahaziah, King of Jeruſalem, he asked them whether they were a-going? they anſwered, that they were going to pay their Duty to Jehoram, and King Ahaziah, having heard nothing as yet of their Death by the Hand of Jehu. There were Two and Forty of them in Number, and Jehu caus'd them all to be Slain. He happen'd afterward to meet with Jehonadab, a Particular Friend of his, and a very Good Juſt Man; who after the Firſt Salutation, highly commended him for his Zeal in Rooting out the Race and Family of Wicked Ahab, according to the Command, and Appointment of God. Jehu then invited him into his Chariot to go along with him to Samaria; telling him that he ſhould now ſee he would ſpare no Apoſtates, but put all the Falſe Prieſts and Prophets to the Sword, every Man of them, that had Seduced the People from the Religion of their Forefathers, into the Idolatrous Worſhip of Falſe Gods: accounting it a Glorious Spectacle, for a Good Man to ſee the Wicked Puniſh'd according to their Deſerts. Jehonadab ſubmitted to the King's

Pleaſure,

Pleasure, and waited upon him in his Chariot to the City. Jehu, so soon as they came thither, caused a Strict Search to be made for Ahab's Relations, and put them all to death as fast as he found them; and being also resolved that none of Ahab's False Prophets, or Prophane Priests should Scape him, he Circumvented them all with a Trick. He appointed the People to meet in an Assembly, telling them, that if Ahab served Baal a little, Jehu should serve him Twice as much, for he would Worship double the Number; and therefore he would have all the Priests and Prophets of Baal to be Present, to a Single Man; for he had a great Sacrifice to offer to the God of Ahab, whom they called Baal, and it should be Death for any Priest to Absent himself. So he sent his Messengers up and down all over Israel, to Summon the Priests up to Samaria at the Appointed Day. Upon their Arrival they had Vestments given them, which they put on. So Jehu took Jehonadab with him into the House of Baal, where a Strict Search was made, that there might not be any Creature there Present, more then the Servants of Baal; for Jehu would not Suffer, he said, any Prophane Intruder to Intermix in that Holy Worship. When Jehu found that they were all Baalites, and just Ent'ring upon the Ceremony, he had Fourscore Men ready at the Door that waited only the Word of Command to breake-in upon the Apostates. Their Orders were to put all the False Prophets to the Sword, and to Vindicate the Religion of their Ancestors, under this Condition and Penalty; that whoever should spare the Life of but any One of them, his Life should answer for the other's. The Word was given, and they Executed their Commission to the Uttermost Rigour. They kill'd them all to a Man; set Fire to the Palace it self, and so Purged the City of all it's Sacrilegious Abominations. This Baal was the Syrians Idol, that Ahab dedicated an Altar to, in Samaria, for the sake of Ithobal his Father-in-Law, the King of Tyre and Sydon; and assign'd them Priests and Prophets and Other Necessaries appertaining to their Religion. Now Jehu abolish'd the Rites and Ceremonies of this Worship; but permitted the Israelites to go-on still in the Adoration of their Golden Calves. This Severity of his against that Impious Generation did however so far Atone for the rest, that God signify'd to him by his Prophet, that his Posterity should sit upon the Throne of Israel to the Fourth Generation.

Athaliah meditates a Revenge upon the House of David, for that of Ahab. Jehoida the High-Priest saves Joash, the Son of Ahaziah King of Judah; sets him upon the Throne, and Causes Athaliah to be put to death.

WHen Athaliah, the Daughter of Ahab, King of Israel, and the Widow of Jehoram King of Judah, came to understand what Havock Jehu had made in her Father's Wicked Family; King Jehoram her Brother Assassinated; her Son Ahaziah Dead of his Wound, and the Whole Stock upon the Point of being utterly Rooted out; she took up a Resolution of going the same way to Work with the House of David, and not to leave so much as One Man Alive of the Family, to pretend afterward to the Kingdom of Judah. This was her Determination, and it was none of her Fault that it was not Executed: For of all the Sons of Ahaziah, there was only one that Scap'd; and the Manner of his Deliverance was this. Jehoshabeth, the Sister of Ahaziah, and the Wife of Jehoiada the High-Priest, coming into the Palace, she found a Male-Child of about a Year Old, whose Name was Joash, among the Dead Bodies of the Sons of Ahaziah; which the Nurse, it seems, had hid there. She Convey'd it away by Stealth to her own Lodgings, and so into the Temple, where she Concealed, and took Care of it, thorough the Whole Six Years of [a] Athaliah's Reign over Jerusalem, and the Two Tribes; and no Mortal of her Council all this while Privy to the Secret, but her own Husband.

In the Seventh Year, Jehoiada Enter'd into an Association with Five Captains, to force the Government out of Athaliah's Hand, and Transfer it to the Right Heir; shewing them the Child that was then Present. So that their Bus'ness was now only to Enterchange an Oath of Faith and Secrecy, and so apply themselves to the Execution of the Design; which they did immediately, and not without Great Hope and Confidence of Succes. The Captains that Jehoida had Engaged in this Enterprize, Travell'd all over the Country, with Summons to the Priests and Levites, and several of the Principal Men in their Tribes, in the High-Priest's Name to go up to Jerusalem; where Jehoiada told them, that they were now call'd up for Advice, about the Common Good of the Publique; and that he would lay the whole Matter before them: but it must be kept Private however; beside that the Case requir'd quir'd not only Secrecy, but Help. Upon this he gave them their Oath of Secrecy, and then told them the Whole Story without any Further Scruple, ſhewing them the Child likewiſe that he had taken into his Care and Preſerv'd. This Child, ſays he, is your King, and a Branch of that Family, which God hath both Promiſed and Foretold (as you know very well) ſhall never be wanting to ſupply the Throne of David. Now it is my Advice, that you Divide your ſelves into Three Bodies; One Third to be upon the Guard of the King in the Temple; a ſecond Third to ſecure the Paſſes, and Avenues that lead to it; and the Remainder to Guard the Open Gate that leads to the Palace. As for thoſe that have no Arms, let them be in the Temple if they think fit; but no Armed Man to be Admitted there, if he be not a Prieſt. Jehoida gave Order alſo for a Select Number of Prieſts and Levites to ſtand with their Swords drawn, as a Guard about the King's Perſon, and to Kill any Man whatſoever, that ſhould Preſs into the Temple with a Weapon about him; and to ſecure the Life and Safety of the King, at what rate ſoever. They were all pleas'd with the Advice and Contrivance of the High-Prieſt. So that the Next thing to be done, was the putting of the Project in Execution. Jehoiada, upon this, Open'd a Magazine of Military Proviſions that David had long ſince ſtor'd up in the Temple, delivering out Lances, Arrows, and what other Arms were there Depoſited, to the Centurions, Prieſts and Levites; who planted themſelves as a Guard upon the Temple quite Around it; and ſo ſtrictly beſet the Doors, that not a Creature was let in that had no Bus'neſs there. The Child was now produc'd with a Royal Crown upon his Head, and being Anointed with Holy Oyl according to Form, the High Prieſt Pronounc'd him King: which Solemnity was accompany'd with a Thouſand Acclamations, and Wiſhes of Happy Life, and Victory over all his Enemies, by the Univerſality of the People.

Joaſh is preſented to them as their King. Orders given for the Security of the Temple, and of the Perſon of Joaſh.

Joaſh is produced, Crowned, Anointed, and Pronounced King, with an Univerſal Joy and Acclamation.

The Clamour of this Outcry, and Proclamation, was a Terrible Surprize to Athaliah, who preſently Hurry'd away with her Guards, from the Palace to the Temple; where ſhe her ſelf was Admitted by the Prieſt, but the Soldiers that follow'd her were kept out by the Guards that were Poſted there by Jehoiada for that very Purpoſe. So ſoon as Athaliah ſaw the Child upon the Throne, and with a Royal Crown upon his Head, ſhe tore her Garments, and call'd out with a Loud Voice to Kill that Trayterous Uſurper. Jehoiada, on the other ſide, Commands the Officers to ſeize that Woman, and carry her away to the Brook of Kidron, and there to put her to Death; but the Temple was not to be Polluted with the Bloud of a Sorcereſs. Order was likewiſe given, that if any Man ſhould Attempt a Reſcue, they ſhould put him to death. They that had the Charge of this Commiſſion, carry'd her out of the Gate by the Paſſage of the King's Mules, and there Diſpatch'd her. So ſoon as this Plot againſt Athaliah had taken Effect, Jehoiada call'd all the People, and Soldiers together, into the Temple, and gave them an Oath of Allegeance and Fidelity to the King, for the Safety and Defence of his Perſon, and the Honour and Preſervation of his Government. After this, the King himſelf took an Oath of a Religious Reverence to God, and for the Obſervance of thoſe Laws that Moſes received from Heaven, and Tranſmitted to the People. In the next Place the People ran in Shoals to the Houſe of Baal, a Temple that Athaliah, together with her Husband Jehoram, had Erected, in Contempt of the True God, and to curry Favour with Ahab. This Temple, the Multitude deſtroy'd from the very Foundations, and kill'd Mattan one of Baal's Prieſts, that was then in waiting. But for the Care of the Holy Temple, that was Committed to the Charge of the Prieſts and Levites, according to the Inſtitution of David: Jehoiada appointing two Solemn Sacrifices to be Offer'd-up Every Day, with Incenſe, according to the Direction of the Law; appointing Porters alſo out of the Number of the Levites, for the keeping of the Temple, that there might not any Pollution get into it by ſtealth. When all things were thus Diſpos'd of, Joaſh was Conducted out of the Temple into the Palace, by the Captains, the Governours, and all the People, where being Plac'd a Second time upon the Throne, and Received with Repeated Acclamations, the People gave themſelves up for ſome Days, to Mirth and Feaſting, and not a Man of them that was not Satisfy'd with the Death of that Wicked Woman. Joaſh was Seven Years of Age when he began to Reign. His Mother's Name was Zibiah of Beer-ſheba. He was a Steady Man to the Laws and his Religion, ſo long as Jehoiada liv'd. When he came afterwards to Years of Maturity, he Married Two Wives, with the Approbation of the High-Prieſt, and had Children by them of Both Sexes. Let this Suffice for the Hiſtory of Joaſh, how he ſcaped the Snares of Athaliah, and afterward Succeeded to the Government.

HAZAEL, the King of Syria, made a Bloudy War upon the Iſraelites, and their King; laying Waſte a great Tract of Land to the Eaſtward beyond Jordan; particularly, in the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manaſſes, and ſo in Gilead, and Batanæa: not only Burning and Pillaging, but putting Man, Woman, and Child to the Sword alſo, wherever he came, without either Mercy, or Quarter: And all This was done with little or no Difficulty, or Oppoſition from Jehu neither, being a Man that ſpent his whole time in a ſtupid Contempt of God's Religion and Holy Laws. He Dy'd in the Seven and Twentieth Year of his Government over Iſrael, and was Buried at Samaria; Jehoaſh his Son ſucceeding him.

2 Kings 12. 2 Chron. 24. A Tax toward the Repairing of the Temple: but nothing done in't.

In the Days of Jehoram and Athaliah, and of their Sons, the Temple was gone quite to Ruin for want of Care and Repairing: ſo that Joaſh the King of Jeruſalem ſent for Jehoiada the High-Prieſt to give him Order about it; which was, that he ſhould ſend Prieſts and Levites into all the Quarters of his Dominions, to charge every Man at half a Silver Shekel a Head, toward making good the Breaches and Decays of the Temple. But This Command notwithſtanding, there was nothing done toward it at preſent; for Jehoiada very well knew, that the People were not at That time over-forward to lay out Mony in Building of Churches. But Joaſh afterward, in the Three and Twentieth Year of his Reign, finding the Project of ſo Good and Needful a Work, to be totally Forgotten, and laid aſide, he charged the High-Prieſt and the Levites with the Care of it once again; and not without Blaming them, in ſome degree, for the bypaſt Neglect of their Duty. This put Jehoiada upon bethinking himſelf how the Buſineſs might be brought about without any Grievance to the People; and in the End, he pitch'd upon this Expedient. There was a Wooden Cheſt provided, cloſe Wrought, and Lock'd, with a Slit thorough the Cover of it, to receive what Pieces of Money ſoever ſhould be put into it. This was to be placed near the Altar, and the People invited to ſhew their Good-will upon This occaſion toward the Work in hand, in Proportion to the Zeal they had to the True Religion, and God's Service. The whole Multitude was ſo well pleaſed with This Method and Contrivance, that they brought-in Gold and Silver in a kind of Strife who ſhould do moſt. The Cheſt was every Day Open'd, the Mony Counted, and Regiſter'd by the Clerk of the Treaſury, and then lock'd-up again by the Prieſt, who had the Keeping of the Key: And All this was done in the Preſence of the King. The High-Prieſt finds out an Expedient for a voluntary Contribution, that does the Work.

Artiſts and Materials provided.

When they had gotten Treaſure enough to begin withal, the King and the High-Prieſt hir'd Carpenters, Maſons, and other Artificers; Provided the Largeſt and the Choiceſt Timbers that were to be gotten, and went in hand with the Reparations; Employing the Over-plus (which was very conſiderable) after the finiſhing of That Work, upon Cups, Flagons, Goblets, and other Veſſels for Holy Uſes, over and above the Oblation of Dayly Sacrifices: And This Order was exactly obſerv'd while Jehoiada Liv'd; but in the Hundred and Thirtieth Year of his Age he dy'd: a Man of ſignal Probity and Juſtice; and ſo highly eſteem'd of, as a Friend to the Houſe of David, that his Body was Depoſited in the Sepulchre of the Kings. After his Deceaſe, Joaſh fell-off from his Former Zeal and Care for Religion, and the Princes of the People quickly follow'd his Example; to the degree of Valuing themſelves upon the Contempt of Holy Things and Duties. Upon this abominable Apoſtacy, both of the King and of his Miniſters, God ſent Prophets to them to Expoſtulate and Reaſon the Matter with them, and to Convince them of their Wickedneſs; but they were ſo Reprobated, and Harden'd in their Iniquity, that neither the Example of their Forefathers, and their Families, that had been cut-off, and rooted-out, for the ſame Contempt; nor the Threatnings of the Prophets wrought any thing upon them: But the King cauſed Zachariah, the Son of the High-Prieſt Jehoiada, to be ſton'd to Death in the very Temple, without any regard to the Merits and Good-Counſels of his Father. And what was his Fault, but the Exhorting of both King and People to Repentance, and to the Adminiſtration of Equal Juſtice; and not without a Premonition of the Grievous Judgments that would befal them, if they perſiſted in their Iniquity. Zachariah, with his laſt Breath, appealed to God, both as his Judge, and as his Witneſs, that the Crime he dy'd for was only the giving of good Advice, and being the Son of a Father that had deſerved ſo well from Joaſh; and that the Death he then ſuffer'd was

It was not long after This, that Divine Vengeance overtook the King himſelf; for Hazael, the King of Syria, made an Inroad into his Country; Rifled and Deſtroy'd Gath, in the firſt place, and from thence Marched toward Jeruſalem, where the King himſelf had Taken Sanctuary. Joaſh was ſo affrighted at the Approach of the Syrians Army, that he compounded for himſelf, and the City, and deliver'd up all the Treaſure of the Temple, as well what was dedicated to God, as the Donatives of Particular Kings, as a Bribe to Hazael for the ſaving of his Carcaſs; which he accepted of, being a prodigious Sum of Mony, and ſo Rais'd the Siege upon it. Joaſh, after This, fell into a deſperate Fit of Sickneſs, and the Friends of Zachariah took their Revenge upon him by Surprize, for the Murder of the Son of the High-Prieſt. He was Bury'd at Jeruſalem, at the Age of Forty Seven Years; but a Man of ſo Exemplary a Wickedneſs, that they would not allow him the Honour of a Sepulchre among the Kings, his Predeceſſors.

The King of Syria, in the mean time, had brought down his Mighty Power to the miſerable Pittance of Ten Thouſand Foot and Five Hundred Horſe, to Truſt to: Over-running ſeveral of his Cities, and Killing a World of his People. This Calamity of the Iſraelites was foretold by Eliſha in his Prediction to Hazael, when he told him that he ſhould Kill his Lord, and Poſſeſs himſelf of the Government of Syria and Damaſcus. In this Unhappy Juncture, Jehoahaz had Recourſe to God by Prayers, and Supplications, for Deliverance from the Power and Oppreſſion of Hazael: Upon which Humiliation of His, That Gracious God, who not only cheriſhes the Innocent, but Pardons the Penitent, and chuſes rather to Correct, and to Reform the Wicked, then to Deſtroy them, was prevail'd upon to Deliver him from the Burden of a Ruinous War, by a Timely Peace, and to Reſtore his Dominions to their former State of Happineſs and Plenty.

After the Death of Jehoahaz, Joaſh his Son came to the Government of Iſrael, and Samaria, in the Seven and Thirtieth Year of the Reign of Joaſh, King of Judah: This King and the King of Jeruſalem being both of a Name. He held the Government Sixteen Years: an Excellent Man; and nothing in him of his Father's way of Life and Converſation. The Prophet Eliſha was now far gone in Years; and being at this time upon his laſt Bed of Sickneſs, Joaſh made him a Viſit in his Extremity, and out of a Tenderneſs, to ſee the Good Man Labouring in his Agonies, burſt out into Tears and Lamentations; treating him in the Style of the Father, the Defender and the Protector of his Country; for ſo long as he liv'd, the People were Secure, he ſaid, againſt all their Enemies, even without any need of Arms, through the Benefit and Bleſſing of his Prayers and Predictions; but that whenever he was Taken away, they ſhould be left Naked and Defenceleſs, at the Mercy of their Enemies: And therefore, for his own part, he had infinitely rather leave the World with him, then ſtay in it without him.

This compaſſionate Softneſs wrought ſo far upon the Prophet, that to comfort the King, he call'd for a Bow and Arrows, lay'd his Hand upon it, and bad him bend it and Shoot. He diſcharg'd Thrice, and then gave over: So Eliſha told him, that if he had let fly more Shafts, he ſhould have Over-run the Whole Kingdom of the Syrians; but ſince he gave it off at the Third Shot, he muſt content himſelf with three ſeveral Victories over them: wherein he ſhould recover the Land they had taken from his Father. The King went his way upon theſe Words; and the Prophet departed This Life ſoon after. He was a Man Celebrated for his Juſtice, and without all Diſpute highly in God's Favour, as appears by the Hiſtory of the Wonderful Things he did, and the Miracles that he wrought in abundance, as the Account of them ſtands Sacred upon the Records of the Hebrews to this Day. They gave him, in fine, a Pompous, and an Honourable Interrment, anſwerable to the Dignity, and Merit of ſo Great a Saint. It happen'd, after This, that a Traveller was Kill'd upon the Way by by Thieves, and the Body thrown into the Prophet's Monument; which, upon the bare Touch of Eliſha, was immediately Reviv'd: So that both Dead and Living, this Prophet wrought Miracles.

A Dead Carcaſs Reviv'd by the Touch of Eliſha's Body.

Hazael was now Dead, and the Kingdom of Syria fall'n by an Hereditary Right to his Son Adad, who was Overthrown by Joaſh in Three Battles; and All that Country Recover'd to the Iſraelites again, which his Father had Wreſted from them; according to the Prediction of Eliſha. IN the Second Year of Joaſh King of Iſrael, Amaziah came to the Government of the Tribe of Judah, in the City of Jeruſalem. His Mother's Name was Jehoadan, a Native of the Place. He had a wonderful Reverence for Juſtice, even in the Tenderneſs of his Youth; and began his Adminiſtration in Revenging the Death of his Father upon their Heads who Treacherouſly Murder'd him, under a Cloak of Friendſhip. He brought the Aſſaſſines all to Publique Juſtice; but ſpar'd their Children, according to the Opinion and Precept of Moſes, who thought it Unreaſonable to Puniſh the Children for the Iniquity of the Fathers. After This, he made a Levy in the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, of the Choiceſt Young-Men that were to be found, of about Twenty Years of Age, little over or under, which he Liſted, and ſet Centurions over them. He Treated with the King of the Iſraelites for Twenty Thouſand Auxiliaries; at the rate of a Hundred Talents of Silver for the Hire of them, and the Mony pay'd down; being Reſolv'd upon a War with the Amalekites, the Edomites, and the Gabilites. He was juſt upon the Point of Marching againſt them, when a Man of God adviſed him by all means to Diſmiſs the Iſraelites; for they were a Wicked Generation, and would certainly be Deſtroy'd, together with Thoſe that joyn'd with them: beſide that he had a ſufficient Force of his own, with God's Aſſiſtance, to Confound the Enemy. The King having already parted with his Mony, was not a little Troubled at the Thought of loſing both his Pay, and his Men; but yet upon the Prophet's Inſtance to Reſign himſelf wholly to the Will of God, under whoſe Protection he ſhould be ſure to want Nothing, he Diſcharg'd his Auxiliaries, with This Preface to the Farewel, that He frankly Beſtow'd that Treaſure upon them as a Bounty, which they had received only as a Hire. Immediately upon parting with his Mercenaries, he advanc'd with his Own Proper Troups againſt the People abovementioned, whom he Overcame, and Cut-off Ten Thouſand of them in One Battle, and carry'd away Ten Thouſand more to the Top of a Great Rock, that over-looks Arabia, where they were all thrown down the Precipice and Deſtroy'd: and ſo Amaziah return'd home again with a great Booty. But in this while, the Twenty Thouſand Mercenaries took it ſo Heinouſly to be turn'd-off ſo ſcandalouſly, and without any Colour of Reaſon for it, that to Revenge the Affront of that Contempt, they made an Outrageous Inroad into the King's Country, laying all Waſte as far as Bethſeamere; putting Three Thouſand People to the Sword, and carrying away a great Number of their Cattel.

Amaziah began his Adminiſtration in bringing the Murderers of his Father to Juſtice.

He made vaſt Levies of his Own People, and dealt with the Kings of Iſrael for 20000 Mercenaries, 2 Kings 14. 2 Chron. 25. but Diſmiſs'd the Iſraelites.

Amaziah gives the Amalekites a great Overthrow.

The Mercenaries make an Outrageous Inroad into the King's Country.

Amaziah was ſo Puff'd-up with the Conceit of This Victory, that he had no longer any Thought of Him that was the Author of it; but went over from the Worſhip of the True God to the Idols of the Amalekites. The Prophet, upon This, went to the King, and told him, that he could not but Wonder at his Dependence upon Thoſe Powers, that were ſo far from being able to Protect their Servants, that they could not Defend Themſelves; but were Taken Priſoners by the Hebrews, and carry'd away like Slaves to Jeruſalem, with the reſt of the Spoil. The King cut him off ſhort in his Diſcourſe, at this rate of Reproche, and bad him at his Peril, not to meddle any further in a Bus'neſs that did not concern him. The Prophet's Anſwer was, that for the Future he would be Quiet; but aſſuring him withal, that the Superſtition of this Apoſtacy would not 'ſcape a Divine Vengeance.

Amaziah, in the Pride of his Heart, goes over from the True God to Idolatry.

Amaziah was ſo Tranſported with Vanity, and Inſolence upon his late Succeſs, that without any regard to the Hand of Divine Providence, he wrote an Imperious Letter ſome time after, to Joaſh, the King of the Iſraelites, commanding Him and his People to pay the ſame Allegiance to him, which they had formerly render'd to his Anceſtors, David and Solomon; or in caſe of their Refuſal, to expect a Deciſion of the Cauſe by the Sword: To which Summons, Joaſh returned This Anſwer.

Amaziah writes an Imperious Letter to Joaſh.

King

King Joash to King Amaziah, Greeting.

Joash answers it with the Fable of the Cypress and the Thistle.

It happened once upon a time, betwixt a Cypress-Tree and a Thistle, upon Mount Libanus, that the Thistle sent to the Cypress, saying, Give thy Daughter to my Son to Wife. Whereupon, a Wild Beast went and Trod down the Thistle. Make Use of This Example for your own Instruction, and to moderate your Ambition, without Aspiring to Things out of your reach. Have a care, that this Confidence, and Pride of yours for the Overthrow of the Amalekites, do not Betray you some time or other to the Loss of your Life and Kingdom.

This Answer to Amaziah was but so much Oyl to the Flame, and made him Ten times more Furious and Implacable then before: God in his Justice giving him up, as may be reasonably supposed, to such a violent Impotency of Rage and Passion, as would certainly expose him to the Stroke of Divine Justice for his Impiety. In this Heat he took the Field; and both Armies were drawn-up in Form of Battle. But no sooner were they Advanced within Sight of the Enemy, but his Men were instantly struck with so Judicial a Consternation and Terror, that they turned their Backs without striking a Blow, and Flying several ways, left Amaziah Prisoner in the Hands of his Enemies, who refused to give him Quarter upon any other Terms, then that the Citizens of Jerusalem should set Open the Gates, and receive Him and his Victorious Army into the Town; which, betwixt the Pinch of Necessity, and the Love of Life, they were prevail'd upon to do: So that Joash enter'd the Town in his Triumphal Chariot thorough a Breach of Three Hundred Cubits of Wall that he had caus'd to be broken down, with his Prisoner Amaziah marching before him; and This was the Manner of his making Himself Master of the Place. He made a Seizure of All the Holy Plate and Treasure, and of all the Gold and Silver likewise that he could find in the Palace; carrying the Whole Spoil away with him; and then Dismissing the King, he returned to Samaria. This Calamity befel Jerusalem in the Fourteenth Year of Amaziah's Reign. The People of Jerusalem, after This, enter'd into a Conspiracy against him: So that he was forced to fly for Safety to Lachish; but That would not serve his Turn, for the Ruffians follow'd him thither, and There they Murder'd him. His Body was carry'd back to Jerusalem, where it was Bury'd with a Royal State. This was the Miserable End he came to, for the Neglect of God's Worship, and Hankering after Innovations in Religion. He Dy'd in the Fiftieth or One and Fiftieth Year of his Life, and the Twenty Ninth of his Reign; leaving his Son Uzziah the Successor to his Government.

Amaziah takes the Field in a Rage; but at first sight of the Enemy, his Men run several ways without striking a Blow, and leave Amaziah Prisoner.

Jeroboam the Son of Joash made King in the 15th of Amaziah. 2 Kings 14.

IN the Fifteenth Year of the Reign of Amaziah, Jeroboam the Son of Joash, was made King over Israel, and kept his Court in Samaria, in the Palace of his Forefathers, for the Whole Forty Years of his Reign. He was a Prince Impious to the Highest Degree, wholly abandon'd to Idolatry; and so Licentious, that he stuck at nothing, though never so Wicked, that he had a mind to: and the Judgments that his Profligate Course of Life brought upon the Israelites, were almost Innumerable. It was foretold of him by Jonas the Prophet, that he should Overcome the Syrian's, and Enlarge his Territories as far as the City Hamath on the North, and the Lake Asphaltites on the South; which were formerly the Bounds of the Land of Chanaan, according to the Allotment of Joshua the General. Jeroboam was so Elevated upon this Prediction, that he took away from the Syrians all that Tract of Ground before Spoken of, and Annexed it to his own Dominions; and therein made good the Prediction of the Prophet. Now in regard that I have strictly ty'd-up my self to write the History of the Hebrews with Exact Truth and Good Faith, I must not pass over, what I find Recorded of this Matter in Holy Writ.

The Prophet Jonas Points at him, and Jeroboam values himself wonderfully upon the Prediction.

The

The Word of the Lord came unto Jonah, saying: Arise and go to Nineve, and there Cry aloud to them, that That Great Kingdom is to be suddenly Destroy'd: But Jonah, to avoide the Danger of being an Author of such Tidings to them, thought it better to slip out of the Way, (as if he could hide himself from God) and so went a-board a Vessel at Joppa, that was Bound for Tarshish in Cilicia. While they were upon the way, there Arose a Violent Tempest, that put the Master, the Mariners, and the Pilot himself, all to their Wit's End for fear of being Swallow'd-up. But it was Observed that while the Crew were at their Prayers, and Labouring to keep the Ship above-Water, Jonah was the Only Man that made no Bussle; but lay flat upon his Face in the Hold, without doing as Other People did. The Wind still blew Harder and Harder; and the Storm Encreasing, the Company took-up a Conceit that this Calamity had befall'n them for the Wickedness of some or Other of the People that they had a-board. And so they agreed among themselves to put it to the Lot, who might be the Man. They did so, and the Lot fell upon the Prophet. This put the Crew upon Enquiring What he was, and what might be his Bus'ness. He told them that he was an Hebrew, and a Prophet to the Great God: But I am the Man, says he, that has rais'd this Storm, and you have no way left you to save your selves and the Vessel, but by casting me over-board. They look'd upon it, at first, to be so Inhumane, and so Ill natured an Impiety, to deliver up a Guest, and one that had put his Life into their Hands, to so Certain, and Inevitable a Destruction, that for a while they durst not Resolve upon it: But in the End, partly by the Extreme necessity of the Case: (for the Ship was upon the very Point of Sinking) partly by the Authority of the Prophet; and partly by their own Fear, they were prevail'd upon, and threw him into the Sea; in which Instant, the Storm Ceas'd. The History says that he was taken-up by a Whale, and after Three Days, cast up again, Sound, and Living, upon the Shore of the Euxine Sea, and nothing Amiss about him: From whence, after Pardon Obtain'd from Almighty God for his Disobedience, he went directly to Nineve, according to his Order and Commission. He gets up to a Place there, where he might best be heard; and thence foretells them, that the Empire of Asia was near an End; and so upon the Publishing of this Prophetical Declaration, he went his way. This is what we find Reported of him in the Records of Holy Scripture.

Jonah Order'd to go to Nineve, to Preach Destruction to that Wicked City; but Ships himself Another way, to avoid the Commission. There rises a Terrible Tempest.

Jonas is cast over-board, and the Storm ceases. A Whale Swallows him, and after three Days casts him up again. He goes to Nineve after this and foretels the Ruine of that Empire.

But to Return now to Jeroboam. After a Prosperous Reign of Forty Years he was Bury'd at Samaria; Zachariah his Son Succeeding him: as Uzziah succeeded Amaziah in the Fourteenth Year of Jeroboam, to the Government of the Two Tribes at Jerusalem. His Mother's Name was Achia, a Native of Jerusalem. He was a Man Naturally of Great Courtesy and Justice; Brave, Provident, and Industrious. He made War upon the Philistins, and took Gath and Jamnia from them by Assault; demolishing their Walls. And he made Another Expedition also against the Arabians, upon the Borders of Ægypt, and Built a Town near the Red-Sea, which he Committed to the Guard of a Strong Garrison. After this, he subdu'd the Ammonites, and put them under Contribution, Reducing the whole Country as far as the Frontiers of Ægypt, under his Power; Betaking himself in the End to the Care of the City. Where the Walls were Ruinous, or Decay'd, whether by Age or by the Neglect of Former Governours, he Rebuilt them anew, and Repair'd that Breach also which the King of the Israelites had made when Amaziah was his Prisoner at his Triumphant Entrance into the City. He Erected also several Towers of One Hundred and Fifty Cubits in Height, and built Castles and several Strong Forts for the Security of the Open Country; beside a great many Aqueducts, Cisterns and Basins, for the Relief of his Herds and Cattle, whereof the Number was Incredible; the Country being Naturally Dispos'd for Pasture. He was himself also a Great Lover of Tillage, Planting, Gardening, Nurseries, and all sorts of Husbandry. As to the Military Part, he had an Army of Three Hundred and Seventy Thousand Select Men, under the Command of Two Thousand Brave and Experinc'd Officers: All Well Arm'd, with Swords, Bucklers, Brazen Corselets, Bows, Slings, and Train'd up to the Exercise of Arms, and the Drawing up of Armies, after the most Advantageous way of Martial Discipline. He had Several Machines and Engines also for Battery, and Casting of Stones and Darts; beside Hooks, and other Instruments for Attaque. But his Head was so Taken-up with the Vanity of these Preparations and Designs, that the Arrogance of his Ambition for a Transitory and an Earthly Glory, took him quite off from the Thought of Blessings Everlasting, and from the Duties of Holiness and Religion in the Worship, and Service of the Almighty: Insomuch that he Falter'd in his Integrity, after the Example of his Father, out of an Impotency of Mind, that was not able to bear-up against the Tide of a Constant Course of Prosperity and Success.

The King in a Passion bad them be Quiet without more ado, upon the Peril of their Lives: Which Menace was follow'd with a terrible Earthquake, and the Roof of the Temple opening with the Shock of it, there pass'd a Beam of the Sun through the Cleft that struck directly upon the Face of this Sacrilegious Prince, who in that very Moment became a Leper. And this Prodigy was accompany'd with Another. There was a Place at some small Distance Westward from the Town, that they call'd Eroge; where, by the same Earthquake, One Half of a Great Mountain was torn from the other; and after it had Roll'd over and over, a matter of Four Furlong, it stopt in the Conclusion upon the East-side of a Mountain over-against it: having choak'd up the High-way, and cover'd the King's Gardens all over with Rubbish. When the Priests found the King to be Lep'rous, and that the Lord had smitten him, they admonish'd him to depart the City, as an Unclean Person, and not fit for Common Society. The Shame of lying under such a Calamity, had by this Time so far brought down his Impious Pride, and Stomach, that he Submitted and Obey'd; and when he had liv'd for some time a Private Life out of the City, Jotham his Son taking upon him the Administration of the Government, his Grief brought him at last to his Grave, in the Sixty Eighth Year of his Age, and in the Fifty Second of his Reign; and his Body was laid in his Gardens, in a Monument by it self.

Zachariah, the King of the Israelites, and the Son of Jeroboam, in the Seventh Month of his Reign, was Murder'd by the Treachery of one of his Own Domestiques, Shallum by Name, the Son of Jabesh; who upon the Slaughter of Zachariah took Possession of the Government. It was Ill got, and he lost it as Ill; on the Thirtieth Day after the Seizing of it. Menahem had at that time the Command of an Army that was at [a] Tirzah; and upon the News of what had befall'n Zachariah, he Marched away presently with his Troups to Samaria, where he Fought and Overthrew Shallum, put him to the Sword, and afterward by his Own Authority took all the Ensigns of Royalty to himself, and exercised Sovereign Power. With this Victorious Army, he Marched to Tirzah: but the Citizens shut their Gates upon him, and refused to admit him; which put him into such a Rage against them, as Revolters, that he lay'd Waste the whole Country thereabouts, and in the End took the Town by Assault; put them All to the Sword, without sparing so much as a Child, to the highest degree of Cruelty that ever was heard of: for he exercis'd that Mercyless Rigour and Inhumanity upon his own Countrymen, that would have been Unpardonable, even toward the Worst of Barbarians themselves: And his Government was not much easier for the whole Ten Years of his Reign over Israel. He was threaten'd, after this, with an Invasion by Pul, the King of Assyria; but he durst not run the Risque of a Battle, and so came to a timely Agreement with him for the Composition of a Thousand Silver Talents; which he rais'd upon the People at Fifty Shekels a Head. He dy'd soon after, and was Bury'd at Samaria; leaving Pekahiah, the next Heir, to Succeed him; who Inherited the Inhumanity and Ill-nature of his Father, as well as the Government. But his Time was short; for after Two Years Reign, he was cut to pieces, with several of his Friends about him, at a Publique Feast, by the Treasonous Practice of Pekah the Son of Remaliah, one of his Tribunes; who withal Seized upon the Government, and Reigned a matter of Twenty Years; leaving it a Question at last, Whether he was more Remarkable for his Impiety to God, or for his Injustice towards Men?

He Repair'd the Decays of the Porches, and Galleries in the Temple; made good the City-Walls, where they were falling to Ruin; erected Large and Strong Towers: He brought the Ammonites under the Contribution of a Hundred Talents a Year; Thirty Thousand Measures of Wheat, and as many of Barley; advancing the

In the Reign of this Prince, there appear'd a Prophet, whoſe Name was Nahum, and he foretold the Deſtruction of Nineve, and the Subverſion of the Aſſyrian Empire, in manner as follows. The Condition of Nineve, ſays he, ſhall be like that of a Fiſh-Pool, in a violent Agitation of the Waters before a great Wind. The People ſhall fly away before the Storm, in Trouble and Confuſion; calling out one to another, Hold, ſtay a little, and take your Gold and your Silver along with you; and no body ſhall mind it, for their Lives ſhall be much Dearer to them then their Treaſure. They ſhall have Deſperate Factions and Diviſions among Themſelves; weeping and wailing, with the Knocking of their Knees, and Death in their Faces. What will become of the Habitation of the Lyons, and the Dams of the Lyon's Whelps? Nineve, ſays the Lord, I will ſtrike thee out from off the Face of the Earth, and put an End to the Outrages of the Wild Beaſts, that Thou haſt ſent into the World. The Prophet's Predictions about Nineve were more at large; but the Particulars are not Neceſſary for my Purpoſe, and would appear Tedious perhaps to the Reader. Let it ſuffice that the Prophecy was made good a Hundred and Fifteen Years after; and ſo I ſhall ſay no more of it.

The Death of Jotham. Ahaz Succeeds him. Rezin and Pekah make War upon him. Ahaz Overthrown by Pekah, with a Prodigious Slaughter.

JOTHAM Departed This Life in the One and Fortieth Year of his Age, and the Sixteenth of his Reign; and Ahaz in the Courſe of an Hereditary Right Succeeded him. He was the moſt Impious Prince of All that ever ſat upon That Throne, both for his Apoſtacy from the Laws of his Country, and for his Idolatry, in Imitation of the Kings of Iſrael. He built Altars in Jeruſalem; Sacrific'd to Idols upon them; and his own Son among the reſt for a Burnt-Offering; after the Manner of the Chanaanites: And a great many other Things he did too as Bad as This. While Ahaz was in the Courſe of Theſe Wicked Extravagancies, Rezin the King of Damaſcus, and Pekah the King of the Iſraelites, being joyn'd in a League of Amity and Alliance, Marched together up to Jeruſalem, preſſing it hard with Aſſault upon Aſſault, and lying a conſiderable Time before it: but the Place was ſo well Fortify'd and Defended, that he was forc'd to Quit it in the Concluſion. But in the mean while, the King of Syria poſſeſs'd himſelf of the City Elath, by the Red-Sea; put all the Inhabitants to the Sword, and Introduced a Colony of Syrians into their Places. He poſſeſs'd himſelf, after This, of ſeveral Caſtles, and Strong Holds; did Terrible Execution upon the Jews, and ſo with a prodigious Booty marched his Army back again to Damaſcus.

When the King of Jeruſalem came to Underſtand that the Syrians were gone away, he look'd upon himſelf to be a Match for the King of Iſrael, and ſo drew out an Army againſt him: But his Wickedneſs was ſo great, that God in a juſt Indignation gave the Victory to his Enemy, with the Loſs of a Hundred and Twenty Thouſand of his Men. In the ſame Battle, Zachariah the General of the Iſraelites Kill'd Amia the Son of Ahaz upon a Perſonal Encounter; and ſlew alſo Azica the Captain of the Guards; Taking Elkanah, the General of the Jews Troops, Priſoner: beſide a World of Captives of Both Sexes of the Benjamites, that they carry'd away; and ſo returned with the Spoil to Samaria. There was at That time a Prophet in Samaria, whoſe Name was Obel, who went out of the Town to meet the Army in their Return before the Walls; crying-out to them with a loud Voice, that they were not to look upon This Victory as an Advantage gain'd by their own Virtue and Valour, but as a Judgment from Heaven upon King Ahaz. The Prophet therefore told them, they were to Blame not to reſt ſatisfy'd with the proſperous Succeſs of their Undertaking, without making Slaves of their Kindred and Relations of the Two Tribes; adviſing them by all means to ſet them at Liberty, and ſend them Home again, without offering any Indignity to their Perſons, upon the Peril of falling under God's Diſpleaſure if they refus'd it. The Iſraelites, upon This Admonition, call'd a Council to Deliberate what to do upon this Occaſion. The Queſtion being put, there ſtood up One Berechiah, a Man of Great Authority in the Aſſembly; who, with Three more, declared themſelves utterly againſt the bringing any of the Priſoners into the Town, for fear God's Vengeance ſhould fall upon all the reſt. They had enough to Anſwer for in Tranſgreſſions already paſt, that the Prophet had Denounced againſt, without any need of encreaſing the Provocation, or the Number. 2 Kings 16. 17.

THIS Last Blow from the Israelites forced Ahaz to bethink himself of calling-in Assistance toward the carrying-on of the War. So he sent an Embassy to Tiglath-Pilezer the King of the Assyrians, with Promises of great Sums of Mony, and magnificent Presents in hand, craving Succours from him against the Israelites, and Those of Syria and Damascus. This Prince no sooner heard of the Desire and Proposal of Ahaz, but he march'd immediately to his Aid, laying the Country of Syria waste, Taking Damascus by Assault, and putting Rezin the King to the Sword. The People of Damascus he Transplanted to the Upper Media, and supply'd Their Places at Damascus, with Colonies of his own People. And then he Depopulated a great part of the Land of the Israelites, carrying away vast Numbers of them Prisoners. After the Harassing of the Syrians at this rate, Ahaz took all the Gold and Silver out of the King's Treasury, and That likewise out of the Temple, with all the rich Donatives and Presents, and carry'd the whole Mass along with him to Damascus; where, according to his Agreement, he deliver'd all up to the King of Assyria, with Acknowledgments for the Favour of his Relief, and so went his way back again to Jerusalem. Now This King had so little Sense, either of Honour, or of Reason, that the mortal Enmity betwixt Him and the Syrians, did not hinder Him yet from Worshipping their Gods, and joining in their Ceremonies; vainly persuading Himself that they would be Propitious to his Arms, in Favour of his Impious Zeal in a False Worship. And then when he was overcome, on the other hand, his Bus'ness was to make Friends of the Gods of the Assyrians: So that no sort of Idolatry came amiss to him, provided he might but keep clear of the Reverence he ought to the True God, and to the Religion, and Traditions of his Ancestors. This Apostacy was it, that drew down the Wrath and Vengeance of God upon him. Nay the Contempt and Aversion that he had for the Honour and Service of God, was so extravagant, that after he had Robb'd, and Rifled the Temple of all that was Precious in it, he Commanded the very Doors to be kept shut too, in pure Spite to God and Goodness, and to prevent the Celebrating of any Act or Office of Religious Worship in That Holy Place. But at last, after a constant Course and Exercise of These outrageous Impieties, he Departed this Life, at Thirty Six Years of Age, and in the Sixteenth of his Reign; leaving his Son Hezekiah his Successor to the Government. About this time Pekah King of Israel lost both his Government, and his Life, by the Treachery of a Court-Confident, whose Name was Hosea; who enjoy'd the Fruit of an Impious Violence and Usurpation, for the space of Nine Years. He was One of the Worst of Men; and in his Life and Conversation, he shew'd not the least Thought or Belief of a God. Salmanezer the King of the Assyrians led an Army against him, and being Cast-off by God, whom he Himself had Rejected and Despised, he was easily Overcome, and forc'd to Submit to the Terms of a Tributary.

In the Fourth Year of Hosea's Reign, Hezekiah came to be King of Jerusalem. He was the Son of Ahaz, by Abiac, a Native of That City: a Person of an excellent Understanding, and Naturally a Lover and Practicer of Piety and Justice. For the first thing he did upon his coming to the Throne, was to provide for the Comfort of his People in settling the main Affair of Religion, and God's Worship: to which End, he immediately Summon'd a Meeting of the Priests and Levites, and Treated them with a Discourse, as it is reported, to this Effect. I shall not need to mind you of the Many and the Great Calamities that have befall'n you for the Iniquities of my Father, in not rend'ring to God the Honour due to him, and for the Madness of your being prevail'd upon to pay a Divine Adoration to his Idols: Wherefore being now taught by woful Experience, how Dangerous a thing it is to Prevaricate with the Almighty, it is my Advice, that All past Miscarriages may be Forgotten; and that you Purify and Purge your Selves, together together with the Prieſts and Levites, from all your former Pollutions; and after That Preparation, that you ſet open the Doors of that Holy Place: and when you ſhall have Reſtor'd it to the State of its Original Purity and Reverence, by Conſecrations, Expiatory Luſtrations, and Sacrifices in Form, you may then promiſe your ſelves that God will Pardon your Impieties, and Proſper you in All your Undertakings. The Prieſts were ſo Elevated and Encouraged by This Advice of the Kings, that they preſently open'd the Temple, clear'd it of all Prophane Impurities and Defilements, made ready their Holy Veſſels, and laid their Sacrifices upon the Altar, according to the Jewiſh Manner. The King, in the mean time, ſent Meſſengers through all his Dominions to Summon the People up to Jeruſalem, to the Feaſt of Unleavened Bread; which had been Then a long time Intermitted, through the Impious Neglect of Former Kings: Exhorting, and Inviting the Iſraelites alſo to give over the Practice of their Idolatrous Superſtitions, and return to the Exerciſe of the True Religion, and to the Worſhip of the True God; promiſing them that they ſhould have free Leave and Liberty to Come and Go, and to Celebrate this Feſtival in common with his own People. Hezekiah told them, that it was not for his Own ſake, but for Theirs, that he gave them this Invitation; and that they themſelves ſhould find the Comfort of it, if they follow'd his Counſel: But when the Iſraelites heard of the Meſſage, they were ſo far from giving any heed to it, that they had the Meſſengers in Deriſion, and Treated the Prophets as ſpitefully too, for the Good Office of Adviſing them to Return to their Duties; and foretelling them the Miſeries that ſhould befal them, without a Timely Humiliation and Repentance. And their Outrage did not ſtop here neither; for they took ſeveral of the Prophets afterward, and put them to death. At this rate they went-on from One Wickedneſs to Another, and never gave over, till God in his Wrath Avenged himſelf upon them for their Impiety, by delivering them up into the Hands of their Enemies, as will be ſeen in its proper Place. But there were great Numbers yet of the Tribes of Manaſſes, Zabulon, and Iſſachar, that had their Hearts touch'd with this Premonition of the Prophets, and that went in Throngs up to Hezekiah at Jeruſalem, to Worſhip.

The King Summons up all his People to Jeruſalem, to the Feaſt of Unleavened Bread.

When the Multitude was there gather'd together, the King went up to the Temple, together with the Princes, and the People, where he Sacrificed, for Himſelf, ſeven Bulls, ſeven Rams, and as many Goats; and when he had firſt lay'd his Hands upon the Heads of the Victims, both the King, and the Princes, left the Execution to the Prieſts; who cut the Throats of the Sacrifices, and burnt them Whole; the Levites ſtanding in a Ring about them, ſinging Divine Hymns, and accompanying their Voices with Muſical Inſtruments, in ſuch manner as David had preſcribed to them of old; the reſt of the Prieſts joyning in the Conſort. When this was over, the King and the People caſt themſelves Proſtrate with their Faces upon the Ground, and Worſhipped the Lord. He Sacrificed after this, Seventy Bullocks, a Hundred Rams, and Two Hundred Lambs; beſtowing alſo Six Hundred Bullocks, and Three Thouſand other Cattle as a Largeſs for the Entertainment of the People: And when the Prieſts had done Their Parts according to the Cuſtomary Method and Order, the King himſelf made Good Cheer, and Communicated with the People, joyning together in Praiſes and Thankſgivings.

The Feaſt of Unleavened Bread was now coming on, and in the time of their Preparations for the Feaſt of the Paſſover, they offer'd up a Courſe of other Sacrifices, for Seven Days ſucceſſively, and the King beſtow'd upon the People, out of his own Bounty, Two Thouſand Bulls, and Seven Thouſands of other Cattle, over and above their own Number; the Princes likewiſe, after Hezekiah's Example, ſuperadding out of their own Liberality a Thouſand Bulls, and a Thouſand Four Hundred other Beaſts: inſomuch, that from the Days of Solomon to This Particular time, there was never ſuch a Solemnity heard of.

Never ſuch a Solemnity ſince the Days of Solomon.

So ſoon as this Feſtival was over, they made it their next Work to Purge the whole Country, having firſt Purify'd Jeruſalem it ſelf from the Abomination of their Idols. The King then appointed Dayly Sacrifices according to the Law to be ſupply'd out of his own Stores, and Commanded the People to Preſent the Prieſts and Levites with their Tenths and Firſt-Fruits, that they might not be taken-off by any Common Buſineſs from their Attendance upon the Altar. By this Means they were abundantly Furniſhed with all ſorts of Fruits and Proviſions. The King alſo Order'd the Building of Granaries, and Store-Houſes, for the Common Uſe and Service of Themſelves, their Wives and Children; to be Diſtributed in proportion to their Shares: So that by theſe Degrees, the Ancient Diſcipline came in ſome meaſure to be Reſtor'd.

A Thorough Reformation.

Matters being thus ſettled, the King made War upon the Philiſtins, and over-ran their Country, and All their Cities, from Gath to Gaza, which he added to his own Territories. But the King of Aſſyria, in this mean time, ſends a Meſſage to him to

And ſo much for the Story of This King.

The Loſs of this Place was the Final Ruine of the Kingdom of Iſrael; the People was all Tranſplanted into Media, and Perſia, and Hoſea the King taken with them alive: while the King of Aſſyria brought others from thence in Exchange, as far as Chuthah, a River of Perſia, to Re-people the Iſraelites; and ſo to Plant in Samaria, and up and down that Country.

Salmanezer Takes Samaria by Aſſault, in the 9*th Year of* Hoſea.

Hoſea a Priſoner, and the People Tranſplanted.

This Tranſportation of the Ten Tribes from the Place of their Abode, fell-out to be about ſome Nine Hundred and Seven and Forty Year, from the coming of their Forefathers out of the Land of Ægypt, to their taking Poſſeſſion of that Land before: Eight Hundred Year from the Days of Joſhua; and Two Hundred and Forty Years, Seven Months, and Seven Days after the Revolt from Rehoboam the Grand-Child of David, to Jeroboam; of whom we have ſpoken heretofore. This was the Miſerable End of that Stiff-necked People, that would neither be Subject to Laws, nor Hearken to the Voice and Precautions of their Prophets: though they foretold them, that their Certain Deſtruction was at hand, unleſs they departed immediately from their Evil Ways. Now the Riſe of all theſe Calamities took it's Date from that Seditious Revolt from Rehoboam, in advancing a Servant over the Head of his Maſter; who in Contempt of God, and his Holy Laws, drew the Indignation of Heaven upon the People, by Corrupting them into the Practice of the ſame Abominations, after his Example. But the Juſtice of God came home to him in his Own Perſon too in it's due Seaſon.

The Date of This Tranſportation.

The Revolt from Rehoboam was the Riſe of all This Miſchief.

The King of Aſſyria, in fine, Ravaged with his Army, and Domineer'd Every where in Syria, and Phœnicia; Mention being alſo made of his Name in the Hiſtory of the Tyrians: For in the Reign of Elulæus, as Menander has it in his Annals, (that were turn'd out of the Tyrian Language into Greek) he made War upon Tyre. His Words are to this Purpoſe. This ſame Elulæus Reigned Thirty Six Years; and upon a Revolt of the Gittæans, he ſent a Fleet thither, that Reduced them to their Obedience: And the King of the Aſſyrians ſent out an Army alſo againſt him, and Invaded the Whole Country of Phœnicia; till upon the Concluſion of a Peace, he March'd with his Troups back again. Some ſhort time after this Exploit, the Cities of Sydon, Arce, Palæ-Tyrus, and ſeveral Other Towns went over from the Tyrian's, to the Aſſyrian King: who taking it ſo Heinouſly to ſee the Tyrians the only People that Diſputed his Authority and Power, he Diſpatched a Navy againſt them of Sixty Sail, and Eight Hundred Rowers, under the Conduct of the Phœnicians, which the Tyrians Encounter'd, with only Twelve Veſſels; brake the Whole Body, and took Five Hundred of the Rowers Priſoners. The Succeſs of this Encounter gave them a Wonderful Reputation for their Skill and Ability in Naval Affairs. The King of Aſſyria, upon this Affront, returns, and ſets Guards along the River, and upon all Springs, and Aquæducts to keep the Tyrians from Water. The Tyrians were upon This Pinch for a matter of Five Years, when they were forc'd to Relieve themſelves from Pits of their Own Digging.

See Menander in his Annals

This is what we find Written of Salmanezer in the Chronicles of the Tyrians. Now the New-Comers in Samaria are called Chuthites, from a Country of Perſia, of that Name, and from the River Chuthah, from whence they had their Original. There were Five Nations of them, and they brought as many of their own Country-Gods along with them; highly provoking the True and the Great God to Indignation againſt them, for the Worſhip they paid to theſe Idols: So that they were Viſited with ſo [a] Dreadful a Plague, that the Place was well-nigh Unpeopled with it; and finding no

† Relief

Relief from any Humane Means, they were adviſed by the Oracle to have recourſe to the Worſhip of the Great God; for their Caſe was Deſperate and Hopeleſs without ſuch an Application. The People immediately upon this, ſent for Commiſſioners to attend the King of Aſſyria, with a Petition, that he would be Pleaſed to ſend them ſome of the Prieſts that were carry'd away Captives with the Iſraelites. This being granted, and the Prieſts brought, as they deſired, they had the Law of Moſes read, with an Explication upon the Practice, and the Reaſon of their Religion and Diſcipline, which had ſo Wonderful an Effect upon them, that they gave themſelves wholly up to the Study and Exerciſe of it, and ſoon after this, the Peſtilence Ceaſed. Now the [a] People of that Country Retain to this Day the Name of Chuthites, among the Hebrews: But the Greeks call them Samaritans. They are a People Unfix'd, and Changeable in their Opinions and Inclinations, Accommodating themſelves to the Preſent Time and Occaſion. So long as the Jews are Proſperous, we are all of a Blood, they cry, and of the Lineage of Joſeph; but if they happen to fall under any Affliction, or Adverſity, Alaſs! ſay they; We have nothing to do with them, they are Strangers to Us: We came a Great way off, they ſay, into that Country, and the like; but of this in its Proper Place.

IN the Fourteenth Year of Hezekiah, King of the Two Tribes, Sennacherib the King of Assyria marched against him with a Powerful, and a Well-Appointed Army; and having taken all the Cities of Judah and Benjamin, by Assault, he was now Advancing toward Jerusalem; when an Embassy came to him with an Offer of Submission to his Power, and of paying him Tribute. Sennacherib gave the Embassadors Audience, and resolved immediately to let fall the War, and to Treat upon the King's Terms; promising with the Solemnity of an Oath, that upon the Receipt of Three Hundred Talents of Silver, and Thirty of Gold, he would be gone with his Army, without Attempting any Act of Hostility against him. Hezekiah, upon this Assurance, Empty'd all the Treasuries, and sent him the Mony, in Confidence of the Enemy's Remove according to his Oath, and that he might Reign afterward without any Difficulty or Danger. The Assyrian took the Mony; but broke his Word: for he Marched himself with his Troups against the Ægyptians and Æthiopians, and left Rabshakeh his Lieutenant General, with Tharata and Anacharis, as Fellow-Commissioners with him, to carry-on the War against Jerusalem. Upon the Drawing-up of their Army, they Pitch'd their Camp within sight of the Walls of the Town; and by a Messenger, Summon'd Hezekiah out to a Parley. Hezekiah was not Willing to Trust himself, and therefore sent out Three of his Particular Friends to supply his Place: That is to say, Eliakim, his Deputy-Governour; Shebnah, and Joah Keepers of the Records. Upon their coming out of the Town, and Presenting themselves before the Officers of the Assyrian Army, Rabshakeh, Staring them in the Face, bad them carry their Master this Message: That the Great King Sennacherib would fain know what Confidence it is that he Values himself upon, that he should dare to make any Difficulty of Owning that Great King for his Master; and to Refuse Entrance to his Army into the City. What says Rabshakeh? does he Flatter himself with Hope of Relief from Ægypt, as if the Ægyptians were in Condition to Cope with the Army of my Master. Why certainly he must be Worse then Mad, to imagine it, and to Trust to a Broken Reed that will both Deceive him, if he Trusts to it, and run into his Hand, and Wound him, if he lays any Stress upon it: But says Rabshakeh, You are to Enform your Master, that this Expedition is not Attempted without God's Holy Will and Direction; who will as Certainly give the King of Assyria Victory over Hezekiah, and his Subjects, as he hath already made him Victorious over the Israelites. Rabshakeh deliver'd himself in Hebrew, being a Language that he was well Skill'd in: But Eliakim fearing the Effect such a Discourse, in a Known Tongue, might have upon the Multitude, desired him rather, if he pleased, to speak Syriack. Now Rabshakeh very well Understanding what the Other was Afraid of, raised his Voice, and Continued his Discourse still in Hebrew, to this Purpose. Pray, says Rabshakeh, let your People Hear, and understand the Commands of my Master; for it Concerns them so to do, and to render themselves in Season. It is the Bus'ness, I know, both of your selves, and of your King, to Seduce your People with Vain and Empty Hopes of Defending themſelves by Force: But if you have the Courage to put it to a Hazzard, or any ſort of Pretence to beat-off this Army from your Walls, I am ready to furniſh you with Two Thouſand Horſe, if you will only Undertake, to find Riders to them. But Alaſs! you have not wherewithal to Try the Experiment. If it be ſo, Why are you then ſo long a Deliberating upon a thing you will be Compell'd to do in the Concluſion? eſpecially in a caſe where you are Safe, if you do it Willingly; and run all the Hazzards in the World, if you ſtay to be driven to it upon Conſtraint; as the Weaker muſt of Neceſſity Yield at laſt to the Stronger.

This was all Spoken in the Hearing, as well of the People, as of the Deputies; and no ſooner brought to the King's Ear, but he immediately Stript himſelf of his Royal Robes, and put on Sackcloth, after the Cuſtom of the Country, in token of his Humiliation; caſt himſelf Proſtrate upon the Ground, and implor'd the Aid and Favour of Almighty God, being utterly Hopeleſs of any Comfort Elſewhere. He ſent likewiſe ſome of his Particular Friends, together with Others of the Prieſthood, to the Prophet Iſaiah, to deſire him that he would Intercede with the Lord, by Prayers and Sacrifices for the Common Safety, and for the Abatement of the Pride and Power of the Enemy, in Compaſſion to his People. The Prophet Comply'd with the King's Requeſt, and Succeeded ſo far in his Mediation, that he was Authorized by the Oracle, to bid the King and his Friends be of Good Courage; for the Enemy ſhould be Overcome without a Battle, and Abandon his Deſign with Loſs and Diſgrace; that his Stomach ſhould be brought down; and that the Hand of God ſhould be upon him, to his Ruin: that Sennacherib himſelf ſhould Miſcarry in his Ægyptian Expedition, and upon that Diſappointment go to his Own Home again, where he ſhould fall by the Sword.

Hezekiah Humbles himſelf in Sackcloth. 2 Kings 19. 1. & 2.

The Prophet Iſaiah mediates to God for Hezekiah, and Obtains an Aſſurance of Victory over his Enemies.

It happened upon this very Point of time, that Hezekiah received Letters from the King of Aſſyria, with Expoſtulatory Reaſonings in them, What a Fool he was to Imagine any Poſſibility under his Circumſtances, of Maintaining his Liberty againſt the Power of a Prince that had already Subjected ſo many Warlike Nations to his Obedience; concluding with a Menace of putting Man, Woman and Child to the Sword, if they did not, without Delay, and of their own Accord, ſet open their City-Gates, and give them a free Paſſage for his Army. Hezekiah did ſo abſolutely depend upon the Truth, and Power of God, that he laid no Streſs at all upon this Huffing Letter; but folded it up again, and laid it in the Temple, betaking himſelf ſtill to Repeated Prayers and Supplications, for the Safety of the City, till Iſaiah returned with this Anſwer; That his Petition was heard, and that the Danger was over, for any Harm the Aſſyrians ſhould do them upon that undertaking. He told them likewiſe, that there were Happyer Times at hand, wherein they ſhould live in Peace, and Security, upon their Own Lands and Poſſeſſions, without Fear of an Enemy. In Proceſs of time the King of Aſſyria finding all his Attempts to be Fruſtrated, and nothing to Succeed with him, he Withdrew his Army, and went back again upon this Occaſion. He had ſpent a great deal of time before Peluſium; and at laſt, when he had brought up his Platforms within a little of the Top of the Walls; and was upon the very Point almoſt of giving the Aſſault, News was brought him, that [a] Tirhakah the King of Æthiopia, was upon his March with a Great Enforcement to aſſiſt the Ægyptians; and that he took his way through the Deſert, with a Deſign to fall upon the Aſſyrians by Surprize. Sennacherib was ſo Startled at this Report, that he immediately drew-off his Army. [b] Herodotus calls this War of Sennacheribs againſt the King of Ægypt, a War againſt the Prieſt of Vulian, as being both a King, and a Prieſt of that False God. Now this was the Reaſon (ſays he) of Sennacherib's Raiſing the Siege of Peluſium. The King of Ægypt, upon this Occaſion, call'd to his God for Help; which being Granted him, was Fatal to the Arabian, by a Miſtake, writing [Arabian] for [Aſſyrian.] And, ſays he, in one Night there came ſuch Troups of Rats into the Camp of the Aſſyrians, that they gnaw'd all their Bow-Strings to pieces, and made Uſeleſs ſeveral other Pieces of their Arms, even to the Diſarming of the Aſſyrians; who, upon this Diſappointment, drew-off from the Town. Now Beroſus, a Chaldee-Hiſtorian, ſpeaks of this King Sennacherib, and how he Reigned over the Aſſyrians, and made War upon all Aſia and Ægypt. [a] SENNACHERIB, at his Return from the Ægyptian War, found his Army that he had left under the Command of [b] Rabſhakeh almoſt quite deſtroy'd by a Judicial Peſtilence; which Swept away, in General Officers, Tribunes, and Common Soldiers, to the Number of One Hundred Eighty Five Thouſand Men, the Firſt Night they ſat down before the City. This Dreadful Mortality put Sennacherib in ſuch a Fright, partly as it was a Stroke of Divine Vengeance, and partly for Fear of the reſt of his Army, that he made all poſſible Haſte back again, by Great Marches, to his Palace at Nineve; where, after a while, he was Cut-off by his Two Eldeſt Sons, Adramelek, and [c] Sharezer, in the very Temple of Araſcus, which was his Darling-Idol. HEZEKIAH being now deliver'd beyond all Expectation from any further Apprehenſion of Trouble or Danger; and being likewiſe thoroughly Convinced that it was the Only, and Immediate Hand of God that wrought his Preſervation, as well by the Plague that deſtroy'd One part of the Aſſyrian Army, as by the Terror of that Judgment that frighted away the reſt; He betook to Vows and Thankſgivings for the Mercies he had receiv'd: and while his Thoughts were wholly taken-up with the Honour, and Worſhip of God, he was ſeized with ſo Grievous a Diſtemper that his Phyſicians, and the reſt of his Friends deſpair'd of his Life. In this Diſtreſs, nothing went ſo near the King's Heart, as to Conſider, that upon his Dying without Iſſue, the Succeſſion of the Family would be then at an End, and the Kingdom left without a Legitimate Heir. The Anxiety of this Conſideration lay ſo Heavy upon him, that he Addreſs'd himſelf to God with Supplications and Tears, only for the Prolonging of his Life till he might have a Succeſſor out of his Own Loins, and not to take him out of the Number of the Living, till he might be the Father of a Son, to keep him Alive in his Poſterity. God took Compaſſion of him, and the rather, becauſe he was not ſo much Troubled for the Loſs of the Advantages of a Kingdom, as for the want of an Heir of his Own Body to Govern it. Upon this, the Prophet Iſaiah was ſent to him with the Comfortable Aſſurance, that in Three Days his Diſeaſe ſhould Leave him, and that he ſhould Live Fifteen Years longer yet, and the Kingdom deſcend at laſt to his Own Son and Heir. When the Prophet had deliver'd this Meſſage to the King according to his Order, the Diſeaſe was ſo Deſperate, and the News ſo ſurprizing, that Hezekiah could not bring himſelf to Depend upon it without ſome Prodigy of a Token from Iſaiah, in Confirmation of his Authority and Commiſſion, and that he was ſent from God upon this Errand. Now this is a Common Courſe, when we meet with Difficulties out of the reach of Hope, and Reaſon, to bring about, or to Comprehend, to get the Truth Confirm'd to us by ſome Extraordinary Evidence. The Prophet ask'd What Sign or Token would give him Satisfaction. So he Propounded that the Shadow upon his Dyal might go Ten Degrees backward from the Place where it then ſtoood. The King, finding this Miracle wrought, upon the Prayers of the Prophet, was Reſtored preſently to his Health; and went immediately up to the Temple, where he Worſhipped and paid his Devotion.

It was about this time, that the Aſſyrian Empire happen'd to be Diſſolv'd by the Medes, of which we ſhall ſpeak Elſewhere. But Balad the King of Babylon, having ſent Embaſſadors with Preſents to Hezekiah, invited him into a League of Amity and Allyance. Hezekiah, received the Commiſſioners with Great Courteſy; gave them a Royal Entertainment, and ſo ſhew'd them his Treaſure and his Armory, and whatever elſe he had that was Magnificent and Valuable, either in Gold, or precious Stones, and in the End ſent them back again Well-Rewarded, to their Maſter. Upon this, Iſaiah came to him, and ask'd him what thoſe Men were, and whence they came? He told the Prophet that they were ſent from the King of Babylon; and that he had ſhew'd them all the Riches and Curioſities of his Palace, that they might gather from thence how Great a Prince he was, and ſo Poſſeſs their King upon Better Grounds, with the Truth of the Matter. Know then, ſays the Prophet to the King, that it will not be long before this Treaſure of yours ſhall be carry'd to Babylon; ſeveral of your Poſterity ſhall be Unmann'd, and ſerve the Court of Babylon, in the Quality of Eunuchs. This you will find to be a Truth; for God himſelf hath Foretold it. This Prediction went to very Soul of Hezekiah. Well, ſays he, though I cannot but be much Troubled at the Thought of the Miſery that Attends my Family, yet ſince it is God's Pleaſure that it ſhould be ſo, I have no more to beg from Heaven, then that I may Enjoy the Small Remainder of my Miſerable Life in Peace. Beroſus takes notice alſo of this Balad, King of Babylon: But the Prophet Iſaiah, who was ſo Infallibly, and Miraculouſly Inſpir'd in all he ſaid, and ſo Certain of the Truth of his Predictions, committed all his Prophecies to Writing, and left them to Poſterity for all Men to Judge of what he foretold, by the Event: And this was not his Bus'neſs Alone, but there were Twelve more that did the ſame; and in all Caſes of Event whatſoever, Good or Evil, the Accompliſhment, and the Prophecy agree Exactly together. But we ſhall Treat of this more Particularly upon Other Occaſions. Manaſſeh the King of Judah, a Wicked Prince. The King of Babylon Ravages his Country, and takes him Priſoner: but upon his Converſion, he is ſet at Liberty. His Life and Death. Amon his Son ſucceeds him, but is ſoon after Cut-off; and his Son Joſiah came next to the Throne.

MANASSEH the Son of Hezekiah by [a] Hephzibah, a Native of Jeruſalem, ſucceeded his Father in the Government; but led a Life directly Contrary to the Practices of his Predeceſſor. No Impiety ſcap'd him; but he made Choice of all ſorts of Abominations that had brought ſo many Heavy Judgments upon the Iſraelites, for his Imitation, and Example. He was ſo Daring a Libertine, as to Prophane the Holy Temple it ſelf, and conſequently the Whole City, and every Corner of his Dominions with the Tincture of the Same Iniquity, and Pollution. He began his Reign with the Contempt of God, and ſo Proceeeded to a Barbarous and Bloudy Perſecution of Holy and Good Men, dipping his Hands in the Bloud of the very Prophets themſelves: Inſomuch that hardly a Day paſs'd without putting ſome or Other of them to Death, ſo that the very Streets of Jeruſalem ran Bloud. The Cry of theſe Impious Inhumane Outrages call'd ſo Loud to Heaven for Vengeance, that God was highly Incens'd at this Audacious Courſe of Wickedneſs; and ſent Prophet after Prophet, both to the King, and to the People, with Cautions to them, to Repent in time, of their Neglect of God's Worſhip, and to Return to their Duty, upon the Peril of Suffering the ſame Calamities for the ſame Sins that their Brethren the Iſraelites had Suffer'd before them: But theſe were Diſcourſes that they gave no Credit to, till in the Concluſion they found the Menaces follow'd with Effects, when it was too Late to Struggle with thoſe Miſeries, which by a Seaſonable Belief and Conſideration, might have been Eaſily Prevented. But upon their Periſhing in this Train and Habit of Wickedneſs, God ſtirr'd up the King of Babylon and Chaldæa, to make War upon them; who ſent an Army into Judea that over-ran, and deſtroy'd the Whole Country; Surpriz'd Manaſſeh, and carry him away in the Quality of a Priſoner, every Hour at Mercy. This Miſerable Prince came now by Dear Experience to be Senſible of his Fault; and upon that Reflection, Earneſtly beſought God, only ſo far to Soften the Hearts of his Enemies, as might move them to Treat him with ſome ſort of Tenderneſs and Humanity. And God was not yet Inexorable neither; but in Pity, gave Ear to his Supplication: So that the King of Babylon, after ſome time, gave Manaſſeh his Liberty, and Reſtor'd him to his Former Government. Upon his Arrival at Jeruſalem, by the Leave and Clemency of the Conquerour, he did all the good that was poſſible, to Atone for his Former Miſcarriages, even to the Burying of them in Oblivion, being now quite Another Man in his Inclination and Manners, and wholly Intent upon the Advancement of Religion. For he Purged the City, and Con-

He took care alſo, both by his Example, and his Authority, to Inſtruct the People in their Duties; being Conſcious to himſelf that his Former Male-Adminiſtration went a great way in the Misfortunes of the Publique. He cauſed an Altar to be Erected, after the Preſcription and Appointment of Moſes, and offered Daily Sacrifices upon it. And when he had Reſtor'd Religion, and the Diſcipline of it, to it's Original State and Purity, he made it his Bus'neſs to Fortify Jeruſalem; Repairing the Old Walls, and Encompaſſing them with New Ones. He Built ſeveral High and Strong Towers, and Furniſhed all the Out-Works with Proviſions of all ſorts. He was, in fine, ſo much Alter'd for the Better, that from the Inſtant of his Return to God, to the Day of his Death, he was look'd upon to be one of the Happieſt of Princes. He dy'd at Sixty Seven Years of Age, in the Five and Fiftieth of his Reign, and was bury'd in his own Gardens. His Son Amon, which he had by Emalſema of the City of Jabat, Succeeded him in the Government. This Prince following the Looſe Example of his Father's Youth, and indulging himſelf in the ſame Wicked Liberties, was quickly call'd to an Account for his Miſcarriages, by ſome of his Familiar Friends and Domeſtiques; who cut him-off in the Four and Twentieth Year of his Life, and the Second of his Reign. The People did him Juſtice upon his Murderers, and laid his Body in the Monument of his Father; delivering up the Government to his Son Joſiah, who was at that time a Youth of but Eight Years of Age.

Joſiah's Zeal for the Extirpation of Idolatry, and the Eſtabliſhment of God's Worſhip after the Example of King David.

Joſiah King of Judah propoſeth David for his Example. 2 Kings 22. 1, 2.

THE Mother of Joſiah was born in Boſcath, her Name Jedida, and himſelf of a Gracious, and an Excellent Diſpoſition; propoſing the Example of David for the Rule and Model of his Whole Life. In the Twelfth Year of his Age, he gave an Eminent Inſtance of an Innate Piety and Juſtice, in the Reformation of the People from their Erroneous Perſuaſions concerning Falſe Gods, and in the Gaining of them over to Reverence for the Religion of their Country. He Repealed Several of the Ordinances of his Forefathers; Corrected whatever he found Amiſs; and Apply'd as Proper Remedies where the Caſe Required any ſuch Expedient, as the moſt Conſummated Wiſdom and Experience could have Supply'd. Where he found Matters Well, he kept them ſo, and Liv'd in a Conformity to what he Appov'd: And all this he did, partly, out of an Inbred Faculty of Choice and Judgment, and partly, upon the Admonition and Advice of his Councel; for ſo long as he kept to the Line of the Law in the Government of the Commonwealth, and in the Matter of Divine Worſhip, he was ſure to be Right, having ſo many Examples before his Eyes among his Apoſtate Predeceſſors that had been Cut-off and Deſtroy'd, only for breaking thoſe Meaſures. Wherefore he Cauſed all the Groves to be cut down that were Dedicated to Falſe Gods; their Altars to be Demoliſhed; and all the Donatives that had been Conſecrated by their Anceſtors to the Honour of a Falſe Worſhip, to be Taken away, and Treated with Contempt and Deriſion: And this to be done, both in the City and all over his Dominions; By which means, the People were drawn from the Vanity of their Superſtitions, to a Reverence for and Exerciſe of the True Religion; and to the Uſe and Cuſtom of Burnt-Offerings, and Other Sacrifices upon the Altar. He appointed alſo Certain Magiſtrates, and Commiſſioners, for the Regulation of Manners, and the Ordering of Matters in Private Caſes, that no leſs Care might be Taken for the Diſtributing of Particular Juſtice, then for the Government of Life it ſelf. He likewiſe Diſpatch'd Meſſengers thorough all his Dominions, with Orders to receive Contributions of Gold and Silver toward the Reparation of the Temple, from thoſe that were Willing to Advance the Affair; but leaving all people at liberty, that they might have no Cauſe of Complaint. The Mony being Collected, and brought-in, the Care of the Menage and Expence was Committed to Amaſiah, the Governour of the City; Shaphan, the Scribe; Joath, the Recorder; and Helkiah, the High-Prieſt; with Orders immediately to Enter upon the Work, and to Provide Artificers, and all Materials neceſſary for the Reparation. This was the Riſe to the Rebuilding of the Temple, and the Erecting of a Laſting Monument to Poſterity, of the King's Piety and Bounty.

Joſiah Orders the Diſpoſing of the Collections,

Joſiah,

Joſiah, in the Eighteenth Year of his Reign, Order'd Hilkiah the Prieſt to have the Surpluſage of the Gold and Silver that remain'd over and above the Charge of the Fabrick, to be caſt into Cups, Chalices, Goblets, and other Veſſels, for the Uſe and Service of the Temple; giving Order likewiſe, that all the Gold and Silver, remaining ſtill in the Treaſury, ſhould be brought out, and Apply'd to the ſame Purpoſes. But the High-Prieſt upon removing the Gold, happen'd to Diſcover the Sacred Books of Moſes, as they were Depoſited in the Temple, which he took out, and gave to Shaphan the Scribe to Peruſe; who, upon Reading them over, went to the King, and told him, they had Executed all his Commands; but withal, that they had Juſt now found the Books of Moſes, which he read over to Joſiah. Upon the reading of theſe Books, the King rent his Garment, and calling ſome of his Particular Friends about him, with the Scribe himſelf, and Hilkiah the High-Prieſt, he ſent them to the Propheteſs Huldah the Wife of Shallum, a Man of Great Eminence and Fame, to deſire her Interceſſion to God on their Behalf, to Implore his Mercy for him and his People: for it was much to be fear'd that ſome Heavy Judgment would befall that People for their Anceſtors Neglect, and Contempt of the Laws of Moſes: and leſt they ſhould be forced away from their Native Soyl, to live like Vagabonds, diſperſed over the Face of the Earth, and End their Days in Miſery, without Obtaining ſuch a Reconciliation to God. The Propheteſs upon the hearing of the King's Orders and Inſtructions, bad them return him this Anſwer: That the Sentence was already Pronounc'd, and not to be Recall'd, upon any Supplication or Interceſſion Whatſoever: That the People were to be Baniſhed their Own Country, and Puniſh'd for their Diſobedience, with the Loſs of all the Comforts of Humane Life; and that this Judgment was Irrevocable, for their Obſtinacy in their Superſtitious Impieties, notwithſtanding ſo many Earneſt Exhortations to a Timely Repentance, and the Prophet's Menacing Predictions of all theſe Judgments to come upon them, if they went-on in their Wickedneſs. Now this Unchangeable Decree is to Convince them by the Event, that there is a Juſt, and an Overruling God; and that the Predections which he deliver'd by the Mouth of his Prophets, are Infallibly True, and the Certain Indications of his Holy Pleaſure to Mankind: But however tell the King, ſays the Propheteſs, that out of a Tenderneſs to his Piety and Goodneſs, God would be yet ſo Gracious as not to bring this Judgment upon the People in his Days; but that the Days of his Death ſhall be the Eve to their Final Deſtruction.

Joſiah ſends to Conſult the Propheteſs Huldah.

Huldah Foretels the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

Joſiah, upon the Report of this Anſwer from Huldah, ſent Meſſengers up and down to all the Cities; commanding all the Prieſts and Levites, and Men of all Ages and Conditions, to come up to Jeruſalem: and the Firſt thing he did upon the meeting, was to Read the Holy Books of Moſes to them; after which, advancing himſelf upon a Place Higher then the reſt, in the Middle of the Throng, he gave them an Oath of Obedience to the Laws and Precepts of Moſes, and the Obſervance of God's Holy Worſhip; which was taken by the Whole Multitude, and not without Great Alacrity, and an Univerſal Conſent. This Sacred Oath was follow'd with Sacrifices, and Prayers to God for the Grace of his Favour and Bleſſing. In the Next place, he laid a Strict Charge upon the High-Prieſt to take a Particular Account of the Plate and Veſſels in the Temple, and to caſt-out ſo many of them, as he ſhould find to have been Dedicated by any of his Anceſtors, to the Worſhip of Idols. There were a great many Pieces of that Kind, that were all broken to Duſt, and the Powder thrown into the Air: All the Prieſts being likewiſe put to death, that were not of the Stock of Aaron.

He renews the Covenant with God.

Upon the perfecting of this Reformation in Jeruſalem, the King took a Progreſs through his Whole Dominion, where he deſtroy'd all the Reliques of Jeroboam's Superſtition and Idolatry, and burnt the Bones of the Falſe Prophets upon the very Altar that Jeroboam had ſet up, which we have ſaid ſomething of already, and of the Prophet's Intervening with a Prediction, in the Hearing of all the People, at the very time when Jeroboam was Offering Sacrifice, that one of the Race of David, Joſiah by Name, was to do this; whoſe Prediction hath been made good by the Event, Three Hundred Sixty One Years after the thing was Foretold.

Joſiah's Care and Zeal for a Thorough-Reformation.

1 Kings 30. & 2.

And Joſiah's Zeal did not reſt here neither; for he ſent, and went himſelf to Several Other Iſraelites that had made Shift to ſcape the Servitude and Bondage of the Aſſyrians, to Perſuade them at laſt to give over their Superſtitious Hankering after Forreign Religions, and betake themſelves to the Worſhip of the Great God of their Fathers, according to the Rites and Cuſtoms of their Country, and him only to ſerve. And the King reſted not here neither; but he cauſed a Strict Search to be made in all Towns and Villages for the Diſcovery of any Remainders of Idolatrous Practices, that might lie Conceal'd, even to the very Figures of the Horſes over the Porch of the Temple, that their Forefathers had Dedicated to the Sun; and ſo for What other Monuments ſoever, to which the Ignorance of the Common People had ever Aſcri-bed Divine Honour, Josiah caused them all to be taken away and Destroyed.

After the Purging of the Whole Nation in this manner, he calls all the People together up to Jerusalem, to Celebrate the Feast of Unleavened Bread, Otherwise called the Passover, and gave the Multitude out of his Own Store, Thirty Goats, a Thousand Lambs, and Three Thousand Oxen. The Heads of the Priests Contributed likewise to the Priests upon the same Occasion, Two Thousand Six Hundred Lambs: and so the Chief of the Levites gave to their Tribe Five Thousand Lambs, and Five Hundred Bullocks: And this Prodigious Number of Victims was Offer'd up in Sacrifice according to the Laws of Moses. The Priests had the Conduct of the Solemnity; and the Precedency in their Example to the People. Now from the time of Samuel the Prophet, to that Day, there had never been so Solemn a Festival; and the Reason of it was this, that Every thing was done according to the Direction of the Law, and the Prescriptions of Ancient Custom. Josiah, after this Blessed Regulation, Enjoy'd his Government in Peace, Honour and Plenty: And we are now about to give the Reader an Account how he came to his End.

[a] Pharaoh-Nechoh, the King of Egypt, Marched with a Powerful Army toward Euphrates, against the Medes and Babylonians, that had Overturn'd the Assyrian Empire; with a Design to make himself Master of Asia. When he had Advanced as far as [b] Megiddo, a Town under the Jurisdiction of Josiah, Josiah absolutely refused him any Passage against the Medes thorough his Country. Pharaoh, upon This, sent a Herald, to give Josiah to understand, that he had no Thought of any Hostility toward him; nor any Design, but to make a Running March of it toward Euphrates; desiring him withal, not to put him upon any Necessity of making his Way by Force, which was a thing much beside his Intention. This Message of the Ægyptian had so little Effect upon Josiah, that he persisted in the Denial of his Passage: which look'd as if he had been driven upon this Inexorable Stiffness by the Impulse of a Fatality that improv'd this Denial to his Ruin. For as he was in the Head of his Army, and Riding up and down to give Orders from One Wing to Another, an Ægyptian, with an Arrow, quickly put an End to the Eagerness he had for that War: for finding himself to be Shot, and impatient of the Pain, he Commanded his Army to Retire; himself returning to Jerusalem, where he Dy'd of the Wound. He was Bury'd with a Mighty Pomp, in the Sepulchre of his Ancestors, at Nine and Thirty Years of Age, and in the One and Thirtieth of his Reign: the People Mourning for him several Days, with great Anxiety of Sorrow and Lamentation. The Prophet Jeremiah wrote a Passionate Elegy upon this Occasion, which is yet Extant at this Day; the Prophet plainly foretelling the Approach of the Babylonian Captivity, and the Calamities also of Our Times; committing his Predictions to Writing for the Information of Posterity. And Jeremiah was not the only Prophet neither, that foretold the Miseries of this Terrible Revolution; but Ezekiel also left behind him in Writing Two Books of Prophetical Presages upon this Subject. These Two Prophets were both of the Sacerdotal Race: Jeremiah living at Jerusalem from the Thirteenth Year of the Reign of Josiah, to the time of the Destruction of the Temple and City: of which we shall speak farther in its proper Place.

As for Jehoahaz, he carry'd him along with him into Egypt, where he departed This Life, after he had Reign'd Three Months and Ten Days. Jehoiakim's Mother's Name was Zabida of [c] Ramah. Nebuchadnezzar Defeats Pharaoh, and makes Jehoiakim his Tributary; who is foretold, by the Prophet Jeremiah, the Miſeries that are to befal him.

IN the Fourth Year of Jehoiakim's Reign, [b] Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon advanced with a Mighty Army to Carchabeſa, a Place Bordering upon Euphrates; with a Reſolution to make War upon Pharaoh [c] Nechoh, who at That time had All Syria under His Command. Now the Ægyptian very well Underſtanding that the Babylonian was no Contemptible Enemy, took the Field with a Strong and a Numerous Army, and ſo March'd to the Euphrates, with a Reſolution to Oppoſe him: where the Two Armies Engaging, the Ægyptian was forc'd to give way with the Loſs of many Thouſands of his Men. But the Babylonians getting over the Euphrates, ſubdu'd the whole Country of Syria as far as to Peluſium; Judæa only excepted. In the Fourth Year afterward, of Nebuchadnezzar, and the Eighth of Jehoiakim, the Babylonians brake-in Furiouſly upon Judæa, threat'ning them with All Extremities, unleſs they would content themſelves with the Condition of Tributaries, as the reſt of the Inhabitants of Syria were. Upon this Menace, Jehoiakim's Heart fail'd him, ſo that he ſubmitted to Purchaſe his Peace with a Sum of Mony; and for the ſpace of full Three Years, he made due Payment of his Contribution: but the Year following, upon the Credit of an Idle Rumour, that the Ægyptian was Advancing an Expedition againſt the King of Babylon, Jehoiakim refuſed to pay him his Tribute any longer; but quickly found himſelf miſerably Diſappointed in his Expectation, for the Ægyptians durſt not look the Babylonians in the Face: which was no more then the Prophet Jeremiah had many a time foretold, and warn'd him of; and that he would find the Ægyptians a Broken Reed to truſt to. He preſaged likewiſe the Fate of Jeruſalem, and that it was ſuddenly to be Deſtroy'd by the Babylonians, and Jehoiakim Himſelf to be made a Priſoner. But theſe were Forebodings that no body laid any Streſs upon, and ſo no body was the Better for them: Nay, on the contrary, from the Higheſt to the Loweſt, the Generality of the People look'd upon them with Contempt. Not but that there were ſome again that Exhibited Formal Accuſations againſt him to the King, and would have had him puniſh'd as a Mover of Sedition. The Cauſe, in fine, was brought before the Council; and the Majority were for putting him to Death: but the Reaſon of Things is not always determin'd by a Plurality of Voices: So that ſome that were better adviſ'd then others, were rather for Diſcharging him the Court, and diverting the Blow; for Jeremiah, they ſaid, was not the only Man that had foretold theſe Calamities to the City, but Micah had ſaid as much as that came to before him; and ſo had ſeveral Others, without being call'd to Account for it by the Government: nay, they were rather had in Honour and Eſteem for their Predictions, as the Prophets of the Lord. By this ſoft way of Reaſoning upon the Matter, the Council was wrought upon to Change their Minds, and to make void the Sentence. The Prophet put all his Predictions in Writing; and upon a Day of Faſting, when the People were met together in the Temple, in the Ninth Month of the Fifth Year of the Reign of Jehoiakim, he Read the Book to the Congregation; wherein was contained the Whole Hiſtory of what was to befal the Temple, the City, and the People. The Princes, upon the Hearing of this Book, took it away from the Prophet, Commanding both Himſelf, and his Scribe Baruch, to be gone immediately, without letting any body know where to find them. They carry'd the Book then to the King, who Order'd his Secretary to take and read it to him, with his Friends about him. The King was ſo Tranſported upon the Hearing of it, that he Tore the Book, and threw it in the Fire, and Order'd Jeremiah and Baruch to be immediately brought to him, and puniſh'd for it: but they were already ſlipt out of the way.

CHAP. IX.

Nebuchadnezzar, contrary to Faith, makes Jehoiakin, his Mother, and the moſt Eminent of his Friends, all Priſoners.

IT was not long before the King of Babylon, upon Second Thoughts, came to repent the Setting of Jehoiakin upon the Throne; for, thought he, this Young-man will never forget, or forgive ſo perfidious a Practice upon the Life of his Father, and conſequently lie upon the Catch for any Occaſion of Tumult or Diſcontent, that may be improv'd to the gratifying of his Revenge. Upon this Conſideration, he ſent away an Army to Beſiege Jeruſalem. Now Jehoiakin, being a Juſt and an Eaſy Prince, had not the Heart to ſee the City run the Riſque of being Utterly deſtroy'd for his ſake; and therefore upon a Treaty with the King's Deputies for the Delivering up of the City, upon Condition that neither the Town it ſelf, nor the Inhabitants ſhould ſuffer any ſort of Damage, the Agreement was Ratifi'd, and his Mother and Kindred deliver'd-up as Hoſtages, to the King's Commiſſioners, for the Performance of Articles: but before a Year was out, the King of Babylon breaking his Faith with them, Commanded his Officers to ſecure all the Youth of the City, and all ſorts of Artificers, and to bring them to him Bound and Fetter'd; which they did, to the Number of Ten Thouſand Eight Hundred Thirty Two Perſons, wherein was Jehoiakin himſelf, his Mother, and his Kindred; who by the King's Command were all kept in Cuſtody.

Nebuchadnezzar ſends an Army to beſiege Jeruſalem.

Jehoiakin renders the Place upon Agreement, and gives Hoſtages for the Performance of Conditions.

The King breaks Faith, and makes Jehoiakin a Priſoner with, 10832 other Perſons.

CHAP. X.

Jehoiakin made a Priſoner. Nebuchadnezzar ſets up Zedekiah in his Place, upon Condition not to ſide with the King of Ægypt. Zedekiah Falſifies, and Nebuchadnezzar beſieges Jeruſalem. The King of Ægypt marches to his Relief. Nebuchadnezzar riſes; gives him Battle; Routs him, and then Returns to the Siege. Zedekiah's Obſtinacy againſt all the Councels and Predictions of Jeremiah.

JEHOIAKIN being now a Priſoner, the King of Babylon advanced Zedekiah, his Father's Brother, to the Government in his Place; tying him up by an Oath neither to attempt any Innovations in that Country, nor Directly or Indirectly to Joyn with, or to Aſſiſt the Ægyptians. He was One and Twenty Years of Age when he Enter'd upon the Command; and he and his Brother Jehoiakin were Sons of the ſame Mother. He had little or no Regard, either for Honour, or for Virtue; and his Companions were altogether as Impious and Extravagant as himſelf: Beſide that this Looſneſs of Manners in his Days, was become Popular; and the Corruption, Epidemical: Inſomuch that the Prophet Jeremiah was often at him with Earneſt Entreaties to Change his Courſe of Life, and to betake himſelf to the Love and Exerciſe of Piety and Juſtice; without laying ſo much Streſs upon what his Courtiers, or his Falſe-Prophets told him; a Lewd ſort of People, that abus'd him in their Promiſes and Predictions, when they told him the Babylonians ſhould never Trouble Jeruſalem again; and that whenever they Encounter'd, the Ægyptians ſhould have the Better of them: For this was all Falſe he told him, as would appear by the Event. Zedekiah could not for the Preſent but Acknowledge this Diſcourſe of the Prophet to be Reaſonable and True, and that it was for his Intereſt ſo to Believe it; but when he came afterward to be menag'd by Ill Company and Councels, that could Wind and Turn him as they pleas'd, all that the Prophet ſaid before went for Nothing.

It was at the ſame time that Ezekiel, being then at Babylon, foretold the Deſtruction of the Temple, and ſent the Prediction of it to Jeruſalem. Now the Two Prophets agreed exactly in the Taking of the Town by Force, and in carrying away Zedekiah Captive: but the Thing, and the only Thing that ſtuck with Zedekiah in the Belief of the Prophecy, was This; Ezekiel foretold that Zedekiah ſhould not ſee Babylon: And Jeremiah affirmed that the King himſelf ſhould carry him Priſoner thither. This ſeeming Inconſiſtency, or at leaſt Diverſity of Expreſſion, gave Zedekiah ſome ſort of Colour to doubt the Truth of all the other Circumſtances wherein they agreed; though the following Events made good every thing that had been Foretold, as we ſhall ſhew more properly in another place.

Ezekiel agrees with Jeremiah in Predicting the Downfal of Jeruſalem, and making Zedekiah a Priſoner. A ſeeming Contradiction betwixt the Two Prophets reconcil'd.

After an Alliance of Eight Years ſtanding betwixt the Two Kings, Zedekiah ſhamefully brake his Contract, and went over to the Intereſt of the Ægyptians; making no Doubt at all, but Thoſe Two Powers in Conjunction, might be able to Cruſh the King of Babylon: But the Babylonian, upon the firſt Inkling of This Treachery, marched his Army directly toward Zedekiah; lay'd his Country Deſolate; forced his Caſtles and Strong Holds; and ſo advanced ſtreight forward to the Attaque, even of Jeruſalem it ſelf. The Ægyptian being given to Underſtand how hard his Friend and Ally Zedekiah was put to it, advanced preſently to his Relief, with a Reſolution to Attempt the Raiſing of the Siege. Now the Babylonian, upon Intelligence of his March and Deſign, did not think fit to wait his coming; but choſe rather to draw-off himſelf, and give him Battle: which he did, and ſo Terrible a Rout withal, that he Beat him quite out of Syria at That One Blow. The Siege being Quitted, or rather Reſpited upon this Occaſion, the Falſe Prophets held Zedekiah in hand with Twenty Deluſions; as, How Fooliſh a thing it was for him, or his Subjects, to Apprehend any Danger from the Babylonians, or to phancy any ſuch thing as the Babylonians Forcing, and Tranſporting the Hebrews from their Native Habitations, and carrying them away Captive to Babylon: Whereas it was rather to be Expected, on the other hand, that their Priſoners that were already Exported, ſhould be call'd back again; and all the Plate and Treaſure that the King had carry'd away, Reſtored to the Temple. But Jeremiah, on the contrary, told the King quite Another Story, in a flat Contradiction to That of the Falſe Prophets; poſitively charging them with Impoſture and Deluſion, and affirming that there was no Good to be Expected from the Ægyptians; but that They ſhould firſt be Overcome, and the Babylonian Army be then brought back again to Beſiege Jeruſalem; and that as many of them as ſhould ſurvive the Sword and Famine, ſhould be carry'd away Captives; their Houſes Pillag'd; their Goods taken away; the Temple and City Plunder'd, and lay'd at the Mercy of Fire and Sword, without any Diſtinction of Sacred or Prophane. We are Condemned, ſays the Prophet, to Serve theſe People and their Poſterity for Seventy Years; and the Medes and Perſians, at the Seventy Years end, ſhall deliver us from that Bondage by the Utter Extinction of the Babylonian Empire: After which time, being ſet at liberty by their Aſſiſtance, we ſhall return hither again, Rebuild the Temple, and Reſtore the City to its Former State. Theſe Words of the Prophet wrought much upon the Greater part of the People; but the Leading Men, and the Licentious, Atheiſtical Part of the Multitude, look'd upon all the Prophet ſaid, but as the Diſcourſe of a Mad-man, and treated him accordingly. As Jeremiah was going toward Anathoth, the Place of his Birth, and a matter of Twenty Furlongs from Jeruſalem, he had the Fortune to be met withal upon the way by a certain Magiſtrate that lay'd Hold of him, and took him into Cuſtody upon a Pretext that he was a Deſerter, and going over to the King of Babylon. The Prophet ſaid there was no ſuch matter, and that he was only going to the Place where he was Born; but the Other would not believe him, and ſo carry'd him away to the Miniſters of State and Juſtice; where, after the Formality of Examination and Torture, he was ſet aſide as a Malefactor Condemn'd to Die: and in This Condition of Miſery, he continu'd for ſome time.

But in the Ninth Year of Zedekiah's Reign, the Tenth Month, and the Tenth Day of That Month, the King of Babylon came once again with his Army to Jeruſalem; and laying Siege to it, try'd all the Ways in the World, for a matter of Eighteen Months, to Maſter it, either by Art, or by Force; but it ſtill held out againſt not only a Powerful Enemy before it, but againſt a Raging Peſtilence and Famine alſo in the Bowels of it: Jeremiah being in Priſon all this while, and crying out to the Multitude to ſet open the Gates, and receive the Babylonians into the City; for they had no other way in Nature to ſave Themſelves, their Families, and the Town, from a certain and an inevitable Ruin; telling them withal, that Thoſe that ſtay'd in the City muſt Expect to Periſh, either by the Sword, or by Famine; Whereas thoſe that Fled out to the Enemy would ſave their Lives; But the Princes, in the Depth of their Extremity, were yet ſo far from giving Ear to the Prophet's Preſage, and Advice, that they Repreſented him to the King, as a Violent Hot-Headed Man, and a Mutineer; a Diſcourager of the People with his Idle Stories of Miſery and Deſolation; Suggeſting ing that the Garriſon was Hearty and Reſolute enough to defend the Place to the Laſt Extremity, till he came with his Forebodings of Slavery and Deſtruction, and took off the Edge of their Zeal and Courage. The King in his Own Nature was not apt to be Fierce, or Bitter; but ſtanding, upon that Pinch of Neceſſity, in ſome Awe of the Great People about him, he did not think it ſafe to Diſoblige ſo many Men of Power and Intereſt: And ſo rather then Croſs them, he left them at liberty to do with the Prophet, what they thought fit. So ſoon as they had gain'd that Point, they went in all haſte to the Priſon; took out the Prophet, and let him down by a Rope into a Naſty Pit, where he was up to the Neck in Mudd, with an Intent to Choak him: But as he was in this Condition, a Favourite-Servant of the King's, an Ethiopian Born, went and told Zedekiah how they had Treated the Prophet; and giving his Own Opinion in the Caſe, that his Great Men and his Friends, had not done well in the Aggravation of his Misfortune by Expoſing him to a Death, ſo much more Grievous then that which he was Reaſonably to Expect in his Chains. Upon this Diſcourſe of the Favourite, the King heartily Repented his leaving the Prophet to the Diſcretion of his Enemies, and ſo Order'd the Æthiopian to take Thirty Men out of his Family; ſuch as he could Truſt, with Ropes, and whatever he ſhould find Neceſſary for the ſaving of him, and to Joyn with them in the getting of him Out of the Pit with all Speed Poſſible. The Servant did as he was Order'd, and ſet the Prophet at liberty; who was ſoon after this, brought Privately to the King, and had this Queſtion put to him, whether or no he could procure him from Heaven any Preſent Relief under his Miſerable Circumſtances? The Prophet Anſwer'd him that he Could; but that People would neither believe him, nor Follw his Counſel: For all your Pretended Friends, ſays he, are my Mortal Enemies. They look upon me as a Falſe Wretch, and are at this Inſtant in a Conſpiracy to Deſtroy me: And where are thoſe Impoſtors now, that Fooled the People into a Belief that they were out of Danger of the Babylonian? So that to tell you the very Truth of things may be as much as my Life is Worth. The King, upon this, promiſed the Prophet with an Oath, that he would neither take away his Life Himſelf, nor Suffer any of his People to do it. Jeremiah took his Word and Honour for it, and adviſed him by all means to deliver-up the City into the Hands of the King of Babylon. This was the Only way in the World, he told him, to be Safe in his Own Perſon, to avoid the Imminent Danger he was in; to prevent the Burning of the Temple, and the laying of the City Level with the Ground: and if he went any Other way to Work, he was to tell him, in the Name, and by the Direction of God himſelf, that all the Calamities that ſhould Enſure upon his Miſcarriages, with the Utter Ruine of himſelf, his Family, and his People, ſhould be laid at his Door. The King then told him, that he had a Great Inclination to take his Councel for the Common Good; but he was afraid leſt ſome of his Friends that were already gone over to the Babylonians, ſhould accuſe him to the King, and put him in Danger of his Life. But for any thing of that, the Prophet bad him ſet his Heart at reſt; for if he deliver'd-up the City, neither he himſelf in his Perſon, nor his Wives, his Children, or the Temple it ſelf, ſhould ſuffer any thing. After theſe Words, the King Diſmiſs'd the Prophet, with a Charge not to make any Words; no, not ſo much as to the Princes themſelves, of what had paſs'd in this Conference: But if any body ſhould come to have a Hint that there had been ſuch a Meeting, and Enquire into the Bus'neſs, it might be pretended that the Prophet came to move the King for his Liberty. The Prophet did as he was Order'd, and gave that Anſwer to all People that ask'd him his Bus'neſs with Zedekiah.

The King in this Diſtreſs bids them do what they will with him.

IN the Mean time, the King of Babylon went-on Vigorouſly with the Siege; His Works were finiſh'd, and his Towers carry'd-up ſo High as to Command the Town, and beat the Defendents from the Walls; and at this rate they were Provided quite around the City for a General Aſſault; and the Defence of the Place was carry'd-on with as much Bravery as the Attaque; having Plague and Famine to Contend with all, Within the Town, as well as Enemies, and other Difficulties Without. They

They ſtood Firm, in ſhort, againſt all Stratagems and Machines; Oppoſing one Invention to Another, as if the Diſpute had been Matter of Skill and Art, as well as Force; the Beſiegers Bus'neſs being to Take the City, and the Safety of the Beſieged conſiſting in Eluding or Diverting the Plots and Endeavours of the Enemy. This Conteſt laſted Eighteen Months; but in the End, for want of Meat Within the Town, and of Numbers to maintain it, againſt the Multitudes of Men, and of Weapons without the Town, they were brought to the Laſt Inevitable Neceſſity of Delivering it up. It was taken, in the Eleventh Year, and the Ninth Day of the Fourth Month of the Reign of Zedekiah, by the Commanders to whom the Care of the Siege was committed by Nebuchadnezzar, who at that time was at Reblatha. If the Reader ſhould be Curious to know the Names of the Officers; there was Nergelear, Aremantus, Emegar, Naboſaris, and Echarampſaris. The City was Taken about Midnight. The Captains, with the reſt of the Soldiery, went into the Temple; which King Zedekiah perceiving, he took his Wives, Children, Commanders and Friends, and they ſlipt all away together by a Narrow Paſſage toward the Deſert: But the Babylonians getting Intelligence of this Eſcape, by ſome Falſe Brethren, they made after them Early the Next Morning, and overtook and Surrounded them at a place not far from Jericho. Zedekiah's Friends and Companions, in his Flight, ſeeing the Enemy Advancing toward them, Quitted their Maſter, and ran ſeveral Ways to make the Beſt ſhift they could for themſelves: The King being in a Manner quite Abandon'd, with his Wives and Children, and a Small Remainder of his Company, fell into the Hands of the Enemy; who preſently carry'd them to the King. Nebuchadnezzer no ſooner had him in his Eye, but he call'd him all the Faithleſs, Perfidious Names that he could think of. Did not you promiſe me, ſays he, to Manage the Power and Authority that I put you in Poſſeſſion of, for my Advantage and Behoof; and am not I well-Requited, do you think, for making you a King in your Brother Jehoiakim's Place, by your Employing of the Credit and Intereſt that I gave you to the Ruine of your Patron and Benefactor? But that God is Great and Juſt; who, for the Puniſhment of your Treachery and Ingratitude, hath now made you my Priſoner. When the King had laid upon him this Load of Reproches, he immediately Cauſed his Children, and his Friends to be put to Death before his Face, and in the Sight of the reſt of the Captives; commanding Zedekiah's Eyes to be put out, ſo ſoon as this Execution was over, and ſo to be carry'd away in Chains to Babylon. This way of Proceeding has Verify'd the Two Prophecies of Jeremiah, and Ezekiel; which Zedekiah made ſo little Account of, by reaſon of ſome Semblance of a Contradiction betwixt them; the Former foretelling, that he ſhould be taken Captive, and carry'd to Babylon, ſpeak with the King himſelf, and ſee him Face to Face: But Ezekiel's Prediction was, that he ſhould be carry'd away to Babylon, and ſhould not See him; which he could not do there, when he was brought Blind thither.

This may ſerve to Convince, even the moſt Ignorant, of the Power, and Wiſdom of God, and of the Conſtancy of his Counſels thorough all the Various Ways of his Operations: and it may likewiſe Shew us that God's Foreknowledge of things is Certain, and his Providence Regular, in the Ordering of Events; beſide that it holds forth a moſt Exemplary Inſtance to us, of the Danger of our giving way to the Motions of Incredulity and Folly, that take from us the Means of Diſcerning the Fatalities that Threaten us.

This was the End of the Race of David, after one and Twenty Kings in Succeſſion in the Space of Five Hundred and Fifteen Years, Six Months and Ten Days; including the Twenty Years Reign of Saul, who was of Another Tribe.

The Race of David was now Extinct.

Nebuchadnezzar, after this Great Victory Obtained, ſent Nebuzar-Adan his Commander in Chief, to Jeruſalem, with Orders to Pillage the Temple, and Burn it; to do the like to the Palace; and after the laying of the City all Level with the Ground, to carry away the People Captive to Babylon. In the Eleventh Year of the Reign of Zedekiah, Nebuzar-Adan put his Inſtructions in Execution; taking way out of the Temple all the Veſſels of Gold and Silver; Solomon's Great Laver, with the Brazen Pillars, and their Chapters; with the Golden Tables and Candleſticks: and after this General Rifle, he firſt ſet the Temple a-fire; and after that, He laid the Palace, and the City in Aſhes. This paſs'd on the firſt Day of the fifth Month; the Eleventh of Zedekiah, and the Eighteenth Year of the Reign of Nebuchadnezzar. The Temple was Burnt Four Hundred and Seventy Years Six Months and Ten Days from the Building of it; One Thouſand and Sixty Two Years Six Months and Ten Days from the Iſraelites coming out of the Land of Ægypt; One Thouſand Nine Hundred Fifty Years Six Months and Ten Days from the Deluge, and Three Thouſand Five Hundred and Thirty Years Six Months and Ten Days from the Creation of the World. As to the Computation of Years, in what Compaſs of time, What, and When, Every thing was done, we have already given an Account of it in Order.

Orders to Rifle, and Burn the Temple, Palace and City, and Carry away the People Captives to Babylon.

The Order Executed, and the Time when it was done.

Upon the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the Tranſportation of the People, Nebuzar-Adan took theſe Priſoners with him. There was the High-Prieſt Saraiah; and after him, Sepheniah, who was the next Prieſt in Dignity; Three Head-Keepers of the Temple; the Firſt Eunuch of the Bed-Chamber, with Seven of the King's Friends, beſide the King's Secretary, and other Men of Note, to the Number of Sixty; which were brought all together to the King who was then at Reblathis, a City of Syria. The King cauſed the Heads of the High-Prieſt, and the Great Men, to be Struck-off in That City; but the Multitude of the Priſoners, together with Zedekiah himſelf, they carry'd to Babylon; and Jehozadack the High-Prieſt to be Taken Bound, along with them; which Jehozadack was the Son of Saraiah that was put to Death, as is ſaid already.

Nebuzar-Adan's Priſoners.

Some of them put to Death; Others kept in Chains.

Having now gone thorough the Royal Line, and the Succeſſion of them from Father to Son, in order, it will be convenient to obſerve the ſame Method with the High-Prieſt, who from time to time in a continu'd Succeſſion under thoſe Kings exerciſed the Sacerdotal Office. The Firſt Pontifex after the Building of Solomon's Temple was Zadok. After Him, came his Son Ahimaaz; and after Ahimaaz, Azariah; and ſo forward; Joram, [a] Iſus, Axioramus, Phideas, Sudeas, [b] Julus, Jotham, Urias, Nerias, Odeas, Saldumus, Elcias, Saræas, and Jehoſadoc, who was carry'd away to Babylon. All Theſe handed down the Pontificate in a continu'd Succeſſion in their Families from Generation to Generation.

The Succeſſion of the High-Prieſts in Jeruſalem.

Upon the King's coming back to Babylon, Zedekiah was Committed to Priſon; and in the Priſon he dy'd, and had afterward the Honour of a Royal Sepulchre. The Holy Veſſels that he took out of the Temple, he Dedicated to his Idols; allotted Habitations to the People in Babylon, and ſet Jehozadack at liberty. Now Nebuzar-Adan, the General that brought away the People Priſoners, left the Multitude, and the Deſerters, under the Command of Gedaliah, the Son of Ahikam, an Eminent Perſon, both for Generoſity and Juſtice, who allotted his Priſoners ſuch a Proportion of Ground to Improve, and Live upon; paying ſuch a certain Tribute to the King. The Prophet Jeremiah was alſo Diſcharg'd of his Impriſonment; and the King having given Order to the Governour to take a particular Care of him, Gedaliah mov'd it to the Prophet to go along with him to Babylon; for it was but Reaſon the King ſhould be at the Charge of his Journey: or if he did not like that Place, let him pitch upon any other, and he would write to the King about it. The Prophet's Anſwer was, that he had no Mind to Remove at all, but rather ſtay where he was, and take his part in the miſerable Ruins of his Native Country. Nebuzar-Adan being inform'd how the Prophet ſtood affected, gave Gedaliah a ſtrict Charge to ſee him well provided for; made him ſeveral conſiderable Preſents himſelf, and ſo left him, and returned to Babylon. Jeremiah, upon this, made Choice of Mizpah for the Place of his Abode; having firſt obtained of Nebuzar-Adan, Baruch's Liberty, as well as his own, whom he took for his Companion. This Baruch was the Son of Neriah, a Perſon nobly Born, and perfectly well skill'd in the Language of his Country.

The Burning, and the Sacking of Jeruſalem, and the Return of the Babylonians into their own Country, was by this time made known to all the Deſerters that had left the City in the time of the Siege; and ſo they gather'd together from all Places in Throngs to Gedaliah at Mizpah. The principal Men among them were Johanan, the Son of Careah, Jaazaniah, and Saraiah, with ſome others: And beſide theſe, there was Iſhmael, a Perſon of Royal Bloud; but otherwiſe Falſe and Malicious to the Higheſt Degree. This Man, in the time of the Siege, fled to Bathal the King of the Ammonites, for Sanctuary, where he continued ever ſince. Upon the Application of Theſe People to Gedaliah, he gave them an Invitation to continue there, and to Plant; for they might live Quietly and at Eaſe, without any Danger from the Babylonians; binding himſelf by an Oath to ſtand by them, and aſſiſt them, if any Man ſhould offer to give them any Moleſtation or Trouble. Now, ſays he, do but you Reſolve among your ſelves what Town or Place you would ſettle in, and you ſhall have ſome of my People along with you to aſſiſt you in preparing and fitting-up Habitations for you; only you muſt take care not to ſlip the Seaſon of providing for the next Vintage and Harveſt, that you may not want Corn, Wine, or Oyl next Winter for your Subſiſtence. When he had given them this Encouragement and Aſſurance, he left every Man at liberty to diſpoſe of himſelf where he himſelf pleaſed.

The Report of Gedaliah's Generous Humanity and Tenderneſs toward the Fugitives that apply'd themſelves to him for Refuge, gain'd him ſo great a Reputation with all the Neighbour-Nations, that they came Trouping to him from All Parts, and quickly made-up a Conſiderable Plantation; for they had Land aſſign'd them in Propriety, upon Condition only of paying a Certain Acknowledgment to the King of Babylon.

Joha-

Johanan and the reſt of the Great Men had a very high Eſteem for the Goodneſs and Courteſy of Gedaliah to the Planters, and therefore Advertis'd him in Friendſhip and Reſpect, that there was a Conſpiracy carry'd-on againſt him, betwixt the King of the Ammonites, and Iſhmael; and that Iſhmael was to do the Execution with Secrecy and Treachery; and being a Member of the Royal Family, to make himſelf Head of the Iſraelites by that Means. Now the ready way to ſecure Gedaliah againſt this Practice, would be for them privately to diſpatch Iſhmael; which, with his Leave, they would Undertake to do; for they were afraid, if this Miſchief were not timely prevented, it would prove the Ruin of all the Iſraelites in the Concluſion. Gedaliah told them, that he could not believe it poſſible for any Man to be ſo barbarous, and ungrateful, that lay under ſo many Obligations to the contrary; neither could it enter into his Head, that a Man who was never known to do any ſuch thing under the Provocation of his Neceſſities, ſhould now be in a Plot to deſtroy that Perſon himſelf, whom by all the Tyes of Honour and Hoſpitality he was obliged to Defend and Preſerve, though with the hazzard of his own Life, if it ſhould have been attempted by any other Man whatſoever. But to make ſhort, he told them however, that ſuppoſing the Information to be True, he had much rather loſe his own Life then take away the Life of any Man that had committed himſelf to his Truſt. Johanan and his Companions finding that all they had ſaid was to no purpoſe, upon This Declaration of Gedaliah's went their way.

They tell him of a Plot upon his Life carry'd-on by the King of the Ammonites, and Iſhmael to Execute it.

Gedaliah is too Generous to Believe it.

Some Thirty Days after This Diſcourſe, Iſhmael with Ten of his Friends gave a Viſit to Gedaliah at Mizpah, where they were Received and Treated with All the Freedom and Reſpect imaginable. The Cups went round till Gedaliah and his Companions were Dull and Heavy-headed; and the other Party obſerving it, took the Opportunity of falling upon them, and without any Difficulty Kill'd the Maſter of the Houſe, and all the reſt of his Gueſts. It was now in the Dead of the Night; and all the People, as well Soldiers as others, careleſly ſecure, and aſleep: ſo that they made the ſame Havock in the Streets, and elſewhere, as they had done at Gedaliah's juſt before; Deſtroying and Murdering all they could find, whether Jews, or Babylonians, without any Diſtinction. The next Day there came up to the City a Troup of about Fourſcore Men out of the Country with Preſents for Gedaliah, knowing nothing as yet of the Maſſacre of the Laſt Night. So ſoon as Iſhmael ſaw them, he call'd them in to Gedaliah; Shut the Doors upon them, and Cut their Throats in the Palace, cauſing the Bodies afterward to be Thrown into a Pit where they might lie Conceal'd. There was not a Man of All that Number that eſcap'd, ſave only ſome Few that promis'd to make Diſcovery of Goods, Cloaths, and Corn that were hid under Ground, if they would but Reprieve them for ſo long. Some of them, I ſay, were ſpar'd upon the Hope of This Diſcory; but for the Common People of Mizpah, the Women and the Children, they were All carry'd away; and among the reſt, the Daughters of Zedekiah, which Nebuzar-Adan had left, under the Care of Gedaliah. Iſhmael went away preſently with the News of This Exploit to the King of the Ammonites; but Johanan, with the reſt of the Leading Men, hearing of this Bloudy Execution at Mizpah, and the Death of Gedaliah, took it ſo heinouſly, that they drew every Man his Soldiers together, and joyn'd in the Purſuit of Iſhmael, whom they overtook at the Fountain of Hebron. The Firſt Sight of the Purſuers joyn'd the Hearts of the Priſoners that Iſhmael was carrying away with him; for they knew them Preſently to be Friends, and went over immediately One and All to the Party of Johanan: but Iſhmael with only Eight of his Companions fled to the King of the Ammonites. Johanan, in the mean time, with the People he had taken from Iſhmael, Eunuchs, Women and Children Marched to a Place that is called Mandra, and there they ſtay'd One Day, bethinking themſelves of going into Ægypt, leſt the Babylonians, in a Rage for the Murder of their Governour, ſhould in Revenge fall upon Them; but however, for their Better Security, they took up a Reſolution to Conſult Jeremiah what Courſe to Steer: So they put the Queſtion to him; with an Oath to do whatever he ſhould Adviſe them to. The Prophet promis'd them to do what he could for their Satisfaction; and upon the Tenth Day after this, God appeared to him, and bad him go and tell Johanan, and the reſt of the Commanders, that if they Continued where they were, he would Aſſiſt, and ſecure them againſt any Harm from the Babylonians, whom they were ſo much afraid of; but if after this Præmonition, they ſhould rather go into Ægypt, let them look to themſelves, and expect the ſame Fate and Judgment that had befall'n their Brethren before them. This was the Meſſage the Prophet deliver'd them by God's expreſs Direction; though they could hardly Believe it to be the Will of God, that they ſhould continue where they were: but took it rather for an Invention of the Prophet's in favour of Baruch, his Diſciple, and to Expoſe them to the Wrath of the Babylonians: So that Johanan and the reſt of the People, in Contempt of God's Word by his Prophet, went away into Ægypt, and carry'd Jeremiah and Baruch along with them. When they were come thither, it was Revealed from Heaven to the Prophet, that the King of Babylon ſhould bring an Army into Ægypt, and he commanded Jeremiah to tell the People as much; and that Ægypt ſhould be Taken, where part of them ſhould be Kill'd, and part carry'd away Captives to Babylon; which came to paſs accordingly. For in the Fifth Year after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the Three and Twentieth of Nebuchadnezzar, he made an Inroad into the Cœlo-Syria; and upon Subduing it, carry'd the War forward to the Ammonites and Moabites; and when he had Subjected them too, he made a Furious Incurſion into Ægypt; Kill'd the Preſent King; ſet up Another in his Place: and the Jews that he found there were carry'd away a Second time Priſoners to Babylon.

The Prophet foretels them again, that Ægypt ſhall be Taken, and Themſelves Kill'd, or made Priſoners.

This was the miſerable State of the Hebrews, as we have the Story, who were twice carry'd away beyond the Euphrates; for the Ten Tribes were firſt Tranſported by the Aſſyrians out of Samaria in the Reign of Hoſeah: And then the Other Two, by Nebuchadnezzar, the King of the Chaldæans; and the Babylonians, upon the Taking of Jeruſalem. Now Salmanaſſer Tranſplanted the Chuthites into the Country of the Iſraelites, out of the Heart of Media and Perſia; and they were called Samaritans from the Name of the Place into which they were Tranſported: but the King of Babylon carry'd away the Other Two Tribes, without Introducing any other in their ſtead: And this was the Reaſon that Judæa, with Jeruſalem, and the Temple, lay wholly Abandon'd for the Space of Seventy Years. The time betwixt the Captivity of the Ten Tribes, and the Tranſmigration of the Other Two, was One Hundred and Thirty Years, Six Months, and Ten Days.

Dan. 1.

Nebuchadnezzar appointed a very Strict, and Select Choyce to be made, out of the Youth of the Jews, both for Birth, Vigour and Beauty, and Several of them, the Relations of King Zedekiah; appointed alſo the Beſt Tutors that could be had, for their Inſtitution: Divers of them to be Caſtrated according to the Practice of that Country upon the Handſomeſt Boys of Conquer'd Nations. He ſent them their meat from his Own Table, and took Great Care to have them Inſtructed in the Chaldæan Diſcipline, and Learning; wherein they advanced very much in a Short time. There were Four of Zedekiah's Relations in the Number, whoſe Names were Daniel, Ananias, Miſhael, and Azariah: But the Babylonians Changed their Names, and called Daniel [Belteſhazzar;] Ananias, [Shadrach;] Miſhael, [Meſhaſh;] and Azariah, [Abednego.] The King had a Wonderful Tenderneſs for them all, both in regard of the Sweetneſs of their Diſpoſition, and the Extraordinary Pregnancy of their Underſtanding. Daniel look'd upon that Voluptuous way of Feeding to be too Delicate for People in their Condition, and therefore they went to Aſchanes the Eunuch that had them in Charge, and deſir'd him rather to make uſe of thoſe Delicacies that the King ſent them from his own Table for the Service of himſelf, and his Family, and if they had but Pulſe, or Dates, or any Ordinary Food that had no Life in't, it would Serve their Turn every jot as well; for thoſe Delicacies went againſt their Stomachs, and a Plainer Diet would pleaſe them Better. The Eunuch told them that he would Gratify them with all his Heart; but if they ſhould grow Lean, and Thin, upon ſuch a Heartleſs way of Feeding, or look perhaps leſs Amiably upon it, and appear in a leſs agreeable Habit of Health and of Colour, he was afraid the King might come to have ſome Suſpicion of the Matter, and take Offence at it; which might be as much as his Life was Worth; Eſpecially when the reſt of their Companions, that fed better then they did, ſhould be Obſerv'd to look Better too. They found the Eunuch not ſo Croſs as he might have been, and ſo Preſs'd him to make the Experiment, only for Ten Days; and after that time, if he found the Change did not ſo well Agree with them as their Former Allowance, and that they ſhould not keep their Health, their Colour, and the ſame Habit of Body, after that Tryal, that they had before, he might bring them back again to the King's way of Entertainment. The Eunuch was prevail'd upon to make Tryal of it, and when he found them ſo far from being the Worſe for the Alteration, that they mended upon it, in the Diſpoſition both of their Bodies, and of their Minds, he made no longer a Scruple of Complying with their Deſires; but gave them what they demanded, and kept the King's Allowance to himſelf, which agreed ſo well with Daniel, and his Friends, that comparatively they ſeem'd to be Better Provided for then the reſt, and all their Faculties kept in Better Tune for either Study, or Labour; being neither Surcharg'd, or Surfeited with Variety; nor Effeminated with the Luxury of Pleaſing the Palate. By this Temperate Frugal Way of Menage, and Diſcipline, their Spirits were kept Clear and Active, as appeared by their Wonderful Improvement in the Hebrew, as well as the Chaldæan Learning; but of Daniel Eſpecially, who had gotten ſuch an Inſight into their Arts, that he took upon him the Expounding of Dreams, and had many times Viſions of his Own to work upon.

Some

Some Two Years after the Deſtruction of Ægypt, Nebuchadnezzar had a Wonderful Viſion, and a Revelation from God in his Sleep, of the Meaning of it. But when he came afterwards to riſe from his Bed, he had quite Forgotten it: ſo he preſently ſent for his Learned Men, as Chaldæans, Magi, and Prophets, and told them that he had had a Strange Dream; but it was now utterly out of his Head, and therefore required them to tell him what it was, and what was the Signification of it. They made him Anſwer that as to the Firſt part of his Propoſition, it was a thing not to be done; but if he would be pleas'd to tell them the Dream, they would be Anſwerable to give him the Interpretation of it. The King in a Rage Commanded them without any more a do, to tell him his Dream, or they ſhould Die for't; but they could not Undertake it, they ſaid, and ſo they were all Order'd to be put to Death. When Daniel came to Underſtand that the Wiſe-Men were all to be put to Death, and to Conſider that no body knew whoſe Turn it might be Next, he went to Arioch the Captain of the King's Guard, to learn what the Crime was they were Condemned for: So the Captain told him, that the King had a Dream, which he himſelf had Forgotten, and that they were to Dye becauſe they could not tell him what it was. Daniel made Anſwer, that if he could but get them a Reprieve only for one Night, he would not Deſpair of giving him the Satisfaction he requir'd; for he had ſome Hope that God would that very Night be Prevail'd upon to Enable him to do it. The Captain gave the King an Account of this Diſcourſe and Propoſal; and thereupon the Execution was Reſpited, only to try what Good was to be done upon that Experiment. Daniel, with his Companions, went into his Bed-Chamber, and ſpent that whole Night in Prayers to God for the means of Reſolving the Queſtion, and for the delivering thoſe People from Death, that were now fall'n under the King's Diſpleaſure, by laying before him the Particulars of the Laſt Night's Dream, which was now Slipt out of his Memory. God was pleaſed upon this Interceſſion of Daniel, both in Compaſſion to the Miſerable, and out of Tenderneſs for the Prudence of Daniel's Mediation, to make known, not only the Dream it ſelf, but the Signification of it; to the End that he might Communicate the whole Matter to the King. Daniel was ſo Tranſported with this Revelation, that he got up Early in the Morning; gave his Brethren a Word of Comfort, being now brought to the Laſt point of Deſperation, and thinking of nothing but Death; bad them Cheer-up, and Hope the Beſt, for that all things were now Secure. When they had given God thanks together for his Fatherly Care and Piety over them, Daniel went to Arioch by Peep of Day to carry him to the King, with Aſſurance that he ſhould now have all the Particulars laid before him, of his Late Dream.

God Reveals to Daniel the Dream, and the Signification of it.

Upon Daniel's Admittance to the King, he firſt told him, that it was not any Overweening of his Own Wiſdom, as if he knew more then the Chaldæans, and the Magi; or any Deſign of a Reproach upon them, for not being able to Reſolve a Queſtion which he Could unriddle. It was not any thing of this, ſays he, that made me Engage in this matter; for I am not a Perſon to pretend to more Skill, and Underſtanding then my Neighbours: But it is purely the Work of God in Pity to the Miſerable, and in Mercy to my Prayers, for the Lives, and Safety of my ſelf and my Friends, that hath now laid Open this Dream to me, and Explain'd the meaning of it. I have not been ſo Sollicitous for the Safety of my ſelf, and my Companions under your Diſpleaſure, as for your Honour and Glory; in caſe of putting ſo many Good and Worthy Men to Death, contrary to Right and Juſtice, and only for not being able to do a thing, which it is utterly Impoſſible for Fleſh and Bloud to do; or for Any but a Supernatural Power to Accompliſh.

You were Bethinking your ſelf what would become of the Empire of the World when you were gone, and Who ſhould Succeed to it. Now the Dream you had, was a kind of a Reſolution upon that Enquiry; for God ſhow'd you in your Sleep thoſe that were to Rule after you. You Dreamt you ſaw a Large Image, or Statue, Standing Upright; the Head was Gold; the Shoulders and Arms, Silver; the Belly and the Thighs, Braſs; the Legs and the Feet, Iron. You ſaw then a Stone broken-off from a Mountain, that fell upon this Image; Overthrew it, and brake it ſo Small, that the Duſt of the Gold, Silver, Braſs, and Iron, was as Light as Chaff, and carry'd away by a Blaſt of Wind to the Furthermoſt parts of the Earth: the Stone growing ſo Great, all this While, that it lay like a Mountain upon the Face of the Earth. This was your Dream, and I come now to the Interpretation of it. By the Golden Head is Signify'd your ſelf, and other Kings of Babylon before you: the Two Hands and Shoulders portend that Two Kings ſhall Deſtroy your Empire; and afterward, their Empire will be ſubverted by Another King coming from the Weſt in Armour of Braſs; and he is to be Subdued afterward by Another in Iron; which, in the Nature of it, is Stronger then Gold, Silver, or Braſs, *and and not to be Reſiſted. things to come. But for the Satisfaction of the Inquiſitive into the Dark Events of things, I ſhall only recommend unto them the Book of Daniel, as we have it in Sacred Writ.

The King Adores Daniel for his Wiſdom, and gives him the Name of his God Belteſhazzar.

Nebuchadnezzar, in Great Admiration, acknowledg'd this to be his Dream; and falling upon his Face, Ador'd Daniel like a God, and appointed Divine Honours to be done him: And this would not Serve neither, without giving him the Name of his God, [Belteſhazzar;] and ſo he made him Ruler of the whole Province, Joyning ſeveral of his Kindred with him in the ſame Commiſſion; this Promotion, was followed with ſuch an Envy upon Daniel, and his Relations, that it had like to have Coſt them all their Lives, by a Diſguſt the King took upon this following Occaſion.

He ſets up a Golden Image. Dan. 3.

Nebuchadnezzar the King made an Image of Gold, Sixty Cubits in Height, and Six in Breadth, and placed it in the Great Plain of Babylon. He called together, upon the Dedication of it, the Princes, the Great Men and Officers, out of all his Dominions; making Proclamation, that immediately upon Hearing the Sound of a Trumpet, they ſhould all fall down and Worſhip this Image; and that whoever refuſed it, ſhould be caſt into the Fiery Furnace. Upon the Sounding of this Trumpet, accordingly, all the People fell down and Worſhipped; ſave only Daniel, and his Relations; who refuſing to do it, out of a Reverence to the Laws of their Country, were Enform'd againſt, and caſt into the Fire; but by a Merciful Providence, and beyond all Humane Imagination, their Lives were Preſerv'd: as if the Flame it ſelf had been Conſcious of the Injuſtice of the Sentence, and Suſpended the very Nature of it's Conſuming Quality in favour of the Innocent; for they were not ſo much as Scorch'd with it: as if God, in his Gracious Providence had made their Bodies Proof againſt the Flames. But the thing that moſt Recommended them to the King's Tenderneſs and Eſteem, was the miraculous Proof of God's Love and Goodneſs to them in their Juſtification; for upon this Ground the King had a Great Honour for them ever after.

All People to fall down and Worſhip it, upon the Sound of the Trumpet, or to be caſt into the Fiery Furnace. Daniel, and his Companions Refuſe.

This Providence gave the King a Greater Reverence for them.

It was not long before Nebuchadnezzar had Another Dream, as ſurprizing as the Former; which was, that being driven away from his Kingdom he lived Seven Years among the Beaſts of the Forreſt, and was afterward Reſtored to his Former Dignity and State. The King put the Queſtion once again to the Magi upon this Viſion alſo; but Daniel was the only Perſon, again, to Expound the Meaning of it: and according to his Prediction, it Succeeded in the Event; for after Seven Years of his Life Spent in an Inſociable Solitude, and no Creature all this time, Daring to make any Attempt upon his Government, God was prevail'd upon to Re-inſtate him in the Exerciſe of his Kingly Power. Let no body Blame me for delivering the ſame Reports in my Writings, that I find in Ancient Hiſtory; for I have Anticipated all thoſe Cavils in the very Beginning of this Work, by making a Publique Profeſſion to do the part only of a Faithful Tranſlator of the Story out of Hebrew into Greek, and to deliver every thing Honeſtly as I find it, without making it more or leſs then in Truth it is.

Nebuchadnezzar's Second Viſion. Dan. 4.

Daniel's Interpretation of it.

Nebuchadnezzar, in fine, was a Prince very Induſtrious, and much more Fortunate then any of his Anceſtors. He departed this Life in the Three and Fortieth Year of his Age. Beroſus, in the Third Book of his Chaldæan Hiſtory, makes mention of it in theſe Words: [a] Nabuchodonoſor the Father, ſays he, underſtanding that a Certain Great Officer of his, to whom he had Committed the Government of Ægypt, Cœlo-Syria, and Phœnicia, was fall'n-off from his Allegiance, and not being in a Condition of Body himſelf to bear the Fatigues of the War in his Own Perſon, he ſent his Son Nabuchodonoſor, with Part of his Army, to Reduce him to his Obedience. He found him out; Fought, and overcame him, and ſo brought back the Revolted Provinces to their Duty. The Father in the mean time, was taken away by a Sickneſs at Babylon, in the [b] One and Twentieth Year of his Reign. The Young Man was no ſooner Informed of the Death of his Father, but he took Immediate Care for the Setling of his Affairs in Ægypt, and the reſt of the Provinces; recommending to ſome Particular Friends the Charge of Conveying his Priſoners, Jews, Syrians, Phœnicians, and Ægyptians to Babylon, with the Army and Baggage; while he himſelf with a Small Retinue took his way thither over the Deſert. The Government was Reſerv'd for him in the mean while, by the Chaldæans, and by the Great Men, among them, in his Abſence, ſecured till his Return. So that when he came to Enter upon the Adminiſtration, he was Eſtabliſh'd in the full Poſſeſſion of his Paternal Empire. The Firſt thing he did was to make a Commodious Diſtribution of his Captives into Colonies, and after that, to Adorn and Illuſtrate the Temple of Belus, and other Religious Places with Spoils of War. He Repaired and Enlarged the Ancient Edifices of the City; and Raiſed Works upon the Banks of the River to prevent all Approaches

[e] Cyrus the King of the Perſians, and Darius the King of the Medes, made War upon this Prince; and while they lay before Babylon there appear'd to Belſhazzar a Wonderful, and a Prodigious Viſion. They laid their Heads together, and upon Advice, and Conſideration, Frankly declar'd that they Underſtood nothing of the Matter. Upon this, the King in an Anxiety of Thought and Surprize, caus'd a Proclamation to be Publiſh'd all over his Dominions, with Promiſe of a Golden Chain; the Privilege of a Royal Purple Robe, and the Third Place of Rule in his Kingdom, to any Man that ſhould give him the Interpretation of that Writing. While

While the King was Labouring in a Torment of Mind and Aſtoniſhment, under theſe Diſappointments, his Grandmother went to him and told him; that for his Comfort, there was a Certain Jew among the Priſoners that Nebuchadnezzar brought away with him upon the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, who was look'd upon to be a Man of Great Wiſdom and Foreſight, and ſo Wonderfully Skill'd in the Solving of Nice Difficulties and Queſtions, as if he ſpake by the Direction of a Divine Spirit. She told him alſo that Nebuchadnezzar made uſe of him for his Interpreter in the like Caſes, when no body elſe was able to Reſolve him: wherefore ſhe deſir'd the King by any means to ſend for Daniel, and to Examine him about that Writing, and gave him Encouragement to ſpeak the Truth, let it be never ſo much againſt him; if it were but to Daſh the Ignorance of Other Pretenders. Upon this Advice, Belſhazzar cauſed Daniel to be ſent for; profeſſing indeed that he had heard of the Sagacity and Underſtanding of that Man; and that he took him to be the moſt likely Perſon in the World to Divine the Truth of a matter, which no body elſe could Gueſs at. So upon Daniel's being brought, the King put him the Queſtion, with an Aſſurance that all the Promiſes in his Proclamation ſhould be made good to him, upon his Solution of it; which would make him Famous all over the World, wherever it ſhould come to be known, that he had theſe Honours done him for his Wiſdom.

Daniel is brought to the King.

Daniel Excus'd himſelf from the Receiving of any Gifts or Honours; for Wiſdom, ſays he, is a Divine Faculty, and not to be Corrupted or Prophan'd with Bribes; but to be ever Ready to ſerve thoſe that Stand in Need of it. This Writing, ſays he, is a Foretelling to you that Your Death is at hand; for you ſhould have taken Warning by the Judgments that befel your Great Anceſtor for his Contempt of God, and have Apply'd your ſelf to a Courſe of Life within the Compaſs of Religion, Modeſty, and Moderation. You know very well that Nebuchadnezzar was Baniſh'd the Society of Mankind, and Condemn'd to the Life and Condition of a Beaſt; but that afterward it pleaſed God, upon his Earneſt Prayers and Repentance, to Reſtore him to the Converſation of Men, and to the Exerciſe of his Former Government; which Infinite Mercy and Providence of God he Adored, and Celebrated afterward all the Days of his Life: But for your Part, ſays Daniel, You are ſo far from being Wrought upon by this Example in your Family, that you Blaſpheme God to his Face, and take a Pride to lie Prophaning the Veſſels of his Holy Altar, in your Debauches with your Harlots. By this Lewd Courſe of Impiety, you have drawn the Wrath of God upon your Head; and the Intent of this Writing is only to ſhew What End you are to come to. MENE, which is as much as Number, ſignifies that the Days both of your Life, and of your Reign are Number'd; and that you have but a very ſhort time to Live. TEKEL, (or Weight) gives to underſtand that your Reign is Weighed in the Ballance, and Drawing to a Concluſion. PERES, or a Fragment, portends that your Kingdom ſhall be divided, and given to the Medes and Perſians. The King could not but be Mortally caſt down with this Interpretation; but was yet ſo Juſt and Generous as to make good to Daniel all that he had promis'd him, though the Foreteller of his Ruine; Conſidering with himſelf, that it was not the Prophet's Fault, but his Own Unhappy Fatality, that he could tell him no Better Tidings: Neither would he Deny but Daniel had done the Part of a Juſt and a Good Man, in letting him know the Truth of Things, though never ſo Deplorable in the Event.

Daniel Expounds the Writing. Dan. 5.

It was not long after this, when both himſelf and the City fell into the Power and Poſſeſſion of Cyrus; for Babylon was taken in the Seventeenth Year of the Reign of Belſhazzar, who is ſaid to have been the Laſt King of Nebuchadnezzar's Family. Now Darius was Sixty Two Years of Age at the Subverſion of the Empire of Babylon, with the Aſſiſtance of Cyrus his Kinſman; which Cyrus was the Son of Aſtyages, though Known among the Greeks by Another Name. He took the Prophet Daniel along with him into Media, and had him in Great Honour and Eſtimation; for he made him One of the Three Chief Governours that had Three Hundred Sixty more under them, according to the Original Conſtitution of Darius. Now Darius had ſo Great a Tenderneſs, and Reverence for Daniel, that he conſulted him upon all Occaſions as an Oracle, and would hardly reſolve upon any matter of Moment without his Advice; but it fell out with Daniel, as we find it in the Caſe of other Princes Favourites: The Confident that is moſt in Credit never fails of drawing upon himſelf the Envy of all the reſt. Now Daniel was ſo well aware of theſe Court-Tricks, and kept ſo Strict a Guard upon himſelf, that there was no laying Hold of him. As to the Matter of Mony and Bribes, he had a Soul ſo much above any Temptation of that Kind, that he made a Conſcience of receiving even a Lawful Acknowledgment for a Good Office: But this did not hinder his Enemies yet from Joyning in a Practice againſt his Life; and the Manner of it was this.

tice of his to his Ruine. So they Applyed themſelves to Darius, in the Name of his Council and State Officers, and upon their Advice and Requeſt, that he would be pleaſed ſo far to Indulge his People, as to Paſs an Edict, only for Thirty Days, that whoſoever ſhould Preſume to ask any thing of God or Man within that Compaſs of time, ſhould be caſt into the Lyons Den. The King was ſo Short-Sighted, as to ſee thorough the Malice of this Contrivance, and that the very Propoſal ſtruck at the Life of Daniel: ſo that Darius Aſſented to the Motion; promis'd a Confirmation of it, and Order'd the Publication of the Decree, as the Act of himſelf, and his Councel. The Dread of this Decree, put all People into a General Damp and Silence for Fear of being Surprized into a Tranſgreſſion: Saving only Daniel himſelf, who went on ſtill in his Dayly Courſe of Worſhipping God, in the Publick View of the World, as it was his Cuſtom to do; without ever heeding the Decree. This way of Proceeding, furniſhed his Enemies with the Opportunity of a Pretence that they had long waited for: Which Immediately they laid hold of; for giving the King to underſtand, that Daniel was the Only Man that in Contempt of his Royal Proclamation, Worſhipped contrary to the Tenor and Direction of the Decree: And that he did not do this, out of Piety neither, but out of a Spirit of Contradiction and Defyance to the Authority of the Edict. The Envy of Daniel's Enemies was the more Outrageous, upon the Apprehenſion they had that the King's Perſonal Indulgence for him might incline him to paſs over the Affront: So that they preſs'd him with Clamours and Outcries not to be Reſiſted, for Juſtice upon the Malefactor; and nothing would ſerve them, but Daniel muſt be immediately Thrown into the Lyon's Den. Darius was forc'd to Yield to the Violence of theſe Importunities; but told Daniel for his Comfort in this Extremity, that rather then ſo Good a Man ſhould Periſh, God would yet work ſome Miracle for his Relief: So Daniel was caſt into the Lyons Den, and a Great Stone laid at the Mouth of the Den, which the King Seal'd with his Own Signet, and ſo went his way to his Palace. He paſs'd that Night Faſting and Waking; for the Trouble of his Mind for Daniel would not Suffer him either to Eat, or Sleep: But Early in the Morning he got up, and went to the Den, where he found Every thing as he left it, and the Seal Untouch'd. He call'd upon Daniel then by his Name, at a Grate that look'd down into the Den, to know if he were Living or not; to which, Daniel made this Anſwer, that he was Safe and Well: In which Inſtant, the King Order'd him to be taken Out again; but Daniel's Enemies would not Allow this Deliverance however to be the Work of a Peculiar Providence, and would needs face the King down, that the Lyon's Bellies were Full, and ſo they let him Alone for want of Appetite. The King was ſo Incenſed at the Spite and Malignity of theſe People, that he Order'd as much Meat to be given the Lyons as they could get down, and when they would Eat no longer, to turn Daniel's Accuſers-in among them. If they do not Worry them, ſays the King, 'tis becauſe their Bellies are Full: but if they do, it muſt be Allow'd to be a Divine Providence that Preſerv'd Daniel. In ſhort, the Lyons tore them to pieces, every one of them, as if it had been in a Starving Hunger: Or rather, as if the Brutes themſelves were become the Miniſters of God's Juſtice upon the Workers of Iniquity.

Daniel caſt into the Lyon's Den.

The Lyons do him no Hurt;

but afterwards tear his Enemies to pieces.

After this Execution done upon the Treacherous Complotters againſt Daniel, Darius Publiſhed a Decree thorough his Whole Empire; commanding his People to Acknowledge the God of Daniel to be the Only True, and Almighty God; and at the ſame time Multiply'd Honours upon the Prophet himſelf, in Preference to all the reſt of his Friends and Favourites: Now Daniel, by this way of Conduct having gained the Univerſal Eſteem of a Perſon highly in Favour both with God and Man: He Erected a Stately Fabrique at Ecbatan, the Capital of Media; a Work Every way Wonderful, as well for the Structure, and Strength of it, as for the Beauty. The Building is ſtill to be ſeen, and looks as Freſh, and as Firm at this Inſtant, as if it had been finiſhed but the Day you firſt ſaw it; without any Decays of Time or Age to be ſeen upon it: Whereas it fares with Other Ædifices, as with Humane Bodies; Time wears them out, and Disfigures them. This Tower is Famous for being the Royal Monument of the Kings of the Medes, Perſians, and Parthians, to which Uſe it is ſtill Apply'd; and the Place likewiſe Committed to the Cuſtody of a Jewiſh Prieſt to this very Day. There are ſome Other Paſſages in the Hiſtory of Daniel, which are yet more Admirable, and Particular, and not to be paſſed over in Silence. He had this Singular Bleſſing attending him, over and above his Excellent Gift of Prophecy; that he liv'd in a High Degree of Reputation both with King and People; and at his Death, left an Immortal Memory behind him, to his Everlaſting Honour. For we find by his Writings that are yet Extant, and in Daily Uſe and Reading, that beyond all Queſtion, God admitted him into Expreſs Colloquies, and Revealed to him not only the Sum, and Subſtance of things to come (as was Uſual to Other Prophets) but the very Time when ſuch or ſuch an Event ſhould come to paſs. And whereas Other Prophets were more Exerciſed in the Foreboding of Calamities, and conſequently drew upon themſelves Envy and Ill-will, both from Princes and People; Daniel, on the contrary, made Friends of Both, by the Good Things he told them which they took Delight to hear. And then for the Certainty of the Event, all Mortals are Agreed upon it, that he ſpake from the Dictate of an Infallible Spirit; as may be abundantly gather'd alſo, from the Writings which this great Prophet hath left Behind him.

Daniel's Viſion at Suſa, of the Ram and the Goat. Dan. 7.

It fell out, ſays he, as I was taking the Air one day, with ſome of my Companions at Suſa, the Metropolis of Perſia, that we were ſurpriz'd all on a ſudden with an Earthquake. My Friends ran away in a Fright, and left me alone, groveling upon the Ground, in a Conſternation upon that Accident. While I was in that Poſture, ſome body, methought, came and Jogg'd me, and bad me Riſe, and take good Notice of Things; for I ſhould ſee wonderful Revolutions that would befal my Country-men, ſeveral Ages to come. Upon my Ariſing, I ſaw a Large Ram, with ſeveral Horns, and the Laſt Taller than the reſt: Turning my Face then toward the Weſt, I ſaw a Goat that paſs'd thorough the Air, and Encounter'd the Ram; ſtruck him down twice, and trampled him under his Feet. After this, there Aroſe a Large Horn out of the Forehead of the Goat; and when that came to be broken, there ſprang up Four more inſtead of it; pointing toward the Four Quarters of the Heavens. Daniel writes alſo, that from One of them came forth a Little Horn, which, upon growing up, ſhould Wage War with the Nation of the Jews, and Deſtroy Jeruſalem it ſelf; Suppreſs the Ceremonies of the Temple, and all Sacrifices, for the ſpace of 1296 Days. This was the Viſion that, as Daniel writes, he ſaw at Suſa, which was firſt ſhewed by a Revelation from God; and then Interpreted after This following Manner. By the Ram, was deſigned the Kingdoms of the Medes and Perſians: By the Horns, the ſucceeding Kings there; and the Laſt of their Kings, by the Laſt Horn, as Tranſcending all the reſt for Wealth and Power. By the Goat was ſignify'd ſome King of Greece, that ſhould give Two Overthrows to the Perſians, and Subdue that Empire. By the Great Horn upon the Forehead of the Goat, was meant the Firſt of their Kings; and by the Budding out of Four Horns more, Pointing to the Four Winds, was to be Underſtood the Succeſſors to Thoſe Kings, and the Partition of their Dominions, after the Death of the Firſt, though Strangers to the Blood; but that however they ſhould Reign for ſeveral Years: And in proceſs of time, out of Theſe ſhould come a King that would make War upon the Jewiſh Nation, and their Laws, and utterly Extinguiſh the Form of the Commonwealth; Pillage the Temple; and prohibit any Sacrifices or Worſhip in it for Three Years. Which Calamity came to paſs under Antiochus Epiphanes, as the Prophet had foretold ſo many Years before. He wrote ſeveral Wonderful Things alſo about the Roman Empire, and what a Deſolation they ſhould make of Our People; All which he received by Divine Revelation, and Tranſmitted in Writing to Poſterity, to ſtand as a Teſtimony upon Record, of the Agreement betwixt the Preſage, and the Event. This may ſerve to eſtabliſh a Veneration for That Man's Memory, whom God was pleas'd to Honour in ſo Particular a Manner: and likewiſe to Confound the Impious Doctrine of the Epicuræans, that will not Allow of any Ordering or Over-ruling Providence to Interpoſe in the Government, or Preſervation of the Univerſe; but will have the whole Courſe of Sublunary Affairs to be only a Huddle of Contingencies, without either Care or Counſel. Now if it were as they vainly imagine; the World without a Supreme Governour or Moderator, would be ſuch Another Fancy as That of a Ship, at the Mercy of the Winds and Waves, without a Pilot; which muſt of neceſſity Miſcarry: or, as a Chariot among Crags and Precipices, without a Driver, that Periſhes under its own Weight. So that when I conſider the Predictions of Daniel, I cannot forgive the Ignorance and Irreverence of Thoſe People that make it their Profeſſion to Decry Providence, as if God took no Care of us; for how is it poſſible there ſhould be ſuch a Correſpondence betwixt a Thing Foretold at One time, and Fulfilled ſo many Ages after, if, according to Their Opinion, Every Thing were left to Hap-hazzard? But What I have Found in Writing, I do here Deliver in Writing, juſt as I found it; leaving Every Man ſtill to the Liberty of his Own Opinion.

CHAP. I.

Cyrus gives the Jews Leave to return, and to Rebuild Jeruſalem and the Temple, with Letters Recommendatory to his Officers and Governours, to be Aiding and Aſſiſting to them.

IN the Firſt Year of Cyrus, and the Seventieth of our Babylonian Captivity, God took Pity of a Miſerable People, according to what he had foretold them by the Prophet Jeremiah, before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem: that is to ſay; that after Seventy Years Bondage under Nebuchadnezzar, and his Succeſſors, they ſhould be Reſtored to their Own Country; ſee the Temple Rebuilt, and return to the State of their Former Glory. This was all made good to them accordingly: For God put it into the Heart of Cyrus to ſend his Circular Letters over all Aſia to this Effect; Signing them Cyrus the King. I do fully perſuade my ſelf that the Great God, of whoſe Gift and Bounty I hold my Empire, is the very God that the Children of Iſrael Adore; for I find Honourable Mention made of my Name by his Prophets of Ancient Date, as a Perſon that in time to come ſhould Rebuild Jeruſalem, and Reinſtate the People. Cyrus, it ſeems, had Seen and Read the Prophecies of Iſaiah, which bore date Two Hundred and Ten Years before He was born; wherein he gives an Account of a Revelation he had from God, that he would Raiſe-up one Cyrus, to be a King of many, and of Powerful Nations, who ſhould Re-eſtabliſh the Hebrews in their Native Country. This was foretold by the Prophet a Hundred and Forty Years before the Temple was Deſtroy'd. The King was ſo Tranſported upon the Reading of theſe Divine Inſpirations, and Predictions concerning himſelf, that he fell preſently to Work upon making good his part of the Prophecy. The Firſt thing he did was to call together all the Leading Men of the Jews to Babylon; where he told them, that ſo many of them as had a mind to go back into their Country, ſhould have Free Paſs-Ports, and Permiſſion to Rebuild the Temple and the City of Jeruſalem, if they thought fit; making no doubt, he ſaid, but that God would Bleſs them in the Undertaking: promiſing over and above, that he would ſend his Orders to all his Officers and Governours bordering upon Judæa, to Furniſh them with Gold and Silver for the Fabrique, and Beaſts for Sacrifices. The moſt Eminent of the Two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, together with the Prieſts and Levites, immediately upon this Declaration, haſten'd away toward Jeruſalem: But there were a great Many however, that choſe rather to ſtay in Babylon, then to quit their Poſſeſſions. Upon their Arrival at Jeruſalem, All the King's Friends and Officers Contributed largely, and Unanimouſly toward the Great Work, ſome in Gold; Others in Silver; and ſome again in Cattle, and Horſes; Others Attended the Diſcharge of their Vows, and the Solemnity of Oblations, as if they were already Enter'd upon the Buſ'neſs of Re-Erecting the City, and in the Exerciſe of their Ancient Diſcipline: For Cyrus had then ſent them from Babylon, the Holy Veſſels and Utenſils that Nebuchadnezzar had Taken away from the Temple at Jeruſalem; which were deliver'd to [a] Mithridates the King's Treaſurer, and by him to be Depoſited with Abaſſar, till the Temple ſhould be Finiſh'd; and then immediately to be put into the Hands of the Prieſts, and Magiſtrates of the People, for the Uſe and Service of the Temple. Cyrus, after this, wrote another Letter to the Governours of Syria, in Manner following.

Cyrus, in Favour of the Jews.

Be it known unto you, that I have given leave to All the Jews that are in my Dominions, to return into their Own Country, and there to Rebuild their Capital City, with the Holy Temple at Jerusalem, in the Same Place where it stood before. I have likewise sent my Treasurer Mithridates, and Zerubbabel the Governour of Judæa, to Superintend the Building, and to see it Raised Sixty Cubits upward from the Ground, and as many over; the Walls to be Three Rows of Polished Stone, and One of the Wood of the Country, together with an Altar for the Sacrifices; *and all this to be done at my Own Charge. CHAP. II.

The Jews fall to Work upon Rebuilding the City and the Temple; but Cyrus dying in the mean time, his Son Cambyses is prevail'd upon to Countermand the Design.

1 Esdr. 4.

THE Jews were no sooner at Work upon the Foundations of the Temple, their Hearts being wholly set upon the Advancement of the Undertaking, but the Bordering Nations, and Especially the Chuthites, which Salmanassar, the King of Assyria, had formerly Transplanted from Persia and Media into Samaria, after he had remov'd the Israelites into Other Habitations: These People, I say, apply'd themselves to the Princes and Governours, to whom the Care of this Enterprize was Committed; Pressing them with Earnest Importunities, not to Suffer the Jews, upon any Terms to proceed upon the Project of Rebuilding the City and the Temple. These Commissioners were prevail'd upon, by the Force of Bribes and Fair Words, to slacken their Diligence in the Dispatch and Prosecution of their Orders; and During the Course of this Negligence, and Delay, Cyrus was so Taken-up in a War with the Massagetes (where he lost his Life) that he knew nothing at all of the Matter.

The Chuthites Oppose the Rebuilding of the City and Temple. Ezra 4. 2.

The Work is delay'd, and Cyrus in the Interim dies in the War with the Massagetes.

Upon the Death of Cyrus, Cambyses in Course Succeeded to the Empire, and had an Address Presented him out of Syria and Phœnicia, and from the Ammonites, Moabites, and Samaritans, Signed Rathymus, History-Secretary; Semelius, Scribe; and the Magistrates of Phœnicia and Syria. The Tenor of it to the Purpose Following.

Cambyses succeeds to Cyrus.

A Malicious Address to Cambyses against the Jews.

This is to give you, Great Sir, to Understand that the Jews that were carry'd away to Babylon, are now returned to their Former Seats, and into Our Country, where they are Busy upon the Rebuilding of a City that was most deservedly Destroy'd for Seditious Practices. They are setting up Markets, and Places of Commerce; Repairing the Walls, and Renewing the Temple: and if they go on at this rate you may Assure your self, that they will neither Pay Taxes, nor Due Allegiance much longer; for they are Profest Enemies to Kings, and will never Submit to Serve, if they once get it into their Power to Command. We account it our Duty, Sir, in this Heat and Zeal, for the Rebuilding of the Temple, to Possess you before it be too Late, with a True State of the Matter. Be pleased only to look back into the History of your Predecessors, and you shall there find the Jews, from Generation to Generation, to be the Enemies of all Crowned Heads; and that this very City was Justly laid Waste and Desolate, for the Crime of Rebellion: And we are further to Present this to your Consideration, that if ever they go thorough with the Re-Edifying of this City, and the Finishing of the Walls, you will find your Communication Cut-off with Phœnicia, and Cœlo-Syria.

CHAP. III.

Cambyſes puts a ſtop to the Rebuilding of the City and Temple. He dies ſoon after, and the Adminiſtration of the Government is, for One Year, lodg'd in the Magi. Darius is Choſen King.

THE King was Ill-natur'd, and Croſs-grain'd enough of Himſelf; but this Remonſtrance put him out of all Patience, as will appear by his following Anſwer.

King Cambyſes to Rathymus his Hiſtoriographer; Belſemus; and Semelius the Scribe, and the reſt of the Inhabitants of Samaria and Phœnicia, Greeting. Upon the Reading of your Letter of Addreſs, I have cauſed a diligent Search to be made into the Hiſtory of Former Times, according to your Requeſt, and I find your Remarks upon the City of Jeruſalem to be True; and that they have ever been a Rebellious, and as you ſay, an Anti-Monarchical ſort of People; Turbulent and Reſtleſs, and naturally addicted to Innovations. I find likewiſe that their Kings have been ever Fierce and Violent, and Vexatious in their Taxes and Impoſitions, to the higheſt degree of Oppreſſion, as Phœnicia and Cœlo-Syria may bear witneſs againſt them: Wherefore I do Command you to Oppoſe them with all your Might, in the Rebuilding of the City; for as they grow in Power, they will certainly encreaſe in Malice, and behave themſelves as Seditiouſly to the Preſent Governours, as they have done in time paſt to Former Kings.

Cambyſes puts a Stop to the Rebuilding of the Temple.

Rathymus and Semelius had no ſooner read this Mandate, but away they went with their Companions, and took Horſe immediately for Jeruſalem, and a vaſt Multitude of People along with them, where they put an Abſolute Stop to the Jews in the Work of the City and the Temple. So that it was reſpited for a matter of Nine Years; that is to ſay, to the Second Year of Darius the King of Perſia. Cambyſes, after he had Reigned Six Years, and Subdu'd Ægypt, Dy'd at Damaſcus, in his Return from that Expedition. The Government reſting in the hands of the Magi for a full Year after his Death; and it was afterwards Tranſlated by the Seven Satrapæ, or Eminent Families of the Perſians, and by Common Conſent, to Darius, the Son of Hyſtaſpes.

The Work was laid aſide for Nine Years. Cambyſes Reign'd Six Years, and Darius the Son of Hyſtaſpes Succeeded him.

CHAP. IV.

Darius gives Zerubbabel leave to Rebuild the City and Temple. The Samaritans Oppoſe it: But Darius, on the contrary, promotes the Deſign.

Darius, while he was yet a Private Man, made a Vow to God, that if ever he came to the Throne, he would ſend All the Holy Veſſels that were at Babylon back again to the Temple of Jeruſalem; and it happened about that time, that Zerubbabel, who was declar'd the Prince, or Captain of the Jewiſh Captives, came from Jeruſalem to Darius. He was an ancient Friend and Confident of the King's, and taken into a Particular Truſt, with two other Great Officers, which was an Honour that Anſwer'd the uttermoſt of his Ambition.

1 Eſdr. 5. 6. Darius's Vow in favour of the Jews.

Zerubbabel the King's Ancient Friend.

Darius, in the Firſt Year of his Reign, gave a ſplendid, and a moſt magnificent Treat; not only to his own Domeſtiques, but to the Princes and Nobility of the Medes and Perſians; the General Officers of all India and Æthiopia; and the Commanders, in fine, of a Hundred and Twenty Seven Provinces. Upon the breaking-up of the Company, when the Entertainment was over, they Retir'd, every Man to his Quarter. Darius, in the mean while, finding after a ſhort Slumber, that he could not lay himſelf to Reſt again, fell into Diſcourſes from One Thing to Another with his Three Favourite Officers; telling them in the End, that He had ſome Queſtions to ask them; and for their Encouragement, he that ſhould give him the moſt Reaſonable and Satisfactory Anſwer, ſhould have the Privileges to be Clothed in Purple, Drink in a Golden Cup, Sleep upon Gold, Ride in a Chariot with Harneſs of Gold, wear a Silken Tiara, and a Gold-Chain, have the next Place to Darius himſelf in the Council, and be Accounted as One of the Royal Blood. After this, he put his Queſtions to them in Order: To the Firſt, If there was any thing ſtronger then Wine? To the Second, the ſame Queſtion again, of the Strength of Kings; and to the Third, what he thought of the Strength of Women; or finally, of Truth, perhaps above All the reſt. Upon the putting of theſe Quæries, he made an End of Speaking, and left his Guards to conſider of the Matter. In the Morning early, he call'd together All the Princes of the Medes and Perſians, with the Chief Officers and Governours; Placed Himſelf upon the Seat of Juſtice, and cauſed the Three Guards of his Body to be ſent for immediately to give their Opinions Severally and Publickly upon what he had Propos'd.

Several Queſtions put by Darius to his Officers, with mighty Promiſes to him that ſhould beſt Reſolve them.

The

The Power of Wine.

The First began upon the Subject of the Strength of Wine; Which (says he) with favour of This Illustrious Assembly, I may take upon me to pronounce Superior to All other Powers whatsoever: For it overthrows the Minds and the Understandings of All that will be Trying Masteries with it. It puts the Greatest Prince into the Condition of a Child in his Wardship, that has not Wit enough to look to Himself. It sets the Slave at Liberty, even to the Forgetting of his Chains, and makes the Beggar as Rich, and as High, as an Emperour. It changes and elevates the Spirits, wherever it takes Possession. It Enlivens the Heavy Hearts of the Miserable; pays All Debts, and Relieves Men in all manner of Necessities. It makes the Scoundrel Strut, and Brag like a Lord; Look and Talk Big, without any Fancy or Fear of either Kings, or Captains. It makes Men forget their most intimate Familiars and Friends, and draw upon their Neareſt Relations, as if they were the most hateful of Strangers: And then when a Man has slept out his Debauche, he no more Remembers what he did in the Heat of his Wine, then as if no such thing had ever been. Now for these Reasons, I cannot but look upon the Force and Operation of Wine to be the Strongest and the most Violent of All Others.

The Power of Kings.

When the First had done Dilating upon the Topique of Wine, the Second stood up for the Power of Kings, in Preference to all other whatsoever: which he Endeavour'd to Prove after This manner. It is beyond Dispute, says he, that God has made Man the Master of All things under the Sun, so far as to Command them, to make use of them, and apply them to the Service of Mankind as he pleases: But whereas Men have only a Dominion over All other Sublunary Creatures, Kings have an Authority even over Men Themselves, and a Right of Ruling them by Will and Pleasure. Now He that is Master of Those that are Masters of All Things else, hath a just Title to an Advantage over All the rest, and to be accounted Insuperable, having no Earthly thing above him. When Princes find it for their Convenience to Expose the Persons of their Subjects to Wars and Dangers, they Obey them, you see, without any Reluctancy, or Dispute, let the Hazzard be what it will; either Bodies to Bodies, or in the Attaque of Walls or Works; Forcing of Passes; or, as it many times falls out, in Contending with Nature it self: We see how frankly they Offer themselves either to Kill, or to be Kill'd, in the Execution of their Prince's Orders. And then in case of a Victory at last, the Honour and Profit of the Whole goes to the King. This for the Military Part; and the same Reason holds in the Common Business of Husbandry and Tillage; where the Country-man Ploughs, Sows, Digs, and Sweats, in the first place, to supply the King's Stores out of his Toil and Labour; and Whatsoever He Commands must be Obey'd, without any Expostulation or Delay. The King all this time, while the People are Working for him, takes his Fill of all Delicacies and Pleasures; Sleeps in Security and at Ease, with his Guards about him under the Slavery of an Indispensable Attendance, and not a Man of them dares close his Eyes while his Master is at rest; for the King's Business is Theirs without any sort of Liberty to attend any other. So that Nothing certainly can be Stronger then the Force of That Power that the Whole Multitude Obeys to All Intents.

Zerubbabel upon the Power of Women.

After This Declamation upon the Power of Kings, Zerubbabel took His Turn upon the Argument of Women, and of Truth: And his Discourse was to This following Effect. The Force of Wine, says he, is not to be Deny'd; neither is That of Kings, that Tyes-up so many Millions of Men in One Common Bond of Allegeance: But the Super-Eminency of Women is yet above all This. For the Mother of the King was before the King Himself; and Kings are but the Gifts of the Women that brought them into the World: And Women were likewise the Mothers and Nurses of Those that cultivate our Vineyards, and Dress our Vines. There is not any thing we can pretend to, but either directly or indirectly we have it from them. They have a Hand in the Government of all our Domestique Affairs; nay, in the Dress and Ornament of our Bodies: And, in fine, God hath made them so Necessary to us, that there's no Living, and in truth, no Being without them. Let a Man have never so much Gold and Silver, or what is more Precious, before him, the Sight of a Beautiful Woman puts all these Vanities out of his Head and Thought, any further then Parting with them to purchase the Possession of a Beloved Beauty. Women have the Power to make us Abandon our very Country and Relations, and many times to forget the Best Friends we have in the World, and Forsaking all other Comforts, to live and die with them. And it may yet be added, That when we have Compassed Sea and Land for all Things that are Rich and Curious in Nature, what does it all come to at last, but a more valuable Present to a Mistress? How have I seen the King Himself, in the Bluster of all his Glory and Titles, submit to the Taking of a Box on the Ear at the Hand of his Concubine Apame, the Daughter of Rapsaces Themacinus! And This was not All neither; for she would take the Crown off from the King's Head, and set it upon her Own: And He Good Man so Complaisant all the while, as to put himself into all Shapes and Humours to Please her, and to be Pleasant or Sad with her for Company, for fear of giving her any Occasion of Offence.

Upon this, the Princes and the Nobility look'd upon One Another, not without some Admiration at the Freedom of the Discourse; and so Zerubbabel proceeded to the Last Point, Point, upon the Argument of Truth. I have ſpoken, ſays he, what I had to ſay upon the Subject of Women; but when all is done, neither they, nor Kings, are Comparable to the Almighty Force of Truth: for allowing the Vaſt Magnitude of the Earth; the Height of the Heavens, and the Unſpeakable Swiftneſs of the Motion of the Sun; and that all this is Order'd by a Divine Providence, it muſt be Granted withal that God is Juſt and True, and Conſequently that Truth is of all things imaginable, the moſt Powerful, ſince neither Error nor Juſtice can prevail againſt it. As for all other things that paſs for Great in the World, they are Mortal, and Short-Liv'd; but Truth Alone is Unchangeable and Everlaſting: The Benefits we receive from it are Subject to no Variations, or Viciſſitudes, of Time, and Fortune; but Righteous and Warrantable, and without any Stain of Iniquity, or Reproach.

And finally of Truth. A Preference given to Truth.

Zerubbabel had the Univerſal Acclamation of the Whole Auditory, for the Excellent Things he deliver'd; and they all agreed with him; that Truth was Incorruptible, and the Only Bleſſing under the Sun that was not liable to Alteration and Decay: So that the King, as an Inſtance of his Full Satisfaction in this Anſwer to the Queſtion, bad him take his Choice out of what he had promis'd him, and with all his Heart he ſhould have it; for, ſays he, You ſhall have a Preference in my Eſteem above all Other Men, in proportion to the Superiority of your Wiſdom and Underſtanding, above That of Your Companions: And from this time forward You ſhall have the Firſt Place of Honour next to my Own Perſon, and ſtand Adopted into my Affinity and Blood.

Darius is ſo well pleas'd with the Sentence, that he bids him Ask what he would; Prefers him, and Adopts him into the Royal Family.

Zerubbabel could not but lay hold of ſo Fair an Occaſion for the putting of the King in mind of a Former Vow he had made; which was, that if ever he came to the Crown, he would immediately fall to Work upon the Rebuilding of Jeruſalem, and the Holy Temple there, and Order a Reſtitution to be made of all the Sacred Veſſels and Utenſils that Nebuchadnezzar had taken away from thence, and carry'd to Babylon. Now, ſays he, ſince your Majeſty has done me the Honour of reputing me a Wiſe Man, and Allowing me the Liberty of this Election, my Humble Requeſt muſt be this; that you will now Diſcharge your Vow, and be as good as your Word. The King, upon This Challenge, raiſed himſelf Chearfully from his Throne; Embraced his Adviſer, and Kiſs'd him, and ſent away Mandates ſoon after to his Governours and Great Officers, to Conduct Zerubbabel and thoſe that were to go along with him, to their Journy's End, and to Aſſiſt him in the Re-Edifying of the Temple. He wrote Letters alſo to the Magiſtrates of Phœnicia, and Syria, to provide Carriages for the Tranſporting of the Cedar to Jeruſalem that was Cut Down in Libanus, and to help them all they could, in their Main Undertaking. The King gave them likewiſe in Charge, to Exempt all the Jews that ſhould now Return out of this Captivity, from the Burden of any Publique Tax, or Duty; and to leave them at liberty in their Perſons, as well as in their Eſtates, without either Reſtraint, or Tribute: Commanding alſo the Edomites, Samaritans, and the People of Cœle-Syria, to Reſtore all thoſe Lands to the Jews again, that had been formerly in their Poſſeſſion, and to Contribute Fifty Talents, over and above, toward the Erecting of the Temple, after their Own Way, and Aſſign'd them out of his Own Proper Bounty, whatever ſhould be found Neceſſary, either in Sacerdotal Habits, or Otherwiſe, for the Right Adminiſtration of Every Thing in Form. He Aſſigned them Organs alſo to accompany the Voices of the Levites, and Order'd a Certain Proportion of Land for the Entertainment of the Officers and Keepers, both of the City, and the Temple, in the way of an Annual Penſion: Confirming Every Thing, in fine, what Cyrus had formerly Reſolv'd upon about the Reſtoring of the Jews, and their Holy Veſſels.

Zerubbabel minds him of his Vow of Reſtitution, and deſires him to be as good as his word. Darius writes to his Governours to be Aſſiſtant to the Jews to all manner of Purpoſes.

When Zerubbabel had Obtained this Grace from the King, the firſt thing he did after his going out from the Palace, was, with his Eyes up to Heaven, to give God Thanks for the Honour he had receiv'd from the King, in the Reputation of his Wiſdom, beyond the reſt of his Competitors, which he Acknowledg'd to be only the Diſtinguiſhing Effect of his Divine Goodneſs; Concluding his Thankſgiving, with a Prayer for the Succeſs of his Undertaking; and ſo went his way to his Countrymen at Babylon, with the Joyful News of their Deliverance. Upon the Report of theſe Tidings, they Joyn'd immediately in an Univerſal Thankſgiving for the Promiſe of this Reſtoration to their Native Country; and after the Solemnity of that Duty was over, they fell to Feaſting, Drinking, and making Good Cheer, for a Matter of Seven Days together; in ſuch a Tranſport of Joy, and Jollity, as if the Day of their Redemption and Return had been the Firſt Day of a New Life to them. The Heads of the Tribes made a choice of thoſe that were to go upon this Expedition, providing Horſes, and other Beaſts of Burden, and Carriages, for their Wives and Children; and taking thoſe Troups along with them, which Darius had appointed for a Convoy. In this Manner, and Company, they paſs'd their time Merrily upon the way, with Pipes and Cymbals Playing ing before them, and the Whole Multitude Dancing and Rejoycing, after the Muſique. There was a Select Number call'd out from all and every of the Tribes; but the Naming of them in Particular, would be Tireſome to the Reader, and Interrupt the Order of my Diſcourſe: So that I ſhall only run them over in Generals. There were of the Tribe of Judah and Benjamin, from Twelve Years Old and Upward, Four Millions Six Hundred Twenty and Eight Thouſand Perſons. After theſe, came Four Thouſand and Seventy Levites: and a Promiſcuous Multitude of Women and Children, to the Number of Forty Thouſand Seven Hundred and Forty Two. Of the Stock of the Levites, there were a Hundred Twenty Eight Singers: a Hundred and Ten Porters: and of Others that Serv'd and Aſſiſted in the Sanctuary, Three Hundred Twenty Two. There were alſo Six Hundred Fifty Two that call'd themſelves Iſraelites; but could not prove their Extraction. There were Others alſo, that had taken Wives, whoſe Genealogy could not be made out, either from the Levitical, or Sacerdotal Records; and theſe were Accounted Unqualified, for the Holy Function, to the Number of Five Hundred Twenty Five. The Train of Servants that attended them, was reckon'd at Seven Thouſand Three Hundred Thirty Seven. Singing-Men and Women, Two Hundred Forty Five; Camels, Four Hundred; and other Beaſts of Carriage, Five Hundred Twenty Five. The Leader of this Multitude was Zerubbabel, the Son of Salathiel, of the Tribe of Judah, and the Race of David; and with him was Jeſus the Son of Joſedec; and Mardochæus, and Serebæus, which Two were Choſen to the Command, by the Suffrage of the Tribes, and Contributed, at their Own Charge, a Hundred Pound of Gold, and Five Thouſand Pound of Silver, toward the Expence of this Expedition. This was the Order and the Manner of the March of the Prieſts and Levites, and that part of the People that went along with them in their Return from Babylon to Jeruſalem, the Reſt following afterward by little and little, till in the End they all went back to their Own Habitations.

Zerubbabel their Leader, and Jeſus their High-Prieſt.

In the Seventh Month after their Departure from Babylon, Jeſus the High-Prieſt, and Zerubbabel their Prince, ſent Meſſengers Expreſs all over the Land to Summon the People to a General Meeting at Jeruſalem, who Gather'd together, with Great Chearfulneſs according to the Order. Upon this Meeting, there was Erected an Altar to Sacrifice upon, according to the Appointment of God by his Servant Moſes, and it was Raiſed upon the Same Place where it ſtood before. This Proceeding gave a Mighty Offence to the Neighbouring Nations, who had Effectually an Averſion, both to the People, and to whatever they did. This happened juſt upon the Feaſt of Tabernacles, according to the Moſaical Inſtitution; and after that, came the Daily Oblations, and the Sacrifice of the Sabbaths, and of the New-Moons, and of all Holy Feaſts; and all thoſe that had made any Vow came likewiſe to Perform it, from the Firſt Day of the Seventh Month.

Mony, Workmen, and Materials for the Temple provided.

They Enter'd then upon the Building of the Temple, and Expended Vaſt Sums of Mony upon the Workmen, and Builders of all ſorts: And upon Meat and Drink for thoſe that Aſſiſted in the Carriage of Materials. The Sydonians were Frank and Liberal toward This Work, bringing Down Cedar-Planks in Abundance from Libanus; and after That, Framing thoſe Timbers into Boats, which they brought into the Port of Joppa, as they had been Order'd; firſt by Cyrus, and after Him by Darius.

It was now the Second Month of the Second Year after the Return of the Jews, when the Foundations of the Temple being already laid, they began on the Firſt Day of December with the Superſtructure; Committing the Care of the Building to the Whole Family of the Levites, of Twenty Years of Age and Upward, and likewiſe to Jeſus, with his Sons and Brothers; and to Zolimiel, the Brother of Juda, and the Son of Aminadab, and to his Sons; who were all ſo Diligent and Induſtrious in the Diſcharge of their Commiſſions, that the Fabrique went forward beyond Expectation. When they were Advanced thus far, the Prieſts came and Officiated in their Habit, with Muſical Inſtruments: And the Levites, and the Sons of Aſaph, Sung ſome of the Holy Hymns of David to the Honour of God, according to the Firſt Inſtitution. But the Prieſts and Levites, and the Elders of their Families, who had ſeen the Glory and Magnificence of the Former Houſe, and Computing how little this was in compariſon of the other, brake-out into Tears and Lamentations at the Thought of it. The Common People however that had never ſeen the Former, and conſequently could not be Troubled at the Diſproportion; they contented themſelves well enough with the Preſent State of things, though the Paſſion of the Prieſts and Elders was ſo Great at the ſame time, that their very Cries and Groans were almoſt as Loud as the Muſique.

Truſtees appointed for the Care of the Work.

The Building advanced beyond Expectation.

The Report of this Noiſe of Trumpets, with a Confuſed Clamour and Mixture of Joy and Sorrow being brought to the Samaritans, they came running together in Troups

Troups to learn the Meaning of it; and finding that it was Occaſion'd by the Return of the Jews from their Captivity at Babylon; and that they were now at Work upon the Re-Erecting of their Temple, they went immediately to Zerubbabel, and Jeſus, with the Chief of the Tribes, and deſir'd that they themſelves might likewiſe be admitted into the Undertaking, upon Terms in Common with the reſt; for, ſay they, we Worſhip the Same God; Value our ſelves upon the Glory of the ſame Profeſſion, and upon the Love and Practice of the ſame Religion, from the very Days of Salmanaſar, the King of Aſſyria, who Tranſplanted us out of Chuthia, and Media, into This Land. The Anſwer to the Requeſt was with One Voice, that they could not take them into a Partner-Ship of the Building; becauſe formerly Cyrus, and after him Darius, had Aſſign'd the Building of it to their Particular Care: but that they ſhould have Liberty, if they thought fit to Worſhip There without Exception to any Man, and that it ſhould be Open to All People Indifferently, that had a Mind to ſerve God in't.

The Samaritans propoſe to Joyn in the Undertaking; but Cannot be admitted.

The Chuthites, (for ſo we call the Samaritans) took this Refuſal ſo Heinouſly, that they Stirr'd up the Syrians to apply themſelves to the Great Men as they did at firſt, under Cyrus, and afterward under Cambyſes, that a Stop might be put to the Progreſs of this Building, by Slackening the Diligence of thoſe that were Entruſted with the Diſpatch of the Work.

The Chuthites Obſtruct the Work all they can. Ezra. 5.

There went up to Jeruſalem, at this time, Siſinnes, the Governour of Syria and Phœnicia, and Sarabazanes, with ſome Others, and Asked ſome of the Principal Men among them, by what Authority this Temple was to be Built? for it lookt liker a Caſtle then a Temple; and to what End the Walls of the City were made ſo Thick and Strong; and the Gates ſo Fortify'd; Zerubbabel and Jeſus made Anſwer, that they were the Servants of the Great God to whoſe Honour this Temple was Built; and to his Service Dedicated by the Greateſt, the Happieſt, and the Wiſeſt Prince that ever ſat upon That Throne; and that it had ſtood Firm for Many Ages: till in the End, for the Wickedneſs of their Forefathers, the City by God's Permiſſion was Taken, and Deſtroy'd by Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon and Chaldæa; the Temple Pillag'd, and laid in Aſhes, and the People carry'd away Captives into Babylon: But that when Cyrus came to the Government of Perſia and Babylon, he Order'd by his Royal Proclamation the Rebuilding of the Temple, and the Reſtoring of all the Donatives, and Veſſels, that had been Taken away by Nebuchadnezzar; which were deliver'd to Zerubbabel, and his Treaſurer Mithridates, to be Tranſported to Jeruſalem, and laid up again in the Temple there: That by the Command of the ſame King, Abaſſar was ſent to that City to Endeavour the Finiſhing of the Work out of hand: That upon Receipt of the King's Letters, he came in all Haſte, and immediately laid the Foundation: And that from that time forward their Enemies had been ſtill at Work to caſt ſome Rubb or Other in the way, to Obſtruct, or to Delay the Deſign. Now if they pleaſed they might Write to Darius; to the End that, upon Inſpecting Papers, and Records, they might find the Whole Story to be True as they had told it. Siſinnes and his Companions did not think it Reaſonable to Interrupt the Proceeding without the Privity of Darius himſelf; and therefore they agreed among themſelves to write to him immediately about this Matter. The Jews were not a little Sollicitous and Apprehenſive, for fear the King upon this Application, ſhould Countermand the Orders he had given; till Aggeus, and Zacharias, Two Prophets among them at that time, bad them be of Good Chear, and fear Nothing From the Perſians; for they were certainly Inform'd of God's Holy Will and Pleaſure touching that Affair. The People did ſo abſolutely depend upon This Encouragement, that they wrought Harder and Harder, without the Intermiſſion ſo much as of one Single Day.

When the Samaritans had written a Complaining Accuſation againſt the Jews to Darius; Objecting againſt them the Fortifying of the City, and the Erecting of a Strong Place that look'd liker a Citadel then a Temple: Setting forth that This was not at all for the King's Service; and Shewing alſo the Epiſtle of Cambyſes, by which he had forbidden, and hinder'd it before, as a Practice that was neither Profitable, nor Safe for the Publique: When they had Repreſented all This, I ſay, and that the King had received and Conſider'd of Theſe Letters, he Order'd the Royal Memorials to be Conſulted upon this Subject; and upon the Search, there was found at Ecbatana, a Caſtle in Media, a Certain Book, wherein was Written to This Effect.

The Samaritans Calumniate the Jews to Darius.

It was Ordained by King Cyrus, in the Firſt Year of his Reign, that the Temple of God ſhould be Rebuilt at Jeruſalem Sixty Cubits in Height, and as many in Breadth, and the Altar in it: That there ſhould be in the Walls Three Rows of Poliſh'd Marble, and one of Wood of the Growth of the Country; and the Charge of it to be Defray'd out of the King's Treaſury: That the Holy Veſſels, which Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the Temple, ſhould be carry'd back to Jeruſalem, and Reſtor'd: That the Superintendency of

This Work ſhould be Committed to Abaſſar (the Governour of Syria and Phœnicia) and to his Companions; with Orders, not to appear at Jeruſalem themſelves, but to Quit the Place, and leave the Building of the Temple to the Jews, the Servants of God, and to the Chief of their Tribes; but yet to Supply them however out of the Taxes upon the Province, and to furniſh them for their Sacrifices, with Bulls, Rams, Lambs, Kids, Meal, Wine, Oyl, and whatever elſe the Prieſts ſhould deſire; who were to pray to God for the Welfare and Happineſs of the King, and of his People. And whoever ſhall preſume to Act contrary to this Mandate, to be forthwith Taken and Hang'd-up, and his Goods Confiſcate; with the Addition of a Curſe, over and above, that whoever ſhould dare to Oppoſe, or Forbid the Progreſs of this Work, God would Strike him with a Vengeance, as a Judgment upon him for his Iniquity.

When Darius, upon a Search into the Tranſactions of Cyrus, had Inform'd himſelf upon the Matter of Fact in Queſtion, he wrote back to Siſines and his Fellow-Colleagues, to this Effect.

King Darius to Siſinnes, the Maſter of his Horſe; and to Sarabazanes, and the Other Magiſtrates with him, Greeting.

Darius Reinforces the Care of the Work.

I ſend you a Copy of Cyrus's Letter, Tranſcribed out of his Records; and it is my Will and Pleaſure, that all things may be done according to the Direction of that Appointment. Fare you well. This Letter gave them to Underſtand how the King ſtood Inclin'd; ſo that Siſinnes, and the reſt agreed among themſelves to Comply in all Points with the King's Order, and Command; and Undertaking the Care of the Fabrique, they Aſſiſted the Jews, and their Magiſtrates and Leading Men, and carry'd-on the Work ſo Unanimouſly, that the Building was Erected according to the Command of Cyrus, and Darius, and Finiſhed within the Compaſs of Seven Years; the Prophets, Aggeus, and Zacharias, in the mean time Prophecying. In the Ninth Year of Darius, and the Three and Twentieth Day of the Eleventh Month, which we call Adar; and the Macedonians, Dyſtrus, the Prieſts and Levites, with the People of Iſrael, Offer'd in Sacrifice, a Hundred Bulls, Two Hundred Rams, Four Hundred Lambs, and Twelve Goats, as Sin-Offerings for the Twelve Tribes, in Acknowledgment of the Bleſſing of their Deliverance from Captivity into the Condition of their Former State, and to his Holy Worſhip again in a New Temple. The Prieſts and Levites had their Porters at every Gate, according to the Law: The Jews having built Galleries, round about the Temple.

The Temple is Finiſh'd in Seven Years.

The Dedication of the Temple.

The Feaſt of Unleavened Bread was now drawing-on; and in the FirſtMonth, which the Macedonians call Xanthicus; and we, Niſan, the People Flock'd up from All Places to the City, where they Celebrated that Feſtival, together with their Wives and Children, after the Practice of their Forefathers, with all Purity, and Sobriety Anſwerable to the Occaſion. Upon the Fourteenth Day of the Firſt Month, they held the Paſſover, and kept together Rejoycing for Seven Days after; Offering up Sacrifices and Thankſgiving to God for Reſtoring them to the Poſſeſſion and Enjoyment of their Native Country, and their Ancient Laws and Religion, and for Diſpoſing the Heart and Inclination of the King of Perſia ſo favourably toward them. They Spared for no Coſt in the Celebration of this Feſtival, and ſo Replanted themſelves at Jeruſalem, where they Erected an Ariſtocracy; for the Sovereign Power was Lodg'd in the High-Prieſt; till the Aſmonæan Family, upon a Turn of Affairs, enter'd upon the Government, and turn'd it into a Monarchy. Now before the Captivity, and for the Space of Five Hundred Thirty Two Years Six Months and Ten Days, from the time of Saul and David, they were Govern'd by Kings; and ſo they were likewiſe before, though under the Name of Judges, and That Form of Government continu'd upwards of Five Hundred Years, after the Adminiſtration of Moſes and Joſhua. This was the State of the Jews in the Reſtauration under Cyrus and Darius.

The Paſſover is kept.

An Ariſtocracy Erected.

The Samaritans Spiteful and Envious to the Jews.

But the Samaritans, that were an Envious Spiteful Sort of People, put them to a Great deal of Vexatious Trouble, for they were Powerful and Wealthy; and Claiming Kindred with the Perſians, they Valu'd themſelves upon the Credit of their Original. They Grumbled at the Taxes that were laid upon them by way of Contribution to the Sacrifices; made an Intereſt to the Superintendent of the Works; and in ſhort, either by themſelves, or by Others, they Improv'd all Opportunities of doing us Miſchief. This Diſorder, in fine, went ſo far, that the Senate and the People of Jeruſalem drew-up a Complaint againſt the Samaritans, and ſent Zerubbabel with Four more of his Colleagues upon the Embaſſy with it to Darius. When the King came to Conſider the Crimes that were Charg'd upon the Samaritans, he gave them a Letter back with them them for the Officers and Lieutenants of that Province, and the Senate of Samaria, in words to this Purpoſe.

King Darius to Tangar, and Sambabu, the Maſters of our Horſe at Samaria; and to Sadrack Bobelon, and the reſt of their Fellow-Subjects there, ſendeth, Greeting.

Whereas I am given to Underſtand by Zerubbabel, Ananias and Mardochæus, on the part of the Jews, that you ſtand Accuſed of Interrupting and Diſcouraging the Rebuilding of the Temple, and of Refuſing to bear your Part in the Charge of the Sacrifices, which by my Order and Command, you Ought to have done; This is to Will and Require you upon the Sight of this Letter, forthwith to Supply them out of my Treaſury in Samaria, with whatſoever they ſhall want for the Uſe of their Sacrifices and Worſhip; to the End that they might Offer up Daily Prayers and Oblations both for my Self, and for my People.

Xerxes Succeeds Darius, and grants to Eſdras Whatever he deſires in Favour of the Jews. The Character, and Death of Eſdras. Nehemiah gets Permiſſion of Xerxes to Rebuild the Walls of Jeruſalem.

After the Death of Darius, his Son [a] Xerxes Succeeded to the Government; the Heir of his Father's Piety, as well as of his Kingdom; for he made good All that his Predeceſſor had done in favour of the Jews, and their Religion, having a great Tenderneſs for Both. Joachim the Son of Jehu was at This time High-Prieſt; but the Name of the High-Prieſt of the Jews, that liv'd at Babylon, was Eſdras; a Man of a moſt Exemplary Piety and Juſtice; and no Man had a Fairer Reputation among the People. He was ſo well vers'd and skill'd in the Moſaique Law, that the King had a Particular Eſteem for him on That Account. Upon a Reſolution taken to go to Jeruſalem, and to carry ſeveral of the Babylonian Jews along with him, he deſir'd ſuch a Letter from the King as might Recommend him to the Governours and Lieutenants of Syria, which he Obtained; and the Purport of it was This.

Xerxes succeeds his Father Darius. 1 Eſdr. 7.

Eſdras deſigns for Jeruſalem, with as many of the Babylonian Jews as he can get along with him.

Xerxes, the King of Kings, to Eſdras the Prieſt, and Reader of the Holy Law of God, Greeting. Whereas it is Decreed by Me, and my Seven Counſellors, that what Iſraelites ſoever within my Dominions, with their Prieſts and Levites, ſhall think fit to bear you company to Jeruſalem; I have, out of my Royal Clemency, Granted them Free Leave to go to Judæa, to Worſhip according to the Laws of their Country: and likewiſe to take along with them all the Gold and Silver, be it never ſo much, that your People all over Babylon ſhall willingly contribute toward that Service, for the buying of Sacrifices to Offer upon the Altar to your God; and for making ſuch Veſſels of Gold and Silver, as You and Your Brethren ſhall Judge meet. It is alſo my Will, that what is thus given you, be Dedicated to your God. And if you ſhall have Occaſion for any thing elſe, uſe your Own Diſcretion, and ſupply your ſelf out of the Publique Treaſure: To which End, I have already written to the Officers that have the Menage of it in Syria and Phœnicia; expreſly commanding them to furniſh Whatſoever Eſdras the Prieſt, and the Reader of the Law of God, ſhall Deſire, without any Delay: And to the end that God may proſper both Me and Mine, I will have a Hundred Meaſures of Wheat Dedicated to God according to the Proviſion of the Law. And for the Magiſtrates, I do ſtrictly Charge and Require of them, that they Exact nothing from the Prieſts, Levites, Holy Singers, Porters, or other Officers of the Temple; and that they lay no Burdens upon them. And for your ſelf, Eſdras, I do hereby give you Full Authority, according to the Wiſdom you have received from Above, to Conſtitute Judges that may ſee Juſtice done to all People thorough Syria, and Phœnicia, that underſtand the Law, and are Conſcientious in their Duty; and at the ſame time do you Inſtruct the Ignorant, to the End that All Tranſgreſſors againſt the Law of God, and of the King, may be Puniſh'd according to their Demerit; ſome with Pecuniary Fines; others with Death, according to the Quality of the Offence, where it ſhall be found either Contumacy or Weakneſs. Farewel.

Xerxes gives him Letters of Licence, Recommendation, Credit, and Authority.

Upon the Receipt of This Letter, Eſdras Worſhipped God, and gave Thanks; aſcribing to his Bleſſed Providence all the Benefits and Grace they had received from the King; who ſerv'd but as the Inſtrument of That Divine and Original Goodneſs. The Jews of that Country were upon this Occaſion ſummon'd to a General Meeting at Babylon, where the Letter was Read, and the Copy of it Tranſcrib'd and ſent away to be Communicated to all the Jews in Media; but Eſdras kept the Original to himſelf. This Account of the King's wonderful Piety towards God, and of the Reſpect and Kindneſs he had for Eſdras, was a Surprize of wonderful Satisfaction to the People; for great Numbers of them pack'd-up their Goods and Effects, and haſten'd away to Babylon with a Purpoſe to Return to Jeruſalem: But there were then Another ſort of Iſraelites, that being wonted to the Place, and ſettled in their Habitations, choſe rather to continue where they were. And This is the Reaſon that there are only Two Tribes to be found in Aſia and Europe, under the Roman Emperour: As for the Other Ten Tribes, they are all Planted beyond the Euphrates; and ſo prodigiouſly increas'd in Number, that they are hardly to be Computed. The Publication of this Recommendatory Teſtimonial, brought over abundance of People to Eſdras; and not only Prieſts and Levites, but Temple-Porters, Singers, and other Officers and Servants appertaining thereunto. As for thoſe that had a Mind to go back again out of Captivity into their Own Country, he apointed them a Rendezvous at the Euphrates; where, after a Three-days Faſt, and the Solemnity of Vows and Prayers for a Safe and a Proſperous Voyage, (Eſdras Excuſing himſelf from the Guard of Horſe that was Offer'd him, as being already under the Protection of the Almighty) they Enter'd upon their Journy on the Twelfth Day of the Firſt Month, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of Xerxes, and got to Jeruſalem in the Fifth Month of the ſame Year, where Eſdras immediately deliver'd out the Mony he brought, to the Prieſts that had the Cuſtody of the Holy Treaſure; Six Hundred and Fifty Talents of Silver; a Hundred Talents of Silver-Veſſels; Twenty Talents of Veſſels of Gold, and Twelve Talents of Fine Braſs, thas was even more Precious then Gold it ſelf. Theſe were the Bounties of the King and his Friends, and of the Iſraelites that Continu'd in Babylon. When Eſdras had Acquitted himſelf of this Truſt, he Offered unto God Burnt-Offerings, according to the Direction of the Law: Twelve Bulls for the whole People of Iſrael, Seventy Two Sheep and Lambs, and Twelve Goats for a Sin-Offering. He Communicated alſo the King's Letter to the Stewards, and Governours of Phœnicia and Cœle-Syria, who had the Iſraelites in Great Honour, and Readily Supply'd them with whatever they wanted, when they ſaw they could do no Other. This was all done by the Advice of Eſdras: And I do verily Perſuade my ſelf, that God's Bleſſing went along with it, for the very Piety and Virtue of the Man.

Upon the Credit of this Commiſſion, Eſdras draws a mighty Train of People after him.

By the time they had been a little Compos'd, and Settled in their Affairs, it came to the Ears of Eſdras, that ſome of the Prieſts and Levites had departed from the Rule of the Law, and their Duty, in Marrying into Forreign Families, and ſo Confounding the Sacerdotal Race. Hereupon, there was Application made to him, that he would Stand by, and Support the Laws, for fear God in his Wrath for the Iniquity of ſome Few ſhould avenge himſelf upon the Whole Body of the People. Eſdras, upon this Complaint, rent his Cloaths in a Paſſion of Sorrow, Tearing the Hair of his Head, and of his Beard, and Caſting himſelf upon the Ground in a Deſpair of doing any good in This Matter: For there were ſo many Great Men concern'd in this Abomination, that he thought it would be to no Purpoſe to lay any Injunction upon them to part with their Wives and Children; So that he Continu'd ſtill Deſponding, with his his Face upon the Earth. All People that had any Senſe of Goodneſs or Humanity, gather'd together about him to Condole with him; and in Pure Pity and Compaſſion, took part with him in his Afflictions. Eſdras in the Mean Time, holding-up his Hands; Good God! ſays he, I am aſhamed to Lift up my Eyes to Heaven on the Behalf of theſe People, when I conſider that, after all thy Dreadful Judgments upon their Anceſtors for their Diſobedience, they will yet go on in the Steps of their Forefathers; but Lord! Thy Mercy is Infinite: wherefore have Pity, I beſeech thee, upon This Miſerable Remnant of thy Diſtreſſed Servants; and as thou haſt been Graciouſly pleas'd to bring them Home again, Perfect the Work of thy Redemption, in the Pardon of their Preſent Tranſgreſſion. It is Confeſs'd, that they deſerve to die for their Iniquity; but their Truſt is in thy Goodneſs.

and Interceſſion for the Offenders.

While the Holy Man was in the Agony of his Pious Affliction, with a Multitude of Men, Women, and Children gather'd about him, there came to him One [a] Jechonias, a Man of Quality in Jeruſalem, with a Publique Confeſſion and Declaration of the Sin they were All Guilty of, that Contrary to the Law had Marry'd themſelves to Strange Women: Adviſing him to Impoſe an Oath upon all that had ſo done, to turn away all the Wives, and Children they had by them; and Whoever ſhould Refuſe to Submit to that Law, to be Severely Puniſhed for it. Eſdras lik'd the Counſel, and took an Oath of the Chief of the Prieſts and Levites, and of all Iſrael, to do as was Propounded. So ſoon as this was over, he went from the Temple to the Chamber of Joanan, the Son of Eliaſib, where he ſpent that whole Day, without Eating any thing, for the Trouble that was upon him. The Next Thing he did was to Command by Proclamation All Thoſe People that were now return'd out of Captivity, to meet at Jeruſalem in Two or Three Days; and in caſe of any Failure, either by Neglect, or Contempt, the Penalty to be Excommunication, and Confiſcation of Goods to the Holy Treasury. Within Three Days the Two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin gather'd together, on the Twentieth Day of the Ninth Month, which the Hebrews call Thebeth; and the Macedonians, Apellæus; and when they had Plac'd themselves in the Upper Part of the Temple, the Elders being there Present, Esdras stood up and told them, that Whereas they were All Guilty of a Grievous Sin, that in Contempt of their Country's Laws had Enter'd into Marriage with Strangers, they had no way to Recover God's Favour, and to Secure themselves, but by utterly casting-off the Women they had so Taken: Whereupon they all cry'd out with One Voice, that they were ready to do it; but the Number being very Great, the Season Extreamly Cold, and the Bus'ness a Matter of Importance, they look'd upon it as a Thing that requir'd Time, and Consideration, to go thorough with it: So that, upon this Reflexion, it was Proposed that a Commission of Enquiry might be Issu'd out to a Select Number of Eminent Men and Elders, that were Innocent Themselves of the Fact in Question. This Motion was Receiv'd and Approv'd, without any Demur or Contradiction; and upon the First Day of the Tenth Month, they Enter'd upon the Inquisition, which held them work till the First Day of the Month following; and upon the Scrutiny, they found Great Numbers of the Relations of Jesus the High-Priest, as well as of Other Priests and Levites, and the rest of the Israelites, that being Involv'd in the same Common Transgression, Joyned immediately in the Disowning of their Wives and Children: So much did they Prefer the Respect they had for the Observance of their Laws, before any other Tenderness of Love and Inclination, how Powerful soever. After the Solemnity of this Disclaimor, they offer'd-up Rams according to Custom, for Peace-Offerings: Which is enough said, without Naming the Persons. Esdras, by this means, set them Right again in the Restraint of their Marriages; and settled such a Reformation in that Particular, as was upon that Foundation to stand Firm for Ever after.

An Abdication agreed upon.

In the Seventh, was the Feast of Tabernacles; and well nigh the Whole Multitude of the Israelites were now gotten together upon That Occasion, into that Part of the Temple, that looks towards the East; where Esdras, at their Request, read the Law of God unto them, as he stood in the Middle of the Crond: and this Lecture continu'd from Morning to Mid-Day, to the very Great Edification of all the Hearers; for they were thereby not only given to Understand the Rules and Measures of Truth and Righteousness, Present, and to Come; but their Thoughts were also carry'd back to Reflexions upon Things Past, in the History of the Calamities that their Forefathers had endured, only for the Violation of those Laws, in the Observance whereof they might have been Safe and Happy. This Consideration drew Tears from their Eyes; and Esdras taking Notice how this Compassionate Softness wrought upon them, bad them go Home, and set their Hearts at rest; for it was a kind of Prophaning of the Holy Solemnity, to Weep upon a Festival: Wherefore he advised them to be rather as Free and Merry as they could, and to Eat, Drink, and Rejoyce, in Honour of the Day; Exhorting them not to make their Repentance a Mortification to them, any further then to Secure them for the Future from a Relapse into the same Mistakes. The People were willing enough to follow his Counsel, and so Celebrated the Feast as they ought to do; and after Eight Days spent in Good Chear, and in good Company, they return'd Every Man to his Own Habitation; but not without Thankful Acknowledgments to Esdras for the Reformation he had wrought in the Government. By this Meritorious Service of his, he gain'd Infinitely upon the Hearts and Affections of the People; so that he Liv'd with Honour, and Dy'd at Jerusalem, full of Years; where he had also a most Magnificent Burial. Joachim the High Priest, dy'd also about the same time, and Eliasim his Son succeeded him.

The Death of Jehoiakim the High-Priest, and Eliasim his Son succeeds him. 2 Esdr. 1.

There was among the Jewish Captives, a Certain Person whose Name was Nehemiah, the Butler, or the Cup-bearer to Xerxes. He was Walking one day before Susa, the Capital of Persia, and happened to hear some Travellers that had come a long Journy together into the City, talking Hebrew one to another. Upon This Occasion, he ask'd them from what Quarter they came. They told him from Judæa. So he asked them further from one thing to another, how it far'd with the People there, and what News from Jerusalem; Why truly, they made Answer, that Matters went very Ill with them; Their Walls all pull'd down, and their Country laid open to the Outrages and Incursions of their Spiteful Neighbours; Themselves carry'd away into Captivity, and the Highways strew'd every where up and down with Dead Bodies. Nehemiah could not forbear Weeping at this Deplorable Calamity of his Countrymen and Kindred, and in this Passion, with his Eyes Erected toward Heaven, Lord, says he, how long! how long Lord wilt thou suffer thy People to be Trampled upon, and Exposed for a Prey to Mankind! While Nehemiah was at the Gate, and in the Middle of his Lamentations, one brought him word, that the King was ready to go to Supper; so he presently hasten'd away, all all in Confuſion and Diſorder, to his Waiting. The King, after Supper, being ſomewhat more Chearful then before, and taking Notice of ſome ſort of Heavineſs, in the Countenance of Nehemiah, asked him what he Ail'd. Alas! Sir, ſays Nehemiah, after a ſhort Ejaculatory Prayer, that God would put the Words into his Mouth he was to ſay, How is it poſſible for me to be Other then Sad and Heavy at Heart, when the Place of my Nativity is laid Waſt and Deſtroy'd; Jeruſalem made a Heap of Rubbiſh; The Gates Burnt; The Sepulchres and Monuments of my Anceſtors broken up, and the Aſhes of the Dead Sacrilegiouſly Prophan'd! Now after all this, Sir, I have but one Boon to Beg of you, which is, that I may have your Royal Leave to take a Journy thither to help forward the Rebuilding of the Walls, and Erecting of what remains toward the Finiſhing of the Temple. The King Granted his Petition, and promis'd him Letters Recommendatory to the Governours where he was to paſs, with Orders to Treat him with all Manner of Reſpect; and to Supply him with whatever he wanted toward the Work he was about: Wherefore ſays the King, ſet your Thoughts at reſt, and go on Chearfully in my Service. Upon This Aſſurance, Nehemiah Clear'd-up, and came to himſelf again; Bleſſed God and the King upon finding ſo Gracious a Diſpoſition in his Favour. On the Day following the King ſent for Nehemiah, and Gave him Letters of Credit to Sadæus, the Governour of Syria, Phœnicia, and Samaria; with Orders and Inſtructions to Receive and Aſſiſt him, as he had promis'd it. He went firſt to Babylon; and from thence, with as many of his Friends and Companions as Voluntarily Offer'd themſelves to bear him Company, he went away to Jeruſalem, where he arrived in the Twenty Fifth Year of the Reign of Xerxes; and having firſt given his Friends the Sight of his Credentials, he deliver'd them to Sadæus, and his Colleagues, according to the Addreſs. He preſently after this, Summon'd a General Meeting of the People up to Jeruſalem, and Harangu'd them in the Temple with a Speech to this Effect.

Nehemiah Animates the People to go on Couragiouſly in the Work.

You cannot, ſays he, but See and Underſtand, You Men of Judæa, that we our ſelves are at this Day under the Power and Providence of the Same Almighty and Merciful God that did ſo many Great Things for our Forefathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, out of a Gracious Regard to their Piety and Juſtice: and it is by the Favour of that God that I have now Obtained leave from the King to Enter upon the Rebuilding of your Walls, and the putting of an End to the Work of the Temple, that is yet Unfiniſh'd. But taking this for granted by the Way, that you live among a Sort of Malicious Spiteful Neighbours, that will do all that is to be done in Nature, for the Croſſing of your Deſign, when they come once to See you Heartily Intent upon the Undertaking; I ſhall therefore Recommend it to you in the Firſt Place, Reſolutely, and Fearleſly, to caſt your ſelves upon God, who will moſt certainly Defeat all the Practices of your Enemies; and Secondly, that you Ply your Buſ'neſs Day and Night, without any Intermiſſion, either of Care, or of Labour; this being the Proper Seaſon for it. Upon this Advice, and Exhortation, Nehemiah immediately Order'd the Magiſtrates to Survey the Ground, and take Meaſure of the Walls; and according to that Computation, to make an Equal Diſtribution of the Work among the People, at ſo much a Town, or a Village, as it falls out in Proportion; promiſing at the Same Time the Aſſiſtance of himſelf, and of all that belonged to him, to Joyn in the Service: and with theſe Words he Diſcharged the Meeting. The Authority of Nehemiah made ſuch an Impreſſion upon the Jews, that they immediately apply'd themſelves to their Buſ'neſs. This was the Firſt time that the People were ever call'd Jews, or their Country Judæa; and it was ſo called, from the Tribe of Judah, that were formerly Poſſeſs'd of that Quarter.

Eſther 1. The Neighbouring Nations do all they can by Force and Treachery to Diſappoint the Enterpriſe.

The Rumour of this Enterpriſe was no ſooner brought to the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Samaritans, and the Cœle-Syrians, but they were all Raging Mad at it, and left nothing Unattempted, either by Force or by Treachery, to Diſappoint it. They lay in wait for the Jews up and down in Ambuſhes, and deſtroy'd a great many of them by Surpriſe. They kept Bravo's in Pay, to attempt upon the Perſon of Nehemiah himſelf; Plying the People alſo with ſo many Falſe Alarums, and Sham-Stories of Menace and Invaſion, that the Multitude were within a little of Quitting the Undertaking upon the very Fright: but Nehemiah Stood as Firm as a Rock all this While; and under the Security of a Slender Guard, wrought on, without any Senſe of Wearineſs, or Apprehenſion of Danger: And it was not for the ſake of his Own Safety neither, or for the fear of Death, that he made this Proviſion; but he was very well aſſur'd, that if he himſelf ſhould be Cut-off, his Men would never go thorough with the Building: So he gave Orders for the Future, that all the Carpenters, Maſons, and other Labourers, ſhould Work with their Swords by their Sides, and their Bucklers within diſtance of having them ready upon Occaſion. He appointed Trumpeters alſo to be Poſted within Five Hundred Paces one of another, and upon any Diſcovery of an Enemy to give the Alarum, that the People might have time enough to ſtand to their Arms, without any Danger of a Surprize. He went every Night the Round of the City; and his Body was ſo Inur'd to hard Work, hard Fare, and Watching, that it was Proof againſt all thoſe Difficulties; for he never Eat or Slept more then juſt to Support Nature. This was his Courſe of Life for Two Years, and Three Months: for juſt ſo long were the Walls a Finiſhing: and this was in the Eight and Twentieth Year, and the Ninth Month of the Reign of Xerxes. Upon the Perfecting of the Fortifications, Nehemiah and the People offer'd-up their Sacrifice, and continu'd together for Eight Days in Feaſting and Rejoycing, which was very unwelcome News to the Syrians, when they came to underſtand it. Nehemiah reflecting upon it, that the City at that time was Under-peopled, he perſuaded all the Prieſts and Levites thereabouts to take-up their Habitations in the Town, and he would be at the Charge of providing them Houſes. He order'd likewiſe the People in the Country that follow'd Husbandry, to carry their Tenths into the City for the Maintenance of the Prieſts and Levites; and that they might not be Diverted by any Worldly Cares from attending the Duty of their Office. This was readily agreed to on all Hands; and by this means, it came by degrees to be better Peopled. After this, and a great many other Glorious Actions, worthy of Eternal Honour, Nehemiah, now in Years, departed This Life: a Man naturally Addicted to Virtue and Juſtice; a Perſon of Eminent Bounty and Charity to his Country-men, as may appear by This Everlaſting Monument of his Generoſity and Goodneſs, in the Walls of Jeruſalem: And this is the ſhort Hiſtory of what was done under the Reign of Xerxes.

Artaxerxes Succeeds Xerxes. He puts away his Wife Vaſhti, and Marries Eſther, the Neece of Mordecai. Haman preſſes the Rooting-out of the Jews, and the putting of Mordecai to death; but He is hanged Himſelf upon the very Gibbet he provided for Mordecai, and Mordecai Promoted.

AFter the Death of Xerxes, the Government deſcended to his Son Cyrus, whom the Greeks call Artaxerxes; in whoſe Reign over the Perſians, the Whole Nation of the Jews, with their Wives and Children were in great Danger to be utterly Deſtroy'd, as ſhall be ſhew'd in due Time and Place. But ſomewhat ſhould be previouſly ſaid of the King himſelf; and how it came to paſs that he marry'd a Wife of the Royal Bloud of the Jews, and as the Hiſtory delivers it, the Protectreſs of our Nation. When Artaxerxes had taken the Crown upon him, and ſettled the Governours of a Hundred and Twenty Seven Provinces betwixt India and Æthiopia, he made a moſt magnificent and ſumptuous Feaſt at Suſa in the Third Year of his Reign; where he Treated his Friends and Officers, as became the Dignity of ſo Great a Prince; and the Solemnity laſted a Hundred and Fourſcore Days. There were ſeveral other Nations alſo, and their Embaſſadors, that aſſiſted at the Ceremony of the Entertainment Seven Whole Days Succeſſively; and it was Order'd after This Manner. There was a Tent Erected upon Golden and Silver Pillars, cover'd with fine Linnen and Purple; and of a Capacity to Receive ſome Thouſands of People. The Wine was ſerv'd up in Cups of Gold and Precious Stones, that were made both for Curioſity and Delight. There was Order given to the Waiters, after the Perſian Manner, that no Man ſhould be forced to drink any more then he had a mind to; and Proclamation made all over his Dominions, that they ſhould ſet ſome Certain Number of days apart for the Celebration of a Feſtival for the Proſperity and Safety of the Kingdom. Queen Vaſhti had her Apartment alſo in the Palace for the Entertainment of the Women. She was ſo Wonderfully Handſom, that the King had a mind to Oblige his Gueſts with the Sight of her, and ſo ſent for her to come to him; but the Laws of Perſia, it ſeems will not allow Wives to be ſeen by any beſide their Domeſtiques: So that out of a Reverence to that Prohibition, ſhe refuſed to go to the King; and not only Once, but upon Several Orders brought her by the Eunuchs to the Same Purpoſe, ſhe Perſiſted ſtill in the Denial. The King took this Obſtinacy ſo Ill, that after the Feſtival was over, he call'd for the Seven Commiſſioners that were Expreſly appointed for the Interpretation of the Perſian Laws, to Adviſe with what was to be done in this Caſe of his Wive's Contumacy, and Diſobedience; complaining that it was not only Once, but over and over that ſhe refuſed to come to him; and ſo he deſired to know what the Law directed in that Caſe. One of them whoſe Name was Muchæus gave his Opinion, that it was not only an Affront to himſelf in the Matter of Fact; but a Preſident of Dangerous Conſequence to all his Subjects, in General, whoſe Wives would be apt to Deſpiſe their Husbands too, and by that Contempt Provoke them

While he was in this Anxiety of Thought, his Friends ply'd him with good Offices and Counſels, to Divert him from the Weakneſs of making himſelf miſerable for the Unprofitable Love of One Woman, when he might have the Greateſt Beauties upon the Face of the Earth at his Devotion, if he thought fit to Command them: So that he had no more to do, but to get a Sight of her, and take Her for his Wife, that he had moſt a mind to, out of the Whole Sex: Variety and a New Love would quickly wear out the Fondneſs of a Former; and a little Cuſtom, and Converſation would bring him to himſelf again.

Machæus adviſes him to Baniſh her, and turn her off. Eſther 2.

The King upon Second Thoughts, was well enough pleas'd with the Advice, and ſent Commiſſioners immediately over all his Dominions to take a View of the moſt Celebrated Beauties they could find, and bring them up to him. They were very Punctual and Diligent in the Execution of their Charge; and among others, they found a Maid in Babylon, whoſe Name was Eſther. Her Father and Mother were Both Dead, and ſhe brought up in the Houſe of her Uncle Mordecai, who was of the Tribe of Benjamin, and a Principal Man among the Jews. This Virgin was ſo much beyond all the reſt, for the Graces of her Beauty, and Perſon, that Every body's Eye was ſtill upon her. She was committed to the Care of One of the Eunuchs, where ſhe was Treated with all poſſible Delicacy and Reſpect: That is to ſay, with the Richeſt of Eſſences and Perfumes, and all other Ornamental Curioſities that are made uſe of in Courts by Great Ladies to make them more Agreeable and Charming. At this rate was Eſther Treated for the ſpace of Six Months, in Company with Four Hundred Virgins; after which time, being thus prepared for the King's Bed, he had every day One of them brought him, whom he received into his Arms, and then ſent back again to the ſame Eunuch. But when it came to Eſther's Turn, he was ſo Tranſported with the Love of her Company and Converſation, that he took her to Himſelf for his Lawful Wife, and Celebrated the Nuptials in the Seventh Year of his Reign, and the Twelfth Month, which is called Ader; ſending his Meſſengers every where up and down to Proclaim the Solemnity of a Marriage-Feſtival. As for the Medes and Perſians, and the Great Men of Other Nations, the King Himſelf Entertain'd them at the Wedding-Feaſt, for the Space of One Whole Month; and upon his Wife's Entring into the Palace, he placed the Crown upon her Head, and ſo liv'd with her without ever Enquiring after her Country, or her Extraction. Her Uncle remov'd from Babylon to Suſa, where he would be often waiting at the King's Gate, and ſtill Inquiſitive what News of Eſther, who was every jot as dear to him as if ſhe had been his own Child.

The King, at This Time, paſs'd an Ordinance, that None of his Domeſtiques ſhould preſume while he was ſitting upon his Royal Throne, to come to him, unleſs they were call'd or ſent for, upon pain of Loſing their Heads for't; and there were Officers with their Axes Still at hand to do the Execution. The King, in the mean time, had a Golden Scepter in his Hand; and whenſoever he had a mind to ſave any of Thoſe that came Uncall'd, he held That Scepter forth, and upon their Touching it, they were Exempted from the Penalty; and ſo much for That at preſent.

The King gave Mordecai no Other Reward for this Diſcovery, then by appointing the Service and the Deliverance to be Regiſter'd upon the Record, and the Allowing him Admittance into the Palace, with the Same Freedom and Priviledge as one of his Domeſtiques

Haman, the Son of Ammedatha, an Amalekite, being now Advanced by the King, and coming frequently to Court, the Perſians as well as Strangers paid him the Greateſt Reverence imaginable ſtill in his Paſſage; and it was alſo the King's Pleaſure and Command, that it ſhould be ſo. Mordecai was the Only Perſon that did not Bow

Eſther 3.

Haman Slighted by Mordecai;

Bow to him, being a Ceremony contrary to the Practice of his Country, which did not allow of that manner of Reſpect. Haman taking notice of this Singularity in Mordecai, asked him what Country-man he was? and finding him to be a[a] Jew, brake out into a violent Exclamation at the Inſolence of ſuch a Scoundrel; that when all the Natives and the Free-born Perſians made no Difficulty of doing him That Honour, This Slave of a Jew ſhould preſume to Affront him. In this Rage, he took up a Deſperate Reſolution to be Reveng'd upon Mordecai; and the Hatred he had for the Jews was ſo Mortal, that it was not enough, he thought, to wreak a Vengeance upon the Perſon of Mordecai, without deſtroying the Whole Race of the Jews for Company; not forgetting at the ſame time, that the Amalekites his Country-men, had been formerly Beaten out of their Land, and utterly Exterminated by the Jews. In the Heat of this Outrageous Indignation, away goes Haman to the King, with a Complaint in his Mouth againſt the Jews, as a vile Generation of People to All Purpoſes; inſociable in their Humours; ſingular in their Manners; given-up to Superſtitious Laws and Ceremonies; lurking up and down in all Quarters of his Dominions, and Men that ſhew themſelves in their Practices, and Converſations, the Common Enemies of Mankind. Now Sir, ſays Haman, if you will lay the greateſt Obligation in the World upon your Subjects, You muſt order This ſort of Men to be Rooted out from among your People, without ſparing ſo much as One Captive, or One Servant, in the Whole Party. And for your Security that you ſhall not ſuffer by it in your Revenue, I will be Anſwerable for Forty Thouſand Talents of Silver, to your Treaſury, out of my own Eſtate; for I ſhall not Value any Diminution of my Own Particular Fortune, provided that your Dominions may be Clear'd of this Lewd ſort of People. The King told Haman, upon This Propoſal, that he would leave the Jews to be dealt with according to his Diſcretion, and Remit the Mony over and above. Haman, immediately upon This, Publiſh'd an Edict in the King's Name, and ſent it abroad thorough all his Dominions, to This Effect.

The Great King Artaxerxes, to the Hundred and Seven and Twenty Governours of the Provinces betwixt India and Æthiopia, Greeting.

Whereas it has pleaſed God to give me the Command of ſo many Nations, and a Dominion over the reſt of the World, as large as I my ſelf Deſire, I being reſolved to do Nothing that may be either Tyrannical or Grievous toward my People, and to bear a Gentle and an Eaſie Hand over them, with an Eye to the Preſerving of their Peace and their Liberties, in the firſt place, and to ſettle them in a State of Tranquility and Happineſs not to be ſhaken. All this I have taken into mature Conſideration; and being given to underſtand, by my Truſty and Well-beloved Friend and Counſellour, Haman, a Perſon of a Try'd Faith, Prudence, and Juſtice, and whom I eſteem above all others, that there is a mixture of a ſort of Inhumane People among my Subjects, that take upon them to Govern by their Own Laws, and to preſcribe ways to themſelves in Contempt of Publique Order and Government; Men deprav'd, both in their Cuſtoms, and in their Manners; and Enemies, not only to Monarchy, but to the Methods of our Royal Adminiſtration. This is therefore to Will and Require, that, upon notice given unto you by Haman (who is to me as a Father) of the Perſons intended by this my Proclamation, you put all the ſaid Perſons, Men, Women, and Children, to the Sword, without any Commiſeration, or Favour, in a ſtrict Purſuance of my Decree: And it is my farther Command, that you put this in Execution upon the Thirteenth Day of the Twelfth Month of this Preſent Year; to make but One Day's Work of the Deſtruction of all Mine and your Enemies, in order to a Future Peace and Security all our Lives after.

Haman iſſues out a Proclamation in the King's Name, to have them all put to the Sword, Man, Woman, and Child.

This Edict was quickly ſpread from Town to Town thorough the Whole Empire, and the People made themſelves ready accordingly to do Execution upon the Jews at the Day appointed; and there was the ſame Diſpoſition to Miſchief at Suſa, the King's Place of Reſidence, as elſewhere. The King and Haman, all this while paſs'd their time in Drinking, Junketting, and making Merry: But the People of the Town were at their Wits end, at the Thought of ſo Barbarous a Maſſacre at hand.

Eſther 4.

So ſoon as Mordecai came to be informed of the Tenor and Intent of This Proclamation, he tore his Garments; put on Sackcloth, and went up and down the Town with Aſhes on his Head, exclaiming againſt the Horrid Iniquities of That Murd'rous and Bloudy Deſign upon the Jews. At this rate he went Raving from One place to Another, till he came at laſt to ſtop before the Gate of the King's Palace; for there was no Entrance allow'd to any Man in that Habit. The Reſentment and Behaviour of the Jews, was the ſame in all Other Places, as well as here, upon the Communication of the King's Orders: That is to ſay, They were every where overwhelmed with Lamentations and Deſpair. When it came to the Queen's Ear that Mordecai was before the Gate of the Palace in that Forlorn Habit, ſhe was Troubled at the Report, and ſent one out to him to Change his Garment; but his Anſwer was, that he could not do it, till the Cauſe were firſt Remov'd that made him take it up. It fell out that Hatach, one of the King's Eunuchs, was at That Time in the Queen's Preſence; ſo ſhe call'd him to her, and Preſently ſent him out to Inform himſelf what had befall'n Mordecai, that he ſhould put Himſelf into ſuch a Dreſs, and then Refuſe to Quit it again at her Requeſt. The Eunuch put Theſe Queſtions to Mordecai, who gave him the Whole Story of the Bus'neſs at Length; and in Order, How the King, at the Inſtigation of Haman, had iſſu'd out his Royal Proclamation thorough all his Dominions for the Extirpating of the Jews, and how Vaſt a Sum of Mony Haman had offer'd by way of Compoſition, for leave to do it. Mordecai gave him a True Copy of the Edict from the Original, to be deliver'd to the Queen; deſiring further, that ſhe would be pleas'd to make an Humble Application to the King upon This Matter, and to Intercede with him on their Behalf; for the Lives of the Whole Nation were now in Queſtion, and This was not a Time to ſtand upon Puntillo's, or Niceties of State; for Haman, that was as the King's Right Hand, would never leave Calumniating the Jews, and Exaſperating the King againſt them, till he had gain'd his Point. Upon the Eunuch's giving the Queen This Account of the Matter, ſhe ſent Mordecai word back again, that it was a Capital Crime to break in upon the King when he was upon his Throne of State, without being call'd to Attend him, unleſs he ſhould Vouchſafe to hold forth his Golden Scepter in Token of his Pardon. When Mordecai heard this, he preſs'd the Queen once again by the ſame Meſſenger as before, telling her, that it was not her Own Perſonal Safety that was now the Queſtion, but the Security of the Whole Race; adviſing her likewiſe to have a care how She Slipt That Opportunity of doing ſo Neceſſary, and Charitable an Office; and to Aſſure her that God Himſelf would Relieve them, even if ſhe ſhould Neglect to do it: And that She and her Family might live to be at the Mercy of Thoſe that ſhe now Deſpiſed. Eſther then made uſe of the Same Meſſenger back again to her Uncle, to call an Aſſembly of the Jews together at Suſa, and to Indict a Three-Days Faſt for the Safety of the Queen; that She and Her Servants would do the like: and that after That Preparation, She was Reſolved to go to the King, in deſpite of all Prohibition, and Danger: And that if Dye ſhe muſt, She Would Frankly expoſe her Life in That Service. Mordecai did as the Queen Order'd him; appointed a Publique Faſt, and Humbled himſelf in Supplications to Almighty God to Defeat the Malice of their Enemies; and according to his wonted Goodneſs, to Extend his Mercy to Penitent Offenders; and finally to deliver them from the Deſtruction denounced againſt them: Repreſenting that it was not for any Fault of their Own, that they were Expoſed to This Extremity; but it was the Pride of Haman's Stomach, that thought it an Indignity Offer'd to Himſelf in the Refuſal of That Adoration to him, that was Only Due to God: and that a Whole Nation was now to be Rooted out, becauſe they would not be Corrupted into a Violation and Contempt of the Divine Laws. The Devotions of the Whole Multitude were All upon the Same Subject too; deſiring God to Vouchſafe them his Protection, and to Avert that Dreadful Judgment from the Iſraelites, that now hung over their Heads. The Queen her ſelf Worſhipped likewiſe with her Face Proſtrate upon the Ground, after the manner of her Country, in a Mourning Weed, and Impoſing upon her ſelf a Three-Days Abſtinence from either Meat, or Drink, or any other Senſual Satisfaction, beſeeching God to move the King's Heart in Favour of her Mediation for a Miſerable and a Perſecuted People, by Rend'ring both her Words, and her Perſon more Acceptable then ever, upon this Fatal Extremity, to the Confuſion of their Enemies and of all their Malicious Deſigns upon her Poor Countrymen.

After Three Days Spent in a Fervent, and Pious Importunity for Mercy and Compaſſion from Above, the Queen put-on her Royal Apparel; and with her Two Handmaids, leaning gently upon the One, and the Other bearing up her Train, ſhe advanced toward the King; her Face being Cover'd with ſuch a Bluſh as Expreſs'd both Grace and Majeſty together, but at the ſame Time not without ſome Mixture alſo of Doubtful Apprehenſion; for upon the Sight of the King mounted on his Throne, and the Sparkling Glory of his Robes, that were all over Embroider'd with Gold, Pearl, and Pretious Stones, ſhe was taken all of a Sudden with a Trembling at ſo Surprizing a Spectacle: And upon Phancying over and above that the King look'd upon her as if he were a little Uneaſy, and out of Humour, ſhe fell into the Arms of One of her Maids in a Direct Swoun. This Accident, by the Intervention of God's Holy Will and Providence, put the King into a Fright, for fear She might not come to her ſelf again; ſo that making what Haſte he could from his Throne, he took her into his Arms; and with the Kindeſt Words that Could be, gave her This Comfort, that No Advantage ſhould be made of the Law to her Prejudice, though ſhe came without Calling; for that was a Decree that Extended only to Subjects; wherein ſhe was not at all Concern'd, whom he look'd upon as his Companion and Partner in the Empire. With Theſe Words he put his Golden Scepter into her Hands; and laying it gently upon her Neck, Secur'd her from any further Fear or Danger. Upon This Tenderneſs both of Love and Aſſurance, coming to the Uſe of her Speech and Reaſon again. Sir, ſays ſhe, it is Impoſſible for me to Expreſs the Manner of this Sudden Seiſure. But I had no ſooner the Awful Appearance of your Sacred Perſon and Majeſty in my Eye, but my Heart fail'd me. The Queen accompany'd Theſe Words with ſo Languiſhing an Accent, and ſo Weak a Voyce, that the Lively Repreſentation of what ſhe felt, made the King ſtill more Solicitous to Comfort her; which he did in Terms ſo Explicit, that he bad her Ask him any thing to the One Half of his Kingdom, and it ſhould be given her. Eſther told him that her Requeſt was only This, that he would be pleaſed to take part of a Treat with her That Day; which ſhe had provided for him: and permit Haman to come along with him. Her Suit was Granted, and they Both came; and when the King was in his Cups, and in Good Humour, he call'd upon his Wife as Before, to Ask what ſhe pleaſed within that Compaſs, and it ſhould be Granted her. The Queen begg'd the Kings Favour for the Same Honour again the Day following at Another Entertainment, bringing Haman along with her once again; and ſhe would then take the Freedom, ſhe ſaid to preſent him her Petition. The King was very well pleas'd with the Propoſition; but Haman, over-joy'd at it, to find himſelf the Only Man that was ſingled out upon ſo Honourable an Occaſion, to bear the King Company at a Treat: but in his Paſſage Homeward it was his Fortune to ſee Mordecai the Jew in the King's Palace; and taking Notice that he paid him no ſort of Reverence, he went to his Wife Zereſh with a Knot of his Friends about him, and there told them the Whole Story, how much he was in the Good Graces of the King and the Queen; How he had Supt with them that Day, upon a Particular Invitation, and was to be with them to Morrow again upon the ſame Account: But ſtill after all this, ſays he, the Sawcy Stiffneſs of the Jew Mordecai ſticks in my Stomach. Why then then ſays Zereſh, let me adviſe you what to do. Order a Gallows of Fifty Cubits High to be immediately ſet up, and get the King's leave to morrow morning to Hang up Mordecai upon it. Haman took his Wifes Counſel, and Commanded his People to Erect ſuch Gallows in his Own Palace, which he Deſigned for the Execution of the Jew, and the Gibbet was ſet up accordingly. But God that Foreſees and Orders all Events, Diſappointed Wicked Haman in all his Impious Hopes and Purpoſes; for that very Night, the King finding that he could not Sleep, and Accounting it time loſt to lye Idle and Waking, choſe rather to Employ his Thoughts upon ſomewhat that might turn to the Advantage of his Government, and ſo Commanded his Secretary to bring him his Memorials and Papers of State, as well Modern as Ancient, and to read the Contents of them. The King found upon the Reading of them, the Name of a Perſon that had Great Honours and Poſſeſſions, given him as a Reward for a Glorious and a Remarkable Action: And ſo likewiſe of Another, that made his Fortune by the Bounties of his Prince for his Fidelity; coming at laſt to the Particular Story of the Conſpiracy of the Two Eunuchs, Bigthana and Tereſh againſt the Perſon of the King; and of the Diſcovery of this Treaſon by Mordecai. The Secretary read it over, and was paſſing forward to the Next; but the King bad him Hold, and ask'd him if that Perſon had any Reward given him for his Service. The Other made Anſwer, that there was no Reward mention'd in the Relation, and ſo the King bad him ſtop there; and Inquire of the Waiters what time of Night it was: and Anſwer being brought that it was Break of Day, he bad his Secretary go ſee if any of his Friends were at the Palace-Gate, and bring him Word; and whom ſhould he find there but Haman, who was Earlyer up then Ordinary, for fear of being too Late with his Petition to the King againſt the Life of Mordecai. Word being brought to the King that Haman was at the Gate, he Ordered him to be call'd-in; and upon his Entrance into the Lodging, the King ſpake to him after This Manner: I know, ſays he, that you are the Kindeſt Friend to me in the World; and therefore I would ask your Counſel, what Mark of Honour you would Adviſe me to Beſtow upon the Perſon that I have the Greateſt Obligation to, imaginable, and I would do it with a Reſpect to my Own Royal Dignity, as well as to my Affection. Haman made no doubt of finding his own Intereſt in his Reſolution to this Queſtion, preſuming that this Character could not be intended of any Other then of Himſelf: So Haman gave his Opinion, that the King ſhould Clothe the Man whom he deſired to Honour, with his Own Royal Apparel; Mount him upon his Own Horſe; make him a Preſent of a Golden Chain, and then cauſe ſome One or Other of his Particular Confidents, and Friends to March before him, as a Herald, and make Proclamation all over the City: That Thus ſhall it be done to the Man that the King vouchſafes to Honour.

The King lay Waking That Night, and orders his Secretary to read over ſome Memorials to him.

Being upon the Subject of Services and Rewards, he comes at laſt to Mordecai's Diſcovery: And finding no mention of any Advantage to him for the Service,

The King puts the Caſe to Haman, what he ſhould do for the Man he had the greateſt Obligation for in the World.

Haman gave his Opinion highly in his Favour;

Not doubting but the Queſtion Pointed at himſelf.
Haman is Ordered to do Honour to Mordecai;

Now Haman took all This to Himſelf, and the King was highly Pleas'd with the Motion: Wherefore go, ſays he, and take the Horſe, the Apparel, and the Chain, and find me out Mordecai the Jew; dreſs him-up in theſe Accoutrements; and when he is Mounted, do you March before him, in the Quality of an Officer, to make the Proclamation; for you, being my Particular Friend, are the Fitteſt Man both to Adviſe withall, and to Execute your Own Counſel. I will do this Honour to Mordecai, becauſe I am indebted to him for my Life. This Order ſtruck Haman like a Thunder-bolt, and it was as little Expected:

and in the Greateſt Confuſion imaginable, he Executes his Orders.

But in this Confuſion, however, he was fain to go upon the Errand, and away he went with the Horſe, the Habit, and the Gold-Chain to look for Mordecai; and finding him at the Palace-Gate in his Rags of Humiliation, he bad him Strip himſelf of his Sackcloth, and put on That Purple. Now the Jew, knowing nothing of the matter, took the Whole Ceremony for a Mock, and Treated Haman in plain Terms, as a Mean, Inſolent Wretch, to Inſult at that rate over the Miſerable: But upon a further Reaſoning of the Matter, Haman Convinc'd him at laſt, that the King had Order'd This Honour to be done him in Recompence of the Service he had render'd him in the Saving of his Life from the Conſpiracy of the Two Eunuchs: And being thus Convinced, he put-on the Royal Purple, and the Golden Chain; Mounted the King's Horſe, and took the Tour of the City; Haman making Proclamation before him: Thus ſhall it be done unto Him that the King Honours. Mordecai, after this, went to the King; Haman ſneaking away Shamefully to his Own Houſe, where he Entertain'd his Sorrowful Wife and Friends, with the Lamentable Account of what had paſs'd. Upon the Hearing of Circumſtances, they found that there was no Revenging themſelves upon Mordecai, for God had taken him into his Protection.

As they were in the Middle of the Diſcourſe came the King's Eunuchs from Eſther, to call away Haman preſently to Supper. One of them whoſe Name was Sabuchadas, taking Notice of a Gibbet that was Erected there in the Court, ask'd one of the Servants the Meaning of it; and Underſtanding that it was prepared for Mordecai, the Queen's Uncle, whom Haman had deſigned to beg of the King for Execution, he made no more words of it. As they were at Supper, and all Parties pleas'd with the Entertainment, the King put the Former day's Propoſal over again to the Queen, with an Aſſurance, that let her ask what ſhe pleas'd, it ſhould not be deny'd her. Upon that Occaſion, ſhe fell into a Deploring, ſad Diſcourſe upon the Miſerable State and Danger of the Jewiſh Nation: and how She herſelf, and her Countrymen were all deſign'd for Deſtruction, giving the King to Underſtand that this was the Subject She deſir'd leave to Speak upon. She did not deſire, ſhe ſaid, to give any Interruption to his Affairs of State; or if it had been ſo Order'd that her Countrymen might have only been ſold for Slaves, This Calamity might have paſs'd yet for Tolerable: So that She had only this Suit to move him in, that he would be pleas'd to put a Stop to the Imminent Deſtruction that was Otherwiſe to be Executed upon the Whole Race. The King call'd out preſently to know who it was that had any ſuch Deſign a-Foot. The Queen made Anſwer, without Mincing the Matter, that Haman was the Author of that Advice; and that he did it out of an Impulſe of Pure Malice to the People. This Diſcourſe put the King out of Humour, and ſo he withdrew from the Treat into the Garden. Haman by This Time found the Storm a-coming, and began to apply himſelf to the Queen, with Acknowledgments of his Miſtakes, and Deſire of Pardon; and Caſting himſelf upon the Bed by her as in a Way of Humiliation and Reſpect. The King returning at the Same Time, and ſeeing Haman in that Poſture upon the Bed, was more Irritated by that Circumſtance then by all the reſt; calling him the Baſeſt and the Wickedeſt of Men, for ſo Inſolent an Attempt upon the Honour of his Wife. Theſe words were accompany'd with ſuch a Fierceneſs of Tone and Action, that Haman was directly out of his Wits at the Hearing of them, and not one Syllable to ſay for himſelf. Upon this, the Eunuch before-mentioned, told the King of a Gibbet of Fifty Cubits in Height that Haman had ſet-up for Mordecai in his Own Court, as he Underſtood by one of his Servants, when he was there to give him an Invitation to Supper. The King immediately took up a Reſolution of Inflicting the ſame Puniſhment upon Haman, that he had prepar'd for Mordecai; and ſo Order'd him immediately to be Hang'd upon the Same Gibbet. I cannot paſs over this Wonderful Harmony of Providences, without a Remarque upon the Almighty Power and the Admirable Juſtice and Wiſdom of God; not only in Bringing Haman to his Deſerved Puniſhment, but Entrapping him in the very Snare he had laid for Another; and turning a Malicious Invention upon the Head of the Inventer.

Whereas it is a Common Practice in the World for Men that are advanced, rather upon Favour, then Merit, not only to Inſult over their Inferiours, but to fly in the Faces even of their Benefactors themſelves; and as much as in them lies, to Extinguiſh All Senſe of Gratitude, or Good Nature, in Humane Society; Perverting alſo, out of a Pride, and Impotency of Mind, the Power and Credit that was given them, to the Diſhonour of their Patrons, from whom they receiv'd it: And all this under ſuch an Appearance too, as if they thought God himſelf could not ſee thorough the Diſguiſe: Beſide that, it is no New Thing neither, for State-Minions to Gratify their Own Private Paſſions to the Prejudice of their Maſters, by miſrepreſenting Things, and Men, and Calumniating the Innocent; and by theſe Ill Offices with the Prince, to put Honeſt Men in Danger of their Lives. I do not ſpeak this upon Hiſtory or Hear-ſay; but upon the Certainty of what I have ſeen with my Own Eyes, and upon Proof, not Rumour: Wherefore let no Heed be given for the future to Bare Accuſations, or, in truth, Slanders rather; but let the Fact be ſtrictly Examin'd, and the Perſon Accuſed be either Acquitted, or Puniſh'd, as he ſhall be found Innocent, or Guilty.

It is well known that Haman, the Son of Ammedatha, was by Extraction an Amalekite, and not a Perſian, with what Tenderneſs of Affection and Hoſpitality I receiv'd him; what Honours I conferr'd upon him, even to the degree of Calling, and Eſteeming him as my Father; Commanding all my Subjects to pay a Reverence, next in Order to what they ought to my Own Perſon. Now this Man was ſo Intoxicated with the Fumes of his Vanity and Weakneſs, that paſſing all the Meaſures of Sobriety and Duty, he improved the Power I gave him, ſo far as in him lay, toward the Supplanting of me in my Kingdom; and the Deſtroying of that Perſon by Treacherous Practices, to whom I ſtand Indebted for my Life, and Government. I ſpeak of Mordecai, my Benefactor and Preſerver; and of my Deareſt Wife the Queen likewiſe, whom I tender as the One half of my own Soul, and my Partner in the Empire: His Plot being in the Firſt Place perfidiouſly to Attempt upon the Lives of my moſt Neceſſary Friends, and then to ſeize my Royal Authority to his Own Uſe.

Now forſomuch as the Lewd Deſigns of this Wicked Man are Unqueſtionably Notorious, and particularly his Bloudy and Barbarous Contrivance for the Total Extirpation of the Jews; This is to Notify and Declare, that I find theſe People ſo far from Troubleſom or Seditious, as he Repreſents them, that on the contrary, I do highly Approve of their Inſtitutions, Ways and Manners, as a People Worſhipping the ſame God; to whoſe Bounty and Protection our Family ſtands Indebted both for the Poſſeſſion and Preſervation of our Empire. It is therefore our Royal Pleaſure, by theſe Preſents, not only to Diſcharge the ſaid People of all the Pains and Penalties to which they were made Lyable by our Letters Communicated to you by the Hand of Haman; but likewiſe, the ſaid Mandate notwithſtanding, that you Treat them with all manner of Gentleneſs and Reſpect; having cauſed the Author of this malicious Perſecution, with his Whole Family, to be put to death upon a Gibbet before the Gates of Suſa, as a moſt Neceſſary Sacrifice to Divine Juſtice.

This is alſo further to Will and Require you, that you forthwith Diſpatch Copies of Theſe our Letters thorough all our Dominions; permitting the Jews to live in a Peaceable Enjoyment of their own Laws; and that you give them your Aid and Aſſiſtance toward the Vindicating of themſelves upon thoſe that Spitefully and Injuriouſly Oppreſs'd them in their Adverſity: And whereas the Preciſe Time appointed for the Utter Extermination and Deſtruction of Theſe People was to have been upon the Thirteenth Day of the Twelfth Month, or the Month of Adar; it is our Pleaſure, that you pitch upon the ſame Month and Day, for the Work of their Deliverance, as a Circumſtance the moſt Agreeable to the Methods of

God's

God's Power and Juſtice: not doubting but that this way of Proceeding will be much to the Satisfaction of all our Friends, and the Example of it ſtand upon Record to Poſterity for a Monumental Caution to all Traytors in time to come. And be it likewiſe known to All our Cities, Towns, and People herein Concerned, that what Perſon ſoever ſhall preſume either by Diſobedience, or Neglect, to Act in any thing contrary to the Tenour of This our Imperial Command, he ſhall be Lyable to Military Execution by Fire and Sword, whereof all our Subjects are to take Warning; and the Jews to be in a Readineſs at the time Aſſigned, to do themſelves Right upon their Enemies.

There were Couriers immediately ſent Expreſs with theſe Letters to All Quarters. Mordecai in the mean while coming forth out of the Palace in the State of his Royal Robe; his Crown, and Golden Chain, the Jews preſently Interpreted his Appearance in that Pomp and Magnificence, as a Common Bleſſing to them All: and their Joy was ſo Great in all other Places upon the Publication of the King's Letters, that far and near it wrought upon them, as if Every Man were Animated with a New Soul. Nay, and this Grace of the King's had ſo Powerful an Influence and Effect, even upon Other Nations, that many of them Circumciſed themſelves, in Hope they might Scape Better under the Diſguiſe of Jews, who were highly Elevated by the King's Aſſigning them the Same Day for their Revenge, that had been deſigned for their Execution; That is to ſay, the Thirteenth Day of the Twelfth Month, which the Hebrews call Adar, and the Macedonians, Dyſtrus. Upon the Obtaining of This Mandate, the Princes, Governours, Magiſtrates, and Lieutenancies did All pay a more then Ordinary Reverence to the Jews, for fear of the Power of Mordecai.

The ſame Day Aſſign'd to the Jews for their Revenge, that was appointed for their Deſtruction.

Upon the Publiſhing of this Edict, the Jews put Five Hundred of their Enemies to the Sword at Suſa, and the King ſhew'd the Queen the Number of them; but there was no Account taken as yet, of thoſe that were Slain elſewhere. So he put it to her if ſhe would Require any thing more, for he was Reſolved to Deny her Nothing. Her Requeſt was then, that the Jews might have One Days Revenge more upon their Enemies, and that the Ten Sons of Haman might be Hang'd upon the Gallows, which the King granted alſo for the Day following, without any Contradiction, or Delay. So that they gather'd in Troups together upon the Fourteenth, and Killed near Three Hundred more of their Adverſaries, without ſo much as Touching any of their Goods; but upon the ſame Heat in Other Places up and down the Empire, they deſtroy'd Seventy Five Thouſand of Thoſe that they accounted their Enemies. This Slaughter was made upon the Thirteenth: And on the Day following they Feaſted; and ſo at Suſa alſo, they Celebrated the Fourteenth of the Following Month as a Feſtival: and theſe Days are ſtill Obſerved by the Jews with the ſame Solemnity, Regaling one another, by way of Complement, with ſome Preſent, or Portion of the Entertainment. Mordecai, upon this, ſent his Orders to all the Jews under the Dominion of Artaxerxes, requiring them to Obſerve thoſe Days for Feſtivals, and to Tranſmit the Obſervance of them to Poſterity, and ſo to make it Everlaſting, for the Perpetual Memory of the Thing; for it was but Reaſonable to Celebrate their Deliverance by a Solemnity of Rejoycing upon the ſame Day that was by the Treachery of Haman, appointed for the Maſſacre, and to make it a Day of Thankſgiving, in Memory, as well of their being Freed from the Danger, as of having their Enemies given up into their Hands. Upon this Account it is, that thoſe Days are Obſerv'd which they call Phruræa, or Purim; That is to ſay, Feaſts of Conſervation. Mordecai, all this while, was a Man of Great Power with the King, both in Reſpect of his Adminiſtration, being near his Perſon, and as an Aſſiſtant and Companion to the Queen. The Affairs of the Jews Proſper'd under their Direction and Favour, beyond all Expectation: And let This ſuffice for the Hiſtory of our People under Artaxerxes.

whoſe Name was Jeſus, and Bagoſes being very much His Friend, took upon him the Advancing of Jeſus to the Pontificat. Jeſus depended ſo much upon this Aſſurance, that he took the Liberty to Enter into a Wrangle with his Brother in the Temple it ſelf, upon this Subject; and the Conteſt went ſo far, that his Brother, in a Rage, ſet upon him and Kill'd him: The Greateſt Affront to Religion certainly that ever was Committed; Eſpecially by a Prieſt: And for the Further Aggravation of the Scandal, it was beyond all Preſident, either among the Greeks, or Barbarians; But God would not ſuffer ſo Audacious an Affront to ſcape Unpuniſh'd. Now the People loſt their Liberty for it, and the Perſians Prophaned the Temple; for ſo ſoon as the News of it came to Bagoſes, that the High-Prieſt had ſpilt the Bloud of his Brother in the very Temple, he call'd out to the Jews in Contempt, and Indignation. Impudent Wretches! ſays he, to make a Shambles of the Place of your Worſhip! at the ſame time preſſing to get into the Temple; but being Oppos'd in his Paſſage. What! ſays he, do you look upon my Living Body to be Fouler then the Carcaſs that lies here Within? and with theſe Words forced his Way. Upon this Occaſion, he kept a Severe Hand over the Jews for Seven Years: But after the Death of John, his Son Jaddus came to the Prieſthood. This Juddus had a Brother, whoſe Name was Manaſſes, to whom Sanballat, underſtanding Jeruſalem to be a Famous City, and that the King's of it had put the Syrians and Aſſyrians to many Difficulties, frankly gave his Daughter [a] Nicaſa in Marriage as a Teſt and Earneſt of the Amity he Propounded to himſelf with the Jews. Alexander the Great carries the War out of Europe into Aſia: Breaks the Perſian Empire; and when it was Expected he ſhould have Deſtroy'd Jeruſalem, he Treated the Jews with all Tenderneſs and Reſpect.

IT was about this time, that Philip the King of Macedon was Treacherouſly Murder'd in the City of Egæa, by Pauſanias, the Son of Ceraſtes, of the Family of Oreſtes. Alexander the Son Succeeded the Father; and croſſing the Helleſpont, gave Darius a Notable Overthrow at the River Granicus. After which, he Subdu'd Lydia, and Ionia; and paſſing his Army thorough Caria, he Enter'd into Pamphylia, as is ſaid Elſewhere.

Philip of Macedon Murder'd.

His Son Alexander Succeeds him.

The Elders of Jeruſalem were at this time very much Unſatisfy'd with the Brother of Jaddus the High-Prieſt, for taking to Wife a Strange Woman: Inſomuch, that the Diſguſt they had, ſtopt little ſhort of a Tumult; for it look'd like a Step toward the Antiquating of their Country's Laws about Marriages; and that if they ſuffer'd it to go-on, it would come by little and little, to a Cuſtom. Neither had they forgotten that this very thing was the Cauſe of their Former Captivity; and of all the Calamities that Enſu'd upon it: That is to ſay; the Tranſgreſſion that drew Thoſe Judgments upon them, was the Marrying of Women that were not of their Own Extraction; and therefore they Poſitively Required, that Manaſſes ſhould either Diſmiſs his Wife, or ſerve no more at the Altar. But the [b] High-Prieſt and the People, being mov'd with Indignation, after this would not ſuffer Manaſſes to Officiate at the Altar; whereupon he went to Sanballat, his Father-in-Law, with a Profeſſion of the Infinite Love he had for his Daughter; but at the ſame time, he could not Submit to loſe his Prieſthood and Honour that was Annex'd to his Family, and the Higheſt of All Others in Eſteem among the Jews, for the ſake of a Wife, though never ſo Excellent. Sanballat told him, upon this, that he would Undertake, not only to ſecure him the Exerciſe of the Function; but Advance him to the Pontificat, and Eſtabliſh him Prince of the Whole Country, upon Condition of Owning his Daughter for his Wife; and that he would Build a Temple for him, upon Mount Garizin that overlooks Samaria, and the reſt of the Mountains thereabouts, not Inferior to that at Jeruſalem. And this he took upon him to ſee Effected by the Conſent of Darius himſelf. Manaſſes depended ſo abſolutely upon this Aſſurance, that he made no doubt at all of the Performance, and ſo he Continu'd with his Father. Sanballat was now in Years; and finding a great many Prieſts and Iſraelites Hamper'd in ſuch Matches, the State of Jeruſalem was not a little Troubled at it; for all thoſe Irregular People went over to Manaſſes; Sanballat furniſhing them with Mony. Houſes, Land and Stock; and all to Support the Ambition of his Son-in-Law.

Manaſſes gives a Scandal by Marrying a Strange Woman.

together all the Force he could make, both Horſe, and Foot, to Oppoſe his Paſſage; with a Reſolution to give the Macedonians Battle before they ſhould over-run the whole Aſia, which they propounded to do. So that having paſs'd the Euphrates with his Army, and likewiſe Taurus a Mountain in Cilicia; He put himſelf there in Order, with a Reſolution to Fight the Enemy in that Province. Sanballat was not a little Comforted with this Advance of Darius; and in a full Confidence of Succeſs, told Manaſſes that Every thing ſhould be made good that he had Promis'd him, ſo ſoon as the King ſhould Return: for he was fully Perſuaded, and all the Aſiatiques were of his Opinion too, that the Macedonians with their Handful of Men would never ſtand the Firſt Shock. But in the Event they found their Miſtake; for upon the Armies Joyning, Darius was totally Routed; a Great part of his Army loſt; his Mother, Wife and Children Priſoners, and himſelf forced to Fly into Perſia. Alexander, in the Mean Time Marched into Syria; Took Damaſcus and Sydon, and laid Siege to Tyre; Writing alſo to the High-Prieſt of the Jews, that he Expected the ſame Aſſiſtances from them, which they had before allow'd to Darius, and that they ſhould Provide a Market for the Supply of his Army, where he might have Neceſſaries for his Mony; aſſuring them that they ſhould have no Reaſon to repent the Reſpect. The Anſwer the High-Prieſt return'd, was Briefly this; that they had Bound themſelves by an Oath to Darius, never to bear Arms againſt him, and that they were ty'd-up by that Obligation during His Life. Alexander was Highly Incenſed at this Return; but went-on with the Siege of Tyre, making no doubt but to be ſuddenly Maſter of it; with Terrible Menaces, that upon the Reducing of that Place he would March againſt the High-Prieſt himſelf, and give all People to Underſtand, how far Oaths were to be Broken, or kept. Alexander, that was Indefatigable, took Tyre by Aſſault; and went thence to beſiege Gaza, a Perſian Garriſon, and one Babemeſes the Governour of it.

Darius totally Routed.

Alexander Marches into Syria; Takes Damaſcus, and Sydon, and lays Siege to Tyre.

The High-Prieſt Excuſes it, that they were under an Oath to Darius.

Alexander takes Tyre by Aſſault, and Beſieges Gaza.

But to return now to the Bus'neſs of Sanballat: When he found that Alexander was before Tyre, he took that Opportunity of going over to him with Eight Thouſand of his own Men, and ſo Betook himſelf to the Enemy's Camp; delivering up his Truſt, and Transferring his Allegiance from Darius to Alexander, who received him with Open Arms, and bad him ſpeak freely Whatever he had to ſay. So Sanballat told him, that he had a Son-in-Law whoſe Name was Manaſſes, the Brother of Jaddus, the High-Prieſt of the Jews; and Great Numbers of that People following him, that Deſired nothing more then Leave to Build a Temple in that Province: ſetting forth alſo, that it would be Alexander's Intereſt to Permit it; If it were but to Divide the Power of the Jews, and to Prevent Commotions: for they are Vaſtly Numerous, and as likely to be troubleſome to other Kings, as they were formerly to the Syrians. This Boon was no ſooner Granted, but they were immediately, All Hands at Work, upon the Building of the Temple; Manaſſes to be the High-Prieſt, and the Honour to deſcend to the Poſterity of Sanballat's Daughter, as he Projected to himſelf; but after Seven Months time ſpent before Tyre, and Two more at Gaza, Sanballat dy'd, and Alexander preſently upon the Taking of Gaza, advanced to Jeruſalem; which put Jaddus the High-Prieſt to his Wit's End, how to Behave himſelf in an Addreſs to a Prince whom he had ſo highly Provoked by a Refuſal to Comply with his Orders: Wherefore he appointed Publique Prayers and Sacrifices to be Offer'd up to God for his Aſſiſtance and Protection, and for the Common Welfare of the People. On the Night following God appeared to the High-Prieſt in a Dream, bidding him be of Good Courage; Dreſs-up the City with Flowers and Garlands, and without more ado, to Open the Gates; the People to March out in White Garments to meet Alexander; and himſelf with the reſt of the Prieſts, in the Habits of their Order; depending upon Providence for the reſt. Jaddus, upon Waking, told the Citizens with Great Joy the Subſtance of this Revelation; and ſo put every thing in Order to Attend the Approche of the King. Upon Intelligence a little while after, that he was drawing near toward the Town, Jaddus advanced, together with his Prieſts, and the Citizens, in a New, and a Venerable Way of Pomp and Solemnity, to a Place that is called Sapha; that is to ſay, a Place of Proſpect, becauſe it commands the View of both City and Temple. The Phœnicians and Chaldæans promis'd themſelves all the Licence of Bloud and Pillage upon the High-Prieſt himſelf, as well as upon the Citizens, that Rage or Revenge could draw from a Victorious Prince under the Senſe and Provocation of the Affront he had received: But in the Event, they found the Clear Contrary; for when Alexander ſaw from a diſtance the Order of the Proceſſion; the People all in White, with the Prieſts in the Head of them in their Silken Robes; and the High-Prieſt himſelf in his Purple Stole, Embroider'd with Gold; his Mitre upon his Head; and a Golden Plate upon his Forehead, with the Name of God Engraven upon it; the Majeſty of this Spectacle Struck him with ſo Reverend an Awe, that he advanced to him in his own Single Perſon; ador'd the Sacred Inſcription, and Saluted the High-Prieſt himſelf: all the Jews, at the ſame time, with one Heart and Voice, ſhouting out Acclamations to Alexander, and gathering in Multitudes about him. The Kings of Syria, and the reſt that were there Preſent, were ſo Amazed at the King's Behaviour, that they could hardly take him to be in his Right Senſes; but only Parmenio took the Freedom to ask him, in a Familiar way, How it came to paſs that He that was Ador'd by the Whole Earth ſhould now deſcend to Bow to a Jewiſh Prieſt? No, ſays Alexander, I do not Adore the Man, but the God that he Serves; for ſome time paſt, when I was in Dion in Macedonia, I ſaw This Man I remember, and in This very Habit. I was then deliberating what Courſe I ſhould take to Conquer Aſia; and This very Perſon bad me paſs my Army over the River; and be confident that if I would take his Counſel, I ſhould make my ſelf Maſter of the Perſian Empire. Now upon the View of This Man, and in This Habit, I call to mind my Dream at Dion; and that This is the Lively Figure of what I ſaw there in a Viſion, and of the Perſon that Encourag'd me to this Expedition: So that it is not without a Divine Impulſe that I undertake this War; and I make no doubt at all of Gaining my Point upon the Perſians, and ſucceeding in all things to my Wiſh. After this Diſcourſe to Parmenio, the King Embrac'd Jaddus, and was Conducted into the City by the reſt of the Prieſts, where he went up to the Temple, and Sacrificed in Form, according to Order, paying alſo a ſingular Veneration to the High-Prieſt Himſelf; who ſhew'd the King, when the Ceremony was over, the Book of the Prophet Daniel; and in it, the Prediction of a Certain Greek in time to come, that ſhould make Himſelf Maſter of the Perſian Empire; which Alexander interpreted of Himſelf: and ſo with great Satisfaction in all Reſpects, he diſcharg'd the Multitude till the Day following; at which time, he call'd them together again, to know what Requeſt they had to make him. The High-Prieſt made Anſwer, that they only deſir'd his Leave to Enjoy the Freedom of their own Country-Laws, and that they might be Exempted from the Seventh-Years Tribute; which was All Granted them. They beſought him farther alſo, to Allow the ſame Freedom to the Jews in Babylon and Media; which he Granted likewiſe: Offering them moreover, that if any of them had a Mind to take up Arms in his Service, they ſhould be received into his Army, and enjoy the Liberty of Exerciſing their Religion, as before; which Generoſity brought great Numbers of the Jews over to him.

Alexander with a Reſpectful Reverence ſalutes the High-Prieſt in Perſon.

Alexander's Bounty and Conceſſions of Grace toward the Jews.

Matters being thus ſettled at Jeruſalem, Alexander Marched with his Army from Place to Place among the Neighbouring Cities; and wherever he came he was well Received. The Samaritans, whoſe Capital at that time was Sichem, near the Mountain Garizin, and Peopled by Jewiſh Deſerters, taking notice how Honourably Alexander Treated the Jews, began now to bethink themſelves of Tacking about again, and returning to their Former Profeſſion; for theſe People are of a Humour, as we have ſaid already, when the Jews are in Affliction, They are Strangers to us, they cry, We have nothing to do with them: and they ſpeak the Truth too. But now, ſo ſoon as ever they come into Credit again, they are all of a Fraternity preſently, and value themſelves upon the very Heraldry of their Deſcent from Joſeph, and his Sons, Manaſſeh and Ephraim. Alexander was hardly out of the City, when the Sichemites, in Great Pomp and Parade, and with Wonderful Joy in their Looks, Preſented themſelves before him in Company with the Troops that Sanballat had ſent over to him; making Suit to the King, that he would vouchſafe to Honour their City and Temple with his Preſence; who ſpake them all Fair, and promiſed to give them a Viſit at his Return; but upon their deſiring an Immunity of the Seventh-Year's Tribute, as the other, in regard that they did not Sow in that Year, Alexander asked what Country-men the Petitioners were? They told him they were Hebrews; but that they were called Sichemites by the Sydonians. The Queſtion was put to them again, Whether they were Jews or Not? They ſaid No: Whereupon ſays Alexander, I have Granted This to the Jews: But however, when I come back again, I ſhall do what I think Reaſonable, upon a Fuller Information of the Matter: and ſo the Sichemites were diſmiſs'd; but he took Sanballat's Men along with him into Ægypt, allotting them a Diſtribution of Lands to live upon there; which they had afterward in Thebes, where they were put in Gariſon.

The Samaritans Change Parties with their Intereſt.

They demand the Immunity of the Seventh-Years Tribute, but it is not Granted them.

After the Death of Alexander, the Empire was parted among his Succeſſors, only the Temple by Garizin remained Untouch'd: And if at any time the Jews at Jeruſalem were found Guilty of the Violation of their Laws, as in Eating Forbidden Meats, the Breach of the Sabbath, or the like; they took Sanctuary with the Sichemites, upon a Pretence that they were Unjuſtly Accus'd. About This time the High-Prieſt Jaddus dy'd; and Onias, his Son, Succeeded him in the Dignity. This is All we ſhall ſay of the State of Jeruſalem at That time.

CHAP. I.

After the Death of Alexander, his Generals share the Empire. Ptolemy surprizes Jerusalem; Transplants divers Colonies of Jews into Ægypt, and Employs them in Places of Great Trust. The Jews of Jerusalem, and the Samaritans, are perpetually in War.

The Persian Empire Canton'd out into Principalities after the Death of Alexander.

WHen Alexander King of Macedon had made Himself Absolute Master of the Persian Empire, and settled the Affairs of the Jews, as we have shew'd already, he departed This Life, and left the Empire Broken, and Parcell'd-out into so many Principalities. Asia fell to Antigonus. Babylon, with the Countries bordering upon it, to Seleucus. The Hellespont to Lysimachus; Macedon to [a] Cassander; and Ægypt to Ptolemy, the Son of Lagus. Upon this Division, there ensued a Long War betwixt these several Princes, who were All Competitors for the Sovereign Command of the Whole, to the Ruin of several Considerable Cities, and the Loss of a great many Lives. The Whole Tract of Syria was abundantly sensible of this Misery, under the Government of Ptolemy, otherwise called The Saviour, (though never any Man had less Pretence to that Title, then Himself.) This was He that got into Jerusalem by a Trick; that is to say, upon a Sabbath-day, under a Colour of Devotion, and then Treacherously possess'd himself of the City without any Opposition, Difficulty, or so much as the least Apprehension of any Danger from him: This being a Day of Rest, over and above; which made his Entrance as Easie, as his Administration afterwards was Tyrannical and Barbarous. Agatharchides the Cnydian, says much the same thing in his History of the Successors of Alexander, when he Imputes the Loss of our Country and Liberties to the Vanity of our Superstition. His Words are these.

The Several Princes are Competitors for the Sovereignty of the Whole.

Ptolemy otherwise call'd The Saviour.

He Surprizes Jerusalem by Treachery, under a Cloak of Religion.

Agatharchides imputes the Loss of it to a Jewish Superstition.

There are a People, says he, that are known by the Name of Jews, and have their Habitation in a Strong and Populous City, called Jerusalem. These Men fell into the Hands of Ptolemy, and Subjected themselves to a cruel Slavery upon a Phantastical Scruple of Conscience, that would not suffer them to take up Arms against an Oppressor in their own Defence upon That Day. This is what Agatharchides delivers concerning our Brethren. But Ptolemy carry'd away a great many Captives out of the Mountainous Part of Judæa, from about Jerusalem, Samaria, and the Mountain Garizin, which he Transported into Ægypt: And then Reflecting upon the Sacredness of an Oath among the Jews, by their Fidelity to Darius, even after his Overthrow; notwithstanding the Summons, and the Invitation of Alexander to come over to him: he disposed of them into Strong-holds, Garrisons, and Places of Trust upon their Oath of Fidelity to be True to Him and his Successors; granting them also Immunities and Privileges in Alexandria, in Common with the Macedonians Themselves. So that betwixt the Temptation of Ptolemy's Liberality on the One Hand, and the Pleasure and Convenience of a Fruitful Country on the Other; there came over Great Numbers of Jews into Ægypt from other Parts also. But the Jews and the Samaritans could never be Reconcil'd yet upon the Subject of their Ancient Laws and Constitutions: the One insisting upon it, that the Temple at Jerusalem was the Only Holy Place, and the Jews not Allowed to send their Sacrifices any whither else; the Other saying as much for the Temple at Garizin: insomuch that there was a great deal of Bloud spilt upon this Question.

The Jews and the Samaritans are Divided: one for the Temple at Jerusalem, t'other for That at Garizin.

[a] In the Copies of Josephus 'tis Casander. But the true Reading is Cassander; as Mr. Spanheim has shewn.

Ptolomy Philadelphus ſets a Hundred and Twenty Thouſand Jews at Liberty. He ſends for Seventy Two Choſen Perſons out of Judæa, to turn the Jewiſh Laws into Greek. He makes a Preſent of Rich Donatives to the Temple, and treats the Deputies with a Magnificence ſuitable to his Greatneſs.

Philadelphus Ptolomy Succeeds Ptolomy the Saviour.

1 AFter the Death of Ptolomy (The Saviour, as they call'd him) Philadelphus the Son Succeeded in Courſe to the Kingdom of Ægypt. He Reigned Nine and Thirty Years, and gave Orders for the Tranſlating of the Law into the Greek Tongue. There were at that time Captives in Ægypt, to the Number of a Hundred and Twenty Thouſand Jews, which This Philadelphus Commanded to be ſet at Liberty upon this following Occaſion. Demetrius Phalareus having under his Care and Cuſtody the Truſt of the King's Library, took-up a Curioſity to try if he could get a Collection of All Books that were any where Extant at what rate ſoever. This Phancy was his Particular Inclination: So that he bought-up All the Choice-Books that he could hear of, which he thought might be worthy of a Place in the King's Study and Good Opinion. Philadelphus asking one time how many Thouſand Volumes he thought he had got? he told him, ſome Two Hundred Thouſand; but that he hop'd in a ſhort time to make them Five Hundred Thouſand: for he was certainly inform'd that there were a World of Choice Manuſcripts among the Jews, concerning their Laws, Cuſtoms, and Ceremonies, that are very well worth the Reading, and the Honour of a Place alſo in the Royal Library; but being Written in their own Language and Characters, it would be a Matter of Great Difficulty and Trouble to Turn them into Greek. For though there may ſeem to be ſome Reſemblance and Affinity betwixt the Language and the Writing of the one and of the other, there are yet ſeveral Niceties peculiar to each, and diſtinct from the other. Not, ſays he, that This is to Diſcourage the Turning of them out of the Hebrew, and the Depoſiting of them in the Royal Collection, ſo long as there is wherewithal to Anſwer the Expence. The King highly Commended this Project of Demetrius upon ſuch a Collection of Books, and wrote to the High-Prieſt of the Jews to give him his Aſſiſtance in the Providing of theſe Copies. There was one Ariſtæus, a Particular Confident of the King's, a Man of great Modeſty; and upon that Account he had his Maſter's Ear with the more Freedom. This ſame Ariſtæus had it a long time in his Heart to get the Jews ſet at Liberty; and laying hold of this Occaſion as the moſt decent Opportunity of moving the King about it, he went in the firſt place to Soſibius, Tarentinus, and Andræa, Three Captains of the Guards, to feel how they ſtood affected; and upon finding them well Diſpos'd, he beſought them earneſtly to Aſſiſt him with their Intereſt, toward the Doing of ſo good an Office; upon which Aſſurance he Addreſs'd himſelf to the King after This Manner.

Ariſtæus a Friend to the Jews.

Soſibius, Tarentinus, and Andræa, three Captains of the Guards, well affected to them.

Sir, ſays he, If I may preſume to lay my Thoughts at your Feet, in all Simplicity, and without Diſguiſe: Since it is Your Royal Pleaſure that the Laws of the Jews be not only Tranſcribed, but Tranſlated, to Anſwer your preſent purpoſe; I do not well ſee how it can be Fairly done, while ſo many of That Nation are in Bondage under your Government, from whom you Require, and Expect, ſo neceſſary an Aſſiſtance and Service. It ſeems to me, to be an Act worthy of your Magnificence and Goodneſs, to ſet theſe poor People at Liberty from their Preſent Miſery; for by All that ever I could underſtand of the Matter, the ſame God that Orders, and Over-rules your Government, is the Author of Their Laws: and both We and They Worſhip the ſame Creator, and Almighty Power, only under the Name of Jupiter, or Jove, à Juvando, from Helping; being the Life of us all. Wherefore you may be pleaſed, out of a Reverence to That God whom they Love and Worſhip with a Zeal and Affection beyond All other Mortals, to Reſtore theſe Wretched Exiles to their Own Country, that they may End their Days where they Receiv'd their Birth, as in the place that Providence had Aſſigned them. I do not preſume, Sir, to Interpoſe on their Behalf out of any Partiality, upon the Account of Tribe or Extraction; but in a Contemplation that the ſame God is the Creator of us all, and that ſo Illuſtrious a Clemency would be Acceptable even to That God Himſelf. The King ask'd him then, How many Thouſands he thought there were that would ſtand in need of This Indulgence? Andræas being Preſent, made Anſwer, that he believ'd there might be a matter of a Hundred and Twenty Thouſand Souls. Well, ſays the King to Ariſtæus, and doſt thou take This for ſo moderate a Requeſt? Soſibius, and the reſt that were by, ſaid, that it would be an Action becoming the Dignity of ſo Great a Prince, to be Merciful to Others, in Acknowledgment of the Honour that he himſelf had received from Above. The King was ſo well pleas'd with This Motion and Advice, that he Order'd an Allowance of a Hundred and Twenty Drachma's to the Soldiers for every Jew they had in Cuſtody; to be made good to them on the Next Pay-day, over and above their Stipend, with a Further Promiſe to Anſwer the Deſire of Ariſtæus, (or in Truth, the Appointment of Providence) in All Points, and to Ratify the Whole Ariſtæus moves the King on the Behalf of the Jews.

The King ſo well pleas'd with Ariſtæus's Motion, that he Grants more than his Aſking, by a Publick Edict; wherein should be comprehended not only Those which his Father, or his Army had carry'd away, but Those also that either before, or since that time, had been Taken into Captivity. His Friends told him, that at this rate, the Deliverance of these People would stand him in at least Forty Talents; but the King would not stick at that, he said, for the thing should be done. Now for the Greater Honour of this Illustrious King, I shall here insert a Copy of the Proclamation it self.

The King Discharges the Jews by Proclamation.

It is our Royal Will and Pleasure, That all the Jews whatsoever, that have been Subdu'd, and Taken by any of my Father's Forces upon their Incursions into Syria and Phœnicia; and them brought away or sold, into any of my Dominions; and all those likewise that either before, or since that time, have been so sold and enslav'd, be all set free, upon the Payment of One Hundred and Twenty Drachma's for every such Slave: The Soldiers to receive this Redemption-mony, together with their Pay, and the rest out of the Treasury: For the forcing of so many People away into Captivity, and the Ravaging of their Country by the Outrage and Licence of the Soldiers, for the sake purely of the Pillage and Booty, was a Course that my Father undoubtedly neither Intended nor Approv'd; and a Thing as contrary to Common Equity, and Reason. Wherefore out of a Reverence to the Memory of my Father, and a Commiseration of the Poor and Weak that suffer under the Power of Oppression and Violence, I do hereby expresly Charge and Command, that all the Jews that are at this time in Servitude, be immediately Dismiss'd upon the Payment of the Sum aforesaid to their respective Masters, in Obedience to this our Mandate, without Fraud or Collusion. And farther, that this our Proclamation be made Publique for Three Days successively after the Receipt of it; and in the mean time, that the aforesaid Masters bring-in a List of their Prisoners to such Officers, and in such manner, as we shall find most for our Service. And all this to be done upon the Peril of Confiscation, if any Man shall be found acting contrary to the Tenor hereof.

An Allowance of Redemption Mony.

Upon the First Sight of this Draught, the King took notice, that the Provision for the Liberty of those that were Taken either before, or after, was not so cautiously expres'd, but there was room left to Evade it: So that the King, of his own proper Generosity, and Motion, superadded a Latitude of Indulgence in those Cases, and gave positive Orders to the Collectors of his Tribute, and the Officers of his Treasury, to have the Mony in readiness for the Ransom of the Jews. So within Seven Days the whole Work was dispatch'd at the King's Charge, to the Value of Four Hundred and Sixty Talents: the Masters insisting upon the same Rate for the Children, that they had for the rest, though the King's Edict extended no farther then to those that were brought away Prisoners, without Comprehending such as were Born there.

The King enlarges his Grant.

When every thing was advanced thus far, with Great Honour and Justice, according to the King's Mind, he Commanded Demetrius to publish his Purpose about the Transcribing of the Jewish Books and Records, proceeding from One thing to Another in order, and with Consideration. So that there was Entered upon a Register, a Copy of Demetrius's Petition, and likewise of the Letters that were Written upon that Occasion; with an Account of the Presents that were made toward the Work, and What they were, and by Whom: So that at first sight, the Excellency both of the Authors, and the Contrivers, might appear from the very Work it self. Now the Petition aforesaid ran in Terms much to this purpose.

The Petition of Demetrius about Jewish Books and Records.

Since it is Your Royal Will and Command, that I should do my Endeavour to supply what may be yet further added toward the Perfection of your Library, and to find out what Curious and Useful Books and Copies may have hitherto escaped my Search and Enquiry; This is humbly to inform your Majesty, that after much Study and Thought upon this matter, I do not find any thing so much conducing to your present Purpose as the History of the Jewish Laws; for being written in Hebrew Characters, and in an Hebrew Idiom, it will be hard for us to understand them aright: Beside, that the Version we have already of them is not so Correct as it should be, for want of a Royal Authority, and Encouragement, toward the making of them known. So that it will be Necessary to have them accurately and carefully Translated, as being a Body of the Wisest and Perfectest Laws that are any where Extant, God himself having been the Author of them. For this Reason, says Hecatæus the Abderite, we find in none of the Poets or Historians, any Mention made of These Laws, or of the Administrators of them; the Original and Institution of them being Sacred, and not to be Prophaned by Unhallow'd Lips. Wherefore your Majesty may be pleased, if you shall judge it meet, to write to the High-Priest of the Jews, only to send you out of Every Tribe, Six Elders, whom he shall make Choice of as Men the best skill'd in the Knowledge of their Constitutions and Customs; and by their Assistance, in the Interpreting and Expounding of their Writings, we may be able to gather something from them to your Majesty's Satisfaction.

The King, upon This Motion, gave Direction for Letters to be Written to Eleazar the High-Priest, according to the Proposal of Demetrius; taking Notice also of the General Release of all the Jews that were Prisoners in Ægypt. The King sent a Present also of Fifty Talents of Gold, for Cups, and Bowls and to a Great Value in Precious Stones; Ordering those that had care of the Coffers, wherein they were Deposited, to let the Lapidaries Take and Chuse as they thought fit: And beside all this, the King assign'd a Hundred Talents more for Sacrifices, and other Services of the Temple. I must not pass over the Particulars of the Magnificence, and the Curiosity of the Whole Work: But in the First Place, I shall give the Reader the Copy of the Letter that was Written to Eleazar, together with an Account how he came to this Dignity.

Letters Order'd to Eleazar the High-Priest according to this Proposal. The King's Munificent Presents.

Upon the Death of the High-Priest Onias, his Son Simon succeeded to the Office, a Person of Singular Piety towards God, and of an Exemplary Tenderness and Good Nature toward Mankind; from which Character he was surnamed The Just. Simon liv'd not long; and leaving behind him Only one Son, a Child, whose name was Onias, his Brother Eleazar of whom we are now Speaking, Enter'd upon the Pontificat: And it was to this Eleazar that Ptolomy wrote the Letter Following.

Onias the High-Priest dies, and his Son Simon succeeds him. Simon dies, and leaving only one Son Onias, a Child, Eleazar his Brother Enters upon the Pontificat.

Ptolomy's Letter to Eleazar.

Whereas there Were Great Numbers of Jews in my Dominions that were brought Captives thither by the Persians while they were in Power: And whereas my Father had so Great a Value for them, that he Entrusted several of them in his Armies; Others in his Strong Holds and Garrisons, for a Check upon the Ægyptians, with the Allowance of Large Pensions for their Service: Be it known unto you, that I my self also, as I have been Easy and Gentle to all, since my coming to this Government, so I have had a more Peculiar Tenderness to your People, having set above a Hundred Thousand of them at Liberty, and paid the Charge of their Ransoms out of my Own Coffers. Some of them I have made use of in my Army; Others, as I found them Discreet and Trusty, I have Entertain'd about my Person, and in the Court, reckoning upon it, that I can do nothing more Acceptable to God, then Good Offices to others for his sake, to whom I owe my Government and Being: Wherefore out of a desire to Oblige the Jews all over the World, to the Uttermost of my Power, I have Proposed to my self the Turning the Books of your Law into Greek, and to give the Translation a Proper Place in my Own Library. In Order to the Compassing of this Design, it will be kindly done to make a Cull out of your Several Tribes, of Six Elders out of Each Tribe, the best Skill'd Men in the Laws you can Pitch upon; and send them to Assist me in this Translation; for I promise my self, if I succeed in this Undertaking, to gain Immortal Honour by it. The Persons I employ to Treat with you about this Affair, are Andræas, a Captain of my Guards, and Aristæus; Two of my Trusty and well-Beloved Friends, whom I have Charged also with a Present of a Hundred Talents of Silver for you, which I send as an Obligation of my First-Fruits, towards your Sacrifices and your Temple. Write me back what you please, it shall be Welcome to me.

The King's Munificence toward the Service of the Holy Temple and Altar.

Upon the Receipt of this Letter, Eleazar, with all the Deference and Respect imaginable, returned this following Answer.

Eleazar the High-Priest to King Ptolomy, Greeting.

Eleazar's Answer to Ptolomy's Letter.

If it be well with your most Excellent Majesty; with your Queen Arsinoe, and with your Illustrious Family, it is so likewise with your Servants the Jews. Your most Gracious Letter is come to our Hands, and we have read it in a Full Congregation with Infinite Joy and Affection: as an Instance, not only of your Clemency and Good Will towards a Distressed People; but as a Token also of your Singular Reverence and Piety for the Worship of the Great God. We have received also by the same Hands; that is to say, by the hands of Andræas and Aristæus (your well-Beloved and Learned Friends, and Persons highly Worthy to be so Esteem'd) Twenty Golden Cups, Thirty Silver ones, Five Goblets, and a Table to be Consecrated for the Service of the Altar; together with a Hundred Talents toward the Charge of Sacrifices, and other Services for the Temple: All which we have Shewed and Represented unto our Brethren, in the most Affectionate Terms of Gratitude and Respect; and we are all so Sensible of the Generous Obligations you have been pleased to lay upon us, that you may depend upon our Readiness to serve and Obey you in all things without Reserve, to the Uttermost of our Power, in a Just Acknowledgment of your Grace and Goodness. In Pursuance of this Sense and Conscience of our Duty, we have recommended unto God in our Publique Prayers the Protection of your Royal Person, Sister and Children, together with all that Love and are Dear to you; Wishing Peace and Prosperity to your self and People: and beseeching God, that the Work you have have now in hand, of Compiling a Collection and History of our Laws and Antiquities, may be of as much Satisfaction and Advantage to you as your Own Heart can desire. In Order to this End, I have sent you Six Elders out of Every Tribe, with the Law, to attend your Pleasure, remitting our selves upon the Whole Matter to your Piety and Justice, that after the Transcribing of them, they may be Remitted to us back again by the Same Bearers: Recommending your Majesty to the Providence of the Almighty.

The Particulars of Ptolomy's Donatives.

Six Elders out of Every Tribe sent to attend the King with the Books of the Jewish Laws.

This was the High-Priest's Answer to the King's Letter, together with the Names Subjoyn'd of the Seventy Elders that were sent by Eleazar, upon this Occasion; which Names I shall not need to Enumerate over again in this Place. But for the Magnificence and Curiosity of the Donatives, and Presents, for the Service of God; that Part of the Account cannot be pass'd over in Silence, without Great Injustice to the King's Honour, Piety, and Bounty: Considering with what Liberality and Expence he Promoted the Work; the Countenance and Encouragement that he gave to the Prosecution of it; and the Assiduity of his Care and Watchfulness in Overlooking the Workmen, to see that they should neither be Heedless nor Idle. Now in these Cases, I am Obliged to be more Particular; not as a Branch of the History, but as a Memorial of the King's Greatness of Mind, that shall Stand upon Record to his Everlasting Fame. And I shall begin with the Description of the Table.

The Golden Table.

As to the Dimensions, the King sent his Artificers to learn-out the Measure of the Former Table at Jerusalem, and to see Whether the Place would not bear a Bigger. They brought him Word that he might make it as Big as he Pleas'd: Whereupon he propounded to himself to make this Five times Larger then the Other. But Considering, upon second thoughts, that so Great a Bulk might Possibly make it too Cumbersome and Unweildy for Daily Use, and look liker a Work for Ostentation, then for Service, he came to a Resolution upon the First Scantling; and to Supply the Expence he sav'd in Weight and Mettle, in a Charge Upon Extraordinary Workmanship, and Beauty. Now the King had a Wonderful Insight into the Nature and Reason of things, and such a Presence of thought, for the finding-out of Expedients, and New Inventions, that it was a Common Practice with him to Form his Own Designs, and prescribe to the very Workmen themselves, their Precise Rules and Measures. So that for the Proportions of this Table, he Order'd it to be Two Cubits and a Half-Long; One, Over; and One and a Half in Height; all of Solid Gold, and round about it a Border of a Hands Breadth: set-out on Three sides with Curious Carving of Flower-Works, Twisted Strings, and Other Agreeable Figures; which, being Triangular, were likewise so Equal and Just, that turn it which way you would (as it was Easily Transpos'd) the Prospect would be still the same. This Table, in fine, was delicately Wrought all over; but that Part of it Especially that was most in Sight: with an Intermixture of Pretious Stones loopt together by Golden Buckles, to the String-Work before Mentioned, at Equal distances one from another. The Outside of it was set with other Rich Stones of an Oval Cut; and an Embos's'd Work of Twigs and Branches creeping Round the Table. There were also several sorts of Fruits wrought together under the Figure of a Crown; as Bunches of Grapes, Ears of Corn, Pomegranates, &c. all in their Proper and Natural Position, and Expres's'd by Stones set in Gold, bearing the Native Colour of what they Represented. Under this Crown was Another Row of Ovals; which, for the Matter, the Order, and Ornament, was so like the Former; and so Exactly Uniform from Top to Bottom, that there was no distinguishing One part from the other. Under the Table from side to side, there pass'd a Golden Plate of Four Fingers-Breadth; and into this Plate the Feet were fasten'd with Springs, and Hooks to keep them Firm and Steady, by binding the Cover and the Frame together. There was drawn also upon this Table the Resemblance of a Mæander; the Course of it mark'd out with Stones of Lustre and Value, Sparkling like so many Stars: as Rubies, Emeralds, and whatever else was most Pretious, or Excellent in the kind. Along this Mæander, there were divers pieces of Sculpture in Boughs and Knots, that had somewhat in them of the Figure of a Lozenge: and they were so Embellisht by an Orderly Disposition of Crystal, and Amber, for the Advantage of the View, that it made, All together, one of the most Agreeable Spectacles imaginable. The Cornishes of the Feet had the Resemblance of a Lilly-Work: the Stem upright, with the Leaves and Tendrils winding under the Table. The Basis was a Hand's Breadth over, garnish'd with Rubies, and a Border round about it, and Two Hands distance betwixt the Feet that rested upon it. The 'graving-Work of these Feet was Incomparable; being the Phancy of a Foliage of the Vine and the Ivy, render'd so Exquisitely to the Life, (with Grapes, Berries and all) that it was heard to say, which was which: But upon the Least Breath of Air, the Leaves would move and play; as if it had been the Work of Nature rather then of Art. This Table Consisted of Three Parts which were so Artifically put together, that that there were no Joints to be Diſcern'd, or ſo much as to be Imagin'd where they met; and the Thickneſs of it was Half a Cubit. This Great Prince gave to Underſtand by the Magnificence of his Preſent, in the Ineſtimable Value of the Materials, and the Exquiſite Curioſity and Perfection of the Whole Work, that what he bated of his Firſt Project in Size and Proportion, was abundantly ſupply'd by a moſt Munificent Expence in Art and Ornament.

There was alſo a Pair of Large Golden Cups, wrought half way up the Bowl Scallop-wiſe, and inlaid with all ſorts of Precious Stones orderly ranged into the Reſemblance of a Mæander of a Cubit over, with delicate Figures of Twigs, and Creepers, branching-out into a kind of Net-work up to the Brim, and interlaced with ſeveral Compartiments in form of a Lozenge, ſome Four-fingers broad, and garniſh'd with Stones of Value, as before: The Borders alſo ſet-out with an Intermixture of Lillies, Flowers, Vines, Grapes, and the like, around the Lips of the Veſſel. This was the Form and Finiſhing of theſe Goblets; and for the Contents, they held a matter of Three or Four Gallons a-piece. And then for the Silver-Pieces, they were ſo Glorious and Radiant, that no Cryſtal-Mirror was Comparable to them.

The King, after all This, Furniſhed yet Thirty Golden Veſſels more, richly ſet-out, and Garniſhed up and down with Precious Stones, and overſhadow'd in the Intervals, with Vine and Ivy-Leaves in Curious Sculpture. Neither was the Excellency of theſe Miraculous Pieces to be wholly Aſcribed to the Deſign and Maſtery of the Artificer; but the King himſelf took a kind of Glory in Contributing every way to the Perfection of the Work, making it a great part of his Care and Bus'neſs, to viſit the Shops, and ſuperintend the Maſters themſelves, in the Execution of their Charge and Profeſſion; which made them much more Induſtrious and Intent, when they ſaw the King himſelf laid the Well-doing of every thing ſo much to Heart, then they would have been otherwiſe.

The Kings Additional Bounties.

Upon the Delivery of Theſe Donatives, and the Dedication of them to the Uſe and Service of the Holy Temple at Jeruſalem, Eleazar treated the King's Commiſſioners with all Honour and Acknowledgment, and ſo diſmiſs'd them with good Wiſhes, and Preſents, to Return to their Maſter. The King had no ſooner heard of their Arrival at Alexandria; and that they had brought the Seventy Elders along with them, but he ſent Inſtantly for his Two Embaſſadors, Andræas and Ariſtæus, from whom he receiv'd Eleazar's Letter, and particular Satisfaction to many Queſtions by the By. His Mind was ſo bent upon an Immediate Conference with the Seventy Perſons that were ſent over to him to Interpret the Laws, that No Creature had Acceſs to him upon any Particular Bus'neſs, though contrary to his Cuſtom of giving Private Audience once in Five days, and Publique once a Month. Having thus Secured himſelf from the Importunity of any of thoſe Caſual Interruptions, he only Waited the coming of Eleazar's Agents, who attended him ſoon after with Preſents from the High-Prieſt, and with Certain Manuſcripts of the Jewiſh Laws Written upon Parchment, in Golden Letters. Upon the King's Asking for the Books, they were Produced, to his Great Admiration at the Nicety of the Work; for the Leaves were ſo Artificially put together, that there was no Diſcerning where One Skin was joyn'd to another: His Majeſty at the ſame time telling them, that he had a Great Reſpect for the Perſons that brought him that Rarity; a Greater yet for him that ſent it; but the Greateſt Reverence of all for the Author of thoſe Laws that were now Brought and Sent him. The Deputies, and their Aſſiſtants gave the King with one Heart and Voyce ſuch moving Inſtances, by their Joynt Prayers and Acclamations, of the Zeal and Paſſion they had for his Service, that he could not forbear Weeping at the Tenderneſs of the Reſpect; for there are Tears of Joy, as well as of Sorrow. The Writings were then put into the Hands of the Officers that were to have them in Charge; and the King taking the Deputies into his Arms, told them that he would only in the Firſt place ſpeak a Word or Two to the Bus'neſs they came about; and after that, take their Perſons into his Particular Care: for he looked upon the Day of their Arrival, he ſaid, as ſo Great a Providence to him, that he reſolved to have it Obſerved all the days of his Life, as an Anniverſary Feſtival in memory of the Bleſſing; and it fell-out Luckily in this too, that it happen'd to be upon the very day of his Naval Victory over Antigonus. The King, in fine, told them that they ſhould be his Gueſts, and Order'd them their Conveniencies, and Apartments in his Own Palace. The Care of Entertaining, and Providing for Strangers, was properly Nicanor's Province; who appointed Dorothæus, under him, in this, as in Other Caſes, to ſee that Nothing might be Wanting. Now the King's Method was this, both for the Honour and Convenience of Strangers, that they ſhould be all Treated after the Way of their Own Country; and Inſtructions were accordingly given, on the Behalf of the Elders too, that the Uncouth Novelty of things might not Diſguſt them.

Upon the Receit and Dedication of the King's Donatives, his Commiſſioners are Honourably Treated and Diſmiſs'd.

The Menage of this Affair was Committed to Dorotheus, as a Perſon well read in the Faſhions, and Cuſtoms of the Jews. There were in the Firſt place, Two Seats diſpoſed of; One on the King's Right Hand, the Other on his Left, by his Own Order, and with all Becoming Deference to the Commiſſioners. When the Gueſts had taken their Places, the King bad Dorothæus ſerve them after the ſame Manner, as he had formerly ſerv'd their Countrymen upon the Like Occaſion. So that the Ægyptian Prieſts and Officers that uſually did duty at the King's Eating-time, were all Diſcharg'd; and One of our Own Deputies and Prieſts, Eliſa, by Name, was called out by the King himſelf to Bleſs the Table, who thereupon ſtood-up to give God Thanks: and after the Solemnity of a Benediction, upon what they were about to Receive, and a Fervent Prayer for the Happineſs of the King and his People, to the Infinite Satisfaction of all that were Preſent, the Company fell Chearfully to the Meat that was before them. The King took Occaſion while they were at dinner, to ſtart Several Philoſophical Queſtions, Curious and Diverting enough; and ſo to put them about from One to Another, by way of Entertainment, and Diſcourſe. The Senſe and Judgment of the Commiſſioners was ſo Grave and Pertinent to Every Point, that the King took a Wonderful Delight in the Converſation, and ſo they Continu'd Feaſting and Rejoycing for the Space of Twelve days. If any Man has a mind to know the Particular Points that were here in Agitation, I ſhall only refer him to a Book of Ariſtæus, Expreſly upon this Subject. The Excellency of this Converſation had Wonderful Effects, not only upon the King; but they brought over Menedemus, the Philoſopher alſo, to Acknowledge an Over-ruling Providence, and to put a final End to that Controverſy: The King acknowledging himſelf all this while, to be ſo Exceedingly Edify'd by Converſing with theſe People, that they had Perfected and Inſtructed him in the very Art of Government. So he Ordered them a Gratification of Three Talents a Man, and they were then Conducted to their Lodgings. At the End of Three Days, Demetrius took them along with him by a Cawſway of Seven Furlongs in Length, and a Bridge of Communication betwixt the Iſland, and the Continent; and ſo advancing from thence Nor'ward, ſettled them in a Houſe by the Sea-ſide, where they might be Quiet, and without Noiſe; and a Commodious Retreat, in fine, for Men of Thought and Contemplation. When they were now ſo diſpos'd of, that there was nothing more to be deſir'd in favour of the Undertaking, he made it his Requeſt, that they would immediately fall to Work upon the Interpretation, and ſo God ſpeed them in the Enterprize. They ſpared for neither Care nor Pains, but kept Cloſe to their Studies from Early in the Morning till Three in the Afternoon, which was their Dining Time; Dorothæus not forgetting, according to the King's Order, to Supply them with Delicacies from his Own Table; over and above a Plentiful Competency of Proviſions at the King's Ordinary Allowance. It was their Cuſtom to Wait upon the King Every Morning at his Levee; and thence to betake themſelves to their Task again, ſtill Waſhing their Hands with Sea-Water, before they Enter'd upon their Bus'neſs.

The Tranſlation finiſh'd in Seventy Two Days;

This Verſion of the Law was Finiſhed within the Compaſs of Seventy Two Days; and when That was over, Demetrius call'd all the Jews together into the Place where it was Tranſlated, and in the Preſence of the Interpreters read over the Book; the Whole Aſſembly unanimouſly approving of the Interpretation, and Extolling Demetrius, as the Occaſion of the Great Advantages they had receiv'd. He deſired alſo, that it might be read by the Eminent Men of the Nation; and after This, the High-Prieſt, the Elders, and the Magiſtrates of the People, propounded; That ſince the Tranſlation was ſo happily Finiſh'd, the Authority of it might be Ratify'd, and the Text remain Unalterable for ever. They were all ſo perfectly of the ſame Mind, that they came to this Reſolution, That the Book might be Subjected to a Further Examination, and Reviſe; and if there ſhould be found any thing in it of Exceſs or Defect, it might, upon mature Conſideration, be Rectify'd: but that upon a Further Approbation, it ſhould ſtand good for ever.

Read over, Examin'd, and Approv'd.

Reviſed, and finally Ratify'd.

The King was doubly pleas'd, to the Higheſt degree: firſt, for the gaining of his Point; and ſecondly, that it ſucceeded ſo happily to the Advantage of the Publique: but when he came to hear it read to him, he was Tranſported with Joy, in the Contemplation of the Wiſdom of the Law-giver; and enter'd into a Diſcourſe with Demetrius, that neither any Hiſtorian, nor Poet ſhould ever make mention of theſe Inconiparable Laws. Demetrius made Anſwer, that the Frame of them being ſo manifeſtly Divine, and the Matter of them ſo Venerable, People were afraid of Meddling with them; Eſpecially conſidering what Judgments had befall'n ſeveral People for the Temerity of Prophaning them; as Theopompus, taking upon him the part of a Plagiary in publiſhing Texts of Holy Writ as his Own Invention, was Struck with a Fit of Madneſs that held him Thirty Days; and in the Intervals of his Phrenzy was Conſcious of the Sin, and asked God Forgiveneſs for it; having Revelations alſo in his his Sleep that it was his Audacious Curioſity, in Confounding Sacred Things with Prophane, that brought This Diſtemper upon him. But, in fine, upon his Repentance, and Amendment, he was Reſtored again to his Right Mind. And ſo it fared likewiſe with Theodectes the Poet, who was taken Blind upon the intermixing of Divine Writ with Tragedy; and upon the Acknowledgment of his Sin, reſtored to his Sight again.

upon Confounding Sacred Things with Prophane.

Theodectes ſtruck Blind for the ſame Preſumption.

The King, upon the Receipt of Theſe Books from Demetrius, Bleſs'd God and Worſhipp'd; giving a ſtrict Command for the Preſerving of them ſafe and entire; deſiring the Interpreters alſo, that he might ſee them again as often as they could, upon a Viſit: Aſſuring them, that it ſhould turn to their Honour as well as to their Advantage. He was Obliged at preſent, he ſaid, to Part with them; but whenever they ſhould come hereafter upon their Own Accord, they ſhould not fail of ſuch an Acknowledgment as might become Wiſe Men to Receive, and a Great Prince to Give. Upon This, the King diſmiſs'd them with a Preſent to each of them of Three Rich Suits of Raiment; Two Talents of Gold; the Value of One Talent in Cups; Couches to ſit and Eat upon; with Preſents alſo for the High-Prieſt, of Ten Beds with Silver Feet, and Suits of Furniture belonging to them; a Chalice of Thirty Talents; Ten Purple Robes; a Glorious Crown; and a Hundred Pieces of Fine Linnen: beſide Cups and Goblets of ſeveral ſorts; and two Golden Veſſels Dedicated expreſly to the Service of the Temple: deſiring the High-Prieſt by Letter, that if any of theſe Commiſſioners ſhould have a mind to come to him again at any time hereafter, he ſhould give them Leave; for he had a High Eſteem for the Converſation of Learned Men, and could not think his Favours better Beſtow'd then upon ſuch Company. This is the Short Hiſtory of what Philadelphus did to the Honour of the Jews.

The King diſmiſſes the Interpreters with variety of Rich Preſents.

CHAP. III.

The Kings of Aſia always very Kind to the Jews. Antiochus the Great Marries his Daughter Cleopatra to Ptolomy King of Ægypt.

THE Jews were in Great Eſteem alſo among the Kings of Aſia, both for their Faith, and Skill in Military Matters: Inſomuch that Seleucus, Surnamed Nicanor, gave them the Privileges of Freemen in All the Cities he Built throughout Aſia and the Lower-Syria: Nay and in the Metropolis of Antioch it ſelf too, declaring it to be his Will and Pleaſure, that they ſhould Enjoy the ſame Rights, and Immunities with the Greeks and Macedonians; which was no more then what they are Poſſeſs'd of to This very Day. As for Example. The Jews being Interdicted the Uſe of Foreign Oyl, the Olympique Officers that had the Ordering of That Affair, were Obliged by the Government to Allow them ſo much Mony in lieu of it. The People of Antioch inſiſted upon the Abrogating of That Cuſtom in the Following War; but Mutianus, who was then Governour of the Province of Syria, would not agree to it. In the Reign afterward of Veſpaſian, and his Son Titus, the People of Alexandria would have had the Jews Diſfranchis'd; but ſuch was the Honour, and the Juſtice of the Romans, and Eſpecially of Thoſe Two Magnanimous Princes before-mention'd, that they could not Obtain it: Not that they wanted either Pretence or Provocation for a Revenge upon a People that had been ſuch a Thorn in their Sides, by ſo Troubleſome a War, and ſo Obſtinate a Rebellion: But they look'd upon their Rights and Privileges to be ſtill Sacred, and therefore refuſed to Gratify either their Own Paſſions, or the Importunity of Two Great Nations with any vindictive Act of Injuſtice. They laid more Weight upon the Senſe of their Ancient Merits, then upon That of their Preſent Miſdemeanour, and would not do a mean Thing, though in favour of never ſo Conſiderable an Intereſt. As for Them, they ſaid, that had Taken up Arms againſt the Romans, they had ſuffer'd enough in all Conſcience by the Calamities of the War, without any other Forfeiture; and to Puniſh Thoſe that had not Offended, would be an Indignity againſt Common Senſe and Juſtice.

The Jews much in favour with the Kings of Aſia. Seleucus Nicanor Grants them Great Privileges.

Veſpaſian and his Son Titus continue them, though the People of Alexandria preſs to have them Diſfranchis'd.

We read likewiſe to the ſame Purpoſe, of Marcus Agrippa's Good Affection to the Jews; for when the Ionians, in a Seditious Animoſity againſt thoſe People, went Open-mouth to him with a Remonſtrance, that their City being Singly, and Entirely their Own, by the Gift of Antiochus the Grandſon of Seleucus, whom the Grecians Surnamed the God, they deſir'd to be put in Poſſeſſion of it with ſole Privileges, Excluſive of All other People: Demanding further, That if the Jews ſhould pretend to the Same Immunities, it might be upon Condition of their Worshipping the Same Gods. The Jews brought the Question to an Issue, Nicolaus of Damascus being of their Council, who Obtained Judgment for them in Favour of the Right they claim'd to the Free Exercise and Enjoyment of their Own Laws and Customs: Agrippa pronouncing upon the whole Matter, that he could not agree to any Innovation upon That Point. He that would be further satisfy'd in the Series of This Transaction, may read the Whole Story at Large in Nicolaus's History, lib. 123. & 124. But not being at That time in War with the Romans, I do not so much wonder at Agrippa's Judgment in This Particular, as I do at the Generosity and Candor of Vespasian and Titus, whose very Names are not to be Mention'd but with Infinite Honour and Admiration: Persons that in all the Outrages of a Fierce, and a Bloody War, could never be Transported beyond the strictest Bounds of Humanity and Moderation. But to go on where I left off.

Nicolaus of Damascus pleads for the Jews, and Obtains a Judgment for them.

The History of Nicolaus of Damascus.

The Justice and Generosity of Vespasian and Titus.

Under the Reign of Antiochus the Great, Asia, Judæa, and Cœle-Syria, were never at rest; for Antiochus being at That time in Actual Hostility with Philopater Ptolomy, and his Son Ptolomy, Surnamed Epiphanes, whether side soever had the Better of it, the Jews betwixt the Prosperous and Adverse Fortune of Antiochus, were still sure to be Sufferers; like a Vessel in a Storm at Sea, that is Batter'd and Dash'd betwixt Two Billows, as well on the One side as on the Other: But Antiochus, in the End, Prevail'd, and made himself Master of Judæa.

During the War betwixt Antiochus and Philopater Ptolomy, the Jews were still Sufferers.

Antiochus makes himself Master of Judæa.

In process of time, after the Death of Philopater, his Son sent a Great Army into Cœle-Syria, under the Command of Scopa, who took several of their Cities, and Reduced Judæa by Force: But Antiochus, a while after, Obtained a Notable Victory over Scopa at the Head of the River Jordan, and recover'd the Places in Cœle-Syria and Samaria, which Scopa had got Possession of before. The Jews, upon This Success, Render'd themselves upon their own Accord; received the Army into their City; provided plentifully for the Elephants, and valiantly assisted in the Attaque of the Castle, where Scopa had left a Body of Men in Garrison. Antiochus thought it but Reasonable to Gratify the Jews with some Honourable Mark of the Sense he had of their Good-will and Services upon This Occasion, and so wrote to such of his Friends and Officers, as were Witnesses of the Obligations they had laid upon him: giving to Understand in the said Letters, what manner of Requital he intended to make them. You shall have the Copy of it in its Due Place; but I am first to tell you what Polybius the Megalopolitan, in the Sixteenth Book of his History, says upon This Subject. Scopas, says he, Ptolomy's General, made a Winter-War with the Jews, brake into the Heart of their Country, and wholly Subdu'd it. And then he goes on a little after, in the same Book, with the Story of Scopa's being Defeated by Antiochus, Over-running Bathamæa, Samaria, Gadara, and Abila; after which the Jews of Jerusalem, and of the Glorious Temple there, went over to him. I should say a great deal more, says he, upon This Text; but I must put it off to Another Time. Thus far went Polybius; but I shall now Return to my Relation, taking the Letter of Antiochus in my way.

Antiochus to Ptolomy in favour of the Jews.

Scopas breaks into Cœle-Syria.

Antiochus Beats him out again.

The Jews of Jerusalem go over to Antiochus.

King Antiochus to Ptolomy, Greeting.

Antiochus to Ptolomy in Honour and Favour of the Jews.

Whereas we have received several Instances of the Good Dispositions and Affections of the Jews toward Us and Our Service, from the time of our First coming into their Country, which they have Expres's'd by the Pomp and Respect of their Elders and Magistrates, in Attending us in a Body upon the Way, and the splendid Reception of our Person, and our Army, into the City, and making so ample a Provision, both for our Horses and Elephants; Assisting us likewise against the Garrison of the Ægyptians in the Castle: These Good Offices being duly Consider'd, we reckon our self Bound, in Piety and Honour, to bestow upon them some Distinguishing Marks of our Acknowledgment and Esteem; by Contributing toward the Repairing of their Miserable City, and Restoring it to its Former State of Reputation and Glory, by Recalling all their Countrymen, wherever Distressed, to their Former Habitations: And in order to the Compassing of Those Ends, we have in the first place Assigned Twenty Thousand Pieces of Silver toward the Charges of their Sacrifices, Wine, Oyl, and Frankincense; and for Fine Flower, according to the Custom of the Place One Thousand Four Hundred and Sixty Measures of Wheat, and Three Hundred Seventy Five Measures of Salt. And it is Our Will and Pleasure, that All This may be Executed and made good according to my Order. And then for any thing that may be wanting toward the Repairing of the Temple, Porch, Galleries, or Whatever else; it is our Will that the Timber be supply'd, whether from Judæa, Libanus, or elsewhere, without any Tax or Duty: And we do likewise Grant the same Immunity for all other Materials that shall be made use of for the Holy Temple; with Permission moreover of an Universal Liberty to Live and Govern Themselves according to their Country-Laws. And we do hereby respectively Discharge their Elders, Priests, Scribes, and Singing-men, of Poll-Taxes, Royal Duties, and of all Other Tributes whatsoever. And for a further Encouragement to the speedy Repeopling of this City; We do by our Authority Royal Grant unto All the Present Inhabitants of the same, and to such Others as shall come over to take-up their Habitations there, at any time betwixt This and the Month of Hyperberetæus next ensuing, a Total Exemption from All Publick Impositions for the Space of Three Years to come; and so likewise from That time forward, an Abatement of One Third part of All Taxes, in Consideration of their past Damages and Sufferings. And finally, Whereas Great Numbers of These People have been carry'd away Captive, and remain to this Day in Bondage, we do further Command, that they be forthwith set at Liberty, with Restitution, in Satisfaction for what had been Taken from them. And so we bid you heartily Farewel.

This Gracious Prince did not stop here neither; but follow'd his Generous Declaration in favour of the People, with Another Edict, which he caus'd to be Published all over his Dominions, in Substance as follows: That is to say, That no Stranger shall Presume to Enter into the Temple, but with the Consent of the Jews; and without being Purify'd, and Qualify'd beforehand for his Admittance, according to the Laws of the Country: That No Man shall dare to bring into the City, the Flesh, either of Horses or Mules, or of Asses, Wild or Tame; the Flesh of Panthers, Foxes, Hares, or of any other Creatures that the Jews are not allow'd so much as to Touch, nor the Skins of any of them; nor to Bring-up or Feed any of these, or any other Creatures in the City, but such as their Forefathers, according to God's Appointment, made use of for Sacrifices, upon the Penalty of Three Thousand Drachma's, to be levy'd upon every Offender against the said Orders, for the Use and Benefit of the Priests.

A Second Edict of Antiochus relating to the Jews Religion, Laws, and Customs.

This King had Another Eminent Occasion also to give the World a signal Proof of the High Esteem he had for us in the Matter of our Piety and Allegiance. Upon the Breaking-out of a Commotion in Phrygia, and Lydia, Zeuxes being at that time in the Head of an Army in the Upland Provinces, the King presently Order'd This General, a Person for whom he had a singular Respect, to send away from Babylon such a Number of the Jews there, into Phrygia, giving him his Instructions in a Letter to This Effect.

The King Antiochus to Zeuxes, his Friend and Father, Greeting.

If you are Well, All is Well; for I am so too. Whereas I am given to Understand, that there are Seditious Practices afoot in Phrygia, and Lydia, it stands me upon to look well about me betimes; so that I am now to Acquaint you that I am advised by my Council, and Friends, to take Two Thousand Jewish Families out of Babylon and Mesopotamia, and to Transport them into Phrygia, with their Goods and whatever belongs to them, and there to place them for a Guard in Strong Holds and Garrisons, being thoroughly satisfy'd in the Knowledge I have of their Zeal and Fidelity; not only from the Principles of their Religion, but from the Proof and Experience of their Allegiance to my Ancestors. Wherefore, it is my Pleasure (all Difficulties notwithstanding) that they be forthwith Transplanted; giving them All Assurance, that they shall still Enjoy the Freedom of their Own Laws and Customs. And upon their Arrival there, you are to Assign them Lands and Possessions, with all sorts of Conveniencies for Building, Planting, and Tillage: with an Immunity also from All Taxes, and Contributions, out of the Profits for Ten Year to come. And in the mean while, till they may be able to Support Themselves out of the Fruits of their own Industry, You are to Allow them a Competent Provision of Wheat, for the Maintenance of Themselves, and their Families: By which kind Usage they will be Encouraged to Act more Chearfully in our Service. You are finally to take care, that they be not Exposed to any sort of Trouble or Molestation. And so we bid you Farewel.

Antiochus to his General Zeuxes much to the Reputation of the Jews.

This is enough to shew what Esteem Antiochus the Great had for the Jews: After which, there followed a League of Amity and Alliance betwixt This King and Ptolomy, upon a Marriage with his Daughter Cleopatra who had in lieu of a Portion, Cœle-Syria, Phœnicia, Judæa, and Samaria. The Revenue was in Partition betwixt the Two Kings, and let out in Farm to some of the Principal Men in the respective Provinces, who took care of the Collections, and so paid their Proportions into the King's Treasury according to the Contract.

Antiochus Marries Cleopatra, the Daughter of Ptolomy.

The Samaritans were at This time Proud and Powerful, and most particularly Troublesome and Vexatious in their Inroads upon the Jews; carrying several of them away Captives; and this Ravage was Committed Chiefly in the time of the High Priest Onias: For after the Death of Eleazar, his Uncle Manasses took the Pontificat; and after his and Onias, a Weak Prince, Succeeded Manasses.

his Death, Succeeded Onias, the Son of Simon the Just; which Simon was the Brother of Eleazar, as we have said already. This Onias was Weak and Covetous; to the degree of refusing the King the Customary Tribute of Twenty Talents, which his Ancestors still made good to him, in Acknowledgment of a Duty. This Coarse Behaviour of Onias incensed Ptolomy Euergetes the Father of Philopater to such a degree, that he sent an Embassador expresly to Jerusalem, with a Menace to Demand the Payment of it, upon the Peril of having an Army Quarter'd upon their Country at Discretion, and a New Plantation Settled there, if they did not immediately Comply. This Message put the Jews out of their Wits: But Onias Out-faced the Danger, his Heart being only set upon his Mony.

Ptolomy menaces Onias by his Embassador Athenion, for refusing to pay him his Annual Tribute.

CHAP. IV.

Joseph, the Nephew of Onias, begs his Uncle's Pardon of Ptolomy; makes his Own Fortune by it, and Advances his Son Hyrcanus. The Death of Joseph.

Joseph the Nephew of Onias.

THere was one Joseph, the Son of Tobias by the Sister of Onias the High-Priest. This Joseph was a Young Man; but for his Integrity, Prudence, and Justice, a Person of Great Reputation among the Jews. While he was one time at Phicola, the Place of his Birth, his Mother sent him an Account of the Messenger before spoken of, and of his Bus'ness, who went immediately with an Invective to Onias for so Manifest an Exposure of the Publique Peace; Reproaching him withal, that if he could but save his Mony, he car'd not what became of the People, to whom he stood indebted for his Promotion, both Sacerdotal and Civil. But however, if his Heart was so set upon his Self, that he would Sacrifice his Country, Friends and all, rather then part with it, he advised him at least to make a Dutiful Application to the King about it, and to try if he could get the Whole, or at least some part of it Remitted.

Joseph Reasons the Case of Ptolomy with his Uncle, but can do no good upon him.

Onias made Answer, that he was not so fond of his Place either in Church or State, but he could Willingly part with Both, if it were Permitted him, rather then go to the King upon that Errand; and that for his part he would not Meddle in the Matter. Why then, says Joseph, will you give me leave to Attend the King upon the Same Commission? Onias told him [With all his Heart.] So Joseph went-up to the Temple, where he called a Congregation, and bad them Chear up their Hearts, for he was in Hope that this Failing of his Uncle would have no Further Ill Consequence; telling them, that if they thought fit, he would Wait upon the King himself in their Name, and do the Best he could to set Matters Right again. The Whole Multitude gave him Thanks for the Proposal, and so left the Bus'ness Entirely to his Menage.

Joseph Courts Athenion with Treats and Presents.

Joseph, upon this, went his Way presently to find out the King's Commissioner; and when he had Treated him Splendidly for some Certain days, and made him Rich Presents, he dismiss'd him to his Master again, with an Assurance that he himself would follow him very Suddenly. Joseph's Heart was now set more and more upon this Expedition, being not only Encourag'd and Invited to it, by the King's Messenger, but sure also of the Best Service he could do him there; who made no doubt at all neither, but that upon such an Application, Joseph might Gain his Point. This Person was mightily taken with the Good Graces and Address of the Young Man; and upon his Return into Ægypt, Reflecting abundantly upon the Ingratitude of Onias, he did not forget at the same time, to speak the Best things in the World of Joseph, who he said would be there himself e're long, on the Behalf of the People: which Office he had now taken upon himself, to Atone for the Ill natur'd Lazyness of his Uncle. This Minister, in fine, was so taken up still upon the Subject of Joseph's Character, and Commendations, that the King and his Wife Cleopatra were half in Love with him before ever they saw him. Upon this Occasion, Joseph sent to his Friends in Samaria to take up Mony for his Equipage; which in Clothes, Horses, Carriages, Plate, and Other Necessaries, stood him in a Matter of Twenty Thousand Drachma's. He had the hap, in his way to Alexandria to fall into Company with a Train of the Princes and Nobility of Syria and Phœnicia, who were at that time Trouping up to the King to Treat with him about his Revenue, according to a Yearly Custom they had of putting it up by the way of Outcry to the Fairest Bidder. These Great Men made themselves Merry at the poor pitiful Appearance of Joseph and his Retinue: But he kept-on his way still, directly to Alexandria; and being there informed that the King was still at Memphis, he prosecuted his Journy; and had the Good Hap to meet him sitting in his Chariot with the Queen, and his Particular Confident Athenion, in his Return to Alexandria. This Athenion was the Person that carry'd the Embassy to Jerusalem, and was so Honourably Treated by Joseph there. Joseph was no sooner in his his Eye, but he gave the King to underſtand that This was the Young-man whom he had ſpoken ſo many Excellent Things of, at his coming back from Jeruſalem. Ptolomy upon this, ſtopt and Saluted him, and took him into his Chariot; complaining, upon the firſt Greeting, How Ill he had been us'd by Onias. Sir, ſays Joſeph, an Old Man is the ſecond Time a Child; and I hope Your Majeſty will impute Nothing to Onias beyond That Infirmity: But for the Young-men that are in their Vigour of Strength and Underſtanding, I dare be Anſwerable for it, that you ſhall not find any one of us wanting in his Duty. The King was ſo Delighted with this Taſte of Joſeph's Diſcretion and Civility, upon the Firſt Encounter, that he gave Orders immediately for the Lodging of him in His Own Palace, and Entertaining of him at his Own Table: which Singular Reſpect went to the Hearts of the Envious Syrians, when they came to ſee at Alexandria the Honour that was done to Joſeph.

and upon Athenion's telling him who he was, the King takes him into his Chariot.

The King Blames Onias: and Joſeph imputes it to Age and Infirmity.

The King Entertains him in his Own Palace.

The Day of Auction was now come-on, when the Several Branches of the Revenue were to be put-up; and the Nobility of Every Several Province reſpectively to bid for the Purchaſe: So they came to a Contract for Eight Thouſand Talents upon the Duties out of Cœle-Syria, Phœnicia, Judæa, and Samaria. Joſeph blam'd the Contractors, for beating-down the Compoſition ſo much below the Value, and propounded the Doubling of it himſelf, over and above the Forfeitures, which theſe Publicans had Reſerv'd for themſelves. The King was very well pleas'd with this Propoſal for the Improvement of his Revenue, and in favour of the Propoſer himſelf too: But what Security can you give, ſays he, for the Performance of what you Undertake? Joſeph pleaſantly enough Reply'd, that he could give him the Security of Perſons beyond all Exception; and upon the King's bidding him Name them, his Anſwer was, that he doubted not but his Majeſty and the Queen would be Bound one to Another for his Honeſty and Juſtice. The King, in fine, was ſo well Satisfy'd with This Ingenious way of Proceeding, that he Intruſted him with his Revenue upon his Word, without any Other Sureties. This Surprizing Preference of a Stranger, put the reſt of the Undertakers Excceedingly out of Humour, and out of Countenance, to think of going back again with Shame and Repulſe.

Upon bidding for the Farm Joſeph Offers Double to the reſt of the Contractors.

The King agrees with him without Security.

Joſeph, upon being taken into this Truſt, deſir'd a Guard of Two Thouſand Soldiers to Support him in the Collecting of the Duty, in caſe of any Oppoſition, which Guard was granted him; and thereupon having Borrow'd Five Hundred Talents of the King's Friends in Alexandria, he went his way into Syria. Upon his coming to Askalon, and demanding the King's Tribute there, they did not only refuſe him the Mony, but affronted him Outrageouſly with Foul Words; but he preſently cauſed his Soldiers to take up Twenty of the Ring-leaders, and to put them to Exemplary Juſtice; Raiſing a Thouſand Talents out of their Forfeited Eſtates, and ſent the Treaſure to the King, with a Particular account of what had been done. The King was ſo wonderfully taken with the Conduct and Diſcretion of the Proceeding, that he left him to himſelf after that, to do whatever he thought fit. The Freſh Example of this Severity upon the People of Askalon, wrought ſuch an Effect upon the Reſt of the Syrians Elſewhere, that they ſet their Gates Open in all Places to Joſeph, and without any Difficulty, or Scruple, paid their Taxes. The Inhabitants of Scythopolis follow'd the Preſident alſo of Askalon, in the Obſtinate Refuſal of their Cuſtomary Impoſitions, and in the Contempt of the King's Officers, and Authority: So that Joſeph was Forced to deal with the Heads of the Faction there, as he had done before with Thoſe at Askalon; Confiſcating their Eſtates, and Applying the Forfeitures to the King's Uſe, and the Maintenance of the Government; accounting it a Point of Wiſdom to Secure what they had got, and to make their Country Maintain it ſelf; To ſay nothing of the Many Rich Preſents that were made by the By, both to the King, and to his People; and many more to the King's Well-Willers, and Favourites; by which Means Joſeph, both Gained Friends, and kept them.

Joſeph liv'd in this State of Proſperity, for the Space of Two and Twenty Year, having had Seven Sons by One Wife, and Another by the Daughter of His Brother Solymius, whoſe Name was Hyrcanus, whom he took to Wife upon This Occaſion.

How Joſeph came to marry Solymius, by whom he had Hyrcanus.

Travelling one time in Company with his Brother to Alexandria, to find out ſome Jew of Quality that might be a Match for a Daughter of his that he took along with him, and was at that time Marriageable; As he was at Supper with the King, he fell Paſſionately in love with a Beautiful Maid that he ſaw Dance there for the King's Entertainment. He made his Brother his Only Confident of the Secret, deſiring him that ſince he could not lawfully Enjoy her as his Wife, (being a Stranger) he would do him the Good Office to bring them together Privately. His Brother, promiſing that he would do what he could in it, Dreſs'd-up his Own Daughter, and at Night put her to Bed to him. Joſeph, that had taken a Cup too much, paſs'd the Firſt

Being a Stranger ſhe could not be his Wife, and therefore he gets her for his Miſtreſs.

Solymius puts his Daughter to Bed to him.

First Night by a Miſtake with his Brother's Daughter, and never found the Error. This Abuſe was put upon him over and over; and the Oftener he Enjoy'd this Converſation, the more Enamour'd he grew of his Miſtreſs, till at laſt he made his moan to his Brother, that he was afraid he ſhould never get that Love out of his Heart; beſide that he fear'd the King would never agree to make a Match of it. As for that Phancy, ſays Solymnius, trouble your Head no further; for you may lawfully Enjoy the Woman you Love, and Enjoy her as your Wife too. Solymnius Confeſſed the Whole Matter to him; and that he had rather Choſen to Suffer an Affront in the Perſon of his Daughter, then to have his Brother Guilty of ſo Diſhonourable a Sin. Joſeph, upon this Diſcovery, Extoll'd his Brother's Tenderneſs and Friendſhip to the Skies, and Marry'd his Daughter; by whom he had Hyrcanus, as we have ſaid already. This ſame Hyrcanus, at Thirteen Years of age, gave the World ſuch Hopes of him, to all the purpoſes of Generoſity, Underſtanding, and Good Nature, that the Pregnancy of this Youth (being the Youngeſt of that Stock) drew a Mortal Envy upon him from the reſt of his Brothers; as having the Reputation of an Advantage over all the reſt. Now Joſeph, out of a deſire to make an Experiment, which of his Children was the Beſt Inclin'd, ſent them One by One to the moſt Expert Maſters he could think of in their Several Profeſſions: But betwixt Sloth and Lazyneſs, they all came Home again as Ignorant as they went out. Joſeph, after this, ſent his Youngeſt Son Hyrcanus, upon a Seven-Days Journy into a Deſert with Three Hundred pair of Oxen to Plough and Sow there, having firſt privately taken away the Lines that ſhould Couple the Yoak, and the Plough together. When he came to the Place, and Wanted his Tackle, he was Advis'd by ſome Husband-Men to ſend Home to his Father for it; but he was againſt loſing ſo much Time, and therefore bethought himſelf of an Invention that look'd liker the Stratagem of an Old Beaten Soldier, then the Shift of a Child; That is to ſay, he cauſed Ten Yoak of Oxen to be Kill'd, dividing the Fleſh among his Workmen; and Cutting the Skins into Thongs, he Tack'd the Oxen and their Geares together; Plough'd-up the Ground, and ſow'd it as his Father had Order'd him, and ſo went Home again. Upon his Return, his Father Kiſſed and Embraced him, bleſſing himſelf at his preſence of Thought, and the Prudence of his Behaviour, and to Conſider that ſo very a Youth ſhould have the Steadineſs of Mind to put ſo Extraordinary an Invention in Execution. So that Hyrcanus was to his Father, as if he had been his Only Son; but his Brothers Hated him.

The Early Pregnancy and Reputation of Hyrcanus, being the Youngeſt of Eight Sons, makes the reſt Hate him.

The Prudence and Sagacity of Hyrcanus.

About this time, there was News brought to Joſeph that the Queen was deliver'd of a Son, to the Exceeding Joy of the Princes and Great Men of Syria, who Preſently Troup'd away together in great Pomp to Alexandria, to Gratulate the King and the Court upon this Bleſſing; only Joſeph, by reaſon of his Age, was forced to ſtay behind. But he had a Mind however to feel how his Sons ſtood Affected to this Expedition; and upon putting them to the Queſtion, One did not underſtand the ways of the Court, he ſaid; Another made a Difficulty of ſhewing himſelf to the King; and ſo with one Pretence after Another, they put it to their Father to ſend Hyrcanus on the Errand; which he was very glad to hear, and had him call'd-in immediately. Son, ſays Joſeph, what if I ſhould ſend you now upon a Complement to the King? Could you Behave your ſelf, do you think, as you ought to do? Why Sir, ſays Hyrcanus, I ſhould take it for Great Honour to be ſo Employ'd, and moſt readily Obey you. And ſays further, I ſhould not put you to any Great Expence neither; for I would menage Every thing as well as I could, and a Matter of Ten Thouſand Drachma's would do my Bus'neſs. The Father was much delighted with his Son's Sobriety and Moderation: and ſo the Diſcourſe ſtopt for a while, till the Son after a little Pauſe brake the Silence. Sir, ſays he, if I durſt be ſo Free with you, I would propoſe it to you not to ſend the King any Preſents from this Place; but rather to write to your Agent at Alexandria, to furniſh me wherewithal to buy the Richeſt, and the moſt Agreeable Curioſities for Preſents for the King, that are to be had for Mony. Joſeph reckon'd upon it, that ſome Ten Talents perhaps might ſerve the Turn: So that he Comply'd with his Son, and gave him Letters of Credit to Arion his Caſh-Keeper at Alexandria, who had ſome Three Thouſand Talents at that time in his hands: It being Joſeph's Method ſtill to remit thither the Collections he receiv'd in Syria, to be there returned into the Treaſury upon the Preciſe Pay-Day; Which Arion was Intruſted to take care of. Hyrcanus was no ſooner Diſpatcht, but away he went to Arion at Alexandria with his Letters; his Brothers at the ſame time being Engaged in a Secret Practice and Deſign upon his Life. Upon the Delivery of his Credentials, Arion asked him how many Talents would Serve his Turn; Computing that about Ten Talents, or ſomewhat over, might be Sufficient. Hyrcanus told him that he ſhould have Occaſion for a Thouſand Talents. What? ſays Arion, to be Squander'd away in Luxury and Profuſion? No no, Sir, Joſeph ſends Hyrcanus upon a Complement to Ptolomy to Joy him on the Birth of a Young Prince.

Joſeph gives him Letters of Credit to Arion his Agent at Alexandria.

Hyrcanus haſtens away to Arion.

Hyrcanus demands 1000 Talents for Preſents.

† ſays

ſays he, your Father made his Fortune by Induſtry, and Good Husbandry, and you ſhould do well to Tread in his Steps. In ſhort, you are like to have but Ten Talents of me, and I will ſee Every Penny of the Mony laid out upon the Preſents too. At this rate he went-on Huffing and Swaggering ſo long, till Hyrcanus took him-up, and laid him by the Heels for his Sawcineſs. Now the Wife of Arion being much in the Queen's favour, carry'd the Tidings of this Adventure preſently to her Miſtreſs; and the Queen hand-ed it to the King, not without ſomewhat of Reproche upon the Raſhneſs and Intem-perance of the Young Man. This Complaint was ſoon follow'd by a Meſſage from the King to Hyrcanus, giving to Underſtand, that he being ſent Expreſly by his Fa-ther to attend his Majeſty, he very much Wonder'd that he ſhould never come at him: And not only at that neither, but likewiſe at his taking upon him to Impriſon his Father's Agent: Wherefore it was his Majeſty's Command, that he ſhould wait upon him, and Acquit himſelf if he could, of the Charge that was Exhibited againſt him. Hyrcanus deſir'd the Meſſenger to Inform the King, that by the Jewiſh Law, no Man was permitted to Eat of the Fleſh of any thing that was Sacrificed, that had not been firſt in the Temple, and Offered Sacrifice himſelf; which by a Parity of Rea-ſon was his very Caſe, for he durſt not Wait upon his Majeſty, till he had firſt Preſented the Oblations, which his Father had Intruſted him withal, in Teſtimony of his Gratitude and Duty: And for the Matter of Puniſhing a Servant for his Diſ-obedience, he thought, with Submiſſion, that he had Great Right on his Side; for the Relation is ſo near betwixt Great Maſters and Little Ones, that an Ill Example in a Subject Stretches in the Conſequence to the King himſelf: For where the Con-tempt of Authority paſſes with Impunity, the Precedent is Contagious. The King could not but Smile and Wonder at the Hearing of this, to find ſo Great a Soul in ſo Young a Creature.

Arion Expoſtu-lates the Mat-ter, and Hyr-canus lays him by the Heels.

Ptolomy ſends for Hyrcanus to Chide him for what he has done.

Hyrcanus Ex-cuſes himſelf at preſent, in ſuch a Man-ner as gives the King great Satisfaction.

Arion perceiving by this time that his Court-Intereſt Fail'd him, deliver'd the Thou-ſand Talents that were demanded of him, as a Compoſition for his Liberty. After Three Days, Hyrcanus went to Court to pay his Reſpects to the King and Queen; where he had the Honour out of a Singular Reſpect they bare to his Father, to be Admitted to their Table. While this was in Agitation, he Contracted privately with Certain Merchants for a Hundred of the moſt Beautiful Youths that were to be got-ten; at a Talent a Head, and as many Lovely Ingenious Girls at the ſame Price. Be-ing Invited after this to the King's Entertainment, together with Other Perſons of the moſt Eminent Quality, the Officers that had the Ordering of the Ceremony in the Ranging of the Gueſts, aſſigned Hyrcanus, being but a Youth, the Loweſt Place at the Table. When the reſt of the Company had fill'd their Bellies with the Fleſh, they laid their Bones together by Conſent in a Mockery, before Hyrcanus; and ſet-on Tyryphon, a Jeſting Buffoon that the King took pleaſure to make Sport with: who in his Sawcy way deſir'd the King to take Notice, what a Heap of Bones Hyrcanus had before him. Juſt ſo, ſays he, has the Father pick'd the Bones of all Syria, as the Son has ſerv'd thoſe Bones that are now before him. The King could not but Smile at the Drollery of the Conceit, and asked Hyrcanus how he came to have ſuch a Pile of Bones before him. Oh Sir, ſays he, there's no Wonder in it at all; for the Dogs Devour Fleſh, and Bones and all, Pointing with his Eye to thoſe that had none before them: But Men, ſays he, ſuch as I am, when they have done with the Fleſh, throw away the Bones as I do. The King found him ſo Facetious, that he not on-ly applauded him himſelf, but recommended him alſo to the Reſpect and Kindneſs of the Company. Hyrcanus made his Court upon the Day following to the King's Friends, and the Great Men about him; and fell to Pumping of the Servants what Preſents their Maſters intended to Complement the King withal, upon the Birth of the Prince. So One ſaid Twelve Talents perhaps; Another, More or Leſs, accord-ing to their Ability; Some, in fine, One thing; Some, Another: Hyrcanus ſeeming Uneaſy all this while, upon a Pretence, that he could not come up to their Proportion; for Five Talents was all that he was to Advance. Theſe Servants told their Maſters what paſs'd betwixt them and Hyrcanus, who were not a little pleas'd to think how the Narrowneſs of the Young Man's Preſent would Leſſen him in the Eſteem of the King. But when it came to appear upon the Day appointed for the Solemnity of making their Oblations, that Twenty Talents was the moſt that was given by any Man, Hyrcanus only Excepted, whoſe Preſent was a Hundred Boys, and a Hundred Girls. The Former for the King; the Other for the Queen; and with E-very one of them a Talent for Another Preſent over and above. This was ſo Ex-ceſſive, and ſo Unexpected a Munificence, that the King himſelf and all his Friends were in Admiration at it: Beſide the Gratuity of divers Talents more, that were diſtribu-ted among the King's Miniſters and Officers for fear of the Work; Hyrcanus's Bro-thers having Employ'd their Uttermoſt Intereſt with them to get him Deſtroy'd.

The King is so delighted with it that he bid him ask what he will and he shall have it.

The King was so Tenderly Sensible of the Greatness of the Young Man's Mind, and the Graceful way of Expressing it, that he bad him Ask what he would and he should have it; of which Generous Offer he made no Other Use, then to desire his Majesty's Letters of Recommendation back again to his Father, and to his Brethren. So the King took an Honourable Leave of him; Presented him like a Prince; and with Commendatory Letters to his Father and Brothers, and to his Own Officers and Governours, he gave him his Discharge. But when his Brothers came to Understand how Magnificently the King and Queen had Receiv'd him; and the Esteem they had of him; and that his Reputation was now much Greater at his Return then it was before this Expedition, they laid their Heads together how they might meet him out of the Town under Pretence of a Complement, and Destroy him; and this not altogether without their Father's Privity neither, who was so Highly Disgusted at his Extravagant Expence upon the Late Presents, that he did not much care what became of him, though he was forced however to Dissemble the Matter for fear of the King. It came to this Issue in the Conclusion, that the Brothers met, and Assaulted him upon the Way; and after a Generous Resistance on his part, lost a Considerable Number of their Train; Two of the Brotherhood Kill'd upon the Place, and the rest made the Best Shift they could to get back again to their Father at Jerusalem. Hyrcanus kept on his Way into the City; but finding that no body Own'd him there, he Cross'd the River Jordan for his Own Security, where he Spent the Remainder of his Life in gathering the King's Duties from the Barbarians. This was in the Days of Seleucus the King of Asia, Otherwise called Soter, or the Saviour, the Son of Antiochus the Great; and at the Same time dy'd Joseph the Father of Hyrcanus; a Man of Great Piety and Resolution; and a Person that highly Contributed to the Relief and Well-being of the Jews, in all their Distresses. He Executed a Commission of Receiver of all Publique Duties in Syria, Phœnicia, and Samaria, for the Space of Two and Twenty Year. His Uncle Onias dy'd also about the Same Time, and his Son Simon Succeeded him to the Priesthood; and He going-off too, his Son Onias Succeeded Him, to whom Arius King of the Lacedæmonians sent an Embassy in the Terms following.

After the Death of Joseph, the People brake out into Mutinies, and Seditions, upon the Quarrel of the Sons that he had left behind him; the Elder Brothers making War upon the Younger. The Greater part of the People appearing also in Favour of the Former; and among the rest, Simon the High-Priest, upon the Account of His Relation. Hyrcanus did not think fit to return to Jerusalem; but however kept himself still beyond Jordan, where he was Haras's'd by a perpetual War with the Arabians, Killing Great Numbers of them, and carrying Others into Captivity. He caused to be Erected there a Marvellous Strong Castle; the Walls from the Bottom to the Top all of White Stone, with Figures upon them of several sorts of Creatures, of an Extraordinary Size and Proportion. This Building was Encompassed with a Deep Ditch, or Fish-Pool; and Vaults cut out thorough a Mountain just against it, of several Furlongs in Length, and only Broad enough at the Mouth for One Man to Enter at a time, which they did both for Fear, and Security. There were also in This Castle Fair Eating-Rooms; and Places for Entertainment and Lodging; Variety of Fountains up and down, both for Pleasure, and for Ornament; Large Courts, Stately Buildings, Lovely and Spacious Gardens: And to This Place thus perfected he gave the Name of Tyre, which lies upon the Borders of Arabia, and Judæa beyond Jordan,

This Ptolomy left Two Sons behind him in their Minority; the Name of the Elder was Philometor, and the Name of the Other, Phyſcon. Antiochus was at That time very Strong and Powerful; inſomuch that Hyrcanus, for fear of being call'd to an Account for his Inroads upon the Arabians, laid violent Hands upon Himſelf, and Antiochus took Poſſeſſion of all his Goods and Eſtate.

Onias, otherwiſe Menelaus, is Excluded from the Pontificat. He betakes himſelf to Antiochus, and Apoſtatizes from his Religion. Antiochus makes a Furious Inroad into Ægypt; but the Romans force him back again.

ONIAS the High-Prieſt dying about This time, Antiochus Epiphanes advanced to the Pontificat his Brother Jeſus, in the Minority of a Son he had then living, of whom we ſhall ſpeak hereafter. This Jeſus fell under the King's Diſpleaſure, who depoſed him from the Pontificat, and transferred it afterward to Onias the Younger Brother. Now Theſe were the Three Sons of Simon, and they all came to the Dignity, as we have already ſet forth: But Jeſus choſe rather to take upon Himſelf the Name of Jaſon, as the Other changed his Name for Menelaus. In This Confuſion of Chopping and Changing, One Brother advanc'd a Faction againſt the Other, and the People divided npon it. The Sons of Tobias Sided with the New High-Prieſt Menelaus; but the Greater part of the Multitude Joined Intereſts with Jaſon; and ſo much Over-power'd the Other, that Menelaus, and the Sons of Tobias, withdrew to Antioch, declaring themſelves, that they would no longer be ty'd-up to their Country's Laws and Inſtitutions, but go over to the Religion of their King, and the Greek way of Worſhip; deſiring Liberty to Erect a kind of Academy, or Place for Publique Exerciſes in Jeruſalem. Upon the Obtaining of This Licence, they Order'd their Bodies ſo, that even Naked there was no Viſible Difference betwixt Them and the Greeks; at the ſame time caſting-off All Regard to the Jewiſh Laws and Cuſtoms, and betaking themſelves to the Ways and Manners of Other Nations.

Antiochus finding himſelf at This time ſo Eaſy at Home, and his People ſo well Settled, had a Great Mind to try an Expedition into Ægypt, partly out of an Ambition to make Himſelf Maſter of the Country; and partly Encourag'd by the Weakneſs and Inability of Ptolomy's Sons, to Menage ſuch a War. So that he Advanced with a Mighty Army to Peluſium, where he ſlily Circumvented Philometor by Craft, and got Footing in Ægypt; advancing from thence to Memphis, and other Neighbouring Places, which he Reduced likewiſe, and ſo to Alexandria, with a Deſign to Reduce at once both the King and the City; but upon the Peremptory Command of the Romans, to withdraw his Army immediately, upon his Utmoſt Peril, he gave over his Deſign, and Quitted what he had taken, as we have ſaid heretofore: But in regard that we have only Touch'd upon This Subject in our Former Writings, it will be now Neceſſary to Handle the Hiſtory of this King more at large; and in Particular to Report the Manner of his Taking Jeruſalem, and the Temple.

Antiochus upon the Death of Onias, advances his Brother Jeſus to the High-Prieſthood, under the Name of Jaſon. Jaſon is depoſed, and the Dignity tranſferr'd to his Younger Brother Onias, under the Name of Menelaus. Two Factions; the Sons of Tobias ſide with Menelaus, and the Multitude with Jaſon. This Party of Tobias renounces the Jewiſh Worſhip, and goes over to the Religion of their King. ANtiochus, at his Return from Ægypt, when he was Frighted away by the Menaces of the Romans, marched with his Army Outright to Jeruſalem, and Enter'd the City in the Hundred and Forty Third Year from the time that the Kingdom of Syria fell into the Family of Seleucus. He made Himſelf Maſter of it without any ſort of Difficulty; for the Gates were ſet open to him by the Treachery of a Party he had made in the Town, where he Exerciſed Great Cruelty, and put a great many People to the Sword, without Diſtinction of Friend or Foe; Pillag'd the City, and carry'd the Treaſure away to Antioch.

[a] Ruf. Regio Sebonitis.

The Time when this Calamity happen'd.

This Calamity happen'd in the Second Year after the Taking of the City, in the Hundred Forty and Fifth Year from the First Seleucus; the Twenty Fifth Day of the Month which we call Chasleu; the Macedonians Appellæus; and in the Hundred Fifty and Third Olympiad. In the Lience of this Outrage, they did not Spare so much as those that Quietly Open'd the Gates to them, only for the Greater Liberty of breaking-in upon the Riches of the Temple; where the Spoil was so Considerable, that the very Value, they thought might, in some degree Atone for the Treachery. The Temple, in Short, was wholly Stript and Rifled; all the Holy Vessels, and Utensils Taken away; the Golden Candlesticks, the Golden Altar; and the Table of Shew-Bread, as they call'd it, among the rest. The Curtains, and the Embrodery of Silk and Fine Linnen; nay, the very Hiding-Places, where they Conceal'd an Immense Mass of Treasure, were all laid Open and Expos'd; and not so much as any Reliques left of this Prodigious Wealth. And further, to Consummate the Misery of these Poor People, their Daily Sacrifices were forbidden; the City Levell'd with the Ground; the Inhabitants partly Kill'd, partly carry'd away Captives; together with their Wives and Children, to the Number of Ten Thousand; Their Walls Demolish'd; their Stately Edifices Consum'd by Fire: They Erected a Tower in the City that overlook'd, and Commanded the Temple it self; and when they had Supply'd and Fortify'd the Place, a Great Garrison of Macedonians put into it, but not without a Mixture of Execrable and Apostate Jews, that were as Malicious as the very Worst of their Enemies, They Raised an Altar in the Temple, and Sacrificed Hogs upon it, in a most Spiteful Contradiction to the Laws and Constitutions of the Jews. They put all People to Extremities that would not Renounce the True God, and Worship their Idols: And so in all Other Cities and Towns, they built Temples and Altars, for the Daily Sacrifice of Swine's Flesh. They made it Grievously Penal for any of their Jews to Circumcise their Children, keeping their Officers and Informers still at hand, either to Prosecute them upon the Violation of their Edicts, or to Extort from them by Terror, or Force, an Obedience: And so it was, in fine, that the Greater part of the Jews, either of their Own Accord, or for the fear of Punishment, Comply'd with the King's Orders; though there were Others again so Brave and Generous, as to stand Firm against all Tryals of Torment, and Death it self, rather then depart from the Religion and Laws of their Country: having their Bodies Cut and Torn with Whips, and then Crucify'd Alive, with their Wives, and so many of their Children as were Circumcis'd, hanging about their Necks according to the King's Order. The Holy Scriptures to be Destroy'd also wherever they were found; and it was made Death so much as to Entertain them.

The Spoil, to an Incredible Value:

and no Worse Enemies then the Apostate Jews them selves.

Unheard of Cruelties.

When the Samaritans found the Jews brought to so Miserable a State of Distress, there was no longer any Talk of Claiming Kin'red with them, or crying up the Temple of Gerizin for the Temple of God; but they were off and on still, as it lay for their Interest; as we have Noted of them before. Alas, Alas! They were of the Race of the Medes and Persians, they said, (as in truth they were) and nothing would serve them, but they must Wash their Hands of having any thing to do with so Wretched a People, by a Solemn Embassy and Address to Antiochus; which they dispatched away upon this Occasion, and in these Terms.

The Sichemites Petition to Antiochus.

That the Forefathers of your Petitioners lying under the Affliction of many and Grievous Plagues in their own Country, were partly Wrought upon by that Calamity, and in part prevail'd upon by the Superstition of an Ancient Custom to Joyn in the Religious Observance of a Certain Festival which the Jews call the Sabbath, and in the Erecting of a Temple upon the Mountain Garizin, where Sacrifices were Offered to a God without a Name. Now since so it is that your Majesty hath been pleased to Order the Punishment of this Wicked People according to their Deserts, and to appoint Officers, who upon a Supposition that we were all of the same Stock, are thereby Induced to Involve your Petitioners with the Jews in the same Crime: Whereas we derive our Original from the Sidonians, as we can make appear by Records Extant to this Day. May it therefore please your Majesty, out of your Clemency and Goodness, to Grant such Order to Apollonius our Governour, and to Nicanor his Deputy, in favour of your Petitioners, that they may not be any further Molested for the Future, upon the Suspicion of any Correspondency or Confederacy with the Jews, to whom we are as much Strangers in our Manners, as in our Extraction: and we do further pray that the Temple, which hath stood hitherto without any Dedication at all, may from this time forward be called The Temple of Jupiter of Greece, to the End that when we shall live in more Security and Freedom, as to the Go-

Mathias, and his Sons Kill the Messengers that would force them to a False Worship. His Dying Speech.

THere lived at this time in Modim (a Village of Judæa one [a] Mathias, a Priest of the Family of Joarib, and a Native of Jerusalem. This Mathias, was the [b] Son of John, the Son of Simon; and Simon the Son of Asmonæus. Mathias had Five Sons; Joannan, who was Surnamed Gaddis; Simon, otherwise Thassi; Judas who was also called Maccabeus; Eleazar, alias Auran; and Jonathan Surnamed Apphus. This Mathias would be ever now and then Condoling with his Sons, upon the Deplorable State of the Jewish Nation; their City laid Desolate; their Temple Pillag'd and Prophan'd, with a Thousand other Calamities; and he would be Often saying also, how much more Glorious it would be to fall a Sacrifice to the Laws and Religion of their Country, then to linger out a Miserable Life at This Servile Rate.

1 Maccab 2.

The Zeal and Resolution of Mathias and his Five Sons for the Religion of their Country. 1 Mac. 2.

Upon the coming of the King's Officers into the Village to press the Execution of their Master's Orders, they began with Mathias, as a Person of Authority, and one that might be a Leading Example to all the rest. They laid before him the Danger of Disobeying, with the Advantages and Rewards he should receive upon his Compliance; and upon these Terms, Charg'd him in the King's Name to Worship as he was Commanded; which he not only refused to do, but told them Frankly moreover, that if Every Soul within their Master's Dominions should Yield to him in that Particular, he would never either submit to him himself, or Advise any of his Sons to abandon the Religion of their Country. Mathias stopt here; and after a short Silence, out Stept a Jew to Sacrifice according to the King's Way; but Mathias and his Sons were so Inflam'd at the Indignity of this Affront, that in a Fury they not only Kill'd the Jew, but the King's Officer, Apelles, with all his Guard about him, as they were forcing the People to that Abominable Worship. In this Heat, they Overturn'd the Altar also; Mathias calling out with a Loud Voice to the People about him. As many of you, says he, as have any regard for your Honour, or for your Religion, follow me: And so the Father and the Sons withdrew themselves immediately into the Wilderness, leaving their Goods and their Effects behind them. Soon after this, a great part of the rest of the People with their Wives and Children, after so Generous an Example, fled into the same Desert, where they made a Shift to live for some time in Caves. When this came to the Ear of the King's General Officers, they drew the Garrison out of the Castle at Jerusalem, and March'd after the Jews into the Wilderness. Upon coming up to them, they try'd them first by Good Councel, and fair Words; Advising them to bethink themselves, and to take Soberer Measures, without forcing the Soldiers upon the Necessity of a Military Execution: But all this was to no purpose; and when they saw there was no good to be done that way, they pitch'd upon the Sabbath-Day for an Attaque upon them; burning and destroying them in their Holes, without any sort of Resistance, and without so much as Stopping the Mouths of their Caves; for such was the Reverence they had for the Sacredness of that Day, and for the Observance of the Laws that Commanded them to keep it Holy, that they chose rather to Perish, then Prophane it. There were a Matter of a Thousand of them, Men, Women, and Children that were thus Suffocated under ground; but there were Great Numbers also that made their Escape, and Listed themselves under the Command of Matthias. But upon This Experiment, he Preached Another Doctrine to them; and that in case of such an Extremity, they were to Fight, and to Defend themselves upon the Sabbath, as well as upon Another Day; for otherwise That Scruple would be their Total Destruction; when their Enemies taking Advantage of That Superstition, would be sure still to Attaque them at a time when they were certain they should meet with no Resistance. The Reason of This Discourse was so clear, that they were all convinced of the Lawfulness of Using their Arms upon the Sabbath, in case of Necessity; and the Practice of it has continu'd ever since. This Great General was by This time Master of a considerable Force; insomuch that he destroy'd their Altars, and put all Apostates to the Sword wherever he could come at them; appointing Children to be Circumcis'd, which was before forbidden; and driving away the King's Officers that were appointed to hinder it: having drawn All into a Body, that had Dispersed themselves up and down into Privacies and Hiding-places for fear of the Enemy.

Matthias cries down the Doctrine of Non-Resistance upon that Day, and cures the Superstition.

Matthias destroys the Idol-Altars, and puts Apostates to the Sword.

Matthias having now been a Full Year in this Command, felt himself seized with a Mortal Illness; and calling his Sons about him, spake to them to this purpose. My Dear Sons, says he, My Life is drawing to an End; but I am now to charge you upon my Blessing, before I leave you, that you stand firm to the Cause that your Father has Asserted before you, without any Staggering or Shrinking. Remember what I have told you; and do as I have Advis'd you. Do your Uttermost to support the Rights, and the Laws of your Country, and to Restore the Order of a Nation that wants but very little of being Swallow'd up in Confusion: Have nothing to do with those, that either for Fear, or for Interest, have Betray'd it. Shew your selves to be Sons Worthy of such a Father; and in Contempt of all Force and Extremity, carry your Lives in your Hands, and deliver them up with Comfort, if any Occasion should require it, in Defence of your Country; Computing with your selves, that this is the way to preserve you in God's Favour; and that in Consideration of so Unshaken a Virtue, he will in time Restore you to the Liberty of your Former Life and Manners. Our Bodies 'tis True, are Mortal; but Great and Generous Actions will make us Immortal in our Memory, and That's the Glory I would have you Aspire to: That is to say, the Glory of making the History of your Life Famous to After-Ages by your Illustrious Actions. Be sure, in the First place, to agree among your selves, and in what Case soever any one of you hath an Advantage over the rest, give way to Every Man in the Business of his Province and Talent. As for Example; it being Simon's Faculty to make a Right Judgment of Things, I shall advise you to make him your Councel. Maccabeus is a Man made for Military Conduct and Bravery; Wherefore chuse him for your General, as the Best Qualify'd for the Vindicating of your Friends, and for the Crushing of your Enemies. Do but mind your Business; and Depend upon it, that All Men of Honour and Piety will Joyn with you.

After the Death of Matthias, Judas Succeeds to the Command of the Army.

Matthias concluded his Discourse to his Sons with Prayers to God for a Blessing upon their Endeavours, toward the Redemption of their Country-men, and the Recovery of their Ancient Rights and Privileges. He departed This Life soon after; and being Bury'd at Modim, so soon as his Funeral Obsequies, according to the Forms of Decency and Honour, were well over, Judas, otherwise called Maccabeus, had the Publique Administration put into his Hands; which was in the Year One Hundred Forty Six, reckoning from Seleucus the First: And he was so well Seconded by his Brothers, that he Clear'd the Country of the Enemy; put all Renegado's to the Sword, and Purged the Land from all the Abominable Pollutions that had been Practis'd there.

Judas Maccabeus Defeats Apollonius, the Governour of Samaria, and kills him hand to hand. Seron, upon This, marches against Judas. He himself falls in the Action, and his Army is totally Routed.

a great Number of his People upon the Place, and Apollonius himſelf for One; Diſarming him with his Own Hand, and carrying-off his Sword in Triumph. He had alſo the Spoil of the Camp, a Booty of Prodigious Value.

The Tidings of This Defeat, and of their vaſt Enforcements that came Thronging-in to Judas, upon the Succeſs (even to the degree of a conſiderable Army) gave Seron the Governour of Cœle-Syria to underſtand, that it was high time to look about him: So that he took-up a Reſolution immediately to puſh it to a Battle, reckoning himſelf Bound, even upon a point of Truſt and Confidence, to Chaſtiſe Mutineers, and bring Rebels to Obedience. In order to This Expedition, with what Men he had of his Own, and the Additional Force of a Rabble of Fugitive Jews, he took his March to Bethoron, a Village of Judæa, where he Pitch'd his Camp: Whereupon, Judas put himſelf in poſture to Encounter him; but finding his Soldiers out of Humour, if not out of Heart; whether it was for Fear of their Mighty Army, or for Faintneſs upon Over-faſting, he made them a ſhort Harangue, that brought them to their Metal again. Fellow-Soldiers, ſays he, it is not the Arm of Fleſh, but God that gives the Victory; not Multitudes of Men, but Truſt and Confidence in the Almighty. This is no more than we have found many and many a time Experimentally True in the Hiſtory of our Anceſtors; who with an inconſiderable Number of Men, in a Righteous Cauſe, that is to ſay, in the Defence of their Religion, Laws, Liberties, Wives and Children, have put many Thouſands to Flight. Great is Truth, in ſhort; and the Force of Innocence is Invincible. With theſe Words, he led his Men on to the Battle, where they behaved themſelves like Heroes; Engaged Seron, and Kill'd him upon the Spot; Defeating the Whole Army of the Aſſyrians. For upon the Fall of their General, their Troups were preſently Broken and Scatter'd, and every Man's Buſneſs was only to Shift the beſt he could for Himſelf. Judas had the Chaſe of them as far as the Plain; ſome Eight Hundred of them were ſlain upon the Field of Battle, and the reſt made their Eſcape toward the Sea-ſide.

Judas gives Battle to Seron; Kills him upon the Spot, and Routs his Army.

CHAP. XI.

Judas Maccabeus Encounters Antiochus with a Mighty Army, and Defeats him. He cuts-off Five Thouſand of Another Army under Lyſias; Purifies the Temple, ſets the Country Right, and ſo Returns to Jeruſalem.

THeſe Diſaſters, one upon the Neck of Another, forced Antiochus upon the Neceſſity of an Extraordinary Levy; inſomuch, that what with his Own People, and with Greek Mercenaries that he took into Pay, he got a Mighty Army together in a ſhort time, with a Reſolution to break into Judæa with it early the Next Spring: But theſe Troubles had given ſuch an Interruption to the Raiſing of his Taxes, over and above the Frankneſs and Generoſity of his Own Nature, that upon the Payment of his Troups, he found Mony fall ſhort, and that the Income of his Revenue would not anſwer the Charge of the War. Upon This Conſideration, he Propoſed rather to go into Perſia firſt, and to Supply himſelf with what Monies he could pick-up out of That Province, leaving the Command of all the Country betwixt Ægypt and Euphrates, during his Abſence, in the Hands of one Lyſias, a Perſon of an Approved Faith and Integrity, together with ſome part alſo of his Troups and Elephants: Giving him further in Charge, to have a Particular Care of his Son Antiochus, till he ſhould come back again. And moreover, that upon the Reducing of Judæa, and the Sale of all the Inhabitants for Slaves, he ſhould utterly Deſtroy the City, and Extirpate the Nation. Upon the giving of Theſe Orders, he Marched ſtreight away from Perſia, in the Year One Hundred and Forty Seven; and paſſing the Euphrates, went forward into the Higher Countries.

Antiochus makes ſtrong Preparations for the Next Campaign.

He leaves Lyſias to menage the War of Judæa in his Abſence, and to take Care of his Son Antiochus.

Lyſias took to his Aſſiſtance, in the Execution of This Commiſſion, Ptolemy the Son of Dorymenes, Gorgias, and Nicanor; Three of the Beſt Officers he could find among the King's Beſt Friends. He put Theſe Commanders in the Head of Forty Thouſand Foot, and Seven Thouſand Horſe, with Orders to March forthwith into Judæa. They advanced as far as Emmaus, and there Encamped upon the Plain, where there came over to them great Numbers of Auxiliaries from Syria, and other Neighbouring Countries, and an Abundance of Fugitive Jews; beſide ſeveral Merchants and Traders, with a great deal of Mony about them to Buy Slaves; who brought Fetters alſo and Manacles with them of all ſorts to ſecure their Priſoners. The Enemy had gotten a Formidable Army; but Judas however bad them caſt themſelves upon Providence, and Fear Nothing; and ſo they Humbled themſelves in Sackcloth, Faſting and Prayer, according to the Cuſtom of the Country, in Imminent Danger; Imploring God's Mercy, Favour, and Protection. The General's next Bus'neſs was to Range his Men by Regiments, Troups, and Companies, into Order of Battle, according to the Jewiſh Cuſtom; and then to Diſcharge the Army of All New-marry'd Men, and ſuch as had lately made Purchaſes, who probably might be thinking of ſomething elſe when they ſhould be Fighting, in a Diſtraction betwixt the Care of their Particular Intereſt, and the Service of the Publique: animating his People alſo at the ſame time, by his Words, as well as his Actions, to Acquit themſelves like Men of Honour and Courage.

A Generous Speech of Judas to his Soldiers.

We ſhall never have, ſays he, my Fellow Soldiers and Companions, ſuch an Opportunity again of Shewing our Bravery in the Defence of our Country, and the Contempt of all Dangers, as we have now before us; for upon the Iſſue of To-Morrow's Combat, depends, not only our Liberty, but all the Comforts and Adaantages that attend it; and over and above the Bleſſing of ſuch a Freedom in it ſelf, and in it's Own Nature, our very Religion lies at Stake with it too, and we cannot Secure the One, but by Preſerving the Other. Bethink your ſelves Well what it is that you are to Contend for, and you will find it to be no leſs then the Whole Sum and Subſtance of the Greateſt Happineſs that ever you Enjoy'd: That is to ſay, in the Peaceable and Bleſſed Poſſeſſion of your Ancient Laws, Rites, and Diſcipline. Now whether you will rather Chuſe to Periſh with Infamy, and to Involve the Miſerable Remainder of all your Countrymen in the Same Ruine, or to Venture One Generous Puſh for the Redemption of your ſelves, and your Friends, that's the Single Queſtion. Death is the ſame thing to a Coward, that it is to a Valiant Man, and as Certain to the One as to the Other: But there's a Great Difference in point of Honour, and Everlaſting Fame, betwixt a Gallant Man that falls in the Vindication of his Religion, Liberties, Laws and Country, and a Scoundrel that Abandons all for fear of loſing a Life which he cannot ſave at laſt. Take Theſe Things into your Thoughts, and make This Uſe of the Meditation. You have nothing to Truſt to but God's Providence, and your Own Concurring Reſolutions; and at the Worſt, while we Contend for Victory, we can never fail of Glory.

Judas has word ſent him that Gorgias intended to beat-up his Quarters that Night. 1 Mac. 4.

Judas takes this Opportunity of Surprizing the Enemy in their Camp at Emmaus;

After This Speech of Judas to his Soldiers, and juſt as his Head was at Work upon the Bus'neſs of the Army, there came Intelligence to him from a Sure Hand, that Gorgias would be with him that Night with a Thouſand Horſe, and Five Thouſand Foot, with ſome Renegado-Jews for their Guide, to Surprize him, and beat-up his Quarters. This Diſcovery put Judas upon a Deſign of Countermining him; which was at the ſame time to make an Attempt upon the Camp of the Enemy, taking the the Opportunity of their being ſo divided. In Order to this he call'd preſently for Supper; Cauſed ſeveral Fires to be made in his Camp, and ſo Marched all Night toward Emmaus, where the Enemy lay. Gorgias, in the mean time, finding no body left in the Jews Camp; and preſuming that they were run away for fear, to hide themſelves in the Mountains, reckon'd that he had little more to do then to learn how he might Hunt them out. But Judas coming by break of Day to the Enemy's Camp with only Three Thouſand Men, and thoſe Ill-Armed too; and finding the Other Party Accouter'd at all Points, and their Camp in very Good Order, Judas told his People for their Encouragement, that they ſhould not fear to Attaque them even if they were all Naked, ſo long as they were Certain of God's Favour and Protection, that would Support them againſt all Other Difficulties: And with theſe Words, he Order'd the Sounding of the Charge; and breaking-in upon them at the ſame Inſtant, put them into ſuch a Fright at the Surprize, that after the putting of thoſe to the Sword that Reſiſted, the reſt betook themſelves to Flight, and they had the Purſuit of them as far as Gadara, and ſo to the Plains of Idumæa, Azotas and Iamnia. The Number of the Slain was about Three Thouſand. But Judas would not ſuffer his People to Meddle with the Spoil, in regard that the Troups of Gorgias were as yet Entire; but upon the Routing of him, he ſaid they might take Poſſeſſion of the Booty at leiſure. While theſe Words were between his Lips, Gorgias's People diſcovering from an Eminence near hand, the Dead Bodies of his Friends; the Havock that had been made in their Tents, and their Camp all in a Smoak: They took for granted all this while that Judas's Men were ſtill in a Body, and in Condition to Attaque them: So that they fled immediately upon it, and diſperſed themſelves Several Ways; Every Man Conſulting his Own Safety. The Victory being thus Gained without a Blow, Judas turn'd his Men looſe to the Pillage of the Field, where they found Gold and Silver; Glorious Habits of Purple and Scarlet, and Other Rich Booty in abundance; which they carry'd-off Safe and Triumphing, Singing as they Marched, and giving Thanks to God, the Bleſſed Author of that Victory, which proved both an Earneſt, and a Foundation of their Future Freedom.

where he Kills part, and gives Chace to the reſt.

Gorgias's People finding the Ways Strew'd with Dead Bodies, and the Camp in a Smoak, give all for Loſt, and Every Man Shifts for himſelf.

Lysias was so Sensible of the Shame and Wound of this Disgrace, that to Redeem his Credit, he brought into the Field, the Year following, an Army of Sixty Thousand Foot and Five Thousand Horse; all Try'd and Choice-Men; and with this Body he Enter'd into Judæa by the way of the Mountains, Encamping at a Place called Bethsura. Judas was not at all Discourag'd at the Odds of Number, but Marched directly up to him with a Party only of Ten Thousand Men. His Trust was only in God: So that after a Short, and a Fervent Prayer for a Blessing upon his Arms, he Charged the Enemy so Home, that upon the First Shock, he forced their Line, and Cut them off Five Thousand Men upon the Place. This Unexpected Disaster put their whole Army into such a Confusion, that Lysias finding them Obstinately Determin'd either to Live or Dye Free, thought it his Best Course to Withdraw his Troups before the Consternation was gone too far; out of an Apprehension, not so much of their Strength, as of their Despair: so that Lysias returned to Antioch, where he posted himself by the help of Mercenaries, and Other Additional Enforcements, to be ready for the First Opportunity of a Revenge upon the Jews.

Lysias Recruits, and falls into Judæa with a Powerful Army again the Year following.

Judas was so Flush'd with these repeated Successes against the Forces of Antiochus, that he prevailed upon the Jews, in Confidence that after so many Victories Obtained, God would not now forsake them, to March without any more Delay to Jerusalem it self, and there to Purge the Temple, and offer-up their Daily Sacrifices: But when they came thither, and found the Temple Abandon'd; the Gates all Burnt, and the Courts Over-run with Weeds, Judas, and his People could not but shed Tears to see the Uncouth Solitude and Deformity of the Place. The Two Great Works that he first Enter'd upon, were the Assault of the Cittadel, and the Cleansing of the Temple. The Former he Committed to his Officers, and Soldiers, and reserved the Care of the Other to himself. So soon as he had gone thorough with the Purging of it in Form, he provided New Vessels and Utensils; a Candlestick; a Table, and an Altar of Incense all of Pure Gold; put-up New Veils and Hangings upon the Walls, and before the Passages of the Doors; and in the Next place supply'd the Doors themselves. The Altar that had been prophaned with Idolatrous Sacrifices, and Burnt-Offerings, was Demolished, and Remov'd; and Another of Unhewn Stone, [according to the Mosaical Precept,] Erected in the Place of it. Upon the Twenty Fifth Day of the Month Casleu, which the Macedonians call Appellæus, they set Lighted Tapers in the Candlesticks; Offer'd Incense upon the Altar, and laid the Shew-Bread upon the Table, and so went-on to their Oblations of Burnt-Offerings: And this fell out precisely, upon the Same-Day-Three-Years from the Prophanation of the Temple and Religion by Antiochus; the Temple having now been full Three Years Deserted. This happen'd in the [a] Year One Hundred Forty Five; the Twenty Fifth Day of the Month Appellæus, and the Hundred and Fifty Third Olympiad: Which Solemnity of Purification was Repeated also on the Anniversary Day of the Year One Hundred Forty Eight; Olympiad One Hundred Fifty and Four, as the Prophet Daniel had Expressly foretold, Four Hundred and Eight Years before this Desolation by the Macedonians came to pass.

Judas Marches directly to Jerusalem to Purge the Temple, and Restore God's Worship.

The Celebration of this Festivity was Continu'd by Judas for Eight Days, with all Solemnity of Sacrifices and Rejoycing; as Magnificent Feasting, and the Freedom of Indulging themselves in all Honest and Lawful Satisfactions and Delights; and the Air Ringing with Hymns of Acclamation, Praise, and Thanksgiving. The People, in fine, were so Transported at the Unexpected Blessing of finding themselves Restored to the Religion and Laws of their Forefathers, that they appointed an Anniversary of Eight Days Solemnity to be Strictly Observ'd by their Posterity for ever after; which we have Constantly Celebrated from that time to this, under the Name of the [b] Festival of Lights; Alluding, I suppose, to the Comfort of that Light, which beyond all Hope Shined down from Heaven upon us on This Occasion. Judas in the mean while Rebuilt the Walls of the City, and Fortify'd them with Strong Towers to keep-off an Enemy; Settling a Garrison in Bethsura, and putting the Place into a State and Posture of Defence.

The Temple Purify'd, and God's Holy Worship Re-establish'd.

The Neighbouring Nations were so Irritated at the Growing Power and Confidence of the Jews, that they set their Instruments at Work by Fraud or Treachery to Circumvent them, Destroying many of them at Unawares: Judas, in the mean time, using the Best Means he could, either to Prevent, or to Disappoint their Incursions. He fell at this time upon Acrabatan, where he Kill'd Great Numbers of the Edomites, the Posterity of Esau, making himself Master also of a Great Booty. He block'd-up the Sons of Baan likewise, their Chief, in the Strong Places they were possessed of, and where they lay in Wait to make Sallies upon the Jews, taking the Places by Assault; Killing the Defendents, and laying the Forts in Ashes. They Stript them of what they had, and Redeemed the Priſoners with what Goods they had taken from them, and ſo Conducted them back to Jeruſalem.

Simon Relieves Galilee, and ſets the Priſoners at liberty, with a great Slaughter of the Enemy.

At the ſame time Judas, and his Brother Jonathan, after Three Days March beyond Jordan into the Wilderneſs, were Amicably received by the Nabathites, who very kindly gave them Intelligence of the Extreme Diſtreſs and Danger of divers of their Friends and Countrymen, who were Cloſe Shut-up in the Towns and Caſtles of Galaad; adviſing them withal, that they would make what Haſt they could by the Way of the Deſert to Carry them Relief. In this Expedition, they took the Town of Baraſa by the Way, putting all people to the Sword that were able to bear Arms, and burning the City to the Ground. It was now towards Night, but Judas ſtill Proſecuted his Way to a Caſtle wherein he Underſtood the Jews were Beſieg'd; and coming thither betimes in the Morning, he found the Enemy hard at Work with their Machines and Scaling-Ladders, to force the Place; whereupon he diſtributed his Troups into Three Diviſions; Animated his Men to behave themſelves Reſolutely for the Relief of their Countrymen and Friends; and ſo upon the Sound of the Trumpet, Charged the Enemy in the Rear. So ſoon as Timotheus underſtood that Judas Maccabæus had the Command of this Action; a Perſon whoſe Valour and Conduct he knew ſo much of beforehand by Woful Experience, his Men took ſuch a Fright at the very Name, that they fled immediately upon hearing of it: Eight Thouſand of them fell upon the Place; the Jews, upon the Rout, following them at their Heels. Judas, upon the Purſuit, took a Town of the Barbarians called Mallam, where they put all the Males to Death, and deſtroy'd the City by Fire. They did the ſame thing alſo at Caſphon, and Boſor, and Other Places that they took in that Country.

Some ſhort time after This, Timotheus got a mighty Body of an Army together; and among other Auxiliaries, he had a Band of Arabians. They Croſs'd the River, and Encamped near Raphon, where he encouraged his People to Acquit themſelves like Men, and to be ſure to keep the Jews from paſſing the River; for the whole Cauſe, he ſaid, depended upon it; and that if ever they gain'd That Paſs, they would carry the Day. When Judas underſtood that Timotheus was Reſolved upon, and Prepared for a Battle, he paſs'd the River immediately with his Army, and gave the Onſet; and put the Army to the Rout, upon the firſt Encounter; Killing thoſe that Reſiſted, and Scattering the reſt; who caſting away their Arms, and ſome running one way, ſome another, part of them betook themſelves for Sanctuary to the Temple of Carnaim, in hope that the Place might Protect them: but Judas took the Town by Force; burnt the Temple, and destroy'd all the Inhabitants by Fire and Sword.

This Difficulty being over, he gather'd together all the Israelites that were in the Country of Galaad, with their Wives, Children, and Goods, and carry'd them all into Judæa. The City of Ephron lay so directly in his way, that there was no avoiding it without going a great way about; so that he sent a fair Message to the Inhabitants for Leave to pass with his Army thorough the Town: but the Ports being Barricado'd, and the Avenues cut-off, the Inhabitants in plain Terms deny'd him any Passage that way. Upon this Repulse, he put his Men in Heart and Posture for the Attaque of the Town; Begirt it immediately, and in One Day and Night made himself Master of it; laid it in Ashes, and Marched with his Army over the Bodies of the Dead thorough the Ruins of it; putting all the Males that were found in it to the Sword. After Passing the River Jordan, they Advanced to a Great Plain near Bethsan, called by the Greeks, Scythopolis; and from thence returned to Judæa; the People rejoycing all the way they went with Hymns and Triumphal Songs, and Offering Sacrifices of Thanksgiving for the Safety of the Army; for they had not yet lost so much as One Jew in all these Encounters.

Ephron being his nearest way he demands a Passage to it; but is refus'd.

Joseph the Son of Zacharias, and Azarias, two great Captains, being left for a Guard to Judæa, in the Absence of Simon, who was now Marched into Galilee against the People of Ptolemais; and Judas with his Brother Jonathan against the Galaadites; these Commanders reckon'd upon it as a Point of Honour, to signalize themselves by some Glorious Adventure, as well as their Brethren. In this Fit of Emulation, to Iamnia they went; where Gorgias, the Governour of the Place, gave them a fair Battle before the Town; Kill'd a matter of Two Thousand of them, and Pursu'd the rest to the very Borders of Judæa. This Calamity was but Just upon them, for not Obeying the Order of their General, who had positively Commanded them Not to Engage the Enemy upon any Terms, till his Return. This Caution was much to the Reputation of the Providence and Foresight of Judas, who very well understood, that if they departed from their Instructions, they would suffer for it.

Joseph fights a Battle contrary to his Orders, and is Defeated.

But Judas and his Brethren carry'd-on the War all this while vigorously against the Edomites; pressing them on All hands: as, they Took Hebron by Force; Demolish'd the Fortifications of it, and Burnt the Towers and Castles down to the Ground; Laid the Enemy's Country all Waste; Demolished Marissa, and from thence in the same Heat Over-ran and Pillag'd Azotus: And in this Glut of Booty and Victory, they returned All Safe and Triumphant to Jerusalem.

Antiochus Epiphanes Besieges Elimais, but forc'd to draw-off. He acknowledges the Righteous Judgment of God in it, and so he Dies.

AS Antiochus Epiphanes was about this time in his Progress thorough some of his Upland Provinces, he was told of a mighty Rich City in Persia called Elimais; and of a most Magnificent Temple in it Dedicated to Diana; where were depositted Precious Donatives of all sorts, with the very Shields and Breast-plates of Alexander the Son of Philip of Macedon. Antiochus was so mov'd with the Fame of these splendid Curiosities, that he advanced toward it with his Army to take it by Assault: But the Inhabitants, without any Regard either to his Power, or to his Design, made a very Brave Resistance, and Disappointed him of his Expectation: And they thought it not enough neither to beat him from the Walls, but they follow'd him so close upon his Retreat, that they cut-off a good part of his Rear, and drove him before them like a Fugitive, for Protection, into Babylon. While the Sense of This Infamy and Loss was Fresh upon him, came the Tidings to him of the Defeat of his Other Troups also to whom he had committed the Care and Conduct of the War against the Jews, and of the daily Encrease of their Number and Power: So that with One Calamity upon the Neck of Another, the insupportable Anguish of his Thoughts made him Heart-sick upon it; and finding himself to grow still worse and worse, and his End near at hand, he call'd his Friends about him, and told them both the Cause and the Quality of his Distemper. I am here Justly Punished, says he, for the sake of These Miserable Jews, for the Sacrilegious Rifling and Profaning of their Temple, and for the Contempt of the Heavenly God: And with These Words he Dy'd. Now I cannot but admire at Polybius the Megalapolitan, (a Man otherwise of Credit) for saying that This Judgment befel Antiochus for his Design of Rifling the Temple of Diana; which was a Sacrilege only in his Will, but never came to Act: But if Polybius was of Opi-

The Macedonians, in the mean while, who were then Garriſon'd in the Citadel of Jeruſalem, together with ſome Jewiſh Revolters, made ſeveral vexatious Sallies upon the Jews, as they went to Worſhip at their Temple; which was no hard matter to do, in regard that the Caſtle was Above, and commanded it: So that Judas found it of abſolute Neceſſity to Reduce That Fort for the Common Security of the Nation. It was now juſt a Hundred and Fifty Years that This Government had been in the Family of Seleucus. Judas, in ſhort, was ſo bent upon his Deſign, that they fell preſently to the Framing of Machines and Engines for Battery, and the Caſting-up of Works. While This was in Agitation, ſeveral Deſerters ſlipt away by Night; and joining with others as Bad as themſelves, went to Antiochus, ſetting forth the Miſerable Condition they were Reduced to by Men of their Own Tribe for their Obedience to the King's Command, in Oppoſition to their own Law; and that they are now in imminent Danger of falling into the Hands of Judas, without immediate Relief. The Young Prince, in a Rage, gave Orders preſently to his Friends and Commanders to make a Levy of what Auxiliaries were to be had for Mony, over and above the uttermoſt Force of Choice-Men that they could raiſe out of his own Subjects. They ply'd their Bus'neſs ſo Hard, that in a ſhort time they Muſter'd a Hundred Thouſand Foot, Twenty Thouſand Horſe, and Two and Thirty Elephants. With This Formidable Body of an Army under the Command of Lyſias as General, the King March'd out of Antioch, and ſo Advanced to Idumæa, and from thence to Bethſura, a Place well Fortify'd, beſide the Strength of the Situation. This Fort he Aſſaulted, and loſt a great deal of time before it; for, betwixt Sallies and Stratagems, they found a way to Burn or Diſappoint all Engines of Battery and Danger that were brought againſt it. Judas being Inform'd of the Approach of Antiochus, Rais'd the Siege from before the Cittadel, and March'd the ready way to Meet the Enemy; Pitching his Tents upon the very Entrance into the Streights of Bethzachariah, about Seventy Furlongs from the Adverſary. Antiochus, upon This, quitted the Bethſurites, and Encamped within diſtance of Engaging Judas; appointing his Army by Peep of Day, to put themſelves upon their March in Order of Battle: but the Place being too Narrow for the Elephants to March in Front, they were forced into a Defilee, with a Thouſand Foot, and Five Hundred Horſe, upon the Guard of every Elephant; and ſo to advance one after another with a kind of Tower, or Caſtle upon their Backs, charged with Archers: While the reſt of the Troups mounted the Hills on Both Sides under the Command of ſuch Officers and Friends as the King could beſt Confide in. From This Aſſent, they gave the Attaque; and with ſo horrid a Shout and Clamour, that the Valleys all rang with the Eccho; ſo that what with the Hideous Outcry, and the Dazzling Flaſhes of their Gold and Brazen Bucklers, Nothing could be more Surprizing. But This was all to Judas, no more then ſo much empty Pomp and Noiſe; for he received them ſo Bravely, and without any ſort of Daunt, or Apprehenſion, that he Kill'd a matter of Six Hundred of them upon the Firſt Encounter. While they were thus Engaged, Eleazar, otherwiſe call'd Auranes, the Brother of Judas, taking notice of One Elephant that was Cappariſon'd with Richer Trappings then the reſt, he made

When he had cut part of his Oppoſers to pieces on each hand, and Forced the reſt to clear his Paſſage, he crept under the Belly of the Elephant, and Wounded him to Death; Himſelf alſo periſhing under the Weight of the Beaſt upon his Fall. He had the Honour and the Comfort however to die in the Proſpect and Attempt of a Glorious Action, and Encompaſſed with the Dead Bodies of his Enemies round about him.

Judas finding himſelf ſo mightily over-number'd, drew-off to the Siege of the Fortreſs at Jeruſalem again; when Antiochus ſent One part of his Army to ſit down before Bethſura, and with the Remainder of it went to Jeruſalem. The Bethſurites were ſo diſanimated upon the Appearance of theſe Troups, and ſo much more Diſhearten'd by their Want of Proviſions, that they found themſelves under a Neceſſity of Delivering-up the Place; which they did upon Conditions, with Solemn Articles that there ſhould be no Violence, or Moleſtation offer'd them whatſoever. But the King kept his Faith no farther then to the bare Saving of their Lives; for the Inhabitants were all turn'd Naked out of the Town, and a Garriſon of his Own ſettled in their Stead. But the Siege of the Temple held them work yet a long time after, by a moſt Obſtinate Defence: for all their Machines and Approaches were ſtill eluded with Counter-workings and Deſigns. Their only Diſtreſs was want of Bread; for having already ſpent their Laſt Year's Store, and This happening to fall-out upon the Seventh Year, when by the Jewiſh Law they could neither Plow nor Sow, Great Numbers of the Jews ſlipt out of the Town for the pure Want of Proviſion, inſomuch that there were hardly Hands enough left to Defend the Place.

The Temple makes a very brave Defence

There came at This time Intelligence to the King and his General Lyſias, that Philip [had Uſurp'd the Government, and] was Marching toward them in the Head of an Army out of Perſia: So that they came to a ſecret Reſolution betwixt Themſelves, to quit the Siege; ſeek him out, and give him Battle; but to carry the Deſign ſo Private, that neither Officer nor Soldier, ſhould ſo much as gueſs at the meaning of it: Wherefore the King Order'd Lyſias, without mentioning the Name of Philip, to enter into a Diſcourſe with the Commanders and Soldiers about This Siege; the Strength of the Place; and that it would be a Work of time to take it; beſide that being brought to a Pinch now for want of Corn, and the King's Buſ'neſs alſo requiring his Preſence elſewhere, they could not do better then to come to ſome ſort of Agreement with them, though upon the Condition of Allowing them the Free Exerciſe of their Particular Religion, Laws and Cuſtoms: And This being Granted, which had been the only Ground of all their Rebellions, the King might go back again when he pleas'd, without any further Trouble. This was it that Lyſias had in Charge to Communicate to the Army; and the Soldiers were All highly pleas'd with the Propoſal.

This was upon the Advice of Lyſias, who told him that if ever he liv'd to ſee the Jews Quiet, or Himſelf at Eaſe, That Man muſt be made out of the way; for it was at his Inſtigation, that his Father forced the Jews to a Religion againſt their Laws and Judgments; and that Onias was conſequently the Author and Promoter of all the Evils that had befall'n him. Demetrius, the Son of Seleucus, being fled away from Rome, possess'd himself about this time of Tripolis in Syria; took the Crown upon him, and with as many Mercenaries as he could get together, Invaded the Country; where the People did not only come over to him in Shoals, with open Arms to Receive him; but as a farther Instance of an Affection to his Interest, seized upon the Persons of Antiochus and Lysias, and brought them in Custody, Prisoners to him. Whereupon they were immediately Both put to Death by the Command of Demetrius; Antiochus having now Reigned Two Years, as we have said elsewhere. He had in his Party a great Number of Profligate Jews, that had been Banish'd for Notorious Crimes, together with Alcimus the High Priest in the Head of them, who All Joined in One Common Accusation and Complaint against the Whole People of the Jews, but especially Judas Maccabæus and his Brethren, whom they Charged, not only with the Destruction of as many of the King's Friends as fell into their Hands, but with the very Ejection of Themselves out of the Land too. Wherefore they made it their Request to Demetrius, only to send some Particular Person that he could Confide in to Examine Matters in Judæa, and to see what Havock Judas had made there.

Demetrius presently, in a Heat, sent away Bacchides upon This Errand, a Friend formerly to Antiochus Epiphanes; a Resolute Man, and at That time Governour of Mesopotamia: putting Alcimus likewise into the same Commission; whom he Dispatch'd away with an Army, and Orders to fall upon Judas and his Followers. With These Troups Bacchides left Antioch, and Marched directly into Judæa, where he gave Judas and his Brethren a specious and a solemn Invitation to come to a Better Understanding with him. Now the Design was only, under the colour of a Peaceable and Friendly Disposition, to draw them into a Toil, and so to Surprize them. But upon his coming attended with such an Army, and in the Posture of an Enemy rather then a Friend, Judas kept himself upon his Guard, without giving any Credit to his Pretensions; but some Credulous People there were yet that went over to them, in Confidence that their Country-man and their Tribes-man Alcimus would do them no wrong; especially under the Caution of a Solemn Oath from both, that no Violence should be offer'd, either to Themselves, or any of their Party: But This Confidence deceiv'd them, it seems; for Bacchides, without any Regard to the Conscience of an Oath, caused Sixty of them to be cut to pieces upon the Place: which Barbarous Perfidy serv'd for a Warning to the rest not to come near him. Bacchides, after This, removed his Army from Jerusalem, and went to Bethzeth, where he found several Deserters, and other Disaffected People thereabouts, which he put all to the Sword. This being done, he Commanded All the Jews in his Absence to obey Alcimus; and leaving part of his Army with him for the Security of the Province, he Himself returned with the rest to King Demetrius at Antioch.

Alcimus had in his Head all this while, the Settling Himself in the Dignity of the Pontificat; and reflecting upon it, that it was an Honour hardly to be Compass'd but by the Favour and Good-will of the People, he presently betook himself to the Popular Arts of Fair Words, Humility, and Address, to ingratiate themselves with the Multitude: So that by the Flatteries of obliging Speech and Behaviour, he quickly Doubled the Number of the Forces that were left him; but it was with a Band of Impious Fugitives that listed themselves in His Service: And with These he Ravaged the Country up and down, putting all the Jews to Death wherever he came, that JUdas was now become ſo Formidable, that Demetrius was very Uneaſy Himſelf to think what might come of it in the End, if he ſuffer'd him to go-on Increaſing at this rate in Strength and Credit: So that he call'd Nicanor to him, formerly his Companion in his Departure from Rome, and his Particular Confident and Friend over and above: aſſigning him the Command of ſuch a Body of an Army as he reckon'd ſufficient for the Reducing of Judas, with Poſitive Orders to make War upon the Whole Nation, and give no Quarter. Upon his Setting-out for Jeruſalem, he Propounded to himſelf to carry the Buſ'neſs Fair, and to try if he could Inveigle Judas under a Countenance of Peaceable Purpoſes and Inclinations, into a Credulity that would certainly be his Ruine. So Nicanor ſuggeſted the Matter to him by way of Expoſtulation. Why ſhould we, ſays he, Expoſe the Sum of our Well-Being and Happineſs to the Uncertain Chance of War, and not rather Treat the Points in Controverſy into a Better State? Or if you apprehend any Danger in it, I am ready to give you the moſt ſacred Oath for Security, that One Man can give to Another; for Peace and Nothing elſe is my Buſ'neſs: as you may judge by the Friends I have brought along with me, only to Poſſeſs you with the Knowledge of my Maſter's Mind and Pleaſure, and of his Hearty Love and Good Will to the Whole Nation of the Jews. This Declaration wrought ſo far upon the Brothers, that without any further Thought, or Jealouſy of Treaſon, or Foul Play, they interchangeably paſs'd their Oaths, and with great Frankneſs received Nicanor with his Whole Army. After the Firſt Greeting betwixt Judas and Nicanor, the Latter gave a Signal to his People to lay hold of Judas; but the Plot being Diſcovered in time, he made his Eſcape immediately to his Own People: and after the Detecting of This Treachery, it came to Open Force on Both ſides, without any more Talk of a Treaty. The Armies drew-out, and it came to a Battle near Capharſalama, where Judas was Worſted, and Forced into the Caſtle of Jeruſalem.

It happen'd one Day, as Nicanor was paſſing by the Temple, that ſeveral of the Prieſts and Elders met him upon the Way, and ſhew'd him the Sacrifices that they were about to Offer to God, for the Proſperity and Welfare of Demetrius. But Nicanor threaten'd them, and not without Blaſphemous Revilings even againſt God himſelf, that if the People did not deliver-up Judas to him, he would be back with them before they were aware; Deſtroy their Temple it ſelf, and leave it in Rubbiſh. And with Theſe Menaces he went his way; but the Prieſts were ſo caſt down at This Declaration, that they forthwith addreſſed themſelves to God with Prayers and Tears, to Protect his own Houſe, and his Miniſters that belong to it, againſt the Outrages of the Enemy. Nicanor went his way from Jeruſalem, and Pitch'd his Tents in Bethoron, where he was Join'd with a Great Enforcement out of Syria. Judas at the ſame time Encamped at Adaſi, within Thirty Furlongs of the Enemy, and with a Body only of a Thouſand Men. He told them that the Enemy indeed was Numerous, but that the Cauſe was God's, whoſe Power was above that of a Multitude, Exhorting them not to Trouble themſelves how many they were to Encounter; but to Conſider the Bravery of thoſe that were to Encounter them, with the Honours or Rewards that would moſt certainly Attend them: Wherefore fall-on, ſays he, like Valiant Men, and Commit the Iſſue to God. It came, in fine, to a Battle; and the Firſt Encounter was Vigorous and Sharp; but upon the Fall of Great Numbers of the Enemy, and of Nicanor himſelf too, who did all that could be done by a Great Commander and a Brave Man, the Whole Army Scatter'd immediately; and upon the Loſs of their General, Caſt away their Arms to make them Lighter for their Flight.

Alcimus the High-Prieſt had a mind to have the Old Wall of the Sanctuary pull'd down, and the Works of the Ancient Prophets Demoliſhed; but in the very Inſtant of his Ordering it to be done, God Struck him with ſo Judicial a Diſtemper, that he fell down upon the ground Speechleſs, where he lay Languiſhing a while in Miſerable Torments, and then Dy'd; after Four Years in the Office of the Pontificat. UPon the Tidings of Nicanor's Death, and the Defeat of the Army, Demetrius ſent Bacchides a Second time into Judæa, who advanced with Freſh Troups to Arbela, a Town of Galilee, and there Encamped, forcing a great many Jews out of the Caves there where they had hid themſelves. From thence he haſten'd away to Jeruſalem; and upon Intelligence that Judas and his People were at Bethzeth, he Poſted away immediately with Twenty Thouſand Foot and Two Thouſand Horſe, to Encounter him, who had at that time but One poor Thouſand of Men about him, and but Eight Hundred of thoſe to ſtand by him neither; for Two Hundred of them gave him the Slip for fear of being Overpower'd. In this Streight for want of Men, and neither Time nor Place for Recruiting, Judas kept-up his Heart ſtill, to a Reſolution, in deſpite of all Difficulties, of putting it to the Fate of a Battle; only deſiring his Men to ſtand by him, and follow his Example. They told him how Vain and Raſh a thing it would be to Contend with ſuch Inſuperable Odds; adviſing him rather to Attempt an Honourable Retreat, by which means poſſibly he might Reinforce himſelf. No No, ſays he, it ſhall never be ſaid that the Sun ever ſaw Judas *turn his back upon an Enemy. Judas Encounters Bacchides, and gets the Better of him at First; but Oppres's'd Afterward by Numbers, and Slain, having behaved himself to his Immortal Honour.

BACCHIDES having Ranged his Army; the Horse upon the Two Wings, where-of he himself Commanded the Right; his Light-Arm'd Men, and Archers in the Front, Supported by a Macedonian Phalanx in the Body: in this Order of Battle, he marched-up to the Enemy; Sounded a Charge; and with a Military Shout, according to Custom, gave the Onset: Judas Encountring him on the Other hand after the same Manner. It was hard fought on Both Sides from Morning till toward Sun-set; when Judas, taking Notice of the Danger his Men were in to be Over-laid by the Enemies Right-Wing, where Bacchides, with the very Flower of the Army press'd upon them, came in with a Band of Hearty Courageous Youths to their Relief; and breaking their Line, Pierc'd into the very Body of them; Routed, and gave them Chace as far as Aza. The Enemie's Left-Wing, upon this, follow'd Judas so Close upon the Heel, that he was now on all hands beset, and out of all Possibility of Escaping; so that he and his People stood their Ground, and Fought it out, to sell their Lives as Dear as they could, till in the Conclusion, after a Great Slaughter of their Enemies, Judas and his Companions were so spent, and Weary'd-out, that they seem'd at last to be rather Tir'd then Overcome: nor did they fall Unrevenged. And thus did this Glorious Hero finish the Character of a Great Man, by making his Life and Death all of a Piece. It could not but be Expected that the Soldiers, after the Loss of so Brave a General, should dispute the Point any further without a Leader: So that they Presently Dispers'd and Fled; while the Two Brothers Simon, and Jonathan treated with the Enemy for the Body of their Brother, which they carry'd away, and laid it at Modin in the Sepulchre of his Fathers, with all Funeral Magnificence, and with the Solemnity of a Publique Mourning for Several Days, in Honour of his Memory, according to the Custom of the Place upon so Extraordinary an Occasion. This was the End of Judas Maccabæus; a Generous, and a Valiant Man; the True Son of the Virtue, as well as of the Bloud of Mattathias; for he never forgot the Precepts of his Dying Father; who Enjoyn'd him upon his Blessing never to Decline any Labour, or Hazzard for the Liberty and Welfare of his Countrymen. The spite of the Revolted Jews. Jonathan succeeds Judas. He and Simon withdraw into the Wilderness, and Bacchides follows them. John and his Company cut-off by the Sons of Amaræus. The Brothers Fortify themselves in* Bethalaga: Bacchides lays Siege to't, and is Beaten off.

WE have sufficiently set forth in the Former Book, how the Jews came to be deliver'd from their Slavery under the Macedonians; and how Judas, their Great Captain and Patron, after Several Bloudy Battles fought in that Righteous Cause, lost his Life at last in a Magnanimous Action and Contest for their Vindication and Defence. This Illustrious Person was no sooner Taken away, but the Whole Party of the Profligate Jews, that contrary to Conscience, Faith, and Honour had Abandon'd the Religion, Laws and Customs of the Nation, resumed to their Former Animosities, and persecuted their Honest Countrymen Afresh, more spitefully then Ever. There happened also at the same time a General Famine, over the Land; which, in Conjunction, doubled the Other Calamity: for betwixt want of Bread for their Livelyhood, on the one Side, and want of Power to defend themselves against their Enemies, on the Other, the Misery lay so Heavy upon them, that a Great many of the Jews found themselves under some sort of Necessity to Comply with the Faction of the Macedonians. Upon this Juncture, Bacchides Sent a Summons to all the Apostate-Jews that were gone over to Strange Gods, and Committed the Care of the Government Principally into their Hands; who made it their Bus'ness in the First Place to take-up all the Friends and late Partizans of Judas, and so to deliver them up to Bacchides, to torture them at pleasure, and in the End to put Every Man of them to Death. The Condition of the Jews was never so Deplorable since their Captivity in Babylon, as it was at this time: Insomuch that all those who had Wish'd well to Judas, Joyn'd in a Request to Jonathan, not only to follow his Brother's Example, who had so Frankly Sacrificed his Bloud for the Liberties of his Country, but to take upon himself his Command also; the Whole Nation lying under such Desperate Circumstances, that they must be all inevitably Lost without a Leader, Jonathan's Answer was, that he was ready to Do, or to Suffer any thing for the Publique Good: Whereupon, with the Unanimous Consent of the People, he was Declared their General.

When Bacchides came to be Inform'd of this Election, and to Reflect upon it, that Jonathan was a Man as likely to give Trouble to the King and to the Macedonians, as ever his Brother Judas was before him, he fell to bethinking himself of some way to take him off by a Plot, or a Trick: But he himself and his Brother Simon were Both so well aware of such a Design in hand, that they provided for themselves betimes, by withdrawing immediately into the Neighbouring Desert, with what Strength they were able to get together upon that Warning, and Pitched their Tents by the Pool of Asphar. Bacchides look'd upon this Retreat of theirs into the Wilderness, to be no other then a Direct Flight from the Face of an Enemy; March'd away presently toward them with all his Troups, and Encamping beyond Jordan, made Choice of that Place for his Rendezvous. When Jonathan came to hear of this Motion, he sent his Brother John (otherwise Gaddis) to the Arabian Nabathites, being in Friendship with them, for leave only to Deposite their Baggage in their Custody, till the Battle with Bacchides should be over. But as John was upon the way, the Sons of Amaræus made a Sally out of Medaba upon the Convoy; took all their Carriages, and whatever Else they had about them; Kill'd John himself upon the Place, and all his People: But the Brothers had their Revenge upon them not long after, as will be shew'd in it's Due Place.

Bacchides Marches after them.

John and all his Companies Kill'd in a Sally out of Medaba.

Bacchides having Intelligence how Jonathan lay Encamped in the Fenny Grounds near the River Jordan, Pitch'd upon the Sabbaoth-Day for the Attaque, in Confidence of the Superstitious Reverence they had for that Festival: But Jonathan laying before them the Absolute Necessity of Fighting; for the Enemy before them, and the River behind them, there was no saving their Lives without it: So that [what with the Effects of Good Counsel,] and of Despair, they call'd upon God for Victory, and in the same Instant made a Resolute Charge upon the Enemy; Killing Great Numbers of them upon the Place. While this was a-doing, Bacchides press'd furiously upon the Person of Jonathan, who at the same time made a Blow at him; but the Other Diverting it, Jonathan and his Company took the River and the Enemy not daring to follow them, they got Safe to the other side. Bacchides, after this, withdrew into the Citadel of Jerusalem, with the Loss of near Two Thousand of his Men, where he Fortify'd several Strong Cities and Places that had been Demolished before; as Jericho, Emmaus, Bethoron, and Bethel, Thamnatha, Pharathon, Techoa, and Gazara: And these Places he Strengthen'd with Walls and Towers, and with Strong Garrisons, to be ready for Excursions to fall upon the Jews: But Care was Taken above all the rest, to make the Citadel of Jerusalem Impregnable. In which Place the Chief Men's Sons of the Country were Secur'd for Hostages.

There was brought Intelligence about this time, to the Two Brothers, Jonathan, and Simon, that there was a Famous Wedding in hand, betwixt one of the Sons of Amaræus, and the Daughter of an Illustrious Arabian. The Sons of Amaræus to be at the Wedding, and the Bride to be Conducted in a Splendid Pomp from the City of Gabatha. The Brothers laid hold of This Opportunity to Revenge themselves for the Death of their Brother, and so hasten'd away towards Medaba to Way-lay the People that were to Assist at This Wedding, by an Ambush that they had Planted in the Mountains. Upon the coming-up of the Bridegroom with his Bride, and a Long Train of their Friends, as is usual in such cases, the Party Sally'd-out upon them, and Cut them all off, without saving one Creature, together with their Wives, Children and Friends, to the Number of Four Hundred; Carry'd-off the Booty Entire, and did Justice at the same time to the Memory of their Brother: After which Exploit, they returned to their Quarters at Jordan.

Word is brought the Brothers, of a Famous Wedding; and which way the Bride was to Pass.

The Brothers Way-lay the Wedding People, and put 400 Persons to the Sword; Bride, Bridegroom and all, in revenge of their Brother John.

When Bacchides had settled Garrisons in Judæa, he went back to his Master; and so for a matter of Two Years, the Jews were in some Tolerable State of Quiet: But the Apostates, and the Dregs of the People were gaull'd at the very Souls of them, to see Jonathan, and his People so much at Ease in Judæa, by reason of the Tranquility of the Times. So that they fell to Plying and Soliciting Demetrius by their Proxies, that Bacchides might be order'd to Reduce Jonathan absolutely into his Power; which was a thing easily done, they said, and but One Night's Work to Rid themselves, by a Surprize, both of Him, and all his Soldiers. The King yielded immediately to the Proposition, and Dispatch'd Bacchides away into Judæa upon the Commission, where he sent his Letters up and down to all the King's Friends and Officers in the Country, to give their Assistance toward the Seizing of Jonathan. So they laid their Heads together, how to Entrap him; and finding, upon several Trials one after another, that All fail'd; (for the Man was Cautious, and Forewarn'd) the Macedonian, in a Transport of Rage, imputed the Whole Miscarriage to the Treachery of the Apostate-Jews; who, he said, did but make Sport with the King's Orders, and in that Freak, put Fifty of their Chief Men to death. Jonathan and his Brother, finding themselves too Weak for Bacchides, withdrew into the Wilderness, to a Village called Bethalaga, and Fortify'd it with Works and Walls, to serve them in case of need for a Retreat. Upon this Intelligence, Bacchides marched away to them with all the Power he was able to make, upon the Conjunction of his Own Troups with the Auxiliary Faction of the Jews. He open'd his Trenches immediately against the Place, and for some Days carry'd on his Approches. Jonathan, on the other side, making a very Stout Resistance. While Matters were in this Posture, he left the Defence of the Place to his Brother Simon; and with such a Body of Men as he was able to draw together out

It remained now only to Consider how the Siege might be Rais'd without Loss of Honour, both to to the King, and to Himself; and how the Army might be drawn-off without Ignominy.

So he sent him an Honourable Message, with Proposals of a Mutual League and Friendship, upon Condition of Releasing all Prisoners on Both Sides. This was a Motion so reasonable for Bacchides to agree to, and so Fair an Occasion given him to Quit the Siege without Loss of Reputation, that he immediately struck-up an Alliance with Jonathan; with a Mutual Exchange of Oaths to Deliver-up, and Restore All Prisoners on Both Sides, and not to do any Act of Hostility One to the Other. This being Ratify'd, Bacchides returned to the King at Antioch, without ever coming back again with his Army to Judæa. Jonathan being now settled in a Condition of Peace and Safety, took-up his Abode in Machmas, where he gave himself-up to the Bus'ness of the Government, in the Administration of Law and Justice. He was a Bitter Enemy to All Deserters; a Zealous Asserter of the Laws; and he Purged the Land from All Forreign Abominations.

IN the Year One Hundred and Sixty, Alexander, the Son of Antiochus Epiphanes, took Possession of Ptolemais in Syria, by the Confederacy of the Soldiers that were there in Garrison, out of an Aversion they had to Demetrius, as a Man Over-Proud and Haughty; for he had a Humour of Mewing himself up in a Certain Fortify'd Castle that he had, not far from Antioch, where no Body was Admitted to come at him; but there he Dron'd away his Time, and left the Government to Shift for it self; which stirr'd up a great many Male-Contents against him, as we have said elsewhere. But now upon the News of Alexander's Possessing himself of Ptolemais, he presently drew his Troups together, and March'd with an Army against him.

DEmetrius, upon This Occasion, sent an Embassy to Jonathan, with Proposals of a League and Alliance betwixt them; and This he did, to prevent Alexander in the Proposal, for fear he might otherwise Pre-engage him, though but in revenge for Injuries and Indignities formerly receiv'd. The Purport of the Message was, in short, an Authority to Levy Men; to provide Arms, and to set the Hostages at Liberty, that Bacchides had Committed Prisoners to the Castle. Upon the Receipt of This Letter from Demetrius, Jonathan went away presently to Jerusalem, where he read it Publiquely, in the Hearing both of the Garrison, and of the People. The Profligates and Fugitives in the Citadel were Extremely Startled to ſee Jonathan all on a Sudden ſo much in favour. But he went on however with his Levies, ſet the Hoſtages at liberty, and remanded them ſafe back again to their Own Parents. He made Jeruſalem, for the Preſent, the Place of his Reſidence; where he fortify'd, Alter'd and Repair'd at Pleaſure; Rebuilding and Strength'ning the Walls with Square Stones of a Mighty Bigneſs for the Better Defence of the Place. Now the Macedonians that were Diſperſed up and down in ſeveral Garriſons, Quitted their Stations upon this Change at Jeruſalem, and went away to Antioch; but for thoſe that were in Bethſura and the Tower at Jeruſalem, the Greater part of them being Jewiſh Deſerters, it was not Safe for them to Stir out of their Holds.

ALEXANDER was no Stranger to the Character of Jonathan, or to the Hiſtory of his Courage and Exploits; particularly againſt the Macedonians; nor to the Indignities that had been put upon him, both by Demetrius and Bacchides; So that being told of the Fair Promiſes and Pretentions of Demetrius, he diſcours'd the Matter with his Friends, and brought it to this Point, that he could not at that time do better then to Enter into an Aſſociation, and Allyance with Jonathan; a Perſon of Eminent Valour, and a Mortal Enemy to Demetrius, and lying under the Higheſt Provocations of Old Grudges and Wrongs imaginable. Wherefore, ſays he, This ſeems to me the Critical Minute of an Opportunity for the making of This Man my Friend; but pray let me have your Opinion along with me. His Councel were all of the Same Mind, and a Letter immediately Diſpatch'd away upon that Subject in the Terms Following.

But This Anticipation of Alexander's did not yet hinder him from carrying it as far as it would would go, in this following Letter.

an Exemption both to its Self, and its Dependencies, from all Tenths and Tributes. The Citadel shall be deliver'd-up to the High-Priest Jonathan, with Liberty to put into it, for a Garrison, such of his Friends and Confidents as he shall make Choice of. It is Our Further Pleasure likewise, that all the Jews that were carry'd away Prisoners into any Part of our Dominions, be forthwith set at Liberty, without Imposing any Hardships, after this Decree, so much as upon their Cattle, either by Press-Masters, or otherwise. That all their Sabbaths, and Solemn Festivals, and Three Days before them, shall be Days of Immunity and Freedom to All the Jews in Our Dominions; and that they may live Quietly, without any sort of Molestation. And for so many of the Jews within the Compass of Thirty Thousand Men, as shall desire to bear Arms in Our Service, they shall be Entertained at the same rate of Pay with our Own Guards; and Intrusted also in our Garrisons, and about our Person; and the Better sort of them shall be received as the Domestiques of our Royal Family. They shall moreover have the Free Exercise of their Own Laws, both in Jerusalem, and in the Three Dependent Provinces; committing it to the High-Priest's Care, to see that No Jew be Suffer'd to Worship in any Other Temple, but That of Jerusalem. We do hereby Grant them likewise the Yearly Allowance of Fifteen Thousand Shekels of Silver toward the Charge of their Sacrifices out of our Own Coffers, and Discharging the Priests and Officers attending the Service of the Temple, of the Ten Thousand Drachma's that were formerly paid to our Predecessors, as in Reason and Conscience we ought to do. It is our Further Will also, that Whoever shall fly to the Temple of Jerusalem, or to the Liberties thereof, for any Debt whatsoever, whether to the King or Otherwise, he shall be Protected, both in his Person and Goods, from any Trouble or Molestation. We do likewise give leave, and Require, that the Temple be Repair'd, Strong Walls and Turrets Erected, and Garrisons to be put into such Places of Strength as the Jews shall think fit to Raise, and Fortify: and all This to be done at our Own Proper Charge. These were the Gracious Promises of Demetrius, who wrote to the Jews accordingly.

The Citadel to be Garrison'd by the Jews;

Prisoners to be set at liberty, and their Sabbaths and Festivals to be Observ'd.

30000 of them taken into Pay;

Others admitted into the Royal Family.

A Free Exercise of Laws and Religion.

Allowances toward the Charge of Sacrifices.

The Temple made a Place of Refuge.

The Temple and Walls to be repair'd and Fortify'd at Demetrius's Charge.

Upon this Juncture of time, King Alexander drew-out a Mighty Army, partly of his Own Mercenaries, and partly of Those that went over to him from Demetrius in Syria, and marched with them against the Enemy. They brought it to a Battle, and the Left-Wing of Demetrius being too Hard for the Right-Wing of Alexander, they pursu'd their Advantage so far, that they got the Pillage of the Camp, but the Right-Wing at the same time, where the King Himself fought in Person, was forc'd to give way, and fell presently into a Direct Rout. Demetrius behaving himself to a Miracle all this While; Killing Some; Pursuing Others, and defending Himself, till at last his Horse Plunging into an Impassable Bogg, he was overborn by the Multitudes that press'd-in upon him, and Consequently lost, beyond all Hope or Possibility of Relief. He Fought it out however, on Foot, to the Last Extremity, till his Body was cover'd all over with Arrows and Darts. Demetrius had now Reigned Eleven Years, and This was his End, as we have set it forth Elsewhere.

A Battle betwixt Alexander and Demetrius.

The Unfortunate Death of Demetrius.

CHAP. VI.

Onias proposes a Temple in Ægypt like That of Jerusalem. This Starts a Question betwixt the Jews and Samaritans, Which is the True Temple, Garizin, or Jerusalem. The Matter is referr'd to the King; and the Party that shall be Cast, to suffer Death. The King gives it for Jerusalem.

ONias, the Son of Onias the High-Priest, liv'd in a kind of Exile from his Own Country, with Ptolomy Philometor at Alexandria, as we have said heretofore. This same Onias, finding Judæa so terribly Ravag'd by the Macedonians, and their Kings, and out of an Ambition to get himself Immortal Fame, Resolv'd to try if he could Obtain leave from King Ptolomy, and his Queen Cleopatra, to build another Temple in Ægypt, after the Project and Model of That of Jerusalem, and so to supply it with Priests and Levites of his Own Family. The Thing that put this Thought in his Head, was a Prediction of the Prophet Isaiah, of at least Six Hundred Years before: Presaging that in time to come there should be a Temple Erected in Ægypt, to the Honour of the Great God, and that it should be the Work of a Jew. Onias was so Possess'd with the Impulse of this Revelation, that he wrote a Letter to Ptolomy and Cleopatra, to this following Effect. At the time when I had the Honour to serve your Majesties in the Field, I passed thorough several Countries, and Observed, that in the Provinces of Cœle-Syria, Phœnicia, and Leontopolis, in the Land of Heliopolis, and in several Other Places, the Jews had no Uniformity in their Temples, and therefore could not agree among themselves about it: And it is the same thing with the Ægyptians too, by Reason of the Multitude and Variety of Temples, and the Diversity of Religions. Now for so much as I have found-out a Certain Place near the Castle of Bubastes upon the Plain, where where there are great Store of Materials for Building, near at hand, and Plenty of Beaſts appointed for Sacrifice, it is my Humble Requeſt, that you will give me leave to Purge and to Demoliſh a Ruinous Temple there, that was never Conſecrated to any Deity; and in the Place of it to Erect Another, after the Model of That of Jeruſalem, with a Dedication of it, [To the Moſt High God] upon Condition that Prayers be there Offer'd-up for the Safety and Proſperity of your Royal Perſons and Family: to the End that all the Jews in your Dominions may by This means, be more United among themſelves, and better Enabled to do your Majeſties Service. This is no more then what the Prophet Iſaiah has Fore-told; that God would have a Holy Place in Ægypt, and ſeveral Other Things upon that Subject.

Onias begs leave to build a Temple in Ægypt after the Model of Jeruſalem.

Grounding his Petition upon the Prophecy of Iſaiah.

It was very Remarkable, the Piety that the King and his Queen Cleopatra (his Wife and Siſter Both in One) Expreſſed upon the Receit of this Letter, as will appear by their Anſwer thereunto, wherein they Diſcharged themſelves of having any Hand in the Impious Violation of the Law; and caſt the Whole Blame of it upon Onias in theſe Terms.

King Ptolomy and Queen Cleopatra to Onias, Joy, and Health.

We have read and Conſider'd of your Letters of Requeſt, wherein you deſire to Cleanſe and Purify an Old Ruinous Temple at Leontopolis near Bubaſtes upon the Plain, within the Juriſdiction of Heliopolis, and can hardly Conceive how a Temple in a Place ſo Unclean, and haunted with ſuch Varieties of Deteſtable Animals, ſhould be in any Meaſure Acceptable to God. But yet for ſo much as you referr your ſelf for your Juſtification, to the Predictions of the Prophet Iſaiah, we do hereby Grant unto you Full Licence and Permiſſion, ſo far as in us lies ſo to do; provided it be done without giving Offence to God in the Breach of his Laws.

The King and Queen grants his Requeſt.

Onias had no ſooner Obtained this Conceſſion of the Place, but he fell Preſently to work upon the Raiſing of the Temple, and the Altar, according to the Draught of that at Jeruſalem, though much ſhort of it, both for Bulk and State. As to the Dimenſions of the Fabrick, and the Holy Veſſels thereunto belonging, having ſpoken ſufficiently of it in my Seventh Book of the Hiſtory and Captivity of the Jews, a Repetition of it in this Place would be Needleſs. This being done, Onias did not want Prieſts and Levites of his own Phancy and Perſuaſion to aſſiſt him in the Offices of Divine Worſhip, and in the Services of the Temple: To ſay no more of it in this Place

Onias falls to Work immediately upon the Temple, and Imploys Prieſts and Levites in it of his Own Phancy.

There happened at Alexandria, ſo Fierce and ſo Seditious a Diſpute, betwixt the Jews and the Samaritans, that Erected the Temple at Garizin, in the Dayes of Alexander the Great, about the Temple it ſelf, and the Manner of Worſhipping, that the King was forced, upon an Appeal, to take the Matter into his Own Cognizance, and ſo to paſs Judgment upon the Merits of the Cauſe. The Point was this. The Jews inſiſted upon it that the Temple at Jeruſalem was the Only Temple Extant that was Warranted and Authoriz'd by the Laws of Moſes. The Samaritans ſtood-up for the Temple of Garizin; and Both Parties by Conſent remitted themſelves to the Judgment and Arbitration of the King, with his Miniſters, and Friends; deſiring only that Councel might be heard on Both Sides, and that Sentence of Death might paſs upon the Party that ſhould be found Guilty. Sabbæus, and Theodoſius were for the Samaritans, and Andronicus the Son of Meſſalan, for the Jews: binding themſelves in an Oath on Both Sides, in the Preſence of God and the King, to Offer nothing in Proof, but what was according to the Law; and deſiring that the Breach of that Oath might be made Death to the Violator of it. The King called his Friends and Councellors about him to Try the Cauſe. The Jews of Alexandria were mightily troubled, for fear of their Advocate, and took it Extremely to Heart, to find the Sacred Authority of the Temple at Jeruſalem, the moſt Ancient and Noble Frame and Inſtitution in the Whole World, brought into Queſtion. Upon a Debate who ſhould ſpeak firſt, Sabbæus, and Theodoſius gave the Precedence to Andronicus; who Opened the Cauſe, and made a Deduction of the Sanctity, Practice and Venerable Antiquity of the Temple of Jeruſalem, even from the very Original, according to the Law; ſetting forth the Uninterrupted Succeſſion of the Prieſthood thorough all Ages, with the Honour and the Majeſty of the Place, as it was Celebrated from time to time, with the Magnificence and Bounty of all the Kings of Aſia: whereas the Temple of Garizin, then in Queſtion, was ſo Obſcure in all reſpects, that little more Notice was taken of it then if there had been no ſuch thing. With theſe, and the like Reaſonings, the King was prevail'd upon to give Sentence in favour of Jeruſalem, and to Adjudge Sabbæus, and Theodoſius to Death, according to the Conditions of the Propoſal. This was the State of Affairs with the Alexandrian Jews in the Days of Ptolomy Philometor.

After the Death of Demetrius, Alexander Marries Cleopatra the King of Ægypt's Daughter, and does All things highly to the Honour of Jonathan.

1 Mac. 11. AFter the Death of Demetrius, (as we have ſaid already) Alexander took upon himſelf the Government of Syria; and by a Letter to Ptolomy Philometor, ſent him a Propoſal of a Match with his Daughter, Suggeſting by the By, that it would be no Diſhonourable or Unreaſonable thing, after the Overthrow of Demetrius, and through God's Favour, the Recovery of a Kingdom that belonged to him in the Right of his Father, to receive him into his Allyance. Ptolomy was ſo well pleaſed with this Overture, that he immediately wrote him a Letter back again to Joy him of all his Victories, and Succeſſes, and likewiſe to promiſe him his Daughter in Marriage, appointing Ptolemais for the Place of meeting; where he would wait upon him with his Daughter Cleopatra, and there Conſummate the Wedding. Ptolomy Staid not long after his own Letter, but went directly to the Place with his Daughter, where he found Alexander, and Diſpatch'd the Marriage, with ſuch a Treaſure of Gold and Silver for her Portion as might become the Magnificence of ſo Great a Prince. Jonathan the High-Prieſt was Invited by Alexander to the Wedding, where both the Kings bad him Welcome, with Great Honour and Preſents on Both Sides; Alexander appointing him to Change his Habit, and put on a Purple Robe, and to take his Place next to himſelf upon the Throne; commanding alſo the Chief of his Officers to attend him into the Heart of the City, and to make Publique Proclamation, that no Man ſhould preſume, upon his Uttermoſt Peril, either to Calumniate, or Accuſe him, or Otherwiſe to give him any Manner of Trouble. Upon this Gracious Demonſtration of Eſteem the King had for him, his Malicious Enemies that were come thither on purpoſe to do him Ill Offices by Defaming him, Sneak'd out of the way for fear the Miſchief they meant him, ſhould fall upon their Own Heads. So Particular, in fine, was the Kindneſs and Reſpect that Alexander had for Jonathan, that he reckon'd him among the Choiceſt of his Friends.

Demetrius the Son of Demetrius, with a Powerful Army, falls into Cilicia. 1 Mac. 11.

IN the Year One Hundred and Sixty Five, Demetrius, the Son of Demetrius, Embarqu'd himſelf with a Body of Mercenaries that Laſthenes had brought him, and paſs'd with them out of Crete into Cilicia. Alexander was not a little Startled at the Tidings of this Expedition; ſo that he preſently Haſten'd away from Phœnicia to Antioch, to put his Affairs in a Poſture of Security before Demetrius could get thither; committing the Government of Cœle-Syria, in the mean time, to the Care of Apollonius, who March'd with an Army to Iamnia, and thence ſent Jonathan the High-Prieſt a Schooling and Expoſtulatory Meſſage, to know What Privilege he had to live at Eaſe and Liberty, and to withdraw himſelf from the Service of the Publique: and the Scandal, ſays he, is laid at my Door for Suffering this Affront without Reducing you to your Duty. If you are ſo Brave as you would be thought to be, come down for Shame out of your Hiding-Holes in the Mountains, and meet me like a Man in the Plain Field, with your Sword in your Hand, and caſt the Iſſue of the Cauſe upon That Tryal. This let me tell you, by the way, that I am now in the Head of a Body of the Choyceſt Men in the Empire, and Men that in Feats of Arms have ever had the Aſcendent of your Anceſtors. Wherefore I dare you once again to give me a Meeting in ſome Indifferent Place, where Swords, not Stones, ſhall decide the Controverſy, and leave the Vanquiſh'd Party no Poſſibility of Saving themſelves by Flight.

Apollonius the Governour of Syria ſends Jonathan a Contemptuous Challenge.

Jonathan was ſo Netled with the Inſolence of this Challenge, that he Marched away out of Jeruſalem with a Select Band of Ten Thouſand Pick'd Men, and his Brother Simon along with him; and coming-up to Joppa, he Encamped there: But Apollonius having a Garriſon in the Town, they Shut their Gates againſt him. So that Jonathan put himſelf in poſture for an Aſſault; whereupon the Inhabitants, for fear of a Storm, deliver'd-up the Place. So ſoon as Apollonius underſtood that Jonathan was poſſeſs'd of Joppa, he betook himſelf with Three Thouſand Horſe and Eight Thouſand Foot, to Azotus, and thence by Eaſy Marches to Joppa; where he drew-off a little to Engage Jonathan in the Open Plain; depending upon his Odds of Horſe to over-power him. Jonathan, upon this, Advanc'd and follow'd Apollonius toward Azotus; who, when he found the Enemy in a Plain Field, turn'd back upon him, and gave him Battle. Apollonius had Planted a Thouſand Horſe in an Ambuſh near a Brook, there, to fall upon the Enemy's Rear, which Jonathan was well aware of, and without any Difficulty Provided againſt it; for caſting his Men into a Square-Figure that Fronted Every way, they were Ready on all Hands to receive the Charge, Front, Flank, and Rear. They fought it out till toward Evening, when Jonathan Order'd his Brother Simon with part of his Army to take his time, and Charge-in upon the Enemy's Body; having given Orders to his Own Men only to receive the Darts and Arrows of the Horſe upon their Bucklers, without any other Reſiſtance. They kept themſelves upon their Guard, till the Enemy had ſpent all their Offenſive Arms without doing any Execution; for they ſtood ſo Thick and Cloſe, that the Darts fell all upon their Bucklers, and there was no Piercing them thorough. The Enemy was ſo Spent, and Tir'd-out, with this way of Fighting, to no purpoſe, from Morning till the Afternoon, that Simon took that Opportunity of Attaquing their Main Body; and was ſo Bravely Seconded by his Soldiers, that he brake, and put them to Flight. The Horſe, upon this Rout, betwixt the Fatigue of the Day, and the Hopeleſs Condition of the Army, now the Foot were Broken, Fled and Diſperſed themſelves in the Greateſt Confuſion Imaginable: Jonathan following them upon the Heel as far as Azotus, Killing great Numbers of them upon the Chace, and Forcing the reſt into the Temple of Dagon there, for Sanctuary; but he took the City in the Same Heat, ſet Fire to it, and to ſeveral Neighbour-Villages; and burnt them all to the Ground, together with the Temple of Dagon it ſelf, and all the People that fled to it for Protection, without any regard to the Religion of the Idol, or of the Place. The Number of thoſe that were either Burnt, or fell by the Sword, was computed to be a Matter of Eight Thouſand Men. After the Defeat of this Army, Jonathan Advanced with his Troups to Askalon, and Pitch'd his Tents before the City; the Inhabitant coming out to him, and Treating him with Preſents and other Tokens of Hoſpitality and Reſpect, which was all Taken very kindly, and as an Inſtance of their Good Will and Affection to him. After this, he returned to Jeruſalem, laden with Booty and Victorious. Upon this Defeat of Apollonius, Alexander pretended to be Wonderfully pleaſed at the Miſcarriage, as a thing utterly againſt His Liking, and without his Privity, and a moſt Barbarous Practice upon a Friend and Allye: So that as a Mark of the Honour and Eſteem he had for him, he ſent him a Golden Claſp or Buckle for a Preſent, an Honour Peculiar only to the Royal Family; and he gave him alſo the Government of Accaron.

It happen'd at the ſame time, that Ptolemy Philometor, with both Land-and Sea-Forces, came into Syria, to the Aſſiſtance of his Son-in-Law Alexander; where he was Received in all Places with Great Honour and Reſpect according to the King's Order, ſave only in Azotus: and there he was Entertain'd with nothing but Lamentable Stories and Complaints of the Burning of Dagon's Temple; and all People's Mouths Open againſt Jonathan, as the Author of that Outrage; beſide the Havock he had made in the Country by Fire and Sword, and the Deſtruction of a Great many of their People. Ptolemy gave only the Hearing to theſe Complaints, and that was all. Jonathan met him at Joppa, and was received with all Magnificence and Honour, and after Conducting the King to the River Eleutherus, he returned to Jeruſalem.

Ptolomy paſſes into Syria to joyn Alexander.

Jonathan meets him at Joppa, and is Honourably receiv'd.

Upon Ptolemy's coming to the City of Ptolemais, he was within a very little of being deſtroy'd by the Treachery of Alexander, which was Menag'd by his Friend Ammonius. This Practice being Diſcover'd, he wrote to Alexander to demand Juſtice upon him, according to his Deſert; but Alexander's Refuſing to deliver him up, gave him to underſtand that he himſelf had a Hand in it; upon which Preſumption, he Contracted a Mortal Hatred againſt him; and he had loſt himſelf as much with the People of Antioch before, upon the Account of the Same Ammonius, who had done them many Indignities; but he came at laſt to an Infamous End, for he loſt his Life in the Habit of a Woman, as he was Sneaking away to Shift for himſelf under that Diſguiſe; as we have Shew'd in Another Place. Ptolemy

The Infamous End of Ammonius.

Ptolemy calls away his Daughter from Alexander, and Marries her to Demetrius.

Ptolemy was by this time ſo Sick of the Relation he had to Alexander, and to think of the Aſſiſtance he had brought him againſt Demetrius, that he preſently took away his Daughter from her Husband, and Struck-up a League with Demetrius againſt Alexander, upon Condition of giving him Cleopatra in Marriage, and putting him in poſſeſſion of his Father's Kingdom; who, on the Other hand, was well enough pleaſed with the Terms, both of the Allyance and of the Woman. But the People had ſuch an Averſion to Demetrius upon his Father's Account, that Ptolemy had a Hard Task of it to bring them over to receive that Man for their King, whom they look'd upon as their Enemy. Yet ſuch was their Hatred however to Alexander upon the Score of Ammonius, and to Ammonius himſelf alſo for his Own ſake, that they were Eaſily prevail'd upon to Diſcharge the City of Ammonius; who thereupon Slipt away into Cilicia from Antioch. Ptolemy, upon this, made his Entrance into the Place where he was Saluted, Proclaimed, and Crowned King in Two Capacities, both by the Burghers, and the Soldiery: that is to ſay; in the Right of Aſia, and of Ægypt. But being a Perſon naturally Juſt, Temperate, and Diſcreet he Menag'd his Bus'neſs to the Entire Satisfaction of his own People; and likewiſe without giving any Cauſe of Jelouſy or Envy to the Romans: So that he forthwith called a General Councel of the Antiochians, Entertaining them with a Diſcourſe upon the Subject of receiving Demetrius for their King; with Large Aſſurances on that Princes's part, that the Senſe of the Preſent Obligation would utterly Extinguiſh the Memory of all Unkindneſs, and Miſunderſtandings gone and paſt: Beſide that I my ſelf, ſays he, will take care that in the Adminiſtration of the Government, he ſhall not ſo much as Offer at any thing Unworthy of his Royal Dignity and Truſt. As for my Own part, the Kingdom of Ægypt ſhall Content me abundantly. Upon This Mediation, the Whole Body of the People was prevail'd upon to take Demetrius for their King.

Ptolemy proclaimed King of Aſia, and of Ægypt.

Alexander was at this time Ravaging Syria, and the Country about Antioch, putting all things to the Extremities of Fire and Sword, with a mighty Army that he brought out of Cilicia; when Ptolemy, with his Son-in-Law Demetrius (the Nuptials being now over) Encounter'd and Routed him; forcing him to Fly to Arabia. It happen'd in that Battle that Ptolomy's Horſe, upon a Fright taken at the Braying of an Elephant, caſt his Rider, and gave his Enemies the Advantage of giving him many Grievous Wounds upon the Head, while he was down: which Misfortune would certainly have Coſt him his Life upon the Place, if he had not been Reſqu'd at preſent by a Party of his Guards; but ſuch was his Condition however, that he lay Speechleſs fort Four Days, without ſpeaking One Word himſelf, or Underſtanding any thing that was ſaid to him. Upon the Fifth Day, when he was coming a little to himſelf, one Zabelus, an Arabian Prince, having Cut-off Alexander's Head, ſent it to Ptolomy, who was wonderfully pleaſed both with the Report of the Action, and with the Spectacle it ſelf. But when he had entertained his Paſſion a while, with the Sight, and Thought, of a Dead Enemy, he quickly put an End to that Satisfaction, by Dying himſelf. This Alexander, was Otherwiſe called Balles. He Reigned about Five Years, as we have Noted Elſewhere. Demetrius, who was known alſo by the Name of Nicanor, Succeeded Alexander, a Man of a Harſh Nature, as appear'd by his Barbarous Uſage of Ptolomy's Soldiers, without any regard to the Obligations and Services he had received from them, upon the Credit of an Affinity with Cleopatra. The Soldiers had ſuch an Indignation for this Ungrateful way of Proceeding, that they Quitted him themſelves, and went away to Alexandria, leaving only theſe Elephants behind them.

Jonathan the High-Prieſt, having at this time drawn together all the Force he was able to Raiſe out of Judæa, ſet himſelf down before the Citadel of Jeruſalem, with a Reſolution to Diſlodge the Macedonian Garriſon, and the Fugitive Jews that had taken Sanctuary there. They were ſo Bold and Confident, in the Strength of the Place, that they bad Jonathan, at firſt, a moſt Contemptuous Defyance; but after a while they were glad to ſend ſome of their Wicked Inſtruments by Stealth out of the Town to Demetrius for Succour. This Intelligence put him into ſuch a Chafe, that he immediately March'd-out with his Army from Antioch toward Jonathan; and upon his Arrival at Ptolomais, he ſent for him by a Letter to come to him. Jonathan, upon this Invitation, took with him ſeveral Rich Gratifications in Gold, Silver, Glorious Garments, and other Pretious Curioſities, and Attended with the Prieſts, and Elders, made a Compliment of them to Demetrius: The Siege going forward all this while, nevertheleſs. The King's Heart was ſo Soften'd by this Generous way of Reſpect, that he Receiv'd both the Preſents and the Preſenters with Great Honour, Confirm'd and Continued Jonathan in the Pontificat conferr'd upon him By his Anceſtor; and was upon the Main, ſo far from giving any Credit to the Calumny and Suggeſtions of Demetrius to Laſthenes in favour of Jonathan and the Jews.

We are ſo Senſible of the Dutiful and Affectionate Return we have from time to time received from our Friends the Jews, in Acknowledgment of the Good Will we bear them, that it is our Good Pleaſure to give them ſome Signal Mark of the Eſteem we have for them: Wherefore we do by theſe Preſents Aſſign the Three Governments of Aphereima, Lidda, and Ramatha, that were taken from the Samaritans, together with all the Land thereunto belonging, to the Uſe and Advantage of Judæa; Diſcharging likewiſe the Prieſts at Jeruſalem of all the Duties by them formerly allow'd to our Forefathers, as well upon Corn, and Fruits, as upon Salt-Pits, and Crown-Taxes, with an Expreſs Caution and Prohibition, that Nothing of all This be Exacted from them for the Future. Be ſure to ſend the Copy of this Letter to Jonathan, and to have it Hung-up in the moſt Conſpicuous Place of the Holy Temple. This was the Sum of the Declaration.

Matters were now brought into ſo Quiet, and Peaceable a State, that Demetrius Flattering himſelf into an Opinion, that there was no longer any Danger, Diſcharges his Army without their Full Pay; retaining only a Body of Mercenaries that he had gotten together in Crete, and other of the Neighbouring Iſlands: So that Diſmiſſing his Father's Old Troups, without any Stipend, contrary to the Practice of his Anceſtors, who paid them as well in Peace as in War, and ſo kept them in readineſs to ſerve upon any Occaſion, he quite Loſt the Hearts of his Own People.

Demetrius loſes the Hearts of his Army for want of Pay.

THis Defection of the Army from Demetrius was ſo Notorious, that Diodotus, otherwiſe called Tryphon, a Native of Apamia, and formerly an Officer under Alexander, taking notice of that Mutinous Diſpoſition, apply'd himſelf to Malchus an Arabian, who was at that time Governour of young Antiochus, the Son of Alexander; telling him how deſperately the Soldiers were bent againſt Demetrius, and propoſing that if Malchus would put Antiochus into his Hands, he made no doubt of getting him reſtor'd to his Fathers Throne. Malchus was at firſt a little Diffident, and Scrupulous; but by the Force of Prayers, and Preſſing Inſtances, he was in a Short time drawn over to a Complyance.

The People beſet Demetrius in his Palace.

The Jews fight a while from the Battlements, and after That ſet Fire to the City.

The People of Antioch were ſo Enrag'd againſt Demetrius, both for his Father's ſake, and his Own, that they deſir'd nothing more then an Opportunity for a Revenge; wherefore, upon the News of this Relief from Jonathan, and conſidering the Hazzard of his growing ſtill Stronger and Stronger, if they were not beforehand with him, they betook themſelves to their Arms in a Hurry, and immediately Begirt the Palace with ſuch a Countenance and Poſture, as if they were juſt ready to give the Aſſault. But their Chief Bus'neſs was rather to ſecure the Avennes, and ſeize him as he was coming out. Demetrius, finding himſelf thus beſet, drew-up his Foreign Mercenaries, together with Jonathan's Auxiliaries, and made a Charge upon the Enemy; but they were over-born by Numbers, and Beaten back. The Jews, upon this Repulſe, retir'd into the Palace, where they mounted the Battlements; and from thence with Darts and Arrows ſo Gall'd the Enemy, that they forced them from one Houſe to another, without much Danger to themſelves. The next Thing they did, was to Fire the City; which, being for the Greater part Wooden Buildings, and the Houſes ſtanding Cloſe, was preſently all in a Flame. The Inhabitants, finding that the Fire was not to be Maſter'd, ſhifted for themſelves as well as they could, with the Jews ſtill at the back of them, from Houſe to Houſe, doing wonderful Execution upon them. This Rout put an End to their Fighting; and all they had now to do, was to ſave their Wives and Children: But the Jews, all this while, made Advantage of their Confuſion; and falling upon them at every Turn according to the King's Order, they killed Great Numbers of them upon the Purſuit, and forced the reſt to throw down their Arms, and deliver themſelves up at Mercy. This Victory put an End to the War; the Rebellion being Pardon'd, and the Booty given to the Jews, whom Demetrius ſent back again to Jonathan, with a moſt Honourable Teſtimony of their Valour, acknowledging that it was to their Courage he ſtood Indebted for that Succeſs: But This Grateful Humour did not laſt long; for he did afterward, not only break his Promiſe, but threaten Jonathan with a War, if he ſhould not for the Future make Good thoſe Tributes to Himſelf, which the Jews had formerly paid to his Predeceſſors. And he had done as he ſaid too, if Tryphon had not diverted him, by Forcing him to make uſe of that Army againſt himſelf, which he had deſign'd againſt Jonathan; who being now return'd out of Arabia into Syria, with Young Antiochus, ſet the Crown upon his Head, and by the Help of the Soldiers before ſpoken of, that had been Couzen'd of their Pay, he made Open War upon Demetrius; Worſted him in a Set-Battle; made himſelf Maſter of his Elephants, and of the City of Antioch, and forc'd him back into Cilicia.

Antiochus, upon this Reſolution, ſent an Embaſſy to Jonathan, in the Style of his Friend, and Ally; Eſtabliſh'd him in the Pontificat; put him in Poſſeſſion of the Four Governments that were Aſſign'd to Judæa, and gave his Brother Simon the Command of all his Forces from Tyre to the Borders of Sydon: preſenting Jonathan over and above, with ſeveral Drinking-Cups of Gold; Purple Garments with a Golden Buckle, and the Privilege of Uſing and Wearing theſe Enſigns of State; Adopting him alſo into the Roll of his Choiceſt Friends. Jonathan was ſo ſenſible of theſe Multiply'd Bounties, and Marks of Honour he had received from Antiochus, that he forthwith Diſpatch'd away an Expreſs to Antiochus, and Tryphon, both in one: with a moſt Affectionate Tender of his Friendſhip and Service, with all Readyneſs to Joyn againſt Demetrius as a Common Enemy; reflecting upon him alſo at the ſame time as the moſt Ungrateful of Men, in returning ſo much Evil for ſo much Good.

No ſooner had Jonathan his Commiſſion for the Raiſing of Men, but he preſently fell to work upon Levies in Syria, and Phœnicia; and from thence to all the Neighbouring Towns and Cities; where he was receiv'd with Great Honour in Appearance, but got no Soldiers among them. Upon his coming afterward to Askalon, the People entertain'd him with Formalities and Preſents: where he took Occaſion to lay before them, (as he did at other Places in Cœle-Syria) how much it was their Intereſt, and their Duty, to take up Arms againſt Demetrius, for Antiochus, having ſo Fair an Opportunity before them to reckon with him for Old Scores. He wrought upon them ſo far by his Advice, and Reaſoning, that they Promiſed Supplies; but advancing afterward to Gaza upon the Deſign of the ſame Good Office to Antiochus, he found, to his Great Admiration, the Gates ſhut againſt him, and the People Obſtinately Reſolved to ſtick to Demetrius. Jonathan took this Affront ſo Heinouſly, that he forthwith divided his Army upon it, Aſſaulting the Town with one Part, while the other went Ranging up and down to Burn, and lay Waste the Country. The Inhabitants, after a short time, seeing nothing but Inevitable Destruction before their Eyes; no Appearance of any Relief from Demetrius; nor, in truth, so much as the Hopes of any at so Remote a Distance, they came at last, upon laying things together, to Consult their Necessities and Despairs, and upon Second Thoughts, made a Seasonable, and a Submissive Application to Jonathan, by their Deputies, who were as frankly received on the other hand into his Interest, and Friendship. It were better if Men would Govern themselves by a Prospect of the Reasons and Consequences of Things beforehand, and to do what they ought to do, Willingly, before they came to be forced to't; but some People are altogether for the After-Wit, that comes by Woful Experience; not but that Bought-Wit is better yet then none at all, though they pay dear for't. Jonathan, in fine, Accepted of their Propositals and Hostages, and so sent them away to Jerusalem, passing himself thorough the Country to Damascus.

Upon Second Thoughts, they Court and Embrace his Friendship.

Demetrius, in the mean while, had a strong Army Encamped before Cedasa upon the Borders of Tyre and Galilee, with a Design to draw Jonathan out of Syria by way of Diversion, to the Assistance of Galilee, upon a Presumption that he would look to his own Country in the First place: but this did not hinder Jonathan from Advancing with all the Speed he could to Encounter him, leaving his Brother Simon behind him in his Absence to take care of Judea. Simon at the same time, with what Men he could get together out of that Country, Marched up to Bethsura, and Assaulted it, though accounted the Strongest, and most Defensible Place in all Judæa, and in the Hands, as we have said before, of the Faction of Demetrius. So soon as the Garrison found themselves so Press'd with Works and Engines, that the Place seem'd to be in some Danger, they sent a Messenger to Simon, only for leave to Quit the Place, and, without any Molestation or Violence, Free Liberty to March away to Demetrius. They were brought to these Terms, by the Apprehension of being all put to the Sword, if the Place were taken by Force. Simon granted them their own Conditions, and put another Garrison in the Place of what was there before.

Demetrius in the mean while Encamps before Dedasa.
Jonathan advances toward him, and leaves Simon to take Care of Judæa.

Jonathan, at this time moving from the Place in Galilee near the Lake of Genezer, where he had first Encamped, advanced into the Plain of Asor, not so much as dreaming of any Enemy upon that Quarter: But a Party of Demetrius having gotten Intelligence of his Purpose the day before, Plac'd an Ambush under a Mountain, and Marched toward him with their Body in the Plain Field. So soon as Jonathan saw them in Order of Battle, and ready to make a Charge, he gave his Men the best Orders he could in so short a time, how to Govern themselves in the Action; but when the Jews came to discover the Ambush, they turn'd their Backs immediately, for fear of being Coop'd-up betwixt the Two Bodies, and all Cut-off. The Terror was so General that Jonathan had hardly a Man to stand by him: saving only Two Captains of his Guards, Mattathias the Son of Apsalon, and Judas the Son of Capsæus; who, with a Band of Fifty Brave Fellows, stood their Ground, and made so Desperate a Charge upon the Enemy's Front, that they fought rather like Mad-Men then Soldiers. Jonathan's Deserters finding the Demetrians doubting and staggering, in this Confusion, made Head and Rally'd; and falling-in upon them afresh, kill'd a Matter of Two Thousand upon the Place, pursuing the rest to Cedasa up to their very Tents.

Jonathan falls into an Ambush, and his Troops forsake him.

Jonathan, after this Glorious Victory, returned to Jerusalem; and in this Height of his Successes, sent his Embassadors to Rome, with a Commission to Renew an Allyance with them, and with Orders to go to Lacedæmon in their Return, upon the same Account. Jonathan's Propositals were Entertain'd, and his Embassadors Honourably Treated and Dispatch'd away with Letters Recommendatory to the Kings of Europe and Asia, for their safe Passage. They called likewise upon the Lacedæmonians, in their way back again, and presented them with Letters, as follows.

to let you understand, that we should have put-in our Claim to the Honour of your Friendship before this, but that we were not Willing to prevent you in the Glory of Leading the Example. You may be pleased to take Notice however, that from the First Ratification of an Amity betwixt us to this Day, we have never forgotten you in our Prayers to God for your Prosperity, Health, and Victory over all your Enemies. And we have been as Tender likewise in All our Sufferings and Distresses, under the Vexatious Persecution of our Covetous and Ambitious Neighbours, not to Involve, either your selves, or any other of our Friendly Allies, in our Troubles: But our Circumstances being now Easyer, and our Wars, by God's Providence, over, we have sent Numenius the Son of Antimachus, and Antipater, the Son of Jason, being Senators, and Men of Honour, to the Romans; and with Letters also to your selves for the Strengthning and Renewing of a Friendly Understanding betwixt us. You may be pleased to return us what Answer you shall think Meet, and to let us Understand wherein we may be Useful to you: in a Full Trust and Confidence, that you shall find us ever ready to serve you in all Offices of Affection and Respect.

Of the Three Sects among the Jews; Pharisees, Sadducees and Essæans.

The Jews were at this time divided into Three Sects or Factions, upon the Subject of Fate, and Free Will. The Three Parties were Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essæans. The Pharisees held that Men were Concluded under a Fatality in Some Cases, and left at Liberty in Others, either to do, or not to do, as they pleas'd. The Sadducees did not allow of any Fatality at all, in what case soever; but that every Man has it in his Own Power to make his Condition Better or Worse, according as he takes Right or Wrong Measures: Whereas the Essæans, on the other hand, acknowledg'd no other Power then that of an Over-ruling Destiny, working according to the Predeterminations of an Irresistible Fate: But we have spoken more Particularly to this Point, in our History of the Jewish Wars. Lib. 2.

See the History of the Jewish Wars, Lib. 2. Cap. 7.

Demetrius's Troups March toward Jonathan, and Jonathan Advances to Oppose them.

Demetrius's Commanders were now advancing toward Jonathan, at the Head of a Better Army then they had before, in hope of redeeming the Credit they had lost by their late Overthrow; but Jonathan, having Intelligence that they were a-coming, made all the Haste he could to meet them at Amathis, with a Resolution to oppose their Passage into Judæa; Encamping himself within Fifty Furlons of the Enemy, and sending Scouts abroad for Discovery how they were Posted, and which way they bent their Design. Upon the Return of the Spies with the best Information they could get, and some Prisoners they had taken that Night, Jonathan found that the Design was to Surprize him in his Quarters. So that he put Every Thing immediately into a Posture of Defence; Planted his Watches and Out-Guards to their best Advantage, and kept his Men in Arms and in Heart, all that Night; telling them the whole Matter beforehand, to the End that if they should be Attaqu'd, they might not be Surpriz'd. When the Officers of Demetrius came to Understand that the Plot was Discover'd, it put them to their Wits End what to do next; for their Underhand-Project being Disappointed, they were not in Condition to Encounter him by Open Force. Upon this Pinch they could find no better Shift then to slip away by Night; and under the Countenance of several Fires, to Cover their Retreat. The Next Morning by Peep of Day, Jonathan March'd-up with a Resolution to Force the Camp; when finding it Abandon'd, he Posted away after the Fugitives as fast as he could, but to no Purpose; for they had gotten over the River Eleutherus, into a Place of Safety, before he could reach them. He took his Course next into Arabia; Ravaged the Country of the Nabatheans; took a great many Cattle and Prisoners, and sold them at Damascus.

Jonathan hath Intelligence of a Design to beat-up his Quarters:

But the Enemy gave him the slip by Night.

Jonathan Posts after them, but cannot Overtake them. He Ravages Arabia.

Simon Marches to Askalon; And so to Joppa, securing all as he goes.

Simon, at the same time, took a Progress thorough Judæa, and Palæstine, as far as Askalon, where he Garrison'd all places of Defence; and after Fortifying and Securing the Country, Marched to Joppa, took Possession of the Place, and clapt a Strong Guard upon it to keep the Inhabitants in Awe, that would otherwise have betray'd the Town to Demetrius.

Matters being in this Disposition, Jonathan and Simon returned to Jerusalem; where the High-Priest Summoning the People together into the Temple, put them upon Repairing the Ruinous Walls, both of the City, and those about the Holy Place; Fortifying them, upon the Main, with High and Substantial Towers; Advising them also to Erect another Wall to Cut-off all Communication betwixt the Castle and the City: recommending it to them over and above, to put good Garrisons into other Convenient Places up and down, and keep the Country in a Defensible Condition. The People were highly pleased with the Reasons of all he said; so that he made it his own Province to take care of the City, and Committed the rest to his Brother.

Jonathan and Simon Fortify the City and Temple.

Demetrius, being gotten over the River, Advanced into Mesopotamia, with a Design of making himself Master, not only of the Country, but of Babylon it self; proposing also, upon the Reducing of the Upper-Provinces, to make that Quarter the Seat of the War; for the Greeks and Macedonians thereabouts had sent him several Embassies baſſies and Invitations to come over to them; with Aſſurances, that upon his appearing, they would Range themſelves under his Obedience, and Aſſiſt him with their Arms againſt Arſaces the King of Parthia. In the Strength of this Confidence and Encouragement, Demetrius moved immediately toward them in Contemplation how Eaſy a Thing it would be to beat Tryphon out of Syria, after One Home-Blow given to the Parthians. In the Strength of this Confidence, Demetrius Poſted away immediately towards him, and was received upon his Arrival with all the Chearfulneſs imaginable, where he put himſelf in the Head of a Brave Army, and made War upon Arſaces, by whom he was utterly Routed; his whole Body Deſtroy'd, and himſelf taken Priſoner, as we have ſaid formerly in another Place.

Demetrius makes War upon Arſaces; loſes his Army, and is taken Priſoner.

CHAP. X.

Demetrius being gone, Tryphon aſpires to the Crown, by removing Jonathan, and Antiochus. He works upon Jonathan's Credulity, and moſt villanouſly betrays him; makes him a Priſoner in Ptolemais, and cuts-off a Thouſand of his People.

THis Miſcarriage of Demetrius put an End to Tryphon's Pretended Faith and Allegeance to Antiochus: his Bus'neſs being now only to conſider how he might remove his Maſter out of the Way, and ſet-up for himſelf. This was not to be done he thought, ſo long as Jonathan (a True Friend to Antiochus) was in Condition to Oppoſe it: ſo that the Firſt Thing to be done was to rid his Hands of Jonathan; and the Contrivance was this: He went from Antioch to Bethſan; in Greek, Scythopolis, where he found Jonathan with Forty Thouſand Choice Men at his Heels, that were ready at hand to ſerve him in Caſe of Need. Tryphon, finding him in this Strength and Poſture, made uſe of Preſents, and fair Words, to Inveigle and Impoſe upon him, when he ſaw there was no good to be done by down-right Force. He gave it in Charge to his Officers, to pay the ſame Reſpect and Obedience to Jonathan, that they did to himſelf: Propounded by theſe ways of Inſinuation, to Cover the Treachery of his Falſe Heart, and to Create in him ſuch a Truſt and Confidence, as might probably Expoſe him, for want of Caution, to a Mortal Credulity and Surprize: Paſſing from One thing to Another; till at laſt, in regard, all things were now at Peace, he ſaid, and the War at an End, he put it into Jonathan's Head to Diſcharge his Army, as a Burden there was no Occaſion for; but ſtill Adviſing him to Retain a Competent Guard about his Perſon, and that they might go together to Ptolemais; for he was Reſolved to put him in Poſſeſſion of that City, and of all the Fortreſſes thereabouts; for, ſays he, I am now come hither on purpoſe to deliver Thoſe Places into your Hands. Jonathan was too Innocent to ſuſpect ſo Baſe a Villany; inſomuch that caſting himſelf wholly upon the Sincerity and Good Faith of Tryphon, he Diſmiſs'd his Army, all but Three Thouſand Men, whereof he left Two in Galilee, and carry'd the Third along with him in Company with Tryphon to Ptolomais. He was no ſooner enter'd the Town with his People, but the Inhabitants, according to their Inſtructions, ſhut the Gates upon him; took Jonathan himſelf Alive, and cut-off all his Soldiers, every Man of them. Part of the Army was afterwards ſent to Galilee, with an Intent to Murder the other Two Thouſand there, as they had done their Fellows; but having timely Notice of their Treachery to Jonathan, they betook themſelves to their Arms immediately upon the Report, and ſo made their Eſcape. Tryphon's Soldiers were ſo well Satisfy'd in the Reſolution of theſe Men; as to the Contempt of Death and Danger, that they let them go off without any Interruption, and ſo went their Way back again as they came.

both for his Valour and Conduct, ſtruck the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem, not only with an Inconſolable Affliction, out of the Love they bare him, but with a Terrible Apprehenſion over and above, of the Miſeries they lay expoſed to in the Conſequence of his Death: even to the Hazzard of the whole Nation, by letting looſe thoſe Enemies upon them, on This Occaſion, that ſtood in Awe of them before. This was the Thing they fear'd, and they were not much out in their Conjecture. For ſo ſoon as they came afterward to hear that Jonathan was put to Death, their Neighbours all Aſſociated againſt them, as Men without a Head, and utterly Deſtitute; the General being loſt, and no other Commander Qualify'd to Exerciſe his Charge. Nay, Tryphon himſelf got an Army together to make an Inroad with it upon Judæa. But Simon obſerving what a Conſternation the People were in, for fear of New Broils, and out of an Affectionate Zeal, to keep-up their Hearts againſt the Practices of Tryphon, he call'd the People together, and made them a Diſcourſe, as follows.

Tryphon prepares for an Incurſion into Judæa.

Simon Animates the People to ſtand-up for their Liberties, and Offers himſelf for their General.

I need not tell you, ſays he, my Friends and Countrymen, how Vigorouſly, and Frankly I my Self, my Father, and my Brethren, have expoſed our ſelves to the uttermoſt Difficulties and Hazzards for our Common Liberty: So that it is no New Thing, in our Family, to lay down our Lives in the Defence of our Laws, and our Religion; neither am I ſo Inſenſible of the Authority of theſe Domeſtique Examples, as to be Wrought upon by any Terror to the Sacrificing of my Honour, and my Duty, for the ſaving of my Life: wherefore without looking any further for a Leader, you have a Man here before you, that is ready to Do, or to Suffer, all things that are Great and Glorious, for your Preſervation and Welfare. Do but you only Follow, where I ſhall Lead you. I do not reckon my ſelf to be better then my Brethren, neither do I value my Life at a Higher Rate then they have done theirs before me; nor am I ſo Degenerate, as to think of ſaving that Life by Cowardiſe, when my Country and my Religion are at ſtake, which our Family has ever Accounted as the moſt Heroical of their Adventures, to part with, upon the ſame Occaſion. No, no, My Friends and Brethren, it ſhall never be ſaid that I have Derogated from the Dignity of our Family. I make no doubt at all yet, but that God, in his Good time, will, even by my Hand, Avenge you upon the Heads of your Enemies; Deliver you, with your Wives and Children, from your Oppreſſors, and Vindicate the Holy Temple againſt all the Abominations and Violences of your Malicious Perſecutors. And what is it, in fine, that Encourages this Preſent Confederacy againſt you, but that they look upon you as Sheep without a Shepherd; That is to ſay, an Army without a Leader?

The Multitude were ſo Inflamed at this Speech and Declaration of Simon, that they preſently took Courage and Confidence upon it; Suſpended their Fears, and Revived their Spirits with the Hope of better Things: ſo that they all cry'd-out with one Voice; None ſo fit as Simon to ſucceed to the Command of his Brave Brothers, Judas, and Jonathan, and therefore let Simon be our General, and whatever he Commands ſhall be Obey'd. The New General got as many of his People together as were fit to bear Arms, and ſo fell to work upon the Walling of the City, and the Fortifying of it with Strong and Stately Towers; and that being over, he ſent Jonathan the Son of Abſalon, a Particular Friend of his, to Joppa, with Order to turn the Inhabitants out of the Town for fear they ſhould deliver it up to Tryphon: while he himſelf, continu'd at Jeruſalem to look to the City.

Simon Commands in Jonathan's Place.

The Inhabitants of Joppa turned out of Town, for fear of betraying it to Tryphon.

Tryphon was now upon his March with a Great Army from Ptolemais; and coming into Judæa, he brought Jonathan with him in Bonds. Simon met him with his Troups near the City of Addida, upon a Mountain that overlooks the Plain. When Tryphon came to Underſtand that the Jews had choſen Simon for their General, he ſent Meſſengers to him to try if he could Circumvent him by a Trick. And ſo he ſent him Word, that if he had a Mind to have his Brother Jonathan Diſcharg'd, let him ſend him a Hundred Talents of Silver, and Two Sons of Jonathan along with it for Hoſtages, that when he ſhould be ſet at Liberty, he ſhould not Seduce Judæa from their Allegeance to the King; Tryphon ſuggeſting that he was now to be kept in Cuſtody, only till the King's Mony ſhould be paid. Simon knew well enough there was a Cheat in't; but Computing with himſelf upon all the Hazzards of the Caſe; as, what if he ſhould loſe his Mony, and his Brother never the Better for it? Beſide the Delivery of his Sons to the Mercy of an Enemy, there was a Miſchief on the one hand; and then he was afraid on the other, that upon his Denyal of the Mony for a Ranſom, or the Sons for Hoſtages, the Calumny of his Brother's Death would at laſt be laid at his Door. Upon This Deliberation, he call'd a Counſel; told them Tryphon's Demands, giving his Opinion alſo beforehand, that there was Treachery in the Bottom; but Intimating however, that it would be better to ſend both the Mony, and the Sons at a Venture, then to incur a Suſpicion, upon not Hearkening to Tryphon's Conditions, as if he were not ſo Zealous as he ſhould be for the Safety of his Brother. So the Reſolution was taken to ſend Both: though Tryphon brake his Faith, after all, and would not yet Releaſe Jonathan; but went up and down with his Army, Ravaging the Country, 'till he came at laſt to Dora, a City of Idumæa, with an Intention to make that his way to Jeruſalem; Simon keeping-up with him ſtill wherever he went, Camp againſt Camp.

The Citadel of Jeruſalem is hard Preſs'd.

While Tryphon was upon the way, word was brought him from Jeruſalem, that the Garriſon was hard preſs'd for want of Proviſions, and that they deſir'd he would immediately Haſten away to their Relief. Upon this Intelligence, he order'd his Horſe to be in readyneſs, for he would March without any Delay to their Succour; but there fell ſo Great a Snow that Night, that the Ways were all Cover'd, and Impaſſable; eſpecially for Horſe. Upon This Diſappointment, he Decamped, and went back to Cœle-Syria; and paſſing thorough the Country of Galaad, cauſed Jonathan, near the City of Baſca, to be Slain, and Bury'd there: and from thence he returned to Antioch. Simon took care however to remove Jonathan's Bones to his Father's Sepulchre at Modin, with the Solemnity of a Publique Mourning, where he Erected a Glorious Monument of White Poliſhed Marble to the Honour of his Family. It was raiſed upon an Eminence, that overlooks the whole Country thereabouts, and Encompaſſed with Arched Walks, Reſting upon Admirable Pillars, Each of one Entire Stone. He raiſed alſo Seven Pyramids for his Father, Mother, Four Brothers, and Himſelf, One for Each: A Work ſo Wonderful, both for the State, and Beauty of it, that it is yet to be ſeen, and hath the Reputation of a Celebrated Piece even to this Day.

Tryphon is upon the way to Relieve it; but is hinder'd by a Prodigious Flight of Snow.

Tryphon puts Jonathan to Death.

Simon Orders a Solemn Mourning for him, and a Glorious Monument, and Seven Pyramids.

This may ſuffice to ſhew the Care and Zeal of Simon in doing Right to the Honour of his Family, by ſo Magnificent a Monument; and moſt particularly, to the Memory of Jonathan; [a] who had now Govern'd the People in the Quality both of Prince, and of High-Prieſt, for the ſpace of Four Year; his Brother Simon, by the Univerſal Suffrage and Conſent of the People, ſucceeding him. In the Firſt Year of his Promotion, he deliver'd them from the Tributes he formerly paid to the Macedonians; and this was in the Year 170, from the coming of Seleucus Nicanor to the Kingdom of Syria. Now Simon had gain'd ſo great an Eſteem and Authority among the People, that they Dated their Writings as well Private as Publique, in ſuch or ſuch a Year of Simon the Governour of the Jews, with this Addition, [and the moſt Deſerving Patron of the Nation.] For under his Adminiſtration all things ſucceeded well, both in War and Peace, by the Advantages he brought to his Friends, and by the Victory he Obtained over the Common Enemy; Deſtroying the Cities of Gazara, Joppa, and Iamnia; laying the Citadel of Jeruſalem level with the Ground; and taking it moreover into his Care, how to prevent the ſame Inconveniencies again for the time to come: That is to ſay, by putting it out of Condition of either Annoying the Town, or of ſerving for a Place of Protection to Fugitives and Rebels. In Order to this End, he gave his Advice for the Digging-up, and Plaining of the Mountain it ſelf that the Caſtle ſtood upon, ſo as to leave the Temple upon the Advantage of the Higher Ground. Upon This Conſideration, he call'd a Congregation, and laid before them what Damage they had already ſuffer'd from this Caſtle, and what Inconveniencies they might reaſonably Expect from it over again, in the future, if ever it ſhould fall into the Hands of an Enemy-Prince. This Plain, and ſhort way of Reaſoning wrought ſo Effectually upon the Multitude, that they were preſently, One and All, for Demoliſhing the Mountain. They fell immediately to work upon't, and Ply'd it ſo hard Night and Day for Three Years Succeſſively, without Intermiſſion (doing Duty by turns) that in the End, by the Force of Indefatigable Labour, they brought it under the Command of the Temple.

Jonathan govern'd the People as Prince and High-Prieſt for 4 Years; Simon ſucceeding him.

ny, to diſpoſe them toward the Choice of himſelf for their next Governour. Demetrius, they ſaid, was a Priſoner to the Parthians; and Antiochus would never forget the Deſerters of his Brother. By this Artifice of Inſinuation, Tryphon prepar'd his way to the Crown: and there needed not much Argument in the Caſe, when all People reckon'd upon it, that it would be the making of any Man's Fortune, that ſhould give his Voice for the making of this Man King; ſo that they Advanc'd him to the Throne without any more Ceremony. This Elevation made a Diſcovery of that Ill Nature in him, now he was a King, which he had concealed all this while in the Capacity of a Private Man; the better to Compaſs his Ends by keeping fair with the People. So ſoon as ever he had gain'd his Point, the Mask was taken-off, and he ſhew'd himſelf to be a True Tryphon, (or a Diſſolute Wretch) in his Manners, as well as in his Name; and his Adverſaries laid hold of it very much to his Diſadvantage, for the Soldiers grew quickly weary of his Humour, and went over to Cleopatra, the Wife of Demetrius, who had then ſhut up her ſelf in Seleucia with her Children: (while Antiochus, otherwiſe called Soter, and the Brother of Demetrius,) went skulking up and down from place to place, and no body daring to Receive him hardly, for fear of Tryphon. Now Cleopatra, what with the Encouragement of the Military Men that deſerted him, the Inſtance and Perſuaſion of Friends, and the Apprehenſion ſhe her ſelf had of the Seleucians giving-up the Town to Tryphon; ſhe ſent a Meſſenger to Antiochus, with a Propoſal of Marriage, and a Tender of her Kingdom to him, as well as of her Perſon. Antiochus forthwith embraced the Propoſition; and upon Cloſing with Cleopatra on thoſe Terms, the People came Trouping-in to him in ſuch Numbers, that in a ſhort time he was Maſter of a Marching Army, and made War upon Tryphon; overcame him in a Battle; and beating him out of Syria, purſu'd him to Phœnibia, begirting him at laſt in Dora, a very Strong and a Well-Fortify'd Hold. He ſent Embaſſadors alſo to Simon the High-Prieſt of the Jews, upon a Treaty of Amity, and Allyance, who Frankly Accepted of his Terms, and ſoon after ſent him a Supply of Proviſion and Monies for the carrying on of the Siege; which was a Service at that time ſo Acceptable to Antiochus, that he look'd upon him as the beſt Friend he had in the World: But Tryphon, in the End, made an Eſcape out of Dora, and fled to Apamia, where the Town was taken, and himſelf ſlain in the Fourth Year of his Government.

The Senſe of this Perfidious Indignity put the Good Old Man ſo far out of Patience, that forgetting the Infirmities of his Age, he Marched immediately in the Head of an Army with the Reſolution of a Hero in the Prime of his Youth, and Vigour, to Engage the Enemy; ſending his Son before him with ſome of his Choiceſt Troups, and himſelf following by ſeveral ways with the reſt, Planting his Ambuſhes every where up and down in the Avenues, and all things ſucceeding to his Heart's Content; for he had ſtill the better of it upon every Encounter; renew'd his League with the Romans, and liv'd at Peace afterward all the Days of his Life.

WHen Simon had been Eight Years Governour of Judæa, he was treacherouſly Murder'd, in the End, by his Son-in-law Ptolemy, upon an Invitation to a Treat. He had got his Wife and his Two Sons Priſoners already, and had his Ruffians abroad alſo to take his Third Son John, otherwiſe called Hyrcanus, and Kill him; but the Young Man, having ſeaſonable Notice of the Danger, took Sanctuary in Jeruſalem, where the People were doubly kind to him, partly for the Love and Veneration they had for the Memory of his Father, and in part for the Deadly Hatred they bare bare to Ptolomy, whom they bravely Repulsed upon an Attempt to Enter at One Gate, because they had already received Hyrcanus at Another.

UPon this Affront, Ptolomy withdrew himself to a Certain Castle not far from Jericho, called Dagon. Hyrcanus at the same time enter'd upon the Pontificat, and Officiated in it as Successor to his Father. The First Thing he did, was to Offer-up Prayers and Sacrifices in due Manner, and Form; and that Duty being Over, he Marched away to the Assault of the Fort: Where the only Difficulty he met withal, was to Contend with the Natural Piety and Tenderness he had for his Mother and his Brethren, whom Ptolomy Exposed from the Top of the Wall, Whipping and Tormenting them in the Sight of all the People, with Menaces to cast them Headlong from the Battlements, unless Hyrcanus presently Quitted the Siege. Now the Other Computing with himself, that the Easyer he was to the Town, the Easyer Ptolomy would be to his Relations, This Thought put him to a little stand upon the First Impression, which way to Incline; but his Mother seeing him look and Act as if he were Deliberating, and Relenting, called-out to him Aloud, and Incourag'd him both with her Hand and Voice, to make a Right Use of that Barbarous Spectacle, and without any Regard to her's, and her Childrens Sufferings, to do himself and his Family Right, in a Just Vengeance upon the Head of that Execrable Monster; for she her self desired nothing more then to Expire in her Torments, upon Condition that that Unnatural Tyrant might be Plagu'd and Punish'd according to his Desert. The Generous and Provoking Bravery of this Woman raised the Spirits of Hyrcanus to the Highest Degree of Resolution, to push forward the Assault. But finding that the more they press'd upon the Fort, the Fiercer Ptolomy was upon his Mother, all other Resentments of Rage and Revenge gave way to the over-ruling Softness of a Dutiful Son: So that by these Pauses and Intervals, Irresolution and Distraction, the Siege was drawn-out at length till the Sabbatical Year came-on; the Seventh Year being a Year of Rest to the Jews, as well as the Seventh of Days: So that Ptolomy was now deliver'd from the War and the Siege; and thereupon putting to Death the Mother and the Brother of Hyrcanus, he withdrew to Zeno, Surnamed Cotyla, a Tyrant who had at that time Usurped to himself the Government of Philadelphia. Antiochus besieges Hyrcanus in the Fort at Jerusalem. He grants the Jews a Seven-Days Truce. Hyrcanus moves him in Favour of the Jews; who comes to Terms with him, and raises the Siege, Hyrcanus makes an Alliance with Antiochus; and, according to Nicolaus of Damascus, does him Great Service in the Parthian War. Antiochus is Defeated and Slain, and the Kingdom of Syria descends to his Brother Demetrius.

ANtiochus had not as yet either forgotten or forgiven the Baffles and Disgraces he had formerly received from Simon the Father of Hyrcanus: So that he made an Inroad into Judæa in the Fourth Year of his Reign, the First of Hyrcanus, [a] and the 162*d Olympiad*, where he first Ravaged the Country; and then drove Hyrcanus into the City it self; dividing his Army into Seven Bodies round about it. They Advanced little or nothing at the Beginning, the Walls being very Strong, and the Defendents Valiant. The Camp was for some short time, Scanted for Water; but that Defect was Plentifully supply'd by a Great Fall of Rain. Upon a Thorough Consideration of the Matter, they found the Town most Accessible upon the North-side of it, and therefore bent their Force Principally upon that Quarter; Raising a Hundred Turrets of Three Stories High against them, which were Well-Lin'd with Soldiers to carry-on the Attaque. They had likewise drawn a Double Circumvallation of a Great Length and Depth, to Cut-off the Means of Communications and Relief. But

This did not hinder the Defendents yet from making Frequent Sallies, and doing Execution too, when at any time they saw the Besiegers Loose or Careless upon their Guard: Or however, if they found them in Posture to Receive them, they could make their Retreat good at pleasure. There were a great many Unprofitable Mouths in the Town, that only wasted their Provisions, without doing any manner of Service; So that Hyrcanus taking This into Consideration, Separated Those that were fit to bare Arms from the rest, and turn'd all the Useless People out of the City; where, betwixt Antiochus on the one hand, that Stopt them from going any further, and Hyrcanus on the other, that would not let them go back again, the Poor Wretches Saunter'd away their Time under the Wall till many of them Perished for want of Bread.

All Unprofitable People Turn'd out of Town.

It so fell-out that it was now the time of the Feast of Tabernacles; and upon the Occasion of this Festival, these Miserable Creatures were Admitted into the Town again: Whereupon the Inhabitants address'd themselves to Antiochus, only to Grant them a Truce for Seven Days, in Honour of the Solemnity; which out of a Conscience of Religion, he allow'd them at First Word; and he did not only Gratify them in their Request, but sent them Magnificent Presents of Beasts over and above, for Sacrifices; as Bulls with Guilded Horns; Cups of Gold and Silver, Repleniſh'd with all sorts of Pretious Spices and Perfumes; and, in fine, Treated them with an Entertainment much Different from that of Antiochus Epiphanes; who, in Affront to their Religion, upon the Taking of the Temple, Sacrific'd Hogs upon the Altar, and prophan'd the Holy Place with Porridge made of Swines Flesh, in a Flat Defyance and Contempt of their Laws and Ceremonies, which prov'd the Ground of an Animosity betwixt them never to be Reconcil'd: Whereas the Present Antiochus had the Character, and Surname of [The Pious] given him by all sorts of People, in Honour of the Reverence he had for Religion.

Antiochus surnamed the Pious.

Hyrcanus took Encouragement upon this Instance of the King's Justice and Goodness, to move him by an Embassy on the Jews behalf, for the Liberty only of Living one with another, according to the Laws and Customs of their Own Country. The Court-Faction, on the Contrary, were for having them wholly Cut-off, and Rooted-out, as an Insociable, Singular Sort of People, that would be thought Holier and Wiser then their Neighbours, and valu'd themselves upon a Singularity from the rest of the World, in their Lives and Manners. But the King had too great a respect for their Piety and Behaviour, to put them to Extremities: So that he sent word back to Hyrcanus, that upon Condition the Besieged should deliver-up their Arms; undertake for the Taxes of Joppa, and the rest of the Cities about Judæa, and receive a Garrison into the Town, of his Appointment, he was ready to put an End to the War upon their Own Terms. The Jews agreed to all but the receiving of the Garrison, in regard of the Scruple they made of Intermixing with Strangers; but for a Composition to be Eased of that Article, they Proposed rather to give the King Hostages for the Performance of Covenants, and Five Hundred Talents over and above, which the King accepted of: Three Hundred of them being paid down upon the Nail, in part; and the Brother of Hyrcanus, one of the Pledges. Upon the finishing of this Treaty, the Works and the Battlements were thrown down; the City Dismantled and the Siege Rais'd.

Hyrcanus, after this, caused the Monument of David to be Open'd, (the Richest Prince that ever was upon the Face of the Earth) where he made Seizure of Three Thousand Talents to his Own Use; and Furnish'd himself with Forreign Mercenaries, being the First of the Nation that ever Entertain'd an Army of Strangers. In the Next Place he Enter'd into a League with Antiochus; Invited himself and his Army into the City, where he gave them a Splendid and a most Magnificent Reception, and follow'd him afterward with his Auxiliaries into the Parthian War, as we have it upon the Authority of Nicholaus Damascenus in Terms to this Purpose. Antiochus, upon the Routing of Indates the Parthian General, Erected a Triumphal Arch upon the Bank of the River Lycus, where he rested Two Days at the request of Hyrcanus, a Jew, being just at the Time of one of their Festivals, upon which Day they made a Conscience of Travelling. The Historian was in the right as to this Particular; for the Feast of Pentecost fell-out at that time, to be Just the Next Day after the Sabbath, and it is not lawful for us to take a Journy upon either of those Two Days.

Hyrcanus, after the Death of Antiochus, march'd away immediately with his Army into Syria, preſuming within himſelf, as afterward it prov'd, that he ſhould find the Country in ſome Meaſure Deſerted and Unmann'd. In Six Months time, though with ſome Difficulty, he took-in Medaba: and after that, Samega, and other Places thereabouts; and then Sichem, and Garizin, with the Land of the Chuthites, where the Temple ſtood, that with Alexanders' leave was built after the Model of that at Jeruſalem by Sanballat, one of his Governours; to Gratify his Son-in-law Manaſſes, the Brother of the High-Prieſt Jaddus, as we have ſaid before; which Temple was deſtroy'd a matter of Two Hundred Years after. Hyrcanus took alſo Several Strong Places in Idumæa; as Adora, and Mariſſa; and at laſt, when he had Maſter'd the Whole Province, made Proclamation for all People to depart the Land that would not Submit to be Circumcis'd: So that rather then quit their Country, they not only Comply'd in the Point of Circumciſion, but in a Conformity alſo to all the other Rites and Ceremonies of the Jews: And that was the Firſt time they were reckoned among the Jews.

As to the matter of Returning an Anſwer in Form, it ſhould be done, they ſaid, at their Firſt leiſure, and Care taken that no Wrong ſhould be Offer'd them for the Future. Fanius had Orders likewiſe to Furniſh the Embaſſadors with Mony for their Charges back again, out of the Publique Stock; which he did accordingly, with Recommendatory Letters over and above, to all Governours, and Officers in their Way, for the Convenience and Security of their Paſſage.

Ptolomy ſends Alexander Zebina to make War upon Demetrius.

While Matters ſtood thus with Hyrcanus the High-Prieſt, there was no want of good will in Demetrius to pick a Quarrel with him, if he had but had Seconds to ſtand by him in it; but for the Syrians, and his Own Soldiers, they hated him for his Lewdneſs, to that degree, that they Joyn'd in a Confederacy againſt him, making it their Requeſt to Ptolomy, otherwiſe called Phyſcon the King of Ægypt, only to ſend them ſome Branch or other of Seleucus's Family, and they would ſet him up for King. Upon this Application, Ptolomy ſent them one Alexander, Surnamed Zebina, with a Conſiderable Body of Men. It came to a Battle, and Demetrius being Routed, he fled to his Wife Cleopatra, who was then at Ptolemais, for Protection; but the Gates being ſhut againſt him, away he went for Tyre, where he fell into the Hands of his Enemies that kept him a while in the Anguiſh of a Miſerable Life, and then put him to Death.

Alexander Zebina being now Poſſeſſed of the Kingdom of Syria, Enter'd into a League with Hyrcanus the High-Prieſt, who was Engaged ſome ſhort time after, in a War with Antiochus Gryphus, the Son of Demetrius. They brought it to a Battle, and it was Alexander's hap to be ſlain in the Encounter. Antiochus, by this Providence, came to the King of Syria; but durſt not as yet make any Attempt upon the Jews; for he heard that Antiochus Cyzicenus (a Brother he had of his Own Name) was at that very time drawing an Army together againſt him at the Town of Cyzycus. So that his Buſineſs was, without being troubleſome to the Jews, to keep himſelf upon his Guard againſt his Brother, who was called Cyzicenus, from the Name of the Place where he had his Education. The Father of this Man was Antiochus Soter; He that was taken Priſoner by the Parthians. Now Cleopatra, as we have ſaid already, had been Wife to the Two Brothers. Upon the coming of Antiochus Cyzicenus, into Syria, the Brethren were perpetually Tearing one another to pieces, and Hyrcanus Conſequently in the poſſeſſion of a Profound Peace; for after the Slaughter of Antiochus he fell off from the Macedonians, and had no more to do with them either as an Ally, or as a Subject. But in the Days of Alexander Zebina, every thing went with Hyrcanus to his Own Heart's Content, and more yet in the Reign of the Two Brothers: for while they were Battering and Teizing one another, Hyrcanus had Judæa Safe and Whole to himſelf, and the Opportunity of Hoarding-up an Ineſtimable Maſs of Treaſure; beſide that while Cyzicenus lay Ravaging the Country, on the One hand; and his Brother had no Relief all this while out of Ægypt, on the other, he fairly left them to themſelves to Confound one another; which was the very thing he aim'd at, and ſo deſpis'd them Both.

Hyrcanus, under theſe Circumſtances, Marched with an Army up to the Strong City of Samaria, now call'd Sebaſte, ſince it was Rebuilt by Herod, of which we ſhall ſay more in Convenient Time and Place. Hyrcanus was ſo Irritated againſt the Samaritans by the Indignities they had put upon the People of Mariſſa, (the Inhabitants, and Allyes of Judæa, though the King of Syria's Subjects) that he reſolved to Attaque the Place with all the Vigour Imaginable. Upon ſitting down before it, he begirt the Town with a Large Ditch, and a Double Wall of Eighty Furlongs Compaſs, and gave the Conduct of the Siege to his Sons, Antigonus, and Ariſtobulus, who Ply'd it ſo Hard, and kept them-in ſo Cloſe, that they were forced by Extremity of Famine to keep Life and Soul together with Carrion and Dog's Meat: So that in the End, they went to Antiochus Cyzicenus for Relief, who came in all haſt upon their Requeſt; but being Routed by Ariſtobulus, and Purſu'd by the Brothers as far as Scythopolis, he made a very Narrow Eſcape. The Brethren, after this Action, returned to Samaria, and Forcing the People into the Town again, Renew'd the Siege, which put them upon an Application to the ſame Antiochus once again for Succour, who prevailing with Ptolomy, Surnamed Lathurus, for a matter of Six thouſand Men; ſo much again his Mother's Will and Liking, that he was within a very little of loſing his Kingdom for it. With this Band of Ægyptians, Antiochus went at firſt Ranging and Ravaging up and down the Country of Hyrcanus, not being at that time in Condition to look him in the Face. Now the thing he aim'd at was by this Diverſion to draw him from the Siege; but what with Surprizes, Deſertions, and other Caſualities, he found his Party in a ſhort time ſo Shrunk and Weaken'd, that he Committed the Charge of the Jewiſh War to Callimander and Epicrates, and went off from thence himſelf to Tripoli. Callimander, after this, with more Bravery then Diſcretion, ventur'd upon a Raſh Encounter, where his People were wholly Cut-off, and himſelf Slain. Epicrates at the ſame time, betraying Scythopolis and ſeveral other Neighbouring Towns there, for Mony to the Jews, by a Treachery as Clear as the Sun: So that in fine, there was no Poſſibility of Relieving the Place. Hyrcanus had been a Full Year before Samaria when he took it, and it was not enough he thought, to be Maſter of the City, without Raſing the very Memory of it from off the Earth: for he not only made it a Heap of Rubbiſh,, but drew ſeveral Trenches of Water thorough it, it, which ſo Diſfigur'd the Face of every thing, that there was not the leaſt Mark left of any Building that had ever been there. There goes a Wonderful, if not an Incredible Story of this ſame Hyrcanus the High-Prieſt; which ſays, that upon the Day of the Battle which his Sons had with Cyzicenus, it was revealed to him by a Voice from Heaven, as he was alone in the Temple, and Offering Incenſe, that his Sons had gotten a freſh Victory over Antiochus. He went out immediately, and told the People what he had heard; which was confirm'd a while after, beyond all Diſpute. This was Computed to be juſt upon the Preciſe Inſtant of the Succeſs; and let this ſuffice for the State of Things at that time with Hyrcanus.

The Jews found this a favourable Seaſon for them, not only at Jeruſalem, but at Alexandria alſo, and the reſt of Ægypt, Cyprus, &c. For the Queen Cleopatra, upon a Difference with her Son Ptolemy Lathur, Committed the Command of her Troups to Chelcias, and Ananias, the Sons of that Onias, who erected a Temple in the Territory of Heliopolis, after the Platform of that at Jeruſalem, of which we have ſpoken before. Theſe Two Perſons were the Queen's Adviſers and Directors in all ſhe did, as we have it upon the Credit of Strabo the Cappadocian in Words to this Effect. A Great many of thoſe (ſays he) that either came formerly with us to Cyprus, or were ſent thither afterward by Cleopatra, immediately Quitted the Queen's Intereſt, and went over to Ptolemy: Only the Jews that were of Onias's Party, ſtood Firm, out of a Reverence they paid the Queen for the Reſpect ſhe ſhew'd to Chelcias, and Ananias, their Friends and Countrymen. Thus far Strabo.

Now the Credit and Good Fortune of Hyrcanus drew upon him, in a High Meaſure, the Envy of the Jews; the Phariſees eſpecially, who had no Great Kindneſs for him before; but this is a Point that I have formerly Touch'd upon. The Authority of that Faction, in fine, is ſo Sacred among the Common People, that let them treat their King, or their High-Prieſt at never ſo Courſe a rate, the Multitude would be ſure to ſide with them. Hyrcanus however, having been train'd-up in that School, and being look'd upon as a Perſon much in their Favour, took a fair Occaſion to Invite them to an Entertainment, where he Treated them with all Poſſible Humanity, and Reſpect. So ſoon as Good Company and Good Cheer had put them into the Humour of a Free, and an Eaſy Converſation, he took his Time to make them a Short Diſcourſe ſomewhat to this following purpoſe. I need not tell you, ſays he, My Worthy Friends, that a Man of your Own Principle deſires nothing more then to approve himſelf Acceptable to God, and Juſt to to his Neighbour, which is but according to the Reſult of your Own Doctrine. But if you ſhall find however, that I have in any thing departed from my Duty, as it is your Part to Admoniſh and Inſtruct me, I ſhall account it Mine, to Amend and Reform. This Generous Candor was received with ſuch Applauſe, that Hyrcanus did not a little Value himſelf upon the Reputation of ſo Honourable a Teſtimony.

Hyrcanus Envy'd by the Jews and Phariſees.

The Wonderful Credit of the Phariſees with the Common People.

Hyrcanus Treats the Phariſees.

After ſome ſhort Pauſe, Eleazar, One of the Gueſts, and a Peſtilent Spiteful Man, ſtood-up and brake the Silence. Since you are pleaſed (ſays he to Hyrcanus) to Profeſs your ſelf ſo Great a Lover of Truth, and Plain-dealing, be but ſo Juſt alſo as to lay down your Pontificat, and content your ſelf with the Character of your Civil Adminiſtration. [And I beſeech you (ſays Hyrcanus) why this Propoſal?] Becauſe, ſays the Other, we have been told by our Elders, that in the Days of Antiochus Epiphanes, your Mother was a Slave. Now the Report was Falſe, and ſo much the more Offenſive, as well to the Phariſees, as to Hyrcanus himſelf. There happened to be in the Company One Jonathan, Hyrcanus's Particular Friend; but a Sadducee, and Conſequently a Mortal Enemy to the Phariſees. This Jonathan would needs have it that the Calumny of Eleazar was a thing Concerted, and that the Phariſees were all Privy to it. Now This you will find to be True, ſays he, if you do but put it to them what Puniſhment they think a Man may deſerve for ſo Scandalous a Defamation. Hyrcanus put the Queſtion to feel how they ſtood Affected, and whether they had any hand or not in the Affront. Their Anſwer was, being Men generally Inclin'd to Mercy in ſuch Caſes, that they did not find Defamation to be a Capital Crime, and ſo they thought Whipping and Impriſonment might ſerve for Satisfaction. This Way of Qualifying the Matter put Hyrcanus into a Terrible Fret, and gave him to Underſtand that they had every one of them their part in this Infamous Reflexion upon his Family. Jonathan ply'd Hyrcanus in this Heat, and Embitter'd him againſt the Phariſees to ſuch a Degree, that he abſolutely Renounc'd the Sect, and went over to the Sadducees; abrogating all their Ordinances, and Statutes, with a Penalty upon thoſe that ſhould preſume to Obſerve them. This was it that put both himſelf and his Sons quite out of Credit with the Common People, as will be ſeen in it's Proper Place. We are here to take Notice, that the Phariſees had many Traditions Handed down from Father to Son, which are not to be found among the Laws of Moſes.

Eleazar paſſes a Bitter Reflexion upon Hyrcanus.

Jonathan a Sadducee irritates Hyrcanus againſt the Phariſees; who renounces them, and turns Sadducee.

Now

Now these Traditions are Rejected by the Sadducees, upon a Persuasion, that only the Written Laws are Authoritative and Binding. We are now come to the very Root of the main Controversy betwixt the Two Parties; the Sadducees being supported by Men of Quality and Substance; the Pharisees only by the Favour of the Multitude. But of these Sects, and of the Essenes, we have said enough in our History of the Jewish Wars. Lib. 2.

The Great Men side with the Sadducees, and the Multitude with the Pharisees.

The Remainder of Hyrcanus's Life, after the Composing of this Sedition, was Happy and Quiet to the very Day of his Death; which happened in the Year of his Government Thirty One. He left behind him Five Sons; and God was pleased to Honour him with Three Eminent Dignities; The Civil Government of the Jews; The High-Priesthood, and the Spirit of Prophecy: Foretelling by a Divine Revelation, that his Two Eldest Sons should not long enjoy the Government after the Death of their Father. It succeeded in the Event according to his Prediction; but it will be worth the while, for the Credit of his Presage, to shew how they came to their End.

A Malicious Calumny.

HYrcanus being now Dead, his Eldest Son Aristobulus took-up a Resolution of Changing the Form of the Government, and turning the Principality into an Absolute Monarchy; setting the Crown accordingly upon his Own Head. This was in the Year 481, and Three Months after the Return of the Jews from the Captivity of Babylon. He had so Great a Tenderness for Antigonus, his Next Brother, that he made him a kind of Partner with him in the Government. The other Three he kept all this while in Bonds; casting his Mother into Prison also, whom he look'd upon as a Competitress upon a Pretence of Claim: Hyrcanus having left her at his Death the Mistress of all he could Confer upon her. His Cruelty, in short, was so Horrid and Unnatural, that he starv'd his Mother to Death in her Confinement, and afterward put his Dearly Beloved Brother and Favourite, Antigonus himself to Death, only upon the Malicious Suggestions of Evil Tongues. It was a good while before he would give any heed to those Invidious Stories, in regard both of the Affection he had for Antigonus, and that in his Conscience, he looked upon them all to be only the Inventions of Malevolence and Envy; but Antigonus having the hap once to return from the Army in great Pomp and Glory, just upon the Solemnity of the Feast of Tabernacles, Aristobulus at the same time lying Sick in his Bed, his Brother Antigonus went-up to the Temple with his Guards about him, in mighty Splendor and State; only upon the Account of Religious Worship, and in the first place to offer-up his Prayers and Vows for the Health of his Brother. The Fame and Reputation of Antigonus, and the Magnificence of his Parade upon this Occasion, furnished as fit Matter for a Faction of Court-Parasites and Make-bates to work upon, as they could wish: so that away they went presently, open-Mouth to the King, with all the Virulent Pretences and Aggravations they could Muster together. This was not a Behaviour, they said, that became the Condition of a Private Man; but rather a most Notorius Evidence of a Design upon the Crown; and that the Guards he had then about him would in a short time Advance from This Invasion upon his Royalty to a Violence upon his Person; and he was not so Mad neither as to stop at a Part of the Government, when he might have it whole to himself. Aristobulus was so divided betwixt the Fear of being either too Secure, or too Credulous, that though he could not Believe every thing they told him, he could not yet but suspect there might be something in it upon the Main; and so took a Middle Course of providing for his Safety, without seeming to be Jealous of any Danger. He had his Apartment in a Tower, that hath been since known by the Name of Antonia, where he Posted a Guard in a Dark place under Ground, with Particular Orders, that they should Watch his Brother in his Passage, and that if he came without Arms, no body should Meddle with him; but if he came Armed, they should kill him. So Aristobulus sent for his Brother to come to him, Charging the Messenger to bid him come without Arms: but the Queen, and the rest of the Conspirators Tamper'd with the Messenger, and bad him tell Antigonus on the Contrary, that his Brother had heard of a very Brave Suit of Arms he had gotten; and that he had a Great Mind to see how they became him. Antigonus depending wholly upon the Good Faith of his Brother, and ſuſpecting no Treachery, went immediately Armed juſt as the Meſſenger found him, to ſhew himſelf. Upon his coming to the Tower of Straton, the Soldiers fell upon him in a Dark Paſſage, and Slew him. This Diſaſter may ſuffice to ſhew the Force of Envy and Slander; and how the very Beſt of Natures may be Corrupted by thoſe Temptations. But the moſt wonderful Circumſtance of all was the Prediction of one Judas, a Famous Prophet of thoſe Times, whoſe Preſages never fail'd. This Judas, upon the Sight of Antigonus, coming to the Temple, brake-out into Exclamations among his Diſciples, that he was now weary of his Life; for Antigonus, whoſe Death he had Preſag'd upon that very Day at Straton's Tower, was yet Alive: The Place Six Hundred Furlongs off, and the Day more then half over: So that he had utterly loſt the Credit of a Prophet for ever. While he was in this Perplexity for the Reputation of his Oracle, came the News of Antigonus's being Slain in a Subterranean Paſſage under the Tower. Now this was call'd Straton's Tower, it ſeems, as well as that upon the Coaſt, which was afterwards known by the Name of Cæſarea, and this Salvo ſet the Prophet Right again.

Antigonus Murder'd in Straton's Tower.

with the very Time and Place.

The Thought of this Execrable Murder wrought upon Ariſtobulus immediately a Conſcientious Deteſtation of the Fact, and Enflamed his Diſtemper, inſomuch that his Agonies encreaſing upon him, he fell at laſt into a Vomting of Bloud; and as one of his Sevants was carrying part of it away in a Baſin, by a Strange Providence he made a Stumble upon the way, and ſpilt it upon the very Bloud of his Maſter's Brother. There was ſuch an Outcry upon this Accident (as if the Servant had done it on purpoſe) that Ariſtobulus himſelf overhearing it, would not be Quiet till they told him the Meaning of it; and the ſhyer they were of owning the Truth, the more Eager was he to know it, as Men are naturally more Curious in ſuch Caſes. But in the Concluſion, betwixt Importunity and Menace, he Extorted it from them, and in the Horror of an Afflicted Conſcience, Enter'd with Groans and Tears into an Anxious Expoſtulation upon it to this Purpoſe. No, no, ſays he, the All-ſeeing Eye of God hath found me out in my Wickedneſs, and my Brothers Bloud has already brought down a Vengeance upon me. How long ſhall this Shameleſs Carcaſs of Mine entertain a Life ſo juſtly Forfeited to the Aſhes and Memory of my Dear Mother and Brother! Why do I not rather Die once for all, then Bleed to Death thus Drop by Drop, as if my Sufferings could be an Attonement for the Foulneſs of a Parricide! With theſe Words betwixt his Lips he gave up the Ghoſt, having Govern'd only One Year, under the Surname of Philellen; That is to ſay, a Lover of the Greeks. He brought many Advantages to his Country; made War upon Ituræa, and laid a Conſiderable part of it to the Territory of Judæa, forcing the People, upon pain of Baniſhment, to ſubmit to Circumciſion, and to live in a Conformity to the other Rites and Practices of the Jews. He was accounted to be otherwiſe, a Perſon of Modeſty and Juſtice, as Strabo Vouches for him out of Timagenes, in theſe Words. He was a Righteous Man, and in many Reſpects a Friend to the Jews; for he enlarged their Juriſdiction by Annexing to it Ituræa, uniting the People alſo into one Common Bond of Circumciſion.

AFter the Death of Ariſtobulus, his Wife Salome, (by the Greeks called Alexandria) ſet the Brothers at Liberty, whom her Husband had made Priſoners (of which already) and placed Jannæus, otherwiſe called Alexander, upon the Throne; the Eldeſt, and the moſt Temperate of the Three. It was his Ill hap to Incur his Father's Averſion, almoſt as ſoon as he was Born; to the Degree of not being ſuffer'd to appear in his Sight. The Reaſon, they ſay, was this. Hyrcanus had a Dream one Night of God's Appearing to him, and that upon his Enquiry who ſhould ſucceed him in the Government, he was Anſwer'd with the Lively Repreſentation of the Perſon, and ſo the Viſion Diſappear'd. Ariſtobulus and Antigonus were his Favourites, and Hyrcanus finding, that neither of them was deſign'd by this Figure, he apply'd it to Alexander, under the Affliction of a Double Diſappointment, in regard both of the Dignity, and of the Fortune, falling, as he accounted it, into a Wrong Hand. Upon this Occaſion, Alexander was ſent away to be brought-up in Galilee; but but the Event however anſwer'd the Prediction; for Alexander, upon the Death of Ariſtobulus, enter'd upon the Adminiſtration; and taking off One of his Brothers that would have ſupplanted him, Treated the Other with great Honour in the Contented State of a Private Life.

He lays Siege to Ptolemy; which, with Gaza, Dora, and the Tower of Straton, under Zoilus, did yet ſtand-out.

So ſoon as he had Settled the State to his Mind, he Marched with an Army to Ptolemais, where he Encounter'd a Body of the Enemy in the Field; Beat them into the Town, and then Coop'd them-up in it. There was only this Place, and Gaza, of all the Sea-Coaſt-Towns that ſtood-out, beſide Dora, and the Tower of Straton, in the Hands of Zoilus. As for Antiochus Philometor, and his Brother Antiochus Cyzicenus, they were ſo Engaged and Waſted in a War, one with Another, that there was no thought of any Relief to the People of Ptolemais that way. But Zoilus that play'd his Own Game all this while, and lay upon the Catch to make Advantage of theſe Diviſions, ſent them ſome ſort of Aſſiſtance, though not much to the Purpoſe. It was at this time with the Two Enemy-Kings, as it is with a Couple of Sword-Men Fighting a Prize: They are ſo Intent upon Cutting one another down, that they never think of any thing elſe; and let them be never ſo much Batter'd and Weary'd, there muſt be no Yielding at laſt; but when they have fought as long as they can ſtand, their way is to lye down by Conſent, to take Breath, and to't again. The Beſieged, in fine, had no Proſpect of any Hope or Poſſibility of Relief, but from Ægypt, and Eſpecially from Ptolemy Lathur, thathad been driven out of his Kingdom by his Mother Cleopatra, and was now withdrawn into Cyprus: So that they preſently ſent away Embaſſadors to Ptolomy to deſire his Aid againſt Alexander: making no doubt, they ſaid, but ſo ſoon as Ever he ſhould ſet Foot in Syria, the People of Gaza and Ptolemais would all declare in his Favour; beſide that Zoilus, the Sydonians, and other People thereabouts would be ſure to Joyn with him over and above. The King was ſo Elevated with theſe Aſſurances, that he ſent his People immediately upon the Equipping of a Fleet for the Expedition: But while this was a-doing, one Demœnetus, a Perſon of Great Credit with the Citizens of Ptolemais, brought the People, upon Second Thoughts, to a Better Underſtanding of the Matter, by Reaſoning with them about it, after this Manner. The Queſtion, ſays he, in ſhort, will be this; whether you had not better ſtand the Fate of the War you are Engag'd in with the Jews, and venture the Uncertain Iſſue of it, then by calling-in, and delivering your ſelves up to the Protection of a Forreign Power, to incurr a Certain Slavery; and not only become Involved in a Preſent Broyl, but run the Riſque of a more Dangerous Incumbrance that threatens you from Ægypt. For you cannot think that Cleopatra will ever ſtand ſtill, to ſee Ptolomy form his Troups into a Body: But the Queen will rather get beforehand with him, and have a Potent Army at his Back before he is ready for't: beſide the Hazzard he runs of being thrown out of Cyprus too. Or to take it Another way, ſuppoſe Ptolomy ſhould fail in his Deſign, and be forced back again to Cyprus, there are you left to the Wide World to ſhift for your ſelves: And what do you think will be the End on't then?

An Embaſſy to Ptolomy Lathur for Relief.

Ptolomy upon this, Equips a Great Fleet.

Demœnetus puts off the People from Treating with Ptolomy.

This Diſcourſe brought them quite off from their Opinion of the Embaſſy, and Ptolomy was told as much at Sea upon his Paſſage: But however, ſince he was now in Motion, he Continu'd his Courſe to Sycamin, where he Landed an Army of about Thirty thouſand Horſe and Foot, Marching thence to Ptolemais, with an Intent to ſend an Embaſſy to the City; but when he found that they would have nothing to do with him, either by Meſſage, or by Word of Mouth, it put him to his Wit's End what to do Next. While he was in this Perplexity, there came to him Zoilus, and ſome Deputies from Gaza, to implore his Help againſt the Jews and Alexander, that were making Havock in their Country. Alexander, upon this, was forc'd to Raiſe the Siege for fear of Ptolomy: and when he ſaw there was no good to be done by Downright Force, he Marched his Army back again, and betaking himſelf to his Politiques, play'd his Game Another way. He treated with Cleopatra under-hand againſt Ptolomy, and at the ſame time kept fair with Ptolomy, in appearance, under the Countenance of a Friend and an Allye; propoſing to give him Four Hundred Talents of Silver, upon Condition of delivering-up the Uſurper Zoilus into his Hands, and Reſtoring to the Jews thoſe Lands of theirs, which he had in Poſſeſſion. Ptolomy, without any Heſitation, Embraced the Friendſhip of Alexander, and Siezed upon Zoilus; but coming to Underſtand that there was an Intrigue carry'd-on all this while betwixt Alexander and Cleopatra, he look'd upon the League as Broken, and without more ado, laid Siege to Ptolemais, where the Gates were ſhut againſt him. Upon this, he divided his Army, leaving one part of it before the Town to make good the Siege, and Marching-off with the Remainder of it himſelf, to Deſtroy the Country of Judæa. Now Alexander, on the other hand, to Encounter this Deſign of Ptolomy, levy'd an Army of his Own People; ſome ſay of Fifty, others of Eighty Thouſand Men, and ſo Advanced with it againſt the Enemy. Ptolomy, in the mean time, taking
